SCREEN RADIO MUSIC STAGE

VARIETY

Published Weekly at 154 West 46th Street, New York 19, N. Y., by Variety, Inc. Annual subscription, $10. Single copies, 25 cents. Entered as second-class matter December 22, 1905, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the act of March 3, 1879.
COPYRIGHT, 1947, BY VARIETY, INC. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.
VOL. 165 No. 4 NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 1, 1947 PRICE 25 CENTS

BIG CROP OF NEW '46 PIC STARS

Berle's $400,000 Pay on 44-Week Run At N. Y. Carnival Sets Cafe Record

Outstanding nightclub engagement in history was completed Dec. 31, when Milton Berle wound up a 44-week engagement at Nicky Blair's Carnival, N. Y. Berle's contract called for a guarantee of $7,500 weekly and overages on grosses beyond $42,000. The comedian's take amounted to more than $400,000 on the nitery's gross, estimated at more than $3,000,000.

All this coming at a time when cafe business slumped below pre-war levels.

Foremost aspect of Berle's Carnival incumbency is that bonifaces have lost their fear of Herculean salaries for top talent. A cafe performer who can draw is worth whatever the traffic can bear, they feel. This point is borne out by the fact that while salaries of performers in the $1,500-$3,500 class are dropping, prices in the super-brackets are rising. Berle is scheduled to open at the Copacabana, Miami Beach, at a salary exceeding that of the Carnival. Murray Weinger is shelling out $12,500 plus overages on $50,000, while Gertrude Niesen is slated to go into the refurbished

(Continued on page 47)

Several Posthumous Geo. Gershwin Scores Will Be Available

There are two and possibly more posthumous George Gershwin scores available, either for films or legit, whenever Ira Gershwin, the lyricist, gets to them. The first is already in the can for 20th Century-Fox, the fictionized "The Shocking Miss Pilgrim," which Ira Gershwin, with the aid of Kay Swift, a tunesmith in her own right, refurbished from a wealth of mss.

The late composer was "always too fast for Ira"—a familiar Tin Pan Alley axiom among those who knew the Gershwins. This was due to George's facility in whipping up tunes whereas lyricist Ira preferred to polish his wordage for everything they did, with result that many tunes have piled up.

It was from these that Ira selected the several songs for "Miss Pilgrim," working with Miss Swift, long a friend of the composer. Some of the tunes were changed in tempo but otherwise preserved in every detail.

SHUBERTS EYE VIDEO WITH OLD MUSICALS

Lee Shubert is all set for television. He has been reviewing his warehouses-full of old operettas, property rights to same, etc., and has been talking to the National Broadcasting Co. with an eye to making them adaptable for video.

The Shuberts have a flock of old operettas ("Student Prince," "Blossom Time," etc.) which could be transmuted to the iconoscope.

Tallu a 'Bernhardt'

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Tallulah Bankhead plays the title role of Sarah Bernhardt in "The Divine Sarah" to be made by Charles R. Rogers, if negotiations, now in progress, reach the dotted line stage.

Yarn, by Basil Woon, was acquired by Rogers 10 years ago.

Foreign Films Dominate 'Crix' Lists of '10 Best'

Preponderance of foreign films on the annual "10 Best" lists, currently being selected by film critics throughout the country, is considered in the trade as a direct slap at Hollywood on the part of the crix. N. Y. Times' reviewer Bosley Crowther attributes this to Hollywood having "run dry of ideas." Majority of lists selected at least half foreign pictures, and it's reported that one of the most important selections, yet to be made public, will comprise five British, three French and only two American films.

In the preface to his selections, Crowther declared that the five foreign pix on his list are a "point for contemplation." When "folks remark with anxiety—as they have been remarking for some time—that Hollywood has 'run dry of ideas'," he said, "they have here the evidence. The Convention business in the U. S. is swinging up past prewar levels, and while Chicago continues as the national leader in the number held (it listed 700 this year), New York is pressing for top honors. N. Y. has 550 conventions already booked for 1947, according to Royal W. Ryan, executive director of N. Y. Convention and Visitors Bureau.

(Continued on page 6)

$340,000,000 Seen Spent in New York By '47 Conventions

The 500,000 delegates expected to attend N. Y. conventions in the coming year will spend nearly $65,000,000 in the city, much of it on amusements. In addition, pleasure visitors spend an estimated $275,000,000 per year in Manhattan.

New Year Eve's Biz OK

As VARIETY went to press the New Year's eve outlook appeared better in the big key city niteries than expected. The top boites, with name attractions, were sold out in advance.

Xmas eve, likewise, was a pleasant surprise with biz better than expected.

BRITISH NAMES CLICKING IN U.S.

By WHITNEY WILLIAMS

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Year 1946 brought to the nation's theatre marquees a bevy of screen names little-known previously, but now certain of making an enduring mark on the B.O. future. Some came from abroad, some from the Broadway stage and some—after long Hollywood obscurity or near it—suddenly emerged as lights from under a bushel.

On the male side the leading new wicket-spinners include Larry Parks, Burt Lancaster, Rex Harrison, Robert Mitchum and Guy Madison. And among the femmes the list must contain Peggy Cummins, Joan Caulfield, Evelyn Keyes, Catherine McLeod, Jeanne Crain, June Haver, Vivian Blaine and Janis Paige.

Pair of male names standing forth most clearly are Parks and Lancaster. Parks won immediate attention as star of Columbia's "The Jolson Story," and Lancaster, never before glimpsed on screen, underwent same introduction in Mark Hellinger's "The Killers," at Universal.

Harrison's advent, from England, in 20th-Fox's "Anna and the

(Continued on page 46)

Only 2/3 Baseball To Be Sponsored

Nibbles from prospective television sponsors of next season's baseball games indicate that probably only 50 of the 77 home games each of the three New York teams plays will be carried commercially. Balance probably will be seen sustaining.

Apparently mindful of the' high costs involved in television remote pickups — estimated at $1,000-$2,000 for each show—most advertisers interested in baseball have decided to bypass a third of the games. It's expected they'll take the first 25, omit the middle third when interest in the

(Continued on page 47)

Huston Chirps 'Sept. Song' Between the Acts

A show business Ripley is the case of Walter Huston where a Tin Pan Alley item is proving boxoffice for a legit warhorse. The oddity occurs on his tour with "Apple of His Eye" when the audience insists on Huston chirping "The September Song." It's now a regular between-the-acts item.

Song is the Kurt Weill-Maxwell Anderson (lyric) and Kurt Weill (music), which Huston waxed for Brunswick Records (since taken over by Decca), and which is largely credited for reviving that song into its present-day prominence. Not only that, but it's a definite boon to Huston currently touring legiter. The actor, incidentally, did the tune in 'Holiday.'

Hold On To Your Heads, Folks; Here Comes 80th Congress With Axes Out

Washington, Dec. 30.

When the new Congress convenes here Friday (3), it will move in fast on its two major issues, both of them of top importance to showbiz—tax reduction and labor legislation.

In addition and when it gets its feet under it, the 80th Congress is figured to launch another probe of FCC, to give Hollywood a hotfoot, to work out again on James C. Petrillo if the present law is ruled unconstitutional, and probably to seek ways of aiding the film industry's export trade. Here specifically is what appears in the offing:

1. Labor: There will be a strong drive to eliminate the closed shop and even the union shop. If such a bill should get through, it would sharply weaken the power of the studio unions and of other showbiz unions such as in legit houses and in broadcast studios. Just what will come out of the labor mill is uncertain but there will probably be more labor bills introduced in the first fortnight of the session than there will be bills of any other type for the next six months.

2. Taxes. Congress plans a "quickie" tax reduction bill about

(Continued on page 20)

Most Prolific

In all the Damon Runyon stuff written about the passing of the great newspaperman none accented that he held what was probably a record for the amount of newspaper copy he turned out.

In his more than 40 years as a top journalist, Runyon ground out millions of straight reportage besides special features, magazine articles, books, etc.

Gabber Blows Top On Vet Housing, WHHM Fires Him

Memphis, Dec. 30.

A disk jockey who "blew his top" in the early hours of a Sunday morn on WHHM, Memphis' newest station, had local radio people in a turmoil early this week.

Cecil J. (Charlie) Fike, a Texan with a long record of overseas service in the Pacific with the AAF, came to Memphis four months ago with Pat McDonald, WHHM manager, from KMAC in San Antonio, where both were serving.

Unable to find a home for his wife and two children here, he became dissatisfied (this is Fike's explanation) and on Sunday morning between records went into quite a harangue about politicians kicking around the veterans, directing particular abuse against E. H. Crump, political boss of Memphis and Shelby county.

Listeners flooded the station with

(Continued on page 47)

$25,000,000 Picture Divvys' All-Time High Doubling '45's Melon

Motion picture stock dividends climbed to an all-time high during the first 10 months of 1946 reaching a total of nearly $25,000,000, according to a report filed by the U. S. Department of Commerce. Melon figure for 1946 is running nearly twice the dividends declared by the film companies last year.

For the month ending October, 1946, stock dividends are reported at $3,427,000 compared to $1,660,000 for the same period last year. During the quarter ending Oct. 31, dividends totaled $12,231,000, also doubling the figure of $6,068,000 reported for the same period last year. Reason for the big jump in the third quarter was the special Warner Bros. $2,000,000 bonus to stockholders.

'Merry Oldsmobile' Gets a Cylinder Job In Novel Drive Test

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

There's been considerable surprise in the music business the past few weeks about the appearance among the most played songs of the tune, "In My Merry Oldsmobile." It seemed hardly suitable material to be revived as a "plug song."

But now they know. So do a fairly long list of artists who are driving new Oldsmobiles secured at ceiling prices from the manufacturer, a remarkable circumstance in view of the current new-automobile market.

Some weeks back, Lou Levy, head of Leeds Music, got chummy, according to the story, with some Oldsmobile executives. He popped the idea

(Continued on page 47)

G'WAN HOME JACK, YOUR JOCKEY IS CALLING

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Dec. 30.

They say anything can happen to a "disk jockey"—and usually does. Take the case of Dean Landfear at WMT in Cedar Rapids, for instance. Seems that a fellow in an overcrowded Iowa City rooming house 100 miles distant was packing overtime in the community bathtub, soaking and enjoying Landfear platter show.

The gent next in line for the sanitary facilities, finding door knocking useless, called the jockey long distance and requested that he (Landfear) ask the squatter to scram. Landfear relayed the request via WMT and the portable radio in the bathroom. Tub loafer took the not-too-gentle hint and scrammed.

Legal and Health Complications Figure in Leigh-Olivier's U. S. Go-By

London, Dec. 30.

Fizz of deal fgt Laurence Olivier to appear in a Hollywood production of "Cyrano de Bergerac" and decline in Vivien Leigh's health, after her strenuous work in "Skin of Our Teeth" legit run, was the cause of the cancellation last week of the pair's projected visit to the United States. "Cyrano" filming is off altogether because of inability to obtain rights from Sir Alexander Korda, who controls them, and need for Garson Kanin, who was to have directed the picture for Universal-International, to quit activities temporarily because of his health.

Olivier plans to quit the Old Vic company early in 1947 and will launch Kanin's play "Born Yesterday," in a West End theatre, Jan. 20 following its provincial tour. After that he and Miss Leigh, on advice of her doctors, will take a four months' holiday in Switzerland.

Immediately after their return to England, they will assemble their own company for a year's tour of Australia and New Zealand. They expect to arrive there in July.

Prior to decline in Miss Leigh's health, provided she and Olivier didn't come to the U. S. the plan was for him to make a picture with his own production company in England for J. Arthur Rank, while Miss Leigh would appear in the picture there for Metro which she owes the company under an old contract.

Hyde Submitted 20 Scripts

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Johnny Hyde, v.p. of the William Morris agency, rep in this country for Olivier and Miss Leigh, said last week that he had submitted about 20 scripts to the couple in attempts of various studios to snare them for a film in Hollywood. All the scripts, he said, were determined by the pair to be "unsuitable."

Eva Tanguay Donating Hearst Memoirs Coin To Indigent Actors

An invalid lying on a sickbed in California for the last six years in the twilight of her life, Eva Tanguay, one of vaude's greatest headliners, has written her memoirs for Hearst's American Weekly. Series started in Sunday's (29) issue and will run for five weeks.

Inasmuch as various theatrical welfare organizations have been assisting Miss Tanguay since she became bedridden, the actress noted in her first installment that "any money I get from this story from The American Weekly, I do not want one dollar for myself. My contract specifies that this shall go to the fund of the actors for some other actor who is as improvident as I have been."

Pointing out "I Don't Care" was her creed as well as the title of her famous song, Miss Tanguay stated some $2,000,000 were poured in to her lap and "I tossed it all away as fast as it came." The millions are gone, she says, and "I don't have much left except my smile and my happiness."

Henie-Haley Slated For Indie Circus Pic

Gainesville, Texas, Dec. 30.

Sonja Henie and Jack Haley will take leading parts in "Gainesville, U.S.A." a semi-documentary film to be built around the Gainesville Community Circus.

Marshall Grant and Associates, a new independent producing firm, will produce the film, which is expected to get under way in about six months.

Jimmy McHugh Cited

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Presidential citation of a certificate of merit has been awarded to Jimmy McHugh, Sr., who did a standout job of selling $28,000,000 in war bonds. He was also cited for his work in composing war songs.

Cleffer is slated to leave for Washington after the first of the year to receive the award.

Chico's Cutrate Bucks

The difficulty that that Brooklyn tavernkeeper, Joe Bonavita had in distributing genuine $1 bills to the Bowery bums on Christmas Day, until a cop assured the denizens that it wasn't stage money, reminds of a Broadway classic during the time the Marx Bros. were commuting from their Great Neck homes to Broadway for "Cocoanuts." Chico Marx asked one of the Queensborough bridge cops, "Wanna buy a $1 bill for 75c?". The minion of the law hesitated but, figuring (1), this guy may be on the level because of the snappy Cord (remember when moneyed actors went for Cords?) and (2), he can always trace the wise-guy through his license plate, he shelled out six bits. Same thing went on for several days and by the fourth or fifth day the cop was waiting for Chico Marx with three quarters in his mitt until one day the comedian cracked.

"Aw no, not this time! My price for a dollar has gone up to 85c." The topper, which the Marxes were waiting for, happened. The cop hesitated and protested, "But I've been paying you 75c right along!"

Winchell-Diosa's Rumba Audition Helps Raise 30G for Runyon Wing

Miami Beach, Dec. 30.

First of a probable series of fund-raising entertainments for the Damon Runyon wing at Memorial Hospital, N. Y., was staged at the Lord Tarleton hotel here, Saturday (28) under sponsorship of Walter Winchell. Close to $30,000 was raised at $4.80 over 1,500 attending. Admissions gross plus top performers now in town auctioning off parts of their routine raised the dough. Highest bid came when a Zeppler pastel of Runyon was offered. It brought in $7,500 and in turn was presented to Winchell as a gift to be hung in the wing when built.

Acts participating at Walter Jacobs' Tarleton included Mary Small, Frances Faye, Bert Wheeler, Jackie Miles, Harvey Stone, Jan Murray, Gypsy Rose Lee, Carlos Ramirez, Ham (Joe Palooka) Fisher, Freddie D'Alonso oreh, Benny Davis, Buddy Allen, Myron Cohen, with Diosa Costello and Winchell working as a rhumba team selling their hip-swinging for $2,000 as climax to the affair. Admittedly opps attending immediately offered them any sum they wanted to work in their spots.

Pickford-Cowan Dicker Hope-Ingrid for 'Venus'

If Mary Pickford-Lester Cowan can sell Bob Hope the idea of co-starring in "One Touch of Venus" it would see the unusual of a United Artists co-owner releasing her film through Paramount. That's due to Hope's Par contract. Lester Bergman is also being dickered as co-star, although Joan Fontaine is another possibility.

Harry Kurnitz, now in New York on other business, is due back east Jan. 29 after a quickie to Hollywood to work in New York for 12 weeks or so with Agnes deMille, stager of the original Mary Martin musical. Kurnitz is doing the screenplay. The idea is to integrate the terpsichorean action (by Miss deMille) into the screen version.

Gray-Rep Talk New Deal

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Lou Gray, former producer at Republic, was slated to leave for New York today (Monday) to talk over a new deal.

Gray, with Rep for five years, checked out of that spot over the weekend.

RAINS' WB PIC

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Claude Rains is set to star in "The Iron Gates" at Warners.

Henry Blanke will produce.

237th WEEK!
KEN MURRAY'S
"BLACKOUTS OF 1947"
El Capitan Theatre, Hollywood, Cal.
"Congratulations Ken, keep 'em laughing. Four good years deserves another." EDGAR BERGEN.

'Red' Lewis Steaming Up H'wood on His New Novel

Sinclair Lewis and his agent, Marcella Powers, are playing a cat-and-mouse game with the film companies, refusing to let story departments see proofs of the author's forthcoming novel and declining to reveal its subject matter, other than to say it is "controversial." Story eds, as a result, are in a race to sneak a first look at the book, which will be published by Random House in late May and be the Literary Guild selection for June.

Miss Powers admitted this week that the story concerns "racial prejudices and society" and is along the line of Gwethalym Graham's "Earth and High Heaven." Latter concerns anti-Semitism. It is being filmed by Samuel Goldwyn. Agent said Lewis' book, still untitled, will be "touchy" for Hollywood. She added, however, that producer Cheryl Crawford is interested in a possible dramatization by Lewis of the novel for the Broadway stage next fall.

Lewis, incidentally, about two months ago left the Curtis Brown agency, which had represented him for many years, to turn his account over to Miss Powers. She was in a play, "Angela is 22," which toured back in 1939 and in which Lewis later also took a minor part. They have long been close personal friends, so it was more or less expected that he would turn his representation over to her when she opened her agency about a year ago. Still in her '20s, she also agents literary work of Louis Untermeyer, Mary Orr, Jimmy Savo, John Carradine, Sir Cedric Hardwicke and others.

Old Red Herring Gets The Can for Rankin Pal

Washington, Dec. 30.

Blast at some angles of Hollywood and radio was included in the quickly repudiated report last week to the House Un-American Activities Committee by its chief counsel, Ernie Adamson. While Rep. J. Parnell Thomas (R., N. J.), who will be the next chairman of the committee, announced he would fire Adamson for getting out the report without committee approval, Rep. John E. Rankin (D., Miss.) put out a statement in which he said mysteriously:

"The American people would be shocked indeed if they realized the extent of Communist infiltration and the effect of their subversive activities in Government, labor, education, radio, moving pictures, and other public channels of information and communication. The half has not been told."

H. I. Phillips
sees the need for
"A Call for Helicopters in Theatres"
* * *
an editorial feature
of the forthcoming
41st Anniversary Number
of
VARIETY

The Berle-ing Point

By Milton Berle

Well, here it is the end of 1946—and just think...my material is now one year older. The new year really holds a lot of promise...although I have a few promises left over from last year. Asked William Bendix what he thought was in store for him this year and he said, "By this year' are you referring to the chronological, fiscal, lunar, calendar, tropical, sidereal or anomalistic year?"

Everyone's making prophecies for the new year so I guess I'll make a few myself: William Saroyan will write a play that even he doesn't understand...If rocket research proceeds as rapidly as it has so far, VARIETY will soon have an "N. Y. to Mars" department...Stars will be hit harder than ever by taxes...Jimmy Durante will have to pay through the nose...Dennis Day, Alan Young and Eddie Bracken will merge their talents on one program, to be called, "A 'Day' in the life of 'Young' Bracken" Fred Allen will threaten to retire from radio so he can devote all his time to writing forewords...Nick Kenny will start his birthday cycle all over again...Tommy Manville will continue to get married until he finds someone who'll agree to do a breakfast show with him...Wallace Beery may retire...no new child stars...Margaret O'Brien will be suggested for the lead in "Forever Amber"..."The Outlaw" will still be coming to New York...Bob Hope and Bing Crosby's last picture in the series will be "The Road to Fitzpatrick"...Senator Bilbo will still dream of a "White" Christmas...John L. Lewis will call the strikes for the Brooklyn Dodgers...Bennett Cerf will issue a book which will contain the best jokes...from his last three books...1,237 comics will tell writers to "Write me something original...that's been done before"...Radio will take one great stride forward: The man who whistles at studio broadcasts will be pushed in front of a garbage truck...The horse I bet on last November will finish this November and Hollywood will start its pictures in the middle so all the atregoers can be confused at the same time.

Ode to Show Biz

So long, '46...it's time you got out.
Though you're gone you've left memory about:
Squawks about Russell were greater than Lana.
MCA's fingers and Truman's planner.
Flops on the main stem and very few hits.
New comics discovered doing the same bits.
Lillian Roth's comeback fit for a queen.
"The Razor's Edge" was really keen.
Reuben's new hangout with barbers and chairs
Where you get a shave in the basement and a clipping upstairs.
Larry Parks' singing made Jolson a star.
Milland glorified the American bar.
Hope bought the Indians instead of a hoss.
Crosby the Pirates and made Youngman the boss.
Peter Lind Hayes crowned the Copa dean.
Every one doing my Viking scene.
There are so many more too numerous to mention
But their press agents will bring it to my attention.
So s'long, '46, thanks for the ride
The curtain's descending...your act just died!

Show Biz in Tribute to W. C. Fields; Cantor Recalls Terrif Sense of Humor

By JACK PULASKI

Death of W. C. Fields in California on Christmas (25) Day was lamented throughout show business and by many for whom he provided laughter for more than a generation. Gene Buck, who discovered Fields as a crack but funny juggler, called him "the greatest living comic" of the "Follies," a rating that will hardly be disputed. He came up to the marquee the hard way and after having reached his peak lived on borrowed time for the last seven or eight years.

Fields was the first actor to have a flagpicture in his dressing room and it was always well-stocked, for he was a constant host. When visitors called backstage his first suggestion after greeting was: "Shorty, see what the gentlemen will have." Shorty was a diminutive stagehand at the New Amsterdam theatre near Broadway where Ziegfeld "Follies" played and became so attached to the comedian that Fields trained him to go into his act. Fields disdained to quaff water or even coffee, preferring liquor he never missed a performance or gave a bad show because of that. He liked martinis and explained that that was the way he got his vegetables—onions and olives.

The actor was a natural humorist, which was noticed away from the stage but that's how he was induced to speak lines, rather than pantomime which first accompanied his juggling. Fields' dry style in speaking on the stage typed him as unusual and during his years with the "Follies," he was considered the funniest comic ever with Ziegfeld's revue with the possible exception of Bert Williams.

Fields was a ladies' man in his prime and it was nothing for him to be courting two or three girls at the same time. Ziegfeld was his peer in that department but Fields had imagination. How he outwitted house detectives at the Hotel Astor was an example. Abed with a broken leg there, he got the idea of a nurse's uniform for a femme visitor. He would get her a white dress and told the house dicks that she was his nurse.

When in Hollywood, there were sessions with the late John Barrymore.

(Continued on page 46)

By EDDIE CANTOR

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

W. C. Fields was one of the nicest Christmas presents Santa Claus ever gave to this world. On Christmas Day, the gayest time of the year when everybody is glad to be giving, one of our greatest gifts was taken away. He, Will Rogers and myself made up a sort of a Three Musketeers of the "Ziegfeld Follies." For one who professed not to believe in God and who treated lightly all things pertaining to religion, this juggler from Philadelphia was one of the finest Christians I have ever known.

He had a devastating sense of comedy—like the time at the Colonial Theatre in Chicago when the doorman came up to the dressing room and said, "Mr. Fields, there's a juggler downstairs to see you." He had some time on his hands so he told the doorman to send him up. "What's on your mind, young fellow?," Fields asked the juggler who stood before him, hat in hand.

And this juggler from the Western Vaudeville time told him that he'd like to get on the Big Time and he confessed that his act was not too good. He wanted consecutive booking. What would Fields advise him to do about it? I'm putting down Fields' answer as well as I can remember. "Look, you juggling chickadee, the first thing you've got to do is to juggle objects that no other juggler has ever attempted. Do it in comical fashion. Make your audience laugh a little bit to start with and then have the laughs grow bigger and bigger until at the end of your act the audience is practically in convulsions. Then to finish off this act, do one big stunt that will create talk around town."

The juggler thanked Fields profusely, kissing his hand as he left while Will Rogers and I were in a corner doubling up with laughter.

Bill Fields had all his money tied up in stocks or bonds when I asked for him? I'll never forget what I tried to interest him in putting money into some good stocks.

"Bill," I chided him, "it's silly to have as much cash as you have. These stocks I've recommended good stocks." I shall always remember his philosophical retort: "I

(Continued on page 46)

405 FILMS FROM 11 DISTRIBS IN '46

Breakdown by Companies

Table of company releases in 1946, including westerns, reissues and British films and comparison with 1945 is as follows:

Company	No. Westerns, Reissues and British '46 Total	'45 Total
20th-Fox	(R) 4	27
RKO	(W) 2	33
Paramount	(R) 2	23
Universal-Int.	(W) 1; (R) 1; (B) 8	46
Columbia	(W) 14	38
Metro	(R) 1	31
United Artists	(W) 2; (R) 1; (B) 2	17
Warner Bros.	(R) 2	19
Republic	(W) 16
Monogram	(W) 14; (R) 1
PRC	(W) 13

(R) represents reissues; (W) westerns; (B) British.

WB's Record $19,424,000 Assures Majors' All-Time Peak of $120,000,000

The Big Seven's total net for the fiscal year has mounted to one notch below the $100,000,000 mark with the announcement by Warner Bros. of a company record take of $19,424,000 for its year, ended Aug. 31. With Warners' net, highlighted against previous top returns of $9,901,000 for '45, profits of all majors except United Artists has now touched $99,000,000. Gigantic year's total of $120,000,000 is virtually assured since only two of the majors, Warners and Columbia, have closed their books on the current fiscal year.

Remarkable consistency of all the companies in continuing the steady pace indicated by early returns for the year again turned up with the WB report. Company racked up $4,6 ..000 for its fourth quarter, which covers the generally light hot weather season. Warners also had a blue-ribbon year in that the company reduced its funded indebtedness by $16,242,000 in the 12-month period thereby slashing its long-term debts to $23,010,000 by Aug. 31. Since that date the Nov., '47 installment of $1,591,000 has been prepaid.

Earnings were equivalent of $2.62 per share on the 7,402,180 shares outstanding, compared with $1.33 last year after allowing for the recent two-for-one split. Gross returns mounted to $150,613,000 in '46 against $141,791,000 in the previous year, while Federal taxes climbed to $18,500,000 compared with $16,-

(Continued on page 18)

Pres. Truman, Mrs. FDR To O.O. Metro's Atomic Pic for Their Final OK

First finished print of Metro's "Beginning or the End," story of the atom bomb, is slated to arrive in New York this week en route to Washington where it will be screened for final approval of President Truman and Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt. Print will be conveyed personally by either Sam Marx, producer of the film, or James K. McGuinness, Metro exec producer with whom Marx works.

Metro was forced to shoot several retakes of the pix several weeks ago when the White House objected to scenes depicting President Truman. Film will be shown to Mrs. Roosevelt to get her okay on the scenes depicting her late husband, as portrayed by Godfrey Tearle. Script was penned by Bob Considine under close cooperation with Government and military officials. Marx also huddled with these officials several times during the picture's shooting, so it's not believed likely they'll have any objections to any material on the atom bomb in the final print.

Anne Nichols' New Co.

New indie unit, Sunrise Productions, is being set up by Anne Nichols and A. Edward Sutherland. Initial film, "The Unusual Story of Herbie," is currently being scripted by Rip Van Ronkel. No distribution deal has been set yet.

Sutherland directed the new film version of "Abie's Irish Rose," which Miss Nichols authored and Van Ronkel co-screenplayed.

George Jessel
whips up some engaging dialog while masterminding
"Again an Anniversary Story for 'Variety'"
* * *
in the 41st Anniversary Number
of
VARIETY
Next Week

Trade Studies New UA-Indie Pact on Video

Increasingly hard-fought issue in distribution contracts recently negotiated by indie producers for their films has been television rights. Video formerly got the brush as a mere "subsidiary right," but producers naturally see the possibility of considerable coin being derived from television in four or five years. Distribs likewise see the potentialities and don't want to relinquish con-

(Continued on page 18)

UP 8%, BELIES PRODUCT DEARTH

Reversing the steady product decline of the past decade, the eight majors and three minors released a total of 405 pix during the calendar year of 1946, representing an 8% advance over the 377 total for '45. The advance which found every major adding to its total for the previous year is cited as refutation to exhib charges, frequently voiced during the current year, that Hollywood is party to an artificial product shortage.

Breakdown reveals 273 films of the majors available to theatres against 234 in the past year. Of these, 10 were reissues, 19 westerns and 10 were British films from J. Arthur Rank, via Universal and United Artists in the U. S. The minors, Republic, Monogram and PRC, turned out 132 pix for the year which actually represented a decline over the 143 figure of '45. Their releases included 43 oaters bringing the total on the westerns from all companies to 62.

Gain scored during the current stanza is expected to hold in '47, company biggies believe. While Metro, Universal, 20th-Fox and Columbia will probably chip down their releases, losses from those four companies will be equalized, it's said, by probable advance by UA plus a considerable boost in the number of British films expected to reach the Yank theatre market. Rank, alone, is figured for 30 pix next year against 10 in '45 and Sir Alexander Korda should be good for four to six on his own. Added factor to buy the number is the newly formed Eagle-Lion which plans minimum of 12 American pix plus its allotment from Rank.

Despite strike-caused difficulties in production and hypoed releasing pace, the majors have now piled up a backlog of 120 pix. Accumulated product will act as ballast in the coming year, execs say, and insure steady supply of films for exhibs.

778 in '37 Modern Peak

Releases hit their modern peak in 1937 when 778 films played U. S. theatres. Following figures indicate steady dip (except for 1944) in totals:

1939—761
1940—673
1941—598
1942—533
1943—427
1944—442
1945—377

Metro Cancels Day-and-Date System In L. A. for Legal Protection; Move KO's Majors Extending 1st Runs

In an important move which may ultimately cue similar action by other majors, Metro has dropped the day-and-date system of booking its pix in the Los Angeles area and indicated an intention of abandoning the practice elsewhere. M-G's move, it's understood, followed advice of its legal experts and is an outgrowth of the anti-trust decisions both in New York and Chicago, where the drastic Jackson Park ruling was handed down.

Company has withdrawn from the Egyptian in Hollywood and the Belmont in Los Angeles. Both houses are owned by Fox West Coast but were part of the Metro LA first-run system which also includes the Los Angeles theatre and the Wilshire. Latter two houses will be retained by M-G to showcase its films since they are not situated in the same geographical locality.

Whether move was necessary or not because of status of anti-trust cases is worrying trade circles since all majors have similar systems, varying from three to five theatres, in the LA area. Understood that FWC reps journeyed east for a hurried huddle with Metro toppers in an effort to convince them that action was premature. M-G, however, stood by advice of its counsel and ordered the withdrawal.

Understood that Metro will widen its action by closing down other day-and-date situations which it has in FWC houses in San Diego and Oakland. Meanwhile, David O. Selznick has snapped up the Egyptian

(Continued on page 18)

Maurice A. Bergman
(Eastern pub-ad head of Universal Pictures) testify inquires
"Is This a Business?"
* * *
an editorial feature
in the
41st Anniversary Number
of
VARIETY
Out Next Week

Johnston Chides Church's Blast Vs. Drug Films

Campaign currently being sparked by the Legion of Decency against liberalization a few months ago of the Production Code clause on films dealing with the drug traffic, last week brought a sharp rejoinder, relayed by a Washington spokesman, from Eric Johnston, Motion Picture Assn. prexy. Irked by charges that the change had been "sneaked through" by the MPA board meeting "in camera," and that a flock of "sensational dope pictures was sure to follow," Johnston made two major points in his reply. They are:

1. The Legion, by "pre-judging," is violating its oft-repeated policy that it is not a censorship body, but merely classifies pictures after they have been made. The only film on the dope traffic in immediate prospect is

(Continued on page 20)

Harold Smith's Honor

Paris, Dec. 30.

Harold Smith was awarded the Legion of Honor here last week.

Vet filmer is head of Johnston office for continental Europe.

Cole Porter Score For Metro's Musical 'Pride'

Arthur Freed is slated to produce a musical version for Metro of "Pride and Prejudice," Jane Austen novel of the British, period. Cole Potter will write the score, with Judy Garland and Lucille Bremer starring. Albert Hackett and Frances Goodrich did the screenplay.

Metro turned out a straight version of "Pride" in 1940, Hunt Stromberg producing and Greer Garson and Laurence Olivier starred.

41st Anniversary Number
OF
VARIETY
OUT NEXT WEEK
JANUARY 8

VARIETY
Trade Mark Registered
FOUNDED BY SIME SILVERMAN
Published Weekly by VARIETY, Inc.
Sid Silverman, President
154 West 46th St., New York 19, N. Y.
SUBSCRIPTION
Annual $10 Foreign $11
Single Copies 25 Cents
Vol. 165 No. 4
Happy New Year

INDEX

Milton Berle 2
Bills 38
Chatter 47
Film Reviews 14
Foreign 16
George Frazier 32
House Reviews 39
Inside Legit 40
Inside Radio 30
Legitimate 40
Literati 45
Music 31
New Acts 38
Night Club Reviews 38
Obituary 46
Orchestras 31
Pictures 3
Pre-Production News 7
Radio 21
Radio Reviews 28
Frank Scully 45
Television 24
Vaudeville 36

DAILY VARIETY
(Published in Hollywood by Daily Variety, Ltd.)
$10 a Year—$15 Foreign

Ideal Factoring Co. (Hersh) Cues '2d Money' Caution in Indie Financing

Reflecting the general uncertainty currently prevailing in film financial circles concerning status of the industry, Ideal Factoring Co., N. Y., which has had investments in more than 100 films, disclosed last week that it is completely backing out of 35m indie-pic financing for the time being, at least. It's going instead into 16m backing on an experimental basis and will return to throwing the heaviest part of its investment coin into regular commercial factoring in the garment and other industries, field in which it originally started.

Ideal, headed by Martin Hersh, is typical of all the secondary financing outfits, such as that established by George J. Schaefer last winter and Arthur Greene's organization in Chicago, in backing water from extensive plans for expansion and large-scale investing that they were making six months ago. According to Hersh, whole field has become too speculative as a result of strikes, shortages, Technicolor delays, upped production costs, internal dissension in United Artists, which handles most of the indie product, uncertainties ahead in foreign distribution, and generally hazy picture concerning the U. S. 18 to 24 months hence, when pix now being financed will go into release.

'Transitional Period'

"From the investment and banking point of view," Hersh declared, "it appears much safer to sit back and wait until the present transitional period is over and the general industry situation clarifies itself. Independent production is fraught with too much danger, particularly since, unlike the major companies, an independent is not in a position to temporarily shelve a film if it happens to be completed at an inopportune time for its release."

Banks some months ago started to pull in their horns on pic backing, although their position is always considerably better than the secondary financing outfits, since they get their coin back on assignment by the producer of initial rentals

(Continued on page 18)

Beaton Assoc. Producer For Korda on Wilde Play

Cecil Beaton, who designed sets and costumes and appeared in current Broadway run of "Lady Windermere's Fan," has been pacted by Sir Alexander Korda as an associate producer on Oscar Wilde's play, "Ideal Husband," which will be made in England next summer. Beaton will sail with Korda for London on the Queen Elizabeth Friday (3). Korda has been in the U.S. for the past several months and returns to New York today (Wed.) from a vacation at Boca Raton, Fla.

Wilde play, which has just been acquired by the producer, was originally staged in London in 1895. Korda will make it in Technicolor, with Beaton designing the production. He'll also supervise the costumes for "Salome," which will be made by Korda this spring with Orson Welles and Eileen Herlie.

Dillard's Successors

Jay Eisenberg, of Loew's legal department, has been named to succeed Tyree Dillard, Jr., liaison between Metro's sales and legal departments, who resigned last week to open a law office in his home town of Greensboro, N. C. Pincus Sober, former legal counsel on Loew's labor relations staff, will succeed Herb Nusbaum, Dillard's associate, who also resigned last week to join the Monogram legal staff on the Coast.

Eisenberg, who served as legal representative of the group that worked out Loew's retirement plan, takes over Friday (3). New appointments are considered a step upstairs for both Eisenberg and Sober, since they're moving their offices from the seventh and fifth floors, respectively, to the eighth floor of Metro's home office.

JERRY WALD IN N. Y.

Jerry Wald is in New York for two weeks' sessions with Warners home office execs.

Producer also will eye Broadway shows for properties and talent.

Valli Easy to Bally

Valli, 22-year-old blond Italian film actress, arrives in New York today (Wednesday) aboard the Queen Elizabeth to start work in "The Paradine Case," being produced by Alfred Hitchcock for David O. Selznick's Vanguard Films. Valli—who insists on the single moniker—is under a long-term pact to Selznick. She was discovered and signed by his distribution chief, Neil Agnew, during a European trip last year. She's been studying English in Rome for the past eight months.

Femme will be co-starred in her initial pic with Gregory Peck and Ann Todd, latter a British actress likewise making her American debut.

Stephen Foster 16m Shorts With 'Bridges' For Full-Length Pic

Unusual experiment in simultaneously making a feature and shorts for 16m distribution and possibly 35m is being backed by Ideal Factoring Co., N. Y., film financing outfit which has just bowed out of investing in regular Hollywood production. New company, Admiral Pictures, Inc., has been set up to make and release the narrow-gauge product, with George W. Weiss, exec. production and distribution exec. v.p. in charge of sales and distribution. Martin Hersh, prexy of Ideal, is also prex of Admiral.

Initial films in the experiment are now in production in 16m Kodachrome on the Gordon Street lot in Hollywood, with shooting slated to finish early next week. Being made are 12 two-reel shorts, each one containing a song by Stephen Foster and a dramatic portion concerning incidents in the famed songsmith's life including the inspiration for the particular tune.

Each of the shorts will be self-contained, but so written that the 24 reels can be edited into a regular eight- or 10-reel pic on the life and songs of Foster. Special bridges to link the parts are being shot. Feature will be labeled "Beautiful Dreamer" and is expected to be ready within a few months. Full 35m production values are being put into it, Hersh said, but production in 16m makes possible a reduced cost far below a standard feature. No budget has been set on the initial film, since there has been no previous experience with a production of this type.

If the shorts and feature turn out as expected, attempt may be made to blow them up to 35m for regular theatrical distribution. Number of majors contacted by Weeks and Hersh have indicated interest in seeing the result. Narrow-gauge product will be distributed through a franchise-setup, with a national ad campaign planned.

"King's Men" musical aggregation is doing the choral work in pictures. Dick Weston is producer-director and Al Smiley did the script. Hersh's brother, Sam, is production manager. Another brother, Dave, is currently partnered with Sam Coslow, Walter Bachelor and Monte Proser in production of "Copacabana" for United Artists release.

Admiral Pictures, it is expected, later will go fully into the 16m field, making entertainment, educational and religious films.

Hyman to London Jan. 10 For Lesser's 2 Films

Louis Hyman, v.p. of Sol Lesser Productions, planes to London Jan. 10 for several weeks of huddles. He'll take with him a print of Lesser's forthcoming "Red Stallion," and will confab with Dave Coplan, United Artists' manager for Britain, on London opening. He's also scheduled for talks with Bob Wolff, RKO topper there, on distribution of the "Terzan" pix, which RKO handles.

Hyman has been in New York for past seven weeks on Lesser biz. He'll go back to the Coast following his returns from abroad.

Joey Adams
Writes About the Segue

"From Punches to Punch Lines"

* * *

an editorial feature of the 41st Anniversary Number of VARIETY Out Next Week

French Bankers Tighten Up Also

Paris, Dec. 30.

French film industry, struggling in the throes of postwar reconversion difficulties, received its greatest setback since the war's end last week when the four largest French banking houses shut down all credits to French producers. Banks, including the Societe Generale, Credit Lyonnais, B.N.I.C. and Comptoir National D'Ecompte, gave no reasons for their decision but industry chiefs attribute it to the general economic unrest in the country.

Crisis in French production has been hypoed recently by the shortage of electric current, which has disrupted shooting schedules so that producers have no way of determining their budget needs or whether they'll even be able to finish a new film. Influx of foreign pictures has also knocked the pins out from under the French industry, with producers containing to plead for self-imposed quotas by American distribs over and above the provisions of the Leon Blum pact.

Majority of producers concede that the American majors have seen the necessity for French product to get a break on local screens but claim that a mass of U. S. indies are flooding the market indiscriminately. Several of these indies are affiliated with the majors in the domestic U.S. market but have pulled out in foreign distribution, in order to escape the restrictions imposed on the majors.

French public still favors American pictures above all others but producers claim the pendulum of favor may swing in the other direction if the market continues to be glutted with American films.

Deutsch-Horne East For Board Meet; OK Glett, UA

Directorate of Story Productions will meet later this week to put its okay on Charles L. Glett as v.p. and general manager and to give final approval to unit's distribution pact with United Artists. Glett, who returns Z. Hoffman's novel, "Gentlemen's Agreement," which will be published by Simon & Schuster. Price was $75,000, with a sliding scale of book sales until a maximum of $200,000 is reached. Novel deals with anti-Semitism.

Warner Bros. also made a purchase, having acquired "Slippery Hitch," novel by Gerald Butler, which was published in England recently. It's a crime story. There are no plans yet for publication in this country, but it is thought very likely there will be.

4 Flirt for 'Forest'

Universal-International, 20th-Fox, Paramount and William Tyler all interested in obtaining screen rights to Lillian Hellman's current Broadway legiter, "Another Part of the Forest," but no deal has been made yet. Miss Hellman has set no price, leaving that to negotiation, but is asking either an outright sale with payments spread over a period of years or a down payment plus percentage of the pictures profits.

Wyler is anxious to obtain the property for production by Liberty Films, indie unit in which he is a partner, since he directed Miss Hellman's "The Little Foxes" for Samuel Goldwyn.

N. Y. to Europe

Cecil Beaton.
Lawrence Evans.
Sir Alexander Korda.

Show Biz Needs Xmas Present System

Show business goes in for Xmas gifting as an occupational ritual to such a large degree that it should be cautioned henceforth on the proposition of keying its holiday presents. Apart from the fact that such seasonal gifts run into fancy figures, perhaps of an average higher in quantity and quality than in any other branch, there is always the hazard of honest losses, as when prominent addresses, perhaps a congenital bohemianism about the formality of properly acknowledging gifts, etc., which makes it mandatory for giftors and giftees alike, henceforth, to make certain the presents were properly received. And, if unacknowledged, the donors should have a key for a followup checkup.

This was brought home several times last week with curious results. There was an instance of a music publisher who dispatched an office boy to make the rounds on the Monday before Xmas and found the boy never came back on the job. The popular show biz habit of sending out liquor has had repercussions on both coasts and in Chi. Only a few of the more seasoned hands either have a system of personal conveyance or a return card for checker-uppering. The amount of stuff that gets detoured, accidentally or by design, all points to the necessity of a more realistic method of keying safe receipt. Too many calls in the past week have cropped up, inquiring whether or not the intended recipient got a certain parcel, indicating that the Xmas present habit has become a bit of a larceny in certain quarters.

Something new which has been added, also, due to new and/or inadequate sales staffs in even the best of shops has been the embarrassing habit of not removing price tags from gifts. Somehow the mystery of how much an Xmas present costs is minimized when price tags are overlooked by overly busy sales clerks.

Justice Dept. Denies It's Ready To File Trust Suit Vs. Technicolor

Washington, Dec. 30.

Reports that the Justice Department is ready to file an anti-trust suit against the Technicolor Corp. are completely without foundation, according to Justice anti-trust division officials.

"We are not nearly ready to decide anything yet and we have not given the green light to file such a suit," said a spokesman.

The fact is that the Justice Department is still digging into the case and collecting information. It will not make any decision until it has all its material on hand.

At one time Justice Dept. thought it would be in a position for an early suit against Technicolor. However, its Coast office moved slowly and failed to obtain all the requested information. The case was returned to the Coast office some months ago to start all over again.

'Amber' Back on Sked

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Production of "Forever Amber" at 20th-Fox is stepping along according to schedule in its second start, regardless of recent cases of illness among the cast.

Otto Preminger, director, gave the players a half-day off to dress up for their New Years Eve celebrations. Schedule calls for 54 more days of shooting.

$150,000 Sliding Scale Ceiling on Par's Buy Of 'Jed Blaine's Woman'

Screen rights to "Jed Blaine's Woman," novel by Evelyn Wells to be published by Doubleday next spring, have been purchased by Paramount. Price was $50,000 plus 50c a copy for every copy over 50,000 until a ceiling of $150,000 is reached. Bonuses of $25,000 are provided, if the book becomes a Literary Guild or Book-of-the-Month Club selection.

Deal originally sought by Hal Matson, agent for the author, was $1 a copy for each copy over 50,000. Par resisted that, however, inasmuch as a per-copy bonus of that size begins to near the point where it might be profitable for a publisher to buy up copies of his own book and resell them to the trade. On that principle, all film companies are in opposition to per-copy bonuses of beyond 50c or 75c.

Rights were purchased by 20th-Fox at the end of last week to Laura Z. Hobson's novel, "Gentlemen's Agreement," which will be published by Simon & Schuster. Price was $75,000, with a sliding scale of book sales until a maximum of $200,000 is reached. Novel deals with anti-Semitism.

Warner Bros. also made a purchase, having acquired "Slippery Hitch," novel by Gerald Butler, which was published in England recently. It's a crime story. There are no plans yet for publication in this country, but it is thought very likely there will be.

Irene Dunne Quits Col. In Harry Cohn Tiff

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Irene Dunne and Columbia called off their contract suit, with two pictures to go, after an argument with Harry Cohn over the star's right to approve the director and the leading man in her films.

Cancellation means that Miss Dunne will not play the star role in the Casey Robinson production, "No Sad Songs For Me." Understood Olivia de Havilland will take over.

L. A. to N. Y.

John Auer.–
Walter Bullock.
Raymond Burr.
Tom Connors.
Alan Curtis.
Armand Deutsch.
Charles Feldman.
Fred Finklehoffe.
Dick Fleischer.
William Holden.
Gordon Jones.
Dick Kerr.
Alexander Knox.
I. B. Kornblum.
Anatole Litvak.
Gale Robbins.
Frank P. Rosenbloom.
Lou Shapiro.
Ann Sothern.
Milton Sperling.
Mark Stevens.
David Sussman.
Jerry Wald.
Frank Wallace.
Ralph Wheelwright.
Douglas Wood.
Sol Wurtzel.

N. Y. to L. A.

Irving Berlin.
James Elliott.
Hal Horne.
Ben Kalmenson.
Harry Kurnitz.
Janis Page.
Arthur Schwartz.
Marvin Young.

Europe to N. Y.

Irina Baronova.
Samuel Goldwyn.
Peter Lorre Wilde.
Christian Dior.
Ivor Novello.

LINGO PIX SPREADING INTO STIX

Korda's Aide Reprises Same Warning That U.S. Better Show More Brit. Pix

Sounding another note for wider distribution of British films in the U. S. if American producers hope to retain their hold on the British market, P. C. Stapleton, director of Sir Alexander Korda's Shepperton and Worton Hall studios, declared last week that the more good British pictures that are produced, the less the British will have to import American product to fill their screens. The time may come, consequently, when the British will have a buyers' market as far as American films are concerned and they won't have to play U. S. product as they do now.

Stapleton, stressing that he was speaking as an average member of the British public and not as a distribution exec, pointed out that English pictures had increased steadily in both quality and quantity since the war's end. Fact that British product is now getting more playing time on British screens is because it's getting better, not because American films are losing favor, he said. The time when the British will be able to produce enough to meet their own demands is dependent on many factors, but conditions are improving steadily and that time will undoubtedly come.

Stapleton arrived in New York aboard the Queen Elizabeth Dec 12 and left for the Coast Saturday (28) to study American production techniques and equipment. First stop in Hollywood will be at the 20th-Fox studios, under arrangements set up

(Continued on page 20)

British MOI Expects To Continue Info Pix Use; Major Circuits Book 'Em

Heavy use of films by the British government during the war which saw some 923 films produced by the Ministry of Information through the six years of conflict, is expected to continue substantially the same in peacetime though on a slightly reduced scale. Stressing films as an ideal channel for dissemination of information, Thomas Baird, director of the Film Division of the British Library, declared in New York that "the British government is definitely committed to a film policy and has a strong belief in that medium both at home and abroad."

Top grossers the British government has had recently are two documentary films "The Raider" and "Journey Together" which deal with the merchant marine and the Royal Air Force respectively. These pictures were turned over to Nat Sanders' American firm, known as English Films, which distributed the pair on a percentage basis. Both films scored long runs in key U.S. cities and have been booked by the Loew and RKO circuits.

During the war many British and American film stars offered their services to the Government on the cuff but now, that patriotic custom has faded with cessation of hostilities. Notable among thespers who appeared in British documentaries was Edward G. Robinson who starred in the RAF saga, "Journey Together," among others.

HEINEMAN SETS NT DEALS FOR RANK FILMS

Both "Wicked Lady" and "Stairway to Heaven," J. Arthur Rank's leadoff pix under Universal distribution, will play a number of National Theatres' circuits including Fox-West Coast, William J. Heineman, Rank's U. S. sales head, said last week on his return from the Coast. Far west was further pried open for British pix by a deal which Heineman made for playing of Prestige Pictures in 20 FWC houses. Pact represents a switch from Prestige's former policy of sticking to the art houses since the FWC theatres are first-runs and nabes.

"U followed its previously shaped

(Continued on page 20)

Hollywood Humorist
Harry Kurnitz
has a humorous piece on Novel Contests
* * *
an editorial feature of the 41st Anniversary Number of
VARIETY
Out Next Week

French, Too, Want More U.S. Dates In Swap for Quotas

Pointing up the increasing aggressiveness of foreign films in the domestic American market, a group of leading French producers are preparing a personal campaign for better playing time for their product in the United States. Four French film toppers planning junkets to America sometime in January are Gen. Corniglion-Molinier, president of Gaumont; Jean Le Duc, George Loureau, prexy of Regina Films and French partner of Alexander Korda, and André Paulve, president of Discina Films.

The four plan to coordinate their campaign with group meetings with top U. S. exhibitors and distributors, in an effort to gain acceptance for their films in situations other than the arty houses and an occasional subsequent run theatre. Producers will try to persuade the American toppers to play good French product in some of the better domestic houses. With the exhibs they will point up the increasing popularity and b.o. strength of foreign films in this country, while the argument for distributors will be better playing

(Continued on page 18)

Fielding Files Appeal On 'Outlaw' Permit

Albany, Dec. 30.

Appeal from the ruling of Dr. Ward C. Bowen, acting director of the Motion Picture Division of the State Education Dept., upholding the license granted to Howard Hughes' "The Outlaw," has been filed with the 12-man Board of Regents by N. Y. License Commissioner Benjamin Fielding. Review of Dr. Bowen's findings and a determination that pic's advertising has passed the line of decency are sought by the commish.

One of chief points of dispute on which Fielding lost out before Dr. Bowen was whether ads outside the state could be considered. In confirming the seal, decision did not cover context of film nor "decency" of out-of-state ads.

Johnston's Ariz. Sunning

Eric Johnston, Motion Picture Assn. prez, is currently resting in Arizona on orders of his medico. He had been at his home in Spokane for the holidays, but doctor decided he wasn't fully recovered from attack of pneumonia which he recently suffered in England and sent him to the dry-air-and-sunshine territory to recuperate.

MPA head's schedule called for him to spend two weeks in Hollywood before returning to his headquarters in Washington, but it isn't certain now whether he'll get in the studio visit or not, since he intends to be back in the capital around mid-January.

LINGUISTIC GI'S BIG AUDIENCE

Growth in popularity of foreign pictures, as evidenced especially in New York, where almost 20% of the city's theatres are playing foreign product on at least a part-time basis, is reverberating throughout the country. Besides many nabe exhibs converting to a partial foreign-film policy, realty owners in several cities without art houses have come to New York recently with the intention of building art houses in their home towns if they can get enough product.

Reconversion and building plans are giving added impetus to the current scramble by Indie American distribs to buy up French-made pix for release in the U. S. At least 25 American indies are currently shopping for product in Paris and, paradoxically, are finding plenty of French films available but a tremendous bottleneck in U. S. outlets because of the still limited number of U. S. theatres playing foreign pix. Illustrative of booking conditions is the fact that the 55th Street Playhouse, Fifth Avenue Playhouse and Avenue in N. Y. are all booked solidly for the next eight months.

Representatives of realty firms in Cleveland, Cincinnati and Chicago have contacted N. Y. distributors of foreign films during the last several weeks to line product with an eye to seeing if there's enough to keep a new theatre operating 52 weeks a year. Several more N. Y. nabes, including the Brandt-owned Atlantic Playhouse in Brooklyn, have recently been converted to first-run outlets for foreign pix. In addition, Vog Films, an indie distrib

(Continued on page 18)

42d St. Theatre's 25G

Illustrative of the way foreign films are catching on in the U. S. is the new record being chalked up by the French-made "Les Miserables" during its first week at the Apollo, N. Y. Officials of the Brandt circuit, which own the house, predict the film will top its unprecedented $24,500 at the end of its first seven days tonight (Tuesday), and will have played to approximately 40,000 fans.

Apollo, with 1,400 capacity, is charging $1.20 top for the picture. Film runs 200 minutes but the slow-down in turnover is compensated by the theatre running continuously from 8 a.m. to 3 a.m. Last previous record-holder was "Gone With the Wind," which chalked up $9,000 at $1.10 tops.

National Boxoffice Survey

Holiday Week Booms Biz — 'Razor,' 'Show-Off,' 'Skies,' 'Time, Place,' 'Song,' 'Clouds' the Big Six

National film theatre business surged back during the past week, measuring up to promises and toppling old records in many key cities. New, strong screen product, of course, is helping and in some spots competition even for big holiday week trade is keen.

"Razor's Edge" (20th) is shooting up into top spot, being more than $150,000 ahead of its closest rival in keys covered by VARIETY this week. "Show-Off" (M-G), new Red Skelton comedy, is strongly entrenched in second position, showing in 12 spots. "Blue Skies" (Par), which has been up among the winners for several weeks, climbed back into third groove this session.

A newcomer, "Time, Place, Girl" (WB), is in fourth place, momentum champ, playing in seven cities. "Song of South" (RKO) is coming into its own this stanza, taking fifth slot.

Others in the Big 10, in order of boxoffice take, are "Till Clouds Roll By" (M-G), "Cross My Heart" (Par), "Wonderful Life" (RKO), "Best Years of Lives" (RKO) and "Undercurrent" (M-G). "Best Years" stays up largely via its marked strength where showing, since in only three spots. "Life," Minneapolis topper, is uniformly solid to big in five cities. "Jolson Story" (Col), doing sock $32,000 in Chicago and socko in Seattle, is opening this week in many smaller cities and doing big.

"Man I Love" (WB), a newcomer, shapes nicely in three keys. "Stairway to Heaven" (U), also new, looks promising, being smash in its N. Y. preem at reserved-seat Park Avenue, which Universal is now operating. "Humoresque" (WB), another new entry, is getting a record $58,000 in its N. Y. preem. "Wicked Lady" (U) is sturdy on its second session at N. Y. Winter Garden.

"Wake Up and Dream" (20th), which had been doing nicely, is fairly well smothered in deluge of new product this week. Same is partly true of "Magnificent Doll" (U) which is big both in Indianapolis and Baltimore. "Black Beauty" (20th) shapes stout in Omaha, being one of leaders there. "Plainsman and Lady" looms fine in Louisville.

(Complete Boxoffice Reports on Pages 10-11)

British 'Henry' Has Piled Up $700,000 Net in Only 10 U. S. Roadshowings

Jimmy Durante
Hollywood bon vivant and man-about-pools details how now that he's got a private puddle in his backyard it has put him
"In the Swim"
* * *
an editorial feature
in the
41st Anniversary Number
of
VARIETY
(Out Next Week)

United Artists, which sent "Henry V" into release last April 3, has piled up a net profit of $700,000 to date on the British-made pic. It has played only 10 engagements in the U.S. and seven in Canada, plus three stands of one, two or three nights in college towns. All dates have been on roadshow policy, with UA taking houses on a four-walls basis. Result has been a net to the distrib of 51% of pic's b.o. gross.

Two of the early U.S. engagements are currently closing, and nine new ones are opening up. Shuttering are Chicago after 22 weeks and Memphis after four weeks. Continuing are New York, now in 29th week; Washington, currently in its 7th week, and San Francisco, in its 12th week.

New dates, which will bring UA close to the limit of the 14 prints it has on hand, are Philly (opened Dec. 23), Cleveland (Dec. 26), Milwaukee (Jan. 2), Kansas City (Jan. 3), New Haven (Jan. 7), Providence (Jan. 8), Atlanta (Jan. 31), Seattle (Feb. 2) and Rochester (Feb. 2).

Paul N. Lazarus, Jr. UA pub-ad head, who has been handling the "Henry" dates, is planning also to continue the college town barnstorming, which has proved exceptionally profitable. For instance, in Northampton, Mass. (Smith College), pic in three days earned a net of $2,200, or approximately 50% of the $4,500 profit gained in the four weeks run in Buffalo.

Selznick Via FC Denied by Agnew And Joe Bernhard

Deal reported in the trade last week to be cooking between Selznick Releasing Organization and Film Classics was denied Monday (30) by Joseph Bernhard. Latter, who bought into the reissue outfit last week, was said to have done so as part of an arrangement for physical handling by FC of Selznick product and perhaps eventually somewhat broader activities. Neil Agnew, SRO prexy, joined Bernhard in denying that a deal is pending.

Bernhard, former Warner Bros. theatre head, was reported interviewing prospective employees for the FC setup and to have inferred that they might be handling Selznick product. FC is handling some Selznick reissues and a misunderstanding may have occurred on that score.

FC owns seven of its own exchanges and operates through 22 franchiseholders in other territories. That would mean exchanges in 36 cities that could potentially store, ship, inspect and bill for Selznick and provide a physical nucleus around which his own sales staff could be expanded.

Agnew refused Monday to disclose organizational plans for the new releasing organization Selznick has been forced to set up as a result of the recent dispute in which he

(Continued on page 18)

Sam Goldwyn in London Avers U.S. Fans Highly Receptive to Brit. Pix

London, Dec. 21.

At press reception given by RKO for Sam Goldwyn at the Savoy hotel, Dec. 20, Goldwyn stated he was here for two reasons. One was to see his son, who is working as assistant director to Sydney Box, and (2) to arrange for West End showing of "Best Years of Our Lives," for which no theatre has yet been chosen.

As regards British pictures, Goldwyn said they were inspiring Hollywood. He thought "Henry V" a great job, and liked several other British films he had seen. He restated statements made by several important British film people that English pix are not getting good showings in America. He said that 12 films are currently being shown in New York, and six in Hollywood.

He further added that there were no limits in America in entertainment, saying that critics in New York go overboard on British and French films.

Reverting to "Years," Goldwyn stated it was the only pic that had been requested to be shown for two nights in succession on his trip on the Queen Elizabeth. Also that it

(Continued on page 20)

SCHAEFER HAS RIGHTS TO PALLOS-STAFFORD PIC

George J. Schaefer, former RKO and United Artists topper, now in the indie financing biz, has acquired American distribution rights to "The 16th Bar," Steve Pallos-John Stafford production formerly labeled "Teheran." Schaefer refused to disclose how he'll handle distribution, whether pic will be stateswighted or turned over to a national releasing organization.

Film was shot in Rome and Teheran, and centers around the plot on the late President Roosevelt's life while he was attending the Big Three conclave in the Iranian capital during the war. New title derives from the fact that the attempt on the President's life was to be made when the band hit the 16th bar of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Film was directed by William Freshman, and stars Derek Farr and Marta LaBarr. They're all British. Pallos, who produced the film with blocked currency in Italy, is presently in the U. S.

Chi, KC and St. Loo Will HQ Flock Of Sales Meets As Soon As Decree's OKd

With still no indication from the courts as to when the final decree will be handed down, industry sales toppers predict a general rush for hotel reservations in Chicago, Kansas City and St. Louis when it's finally issued. Trio of centrally-located cities have been generally favored for sales meets in the past and it's believed almost all the film companies will attempt to line up meets there as soon as the decree is finalized so sales chiefs can talk things over with their field staffs.

Sales toppers have already expressed discontent with the decree's delay, pointing out they can't set any new policies for the coming year until they learn definitely under what restrictions they'll be forced to operate. Conscnsus, however, is that the Government will give them at least six months to readjust their sales methods; hence the necessity for a get-together of the sales staffs to map out the new policies.

Most of the sales chiefs of the Big Five don't foresee any drastic changes in the decree from the original anti-trust decision handed down last June, with the exception of the competitive bidding provisos incorporated in the decision. Latter are expected to be bypassed in the decree through almost unanimous disapproval of Government attorneys, distributors and exhibitors. Other changes, such as single-selling, have already been adopted by the majors.

Metro is probably unique among the Big Five as the only company that has tried to anticipate the decree. Whereas the other companies have sat back on almost all the decision's rulings except that on single-selling, Metro has attempted to readjust all situations that might have been considered to breach the rulings, once such situations have been brought to the attention of the M-G sales staff and explained. Exhibs who could prove their situations were not compatible, for instance, have in many instances been granted clearance over their opposition, as called for in the decision.

In addition, Metro conducted experiments in competitive bidding in several test situations, all strictly competitive, in an attempt to gain knowledge of the way the system would work in case it was written into the final decree. On the basis of this, Metro sales chief William F. Rodgers doesn't predict too many enforced changes from his present policy. Metro's post-decree sales meet, consequently, will probably be held on the Coast sometime during February, to give the sales staff a chance to look over the new season's product, as well as to talk over the decree.

GOLDWYN BUYS HOUR DISK SHOW FOR PIX

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Indicating a possible new trend in film advertising in radio, Sam Goldwyn has bought full program time on station KLAC here. There has been literally tons of time bought on spot announcement bases but Goldwyn's move is the first such and may start others thinking his way.

Starting Jan. 1, Goldwyn will sponsor one hour of the two hours station allots "Christmas Early," femme disk jockey. Goldwyn will take the last hour, midnight to one a.m., of the six-nights weekly show, augmenting with stars and other film dressing.

Plan is to use it for an institutional as well as for plugging current releases. Initial benefiting film will be "Best Years of Our Lives."

Claghorn's Dixie Teeoff

Eagle-Lion kicks off Jan. 21 with the world preem of its lead off pic, "It's a Joke, Son," Kenny Delmar and June Lockhart star, at the Paramount theatre, Austin, Texas state capital. Opening is timed for same day as inauguration of Governor-elect Beauford H. Jester.

Through a deal which hands preferred playing-time to E-L's film, Interstate circuit, Par's partner chain, will play "Joke" at the Aztec, San Antonio, starting Jan. 22; Metropolitan, Houston, Jan. 23 and Majestic, Dallas, Jan. 24. Group of E-L top personnel, including Delmar and Miss Lockhart, will head from both New York and the Coast to attend the preem and the gubernatorial inauguration.

ADV. PIX PRIMED FOR NEGRO CINEMAS EXCL.

New angle on advertising pix for theatres is outfit currently being organized in New York to make one-reelers for Negro theatres exclusively. It claims it can reach the 4,000,000 weekly patrons of the country's 600 Negro theatres for approximately $25,000 a reel.

John Gluskin, attorney and band manager, and Alfred Kohn, recently out of the Signal Corps, are organizers of Industrial & Educational Film Co. Idea is to put plenty of entertainment value in the films, which will be musicals, but more than average amount of product-plugging that goes into reels designed for ofay houses.

Theatres will get $3 per 1,000 patrons, usual fee. That's $12,000 to cover the country. Films cost about $2,500-$3,000 a reel to produce and around $10,000 represents distribution, handling and profit. Company will also make ad reels for general audiences.

Goldman Asks $8,600,000 In Additional Suit

Philadelphia, Dec. 30.

William Goldman late today (Monday) filed a supplemental damage suit against the Warner interests and eight major distributors, adding additional damages of $8,600,000 in behalf of the Erlanger, which Goldman has under lease.

Goldman's new suit, filed in U. S. District Court, came on the heels of last week's decree, which gave him $375,000 in damages plus $60,000 for lawyers fees and ordered the defendants to break up alleged "monopolistic practices" which he claimed discriminated against the Erlanger and prevented him from getting first-run product for the house.

The new action covered the time from December, 1942—when the original suit was filed—until today, during which Goldman claims he suffered a loss of $2,800,000. He is asking trebled damages, allowable under the terms of the federal anti-trust laws. In addition, Goldman asked for lawyers' fees and asked the court to impose the costs of the litigation against the defendants.

The $8,600,000 asked by Goldman is believed to be the greatest amount involved in an anti-trust suit in the film industry in the U. S.

Defendants in the suit are the same as in the original action—Loew's, Paramount, RKO, 20th-Fox, Columbia, Warner Bros., Warner Bros. Circuit Management, Vitagraph, Stanley Co. of America, Universal and United Artists.

Meanwhile, counsel for these companies huddled over the weekend to decide what steps they would take next. It is believed they would appeal the decree, handed down by federal Judge William H. Kirkpatrick, to the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals. If this appeal fails, they still have the opportunity of applying for a writ of certiorari to ask the U. S. Supreme Court to review the entire question.

UWP Would Buy Back Old U Films for Television

United World Pictures, Universal subsid, is currently flickering to buy out 16m franchise rights to hundreds of old Universal films from International Television Co., marriage-age distrib that filed for reorganization in the N. Y. federal court recently. UWP has offered to purchase the rights from a creditors' committee which is handling International's business affairs under court supervision. Deal is expected to be closed next month for the films, it was disclosed.

UWP already claims to own the largest 16m library in the world. It recently acquired Bell & Howell's Son-O-Tone library and has U. S. distribution rights to thousands of British-made pix of J. Arthur Rank. Company also plans production of one new educational pic per week.

Wallis' First to Lens At Rank's Denham Lot

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

First production by Hal Wallis in England will be filmed on J. Arthur Rank's lot in Denham, just outside London. Picture will be "For Her to See."

Wallis, when he was in London last summer, closed a deal with Rank but the studio and date were left open. Filming will start sometime between May 15 and June 15, with Wallis going over there a month ahead of the starting date, to be decided within the next 10 days.

Mex. Variety Tent Jan. Preem to Draw 50 U. S. Showmen

First Latin-American tent of the Variety Clubs will be inaugurated in Mexico City Jan. 16-17, in a two-day party which may run to Jan. 20.

More than 50 guests from the U. S. will attend the first benefit staged by the Clubhouse of Variety Intercontinental Prexy of the Mexico City tent is Luis R. Montes, prominent local distributor.

Variety Girl

Pittsburgh, Dec. 30.

Paramount may keep its musical, "Variety Girl," under wraps until next May, when it'll be shown to delegates attending the coast convention of national Variety Clubs, according to reports here. Understood that'll be the big blow-off to the annual confab.

Picture is based on the history of the Variety Club, founded here nearly 20 years ago by John H. Harris and group of Pittsburgh showmen when they discovered an abandoned child in lobby of Sheridan Square theatre and promptly adopted her. Club was paid $50,000 by Par for privilege of putting the story on the screen.

Albany Club to Fete "Rip" Collins

Albany, Dec. 30.

James Anthony "Rip" Collins, one-time star with the St. Louis Cardinals, and playing manager of Albany Eastern league club since 1942, will be feted by the Variety Club, Jan. 20, at De Witt Clinton hotel. Collins recently was appointed manager of San Diego in Class AAA Pacific Coast league.

Albany Variety Club will present the Strauss Festival at the Palace theatre, Jan. 27 for the benefit of its Boys Club summer camp.

Kohn Named Barker

Memphis, Dec. 30.

Herb Kohn, assistant to M. A. Lightman, of Malco circuit, was named to a second term as chief barker of Memphis Tent No. 20 of Variety Clubs.

Kohn, who has been instrumental in an expansion program for the club, will be re-installed along with the new officers, Jan. 20.

Dave Flexer was elected first assistant barker; Buster Hammond, second assistant; Ed Sapinsley, property master; and Bailey Prichard, dough guy. Lightman is ex-officio director and past chief barker.

Room for Anderson

Minneapolis, Dec. 30.

Northwest Variety club is raising funds among its members to dedicate a room to Art Anderson, retiring chief barker, in the heart hospital which it will build and equip on the University of Minnesota campus. This will be in recognition and appreciation of his untiring efforts in bringing the campaign to a successful conclusion. A minimum of $1,000 will be raised.

Edwin Claude Mills
(Former General Manager of ASCAP and himself an authority on copyright) writes that
Authors Should Own Copyrights And Limit Their Usage
* * *
an editorial feature of the 41st Anniversary Number
of
VARIETY
Out Next Week

N.Y. Crix Vote 'Best Years' the Best

Samuel Goldwyn's "Best Years of Our Lives" was selected as the outstanding picture of 1946 by the New York Film Critics in the group's annual polling yesterday (Monday). Italian-made "Open City" was cited as the best foreign picture of the year. Group, comprising 18 crix from N. Y. daily newspapers and magazines, does not select a "10 Best" list.

Laurels for the best directing job of the year went to William Wyler for "Best Years," with Laurence Olivier in the runner-up spot for his job on "Henry V," British-made film which rated as the second best all-around feature. Olivier was cited as the best actor for 'Henry," with Best actress award going to Celia Johnson, British actress, for "Brief Encounter."

Under the critics' by-laws, a contestant has to poll two-thirds of the votes before it can win. "Best Years" thus won on the second ballot, with "Henry" and J. Arthur Rank's 'Stairway to Heaven" also receiving mention. "Wycl-Digger's Daughter," produced in France, copped second honors as the best foreign film. Runner-up award for top acting went to Fredric March for "Best Years," with Rosalind Russell cited as second best actress for "Sister Kenny."

Motion for a special award to "Henry" as an outstanding film was voted down because the pic had figured in the competition for the best of the year. Archer Winsten of the N. Y. Post, chairman of the group, presided at the balloting.

Foreign Films

(Continued from page 1)

most distinguished pictures, with one exception ('Best Years of Our Lives'), on this list came from abroad; the Hollywood entries, while accomplished, are generally of conventional stripe."

Alton Cook, of the N. Y. World-Telegram, also selected five foreign pictures in his 10 best. "The slack quality of Hollywood movies this past year becomes more apparent than ever when time comes to make the annual choice of the 10 best pictures," Cook declared. "For the first time in many years—if ever it did happen before—half of these unofficial laurels go to imported films instead of Hollywood's."

NBR Selections

National Board of Review teed off the selections early last week, choosing four foreign-produced pix on its list. Two members, including the British-made "Henry V" and Italian-produced "Open City," topped the list, which also included the British-made "Brief Encounter" in fourth place and French-made "It Happened at the Inn" in sixth. Concurring with the majority opinion, the board selected "Best Years" as the outstanding American film of the year.

Predominant Choices

"Henry," "Encounter" and "Open City" were almost unanimous choices on the lists, but other foreign pictures also made their appearance. Crowther included "Stairway to Heaven" (British) and "Well-Digger's Daughter" (French), and Cook selected "The Raider" (British) among his choices. With the exception of "Best Years," the American pix selected varied widely, including such films as "Notorious," "Green Years," "My Darling Clementine," "Road to Utopia," "A Walk in the Sun," "Postman Always Rings Twice," "Cluny Brown" and "Anna and the King of Siam."

As an added fillip to the implied attack on Hollywood, the Times on Sunday (29) also presented its "seven disappointments" of the year, as compiled by staffer Tom Pryor. Unlisted among the 10 worst pix because "Hollywood was quite generous in this regard during 1946, and it is doubtful that even Solomon in all his celebrated wisdom could compile such a rotten list," Pryor said his group comprised those "great expectations" which failed "in more or less degree to return in terms of entertainment satisfaction all the money and effort that went into their production."

For his "seven disappointments," Pryor selected "Razor's Edge," "Adventure," "Sister Kenny," "Song of the South," "Of Human Bondage," "Devotion," and "Till the End of Time."

"It almost goes without saying," Pryor said, "that some of the pictures on this list were—or still are—big money makers, and that their inclusion here will be regarded by certain producers as proof sufficient that this corner doesn't 'know what the public wants.' But for every contented customer there is a disappointed one, and sometimes the ratio is higher in favor of the latter."

IMPPA Elects Officers

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Independent Motion Picture Producers Assn. retained I. E. Chadwick as president at its annual election.

Edward Finney was re-elected secretary-treasurer, Steve Broidy, Harry H. Thomas and Johnny Jones, veepees, and Fred Steele, Belmont Gottlieb, Karl Hiltleman, A. W. Hackel, Sam Katzman and William Stephens to the board of directors.

NW Indies Study Possible Causes Of Trust Suits

Minneapolis, Dec. 30.

The several heavy judgments already won by independent exhibitors against major distributors in anti-trust law violation suits have a number of the territory's theatre-owners consulting their lawyers to determine if they, too, have any causes of action.

North Central Allied hints that the anti-trust suit filed by the Duluth Theatre Corp. against eight major distributors and the Minnesota Amus. Co. (Paramount circuit), asking $1,350,000 plus fees and costs, for alleged anti-trust violation, is only the first of several such actions to be instituted during the ensuing months. Bennie Berger, North Central Allied president, is principal owner of the Duluth Theatre Corp.

North Central Allied directors, incidentally, will meet next week to consider a proposal to appeal to the Department of Justice for relief against alleged "strangulation" of independent exhibitors by "distributors who, in apparent united agreement, are curtailing production to a point where the very existence of many independent theatre owners is threatened." A "conspiracy or plot" on the distributors' part against independent exhibitors is claimed.

Italian-Dubbed M-G Pix For Italo Fans in N.Y.C.

Loew's circuit in New York, pulling a switch on the current popularity in the U.S. of foreign-produced pix, has instituted a new system of showing Italian-dubbed versions of their own product in theatres in the city's Italian-speaking sections.

System teed off via special experimental showings in two of the different nabe houses and the pix are slated to go into four other such theatres during the next month. If Italian-dubbed pix do good business—and reports from their experimental runs indicate they will—then Loew's is prepared to supply all its theatres with a steady menu of such pix as they become available.

First two pix under the program are "Ziegfeld Girl" and "Honky Tonk," both of which were dubbed in Italy with Italian actors' voices. Films are the regular product exported to Italy by Loew's International, one of the few companies in the industry that has favored dubbed versions over titled versions.

Loew's International has already started servicing indie theatres in the Spanish-speaking sections of New York with a steady diet of Spanish-dubbed pix, with some of the houses playing them to the almost total exclusion of regular product with an English soundtrack. Spanish versions have also earned top grosses in the Spanish-language sections of the country along the Mexican border.

Archainbaud Vice Castle

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Columbia inked George Archainbaud to take over the director chore on "The Crime Doctor's Vacation," which starts Jan. 3.

Job was originally assigned to William Castle, who stepped out because of illness.

H'WOOD HELL-BENT FOR HEAVEN

Par Pacing 24 Films for 1947, Same As 1946; 8 Releases in First 4 Mos.

Setting the same pace as in 1946 when the company released 24 pix during the year, Paramount will distribute eight films during the first four months of '47. Films will be drawn from Par's extensive backlog which has now grown to 27 as result of a policy which saw only two films, "Two Years Before the Mast" and "Blue Skies," doled out during the last four months of the current season.

Slowdown in the last quarter of '46 was part of a plan to test new selling methods under the anti-trust decision. "Mast" and "Skies" were the guinea pigs since Par scrapped to a theatre-by-theatre and pic-by-pic blueprint. New method has been found good for heavy coin with sales toppers now estimating rentals for "Skies" at $5,000,000, same for top for the year, and "Mast" at a sensational $4,400,000.

Added reason for marking time was the hope that the decree, in final shape, would be judicially inked before the year's windup. Opinion of legalites has it that the decree may not be down for some time yet because assignment difficulties of the three judges have interposed hurdles in the way of conferences on findings. Consequently, Par's execs have decided to wait no longer.

Eight films and release dates are: "Cross My Heart," Jan. 10; "The Perfect Marriage," Jan. 24; "Ladies' Man," Feb. 7; "California," Feb. 21; "Easy Come, Easy Go," March 7; "Suddenly It's Spring," March 21; "My Favorite Brunette," April 4; and "The Imperfect Lady," April 25.

Reagan's Move to Cet Par Sales Execs Closer To Exhibs in the Field

Paramount has switched the operation of two of its four divisions to the field in a move to promote closer contact between sales toppers and its customers. Step, tagged by Par as experimental, transfers Earle Sweigert, mid-eastern division head, to hq. in Philadelphia, and George Smith, western division sales manager, to Los Angeles. Single picture selling to individual theatres can be improved, Charles M. Reagan, Par's sales chief, said by having divisional managers operate in the field.

Decentralization step, according to Reagan, will keep his subordinates in close contact with rapidly changing conditions and aid in making spot decisions. Eastern and southern divisions under Hugh Owen and central sector under James Donohue will continue to operate through the home office.

In a further revamping of the sales system, Reagan announced that the western division would henceforth be divided into two districts instead of three. Hugh Braly, formerly in charge of the Denver exchange, succeeds to the post of Coast district manager in place of Del Goodman, resigned. In addition to the four Coast offices, Braly will supervise the Denver and Salt Lake City exchanges. Omaha branch has been added to Ralph Libeau's district.

Tone-Hakim Pic at Col.

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Franchot Tone and Raquel Hakim, indie producers, closed a deal with Columbia for the release of their forthcoming picture, "The Mating Call," screenplayed by Ben Hecht.

Tone will double as star and co-producer, with S. Sylvan Simon, borrowed from Metro, as director.

Rita Slows 'Shanghai'

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Shooting on "Lady From Shanghai" has been resumed after a two-day shutdown due to illness of star Rita Hayworth.

Company will shoot around her at Columbia while she is bedded for a week with flu.

Glenn H. Taylor

(U. S. Senator from Idaho)

writes that

"D. C. Looks to Show Biz Liberals to Combat New Political Restoration Era"

* * *

an editorial feature soon to appear in the

41st Anniversary Number

of

VARIETY

Out Next Week

WB Directors Hit Stride on 19 Pix

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Warners wound up 1946 with 13 directors working on nine pictures and preparing 10 more for 1947 filming. Slated for early shooting in the new year are "Voice of the Turtle," to be directed by John Van Druten; "Whiplash," by Lew Seiler; "The Wallflower," Frederick De Cordova; "Two Guys From Texas" and "Barbary Host," David Butler; "The Frontiersman," Raoul Walsh; "Treasure of the Sierra Madre," John Huston, and "Victoria Grandolet," "The Unsuspected" and "Romance in High C," being prepped by Michael Curtiz under his own banner.

Before the cameras are "My Wild Irish Rose," "Night Unto Night," "The Unfaithful," "Deep Valley," "The Woman in White" and "Dark Passage." In the editing rooms are "The Two Mrs. Carrolls," "Love and Learn" and "Pursued."

BUDDY ADLER CARRIES 'MAIL' WITH WILDE

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Cornel Wilde is set for the star spot in "Royal Mail" at Columbia after finishing "Forever Amber" chores. Actor's trip will be his fourth loan from 20th-Fox to the Gower St. lot.

Buddy Adler is moving over from Metro to produce the story of the first postal system in England.

Weitman's Fund Chore

Robert M. Weitman, managing director of the New York Paramount theatre, has been named chairman of the seventh annual fund-raising drive of Cinema Lodge, B'nai B'rith. Weitman will steer a campaign for $25,000 to be raised through publication of Cinema Lodge's Year Book in conjunction with a theatre party set for March 20.

Martin Levine, general manager of Brandt theatres, has been tapped to chairman the year book committee, with George Gomperts as co-chairman.

Mono's 1st '47 Meet

Monogram's first 1947 sales meet has been set for Jan. 11 and 12 in St. Louis, according to Edward Morey, executive assistant to president Steve Broidy. Latter will plane in from the Coast to attend the meet, together with all franchise-holders and division and branch managers.

Up for discussion will be sales and distribution policy on Mono's big budget release for '47, "It Happened on 5th Avenue," currently filming under the direction of Roy del Ruth.

KALMENSON'S STUDIO MEET

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Ben Kalmenson arrives tomorrow (31) from the east for talks with studio execs at Warners.

He also will meet with several western exchange chiefs.

NEW CYCLE OF CELESTIAL PIX

By FRANK FISKE

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Hollywood producers weren't kidding a while back when they were putting out emphatic statements about seeking out far places for movie backgrounds. When they promised scenery of worldwide scope in postwar films that was understatement. They've not only gone worldwide but far beyond. So that right now, judging from pictures recently released, still in production or being readied for the near future, the whole industry is virtually hell-bent for Heaven.

First indication of the celestial trend came 'way back last summer when Heaven was used for the final scene in the Abbott & Costello starrer, "The Ghost Steps Out." In this pre-merger Universal release the glimpse of Paradise was merely a shot from outside the gates, with the ghostly Costello halted by a sign that said "Closed for Washington's Birthday."

Producers at this point were apparently just sort of feeling their way in the heavenly locale, but they weren't too long getting through the gates. The Charles R. Rogers opus, "Angel On My Shoulder," came out with full-shot sequences in Heaven, using angels, harps and everything. The land beyond the pearly gates has since been exploited quite

(Continued on page 18)

Sureseater in Newsmen Guild's New N.Y. Hdqrs.

Number of foreign language theatre operators, looking for a new spot in the Broadway area, have proffered deals to the American Newspaper Guild for buying in or renting part of the Guild's newly acquired headquarters on West 44th Street, N.Y. Building, which was paid for by a bond subscription among Guild members, cost $200,000 and will be ready for occupancy next March after renovations are completed.

Understood that the Guild is ready to conclude pact with some art film exhib in order to help meet the operating costs on the building. Final deal, however, will not be consummated before the middle of January.

Briefs From the Lots

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Joan Harrison's first producer assignment at Universal-International, following her return from England, will be "The Knave of Diamonds," based on a mystery yarn by Percy Marks. . . Leon Errol starts his 1947 commitment of comedy shorts at RKO Jan. 7, with George Bilson producing and Hal Yates directing . . . William Whitney leads the "Bells of San Angelo" troupe back to the Republic studio this week after three weeks of location shooting in Nevada. . . Thomas R. St. George, author, 'round on the screen treatment on his new book, "Books Are Lighter Than Rifles," which Fanchon will produce for Republic, starting early in January.

Catherine Craig draws the femme lead opposite Randolph Scott in the Clarion production, "Albuquerque," to be filmed in Technicolor, starting Jan. 15 . . . Fred Brannon and Thomas Carr will co-direct the chiffmarker, "Jesse James Rides Again," to be produced by Mike Frankovich at Republic, starting Jan. 10 . . . Gene Autry's next at Republic will be "Twilight on the Rio Grande," an Armand Schaefer production, to be directed by Frank McDonald . . . First of the new Joe McDoakes series of shorts at Warners will be "So You Want to Be a Salesman," starring George O'Hanlon . . . Gloria Grahame draws a singing role in "Song of the Thin Man" at Metro . . . George Sexton led the "It's Only Human" troupe back to the 20th-Fox lot after a month of location shooting in New York . . . Seymour Nebenzal postponed the start of "Atlantis" to Jan. 15 because of space shortage on the Goldwyn lot.

Harry Antrim in from Broadway for a support role in "It's Only Human," produced by William Perlberg for 20th-Fox . . . Enterprise's "Arch of Triumph" will be the only picture to be roadshown next year by United Artists, starting about April 1 . . . Frank Redman inked as first cameraman on "If You Knew Susie" at RKO . . . Edward Jewell assigned as art director on "Repeat Performance" at Eagle-Lion . . . William Marshall draws the male role opposite Adele Mara in "Lightnin' Strikes Twice" at Republic . . . Buddy Rogers and Ralph Cohn will shoot exteriors for "Stork Bites Man" on the grounds of Cedars of Lebanon.

Una O'Connor inked for a featured role in "The Corpse Came C.O.D.," which Sam Bischoff is producing and Henry Levin directing for Columbia . . . Gertrude Astor, star of silent films, draws a key role in "The Unfaithful" at Warners. . . David O. Selznick sent a second-unit crew to Lake Sherwood for several days of shooting on "The Paradine Case" . . . Canada Lee reports this week for a lead role in the John Garfield starrer, "Burning Journey," at Enterprise . . . Natalie Schafer cast for a featured part in "Repeat Performance" at Eagle-Lion . . . Gail Kent, actress who was wounded while on a USO mission during the war, was signed by Hal Wallis for a role in "I Walk Alone" . . . Paramount doing retakes on "The Emperor Waltz," with Robert Jonay doing Tyrolean dances.

Over $11,000,000 in Retroactive Film Studio Pay; H'wood Peace Rumored

Terry Turner

suggests a

"Proving Ground for Field Exploitation Men"

in

VARIETY's

41st Anniversary Number Out Next Week

PRC, E-L Spending $3,975,000 on Lots

Pathe Industries, parent organization for both PRC and Eagle-Lion, has appropriated $3,975,000 for expansion of its existing facilities, remodeling of its buildings and purchase of additional equipment, spokesman for the company disclosed last week. Company was intent upon giving full financial backing to both PRC and E-L and the first year's production budget for E-L alone will be approximately $16,000,000.

Of the construction and remodeling nut, some $2,250,000 has been allocated to Pathe's new film laboratory at 107th St. and Park Ave., N. Y., it was said. Excavation of plot has been completed and laying of foundation has been started. Plant will be used for printing and processing films.

Expense for shipping E-L's Coast studio into shape will be some $1,150,000, Pathe exec said, of which $600,000 will be spent on new equipment, part of which has already been purchased. Estimated cost of $440,000 has been set for renovation of the company's Television Center at 106 St. and Park Ave., N. Y. Balance of $135,000 will be Pathe outlay for improving existing equipment.

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Retroactive pay totaling approximately $9,941,000 will be distributed by producers to 12 IATSE locals in the four-week period which started Dec. 19. Another $1,212,000 will be added to this amount as soon as negotiations are completed with soundmen and cameramen, the only two IA locals for which contracts have not yet been inked. Extra paychecks cover virtually a year's retroactive period under pacts recently signed between locals and producers. New deals mean workers will earn an additional $12,000,000 during the coming year.

Increases represent an average overall pay hike of 30% for the approximate 15,000 IA studio workers. Reopening of contracts on cost-of-living increases is not likely before February, according to Roy M. Brewer, IA's International Hollywood representative because statistics showing added living costs will not be ready before that time. Pacts are reopenable if index shows an increase of 5% or more.

Labor Peace Imminent

Rumors are still current in Hollywood that a labor peace is near although neither side will give confirmation. Understood International praxies are huddling in the east on settlement of AFL arbitration directive over Set Erectors jurisdiction. Pat Casey, labor chief for producers, is in New York for a two-week period.

Film pickets arrested for assertedly violating court injunctions will move for a writ prohibiting the holding of mass trials by municipal court on Jan. 6. Meanwhile picket lines under trial at the Embassy Auditorium have been excused until Jan. 7, with exception of those acting as their own counsel.

JOAN LESLIE'S 1ST PIC IN YEAR AT EAGLE-LION

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Joan Leslie started her first film role in over a year today (30) on "Repeat Performance" at Eagle-Lion. Actress last did "Two Guys From Milwaukee" at Warners, then had contract declared null because she had inked it as a minor. Warners is appealing that decision to have it reversed while Seymour Nebenzal's suit is hangin' fire to get $2,500 he advanced actress for role in "The Chase," in which she didn't appear. She, too, has a counterclaim against Nebenzal for $167,000.

Also in cast of "Performance" are Louis Hayward, Tom Conway, Benay Venuta, Richard Basehart and Natalie Schafer.

Grierson's First Shorts Ready for Release in Feb.

Initial short in John Grierson's World Today series goes into release Feb. 1. Briefies follow thereafter at two-week intervals, with United Artists handling distribution. First one will be Grierson's "Info Germany?" and second "The Atom in Action."

Shorts are in the March of Time (20th) and This Is America (RKO) genre, but while they are once-a-month two-reelers, Grierson is holding his down to a single spool. He figures he can reach a considerably greater number of screens by sticking to the shorter length, since many double-feature houses refuse to handle a twin-reeler.

World Today series will present at various times three different types of subject matter. One group will be known as Worldwise, covering economic and political problems; another, Wonderfact, will be on scientific subjects, and the third, Venture, will be human interest.

Films are being made in New York by the crew that worked with Grierson when he was producing "World in Action" series for the Canadian Film Board during the war. Stuart Legg, who held a similar job in the CFB setup, is serving as exec producer.

The Razor's Edge

6th WEEK AT THE ROXY SMASHED ALL THE RECORDS OF THE FIRST FIVE WEEKS ...WHICH SET ALL-TIME HIGHS FOR ANY PICTURE, ANYWHERE, ANYTIME IN THE HISTORY OF THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY!

The Razor's Edge

THE WORLD'S CHAMPION BOXOFFICE CROSSBEAM

AND NOW MAKING THE SAME GREAT BOXOFFICE HISTORY IN EVERY THEATRE, EVERY CITY!

Fox; PHILADELPHIA • Fox, DETROIT
Chinese—Loew's State—Loyola—Uptown,
LOS ANGELES • Paramount, OMAHA • Wisconsin,
MILWAUKEE • Uptown—Esquire—Fairway, KANSAS CITY
Missouri, ST. LOUIS • State Lake, CHICAGO • Uptown—Rialto,
SALT LAKE CITY • Allen, CLEVELAND • Warfield, SAN FRANCISCO
California, STOCKTON • New, BALTIMORE • Apollo, ATLANTIC CITY
Orpheum—Oriental, PORTLAND • Gillioz—Kickapoo, SPRINGFIELD
Miller—Boulevard, WICHITA • Fox, HUTCHINSON • 5th Avenue,
SEATTLE • State, SPOKANE • Colonial, DAYTON • Watson,
SALINA • Midwest, OKLAHOMA CITY

20th CENTURY-FOX

L. A. Soars; 'Razor' Colossal 120G, 'Life' Tall 67G, 'Humoresque' Big 66G, 'Temptation' Lush 43G, 'Hardy' 51G

Los Angeles, Dec. 30.

First-runs here expect better than $500,000 total take in current week. Strong new films and holdovers are accounting for most of heavy coin, with biz aided by clear skies and holiday trade. Leader is 'Razor's Edge," with smash $120,000 likely in four theatres. "Wonderful Life" looks hefty $67,000 in two houses.

"Humoresque," in three spots, looks to do great $66,000 and possibly more. "Love Laughs Andy Hardy" shapes okay $51,000 in four locations. "Temptation" is neat $43,000 in five spots. Two roadshows are "Yearling" and "Best Years." Former is coming in with fine $30,000 while "Years" is smart $22,000, each playing in one house.

Estimates for This Week

Belmont (FWC) (1,532; 60-$1) — "Love Laughs Andy Hardy" (M-G). Fair $7,000. Last week, "Secret Heart" (M-G) (3d wk-5 days), only $2,000.

Beverly (FWC) (1,270; $1-$1.80)— "Best Years Our Lives" (RKO). Great $22,000. Started roadshow run. Dec. 25. Last week, subsequent runs.

Beverly Hills Music Hall (Blumenfeld-G&S) (624; 65-$1) — "Strange Woman" (UA) (2d wk). Smart $6,500. Last week, handsome $6,800, big considering weather.

Carthay Circle (FWC) (1,518; $1-$1.80)—"The Yearling" (M-G). Fine $30,000. Opened roadshow run Dec. 25. Last week, "Magnificent Doll" (U) (m.o.), $8,500.

Chinese (Grauman-WC) (2,048; 60-$1) — "Razor's Edge" (20th). Wham $22,000. Last week, "Cockeyed Miracle" (M-G) and "Cockeyed Miracle" (M-G) (2d wk), thin $7,000.

Downtown (WB) (1,800; 50-$1) — "Humoresque" (WB). Good $24,000. Last week, "Never Say Goodbye" (WB) (2d wk), dim $6,000.

Downtown Music Hall (Blumenfeld) (872; 55-$1) — "Strange Woman" (UA) (2d wk). Fine $10,000. Last week, very fancy $19,000.

Egyptian (FWC) (1,538; 60-$1) — "Love Laughs" (M-G) (5 days). Fine $8,000. House goes roadshow Dec. 31 with "Duel in Sun" (SRO). Last week, "Secret Heart" (M-G) (3d wk-6 days), $4,100.

El Rey (FWC) (861; 60-$1)—"Nocturne" (RKO) (2d wk). Near $3,000. Last week, neat $5,400.

Four Star (UA-WC) (900; 60-85) —"Nocturne" (RKO). Okay $3,000. Last week, "Margie" (20th) (4th wk) (m.o.), $2,900.

Guild (FWC) (968; 60-$1)—"Temptation" (U). Slow $4,500. Last week, "Show-Off" (M-G) and "Shadow of Woman" (WB) (2d wk), only $2,800.

Hawaii (C&S-Blumenfeld) (956; 50-$1)—"Strange Woman" (UA) (2d wk). Steady $7,500. Last week, nifty $7,700.

Hollywood (WB) (2,756; 50-$1) — "Humoresque" (WB). Handsome $21,000. Last week, "Never Say Goodbye" (WB) (2d wk) dull $6,700.

Hollywood Music Hall (Blumenfeld) (475; 50-85)—"Strange Woman" (UA) (2d wk). Neat $6,500. Last week, smart $6,600.

Iris (FWC) (828; 60-$1)—"Temptation" (U). Modest $4,000. Last week, "Show-Off" (M-G) and "Shadow of Woman" (WB) (2d wk), slow $3,600.

Lew State (Loew-WC) (2,404; 60-$1)—"Razor's Edge" (20th). Huge $51,000. Last week, "Two Smart People" (M-G) and "Cockeyed Miracle" (M-G) (2d wk), faint $9,700.

Los Angeles (D'town-WC) (2,097; 60-$1)—"Love Laughs" (M-G). Moderate $24,000. Last week, "Secret Heart" (M-G) (3d wk-5 days), thin $6,600.

Loyola (FWC) (1,248; 60-$1)— "Razor's Edge" (20th). Smash $17,000. Last week, "Two Smart People" (M-G) and "Cockeyed Miracle" (M-G), only $3,700.

Million Dollar (D'town) (2,420; 55-85)—"Missing Lady" (Mono) with Three Stooges on stage. Good $17,000. Last week, "Return of Rusty" (Col) with circus revue on stage (8 days), $19,600.

Orpheum (D'town-WC) (2,210; 60-$1)—"Nocturne" (RKO) and "Sunset Pass" (RKO) (2d wk). Tall $18,000. Last week, healthy $21,800.

Pantages (Pan) (2,812; 50-$1)— "Wonderful Life" (RKO). Big $35,000. Last week, "Jolson Story" (Col) (7th wk-6 days), closed at $10,200.

Paramount (F&M) (3,398; 50-$1)— "Blue Skies" (Par) (2d wk). Stout $35,000 minus New Year's Eve show. Last week, great $38,500.

Paramount Hollywood (F&M) (1,451; 50-$1.50)—"Blue Skies" (Par) (2d wk). Bright $19,000. Last week, big $24,000.

RKO Hillstreet (RKO) (2,890; 50-80)—"Wonderful Life" (RKO). Strong $32,000. Last week, "Jolson Story" (Col) (7th wk-6 days), $9,500.

Rita (FWC) (1,370; 60-$1)—"Temptation" (U). Nice $10,000. Last week, "Show-Off," (M-G) and "Shadow of Woman" (WB) (2d wk), $4,000.

Uptown (FWC) (1,719; 60-$1)— "Spider Woman" (Univ). Sharp $20,000. Last week, "Two Smart People" (M-G) and "Cockeyed Miracle" (M-G) (2d wk), faint $8,000.

Vogue (FWC) (885; 60-85)—"Nocturne" (RKO) (2d wk-5 days). Nice $3,000. Goes roadshow on Dec. 31 with "Duel in Sun" (SRO). Last week, nice $6,100.

Wilshire (FWC) (2,296; 60-$1)— "Love Laughs" (M-G). Light $11,000. Last week, "Secret Heart" (M-G) (3d wk-5 days), $5,900.

Wiltern (WB) (2,300; 50-$1)— "Humoresque" (WB). Hefty $21,000. Last week, "Never Say Goodbye" (WB) (2d wk), thin $5,700.

Broadway Grosses

Estimated Total Gross
This Week $1,086,500
(Based on 17 theatres).
(Based on 18 theatres)
Last Week $1,009,500
(Based on 17 theatres)

'Show-Off,' Time' Each 22G, St. Loo

St. Louis, Dec. 30.

Barring a threatened transit strike on Jan. 1, New Year's eve biz will hypo grosses all over this stanza. The Fox and Ambassador will present six shows at $1.50 with the Missouri going to $1 for same night. Loew's State and Orpheum will maintain the usual scale. "The Show-Off" and "Man I Love" are terrific newcomers and neck for top coin, both sock. "Time, Place and Girl" also is big.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (F&M) (3,000; 50-75) —"Time, Place, Girl" (WB). Smash $20,000. Last week, "Blue Skies" (Par) (4th wk), big $12,000.

Fox (F&M) (5,000; 50-75)—"Man I Love" (WB) and "The Unknown" (Col). Strong $22,000. Last week, "Brennan Girl" (Rep) and "Sketch Book" (Rep), big $18,000.

Loew's (Loew) (3,172; 50-75)— "Show-Off" (M-G) and "Secrets Whistler" (Col). Sock $22,000. Last week, "Gallant Journey" (Col) and "Blackie and Law" (Col), $10,500.

Missouri (F&M) (3,500; 50-75)— "Razor's Edge" (20th) (2d wk). Huge $20,000 after big $21,000 first stanza.

Orpheum (Loew) (2,000; 50-75)— "Strange Woman" (UA) and "Doctor's Man Hunt" (Col) (m.o.). Nice $7,000 on second session after $8,500 opener.

St. Louis (F&M) (4,000; 50-60)— "Blue Skies" (Par) (m.o.). Fine $12,000. Last week, "Never Says Before Mast" (Par) (2d run), $7,500.

'Edge' Terrif $18,000, Omaha; 'Song' Huge 10G

Omaha, Dec. 30.

"Razor's Edge" appears set to do a terrific week at the Paramount this session. Even cold weather didn't slow up biz. "Song of the South" also is smash surprise at the Brandeis.

Estimates for This Week

Brandeis (RKO) (1,500; 16-65)— "Song of South" (RKO) and "Falcon Adventures" (RKO). Smash $10,000, and likely holdover. Last week, "Lady Luck" (RKO) and "Step by Step" (RKO), $6,000.

Omaha (Tristates) (2,000; 16-65)— "Darling Clementine" (20th) and "Personality Kid" (Col). Modest $10,000. Last week, "She-Wolf of London" (U) and "Spider Woman Strikes Back" (U), fair $8,000.

Orpheum (Tristates) (3,000; 16-65) —"Black Beauty" (20th) and "Cockeyed Miracle" (M-G). Nice $12,000. Last week, "Young Widow" (UA) and "Deadline for Murder" (20th), $9,200.

Paramount (Tristates) (3,000; 16-65)—"Razor's Edge" (20th). Terrific $18,000, one of best grosses here in years. Last week, "Darling Clementine" (20th), $11,000.

'Song,' Skies' Big 20G Each in Prov.

Providence, Dec. 30.

Biz is perking up this week with all stands spurting after slight Christmas drop. "Blue Skies" at Strand, "Show-Off" at State and "Song of the South" at Albee look standout.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 44-65)—"Song of South" (RKO) and "Falcon's Adventure" (RKO). Opens Monday or near. Last week, "Westerner" (re. issue) and "Dick Tracy Vs. Cueball" (RKO), fast $6,000.

Carlton (Fay-Loew) (1,400; 44-65) —"Nobody Lives Forever" (WB) and "Secrets Sorority Girl" (PRC) (2d downtown wk). Fair $4,000 after hitting $4,500 in second stanza.

Majestic (Fay) (2,200; 44-65)— "Razor's Edge" (20th). Opens Sunday (31). In ahead, "Margie" (20th) (2d wk), fair $8,000. First week was good $12,000.

Metropolitan (Snider) (3,100; 65-88)—"Bowery Bombshell" (Mono) and eight acts of vaude. Opened New Year's Eve. Last week, "Mysterious Mr. Valentine" (Rep) and Earl Carroll "Vanities" revue on stage for three-day weekend run, good $7,000.

State (Loew) (3,200; 44-65)—"Till Clouds Roll By" (M-G). Opened Christmas Day. In ahead "Show-Off" (M-G) and "Devil's Playground" (M-G), sock $24,000. Last week, "Gallant Journey" (Col) and "Betty Co-Ed" (Col), $17,000.

Strand (Silverman) (2,200; 44-65) —"Blue Skies" (Par). Opens Wednesday (Jan. 1. First sesh was knockout $20,000. Last week, "1,001 Nights" (Col) and "Wouldn't Say Yes" (Col), $10,000.

Balto Hotsy; 'Edge' Wow $23,000, 'Doll' Big 19G, Skelton 20G, 'Time' 18G

Baltimore, Dec. 30.

Everything look a spurt here this week with big entries for holiday sessions bringing some top figures. Of current list, mostly Xm ; Day starters, "Razor's Edge" is leading the parade at the New. Also big are "The Show-Off" at Loew's Century and "Magnificent Doll" at Keith's.

Estimates for This Week

Century (Loew's-UA) (3,000; 20-60)—"Show-Off" (M-G). Great $20,000 for new Skelton comedy. Last week, "Gallant Bess" (M-G), fairish $9,000.

Hippodrome (Rappaport) (2,240; 20-70)—"Falcon's Adventure" (Col) plus Freddie Slack, orch and Ella Mae Morse. Stage show counting for most of next $16,000. Last week, "Sea Of Grass" (M-G) plus Louis Prima orch, offset pre-holiday blues at $18,600.

Keith's (Schanberger) (2,460; 20-60)—"Magnificent Doll" (U). Nicely spotted at $19,000. Last week, "They Were Sisters" (U), fair $8,800.

Mayfair (Hiller) (980; 25-55)— "Bachelor's D ughters" (UA). Average $4,000. Last week, "Home In Indiana" (20th), $4,200.

New (Mechanic) (1,800; 20-60) — "Razor's Edge" (20th). Leading current parade with terrific $23,000. Last week, "Wake Up, Dream" (20th) (3d wk), $6,200.

Stanley (WB) (3,280; 25-74)— "Time, Place, Girl" (WB). Drawing well at $18,000 or near. Last week, second of "The Verdict" (WB), $9,200.

Hub N.S.H. But 'Best Years' Great 16G, 'Show-Off' Fast 38G; 'Deception' 25G

Boston, Dec. 30.

New holiday product all around served as hypo to limping holiday biz, but it's still well off expectancy. "Show-Off" day-date at State-Orpheum, looks best and likely to do strong session. "Song of the South," at the Memorial, despite desultory picketing on basis of its so-called unfairness to Negroes, still is nice on holdover. "Best Years of Our Lives," at Esquire, off to fast start.

Estimates for This Week

Boston (RKO) (3,200; 50-$1.10)— "Wake Up, Dream" (20th) plus Earl Carroll "Vanities" revue on stage. Nice at $26,000. Last week, "Werewolf" (UA) (reissue) plus Stan Davis orch, others, on stage, $22,000.

Esquire (M-P) (1,200; $1.80)— "Best Years Lives" (RKO). Road show run opened here Christmas day (25). Can do about $17,000 at scale on a two-day basis. First week looks great $16,000. Last week subsequent runs.

Fenway (M-P) (1,373; 40-80)— "Blue Skies" (Par) (2d wk). Nice $10,000 after same last week. This is fifth week holdover here.

Majestic (Indie) (1,500; 40-80)— "Story of Pope" (Indie) (2d wk). Fine $6,000 at $6,000. Last week was $6,500.

Memorial (RKO) (2,900; 40-80)— "Song of South" (RKO) and "Dark Horse" (U) (2d wk). Fancy $20,000 after nice $25,000, first. House was picketed during Christmas shopping season on account racial aspect.

Metropolitan (M-P) (4,367; 40-80) —"Deception" (WB) and "Dangerous Millions" (RKO) (20th). Good $30,000. Last week, "Verdict" (WB) and "Plainsman Lady" (Rep), $20,000.

Orpheum (Loew) (2,900; 40-80)— "Show-Off" (M-G) and "So Dark Night" (Col). Strong $24,000 and holds. Last week, "Strange Woman" (UA) and "Secret Whistler" (Col) (2d wk-5 days), $15,000.

Paramount (M-P) (3,700; 40-80)— "Blue Skies" (Par) (2d wk). Nice $16,000 after $15,000 opener. Moved from Metropolitan after weeks at Met.

State (Loew) (3,200; 40-80)— "Show-Off" (M-G) and "So Dark Night" (Col). Stout $15,000 on this. Last week, "Strange Woman" (UA) and "Secret Whistler" (Col) (2d wk-5 days), $10,000.

Translux (Translux) (900; 40-74)— "Notorious Gentleman" (U) and "Don't Gamble Strangers" (Mono). Excellent $4,500, and big for this house. Last week "Murder My Sweet" (Indie) and "Let's Get Vaccinated" (Mono) (reissue), $4,000.

'Razor' Slick 44G, Det.; Skelton 18G

Detroit, Dec. 30.

Biz is rebounding nicely this week after pre-Xmas slump but not measuring up to hopes. Outstanding promise to be "Razor's Edge," "Notorious" and "Show-Off."

Estimates for This Week

Adams (Balaban) (1,740; 70-95)— "Return of Monte Cristo" (Col) and "Blondie's Big Moment" (Col. Fine $15,000. Last week, "Notorious Gentleman" (U) and "Inner Circle" (Rep) (2d wk), okay $7,200 in 5 days.

Broadway - Capitol (United Detroit) (3,309; 70-95) — "Notorious" (RKO) and "Vacation in Reno" (RKO). Stout $32,000. Last week, "Kings Row" (WB) and "Bill Hickok Rides" (Rep) (reissues) (2d wk), fair $12,000.

Downtown (Balaban) (2,683; 70-95)—"Dark Mirror" (U) (m.o.) and "My Dog Shep" (SG). Lour $11,000 in 6 days. Last week, "Captain Caution" (SG) and "Captain Fury" (SG) (reissues) (2d wk), $8,000.

Fox (Fox-Michigan) (5,100; 70-95) —"Razor's Edge" (20th). Socko $44,000. Last week, "Dark Mirror" (U) and "Dangerous Millions" (2d wk), good $13,000 in 5 days.

Michigan (United Detroit) (1,866; 50-60)—"Searching Wind" (Par) and "Night in Casablanca" (M-G). Good $1,800 in 3 days. Last week, "Stranger" (RKO) and "Black Beauty" (20th), $2,200 in 3 days.

Michigan (United Detroit) (4,039; 70-95)—"Cloak and Dagger" (WB) and "Genius at Work" (RKO) (2d wk). Nice $14,000 in 5 days. Last week, loud $34,000.

Palms-State (United Detroit) (2,- 976; 70-95)—"Blue Skies" (Par) and "Wife Wanted" (Mono) (6th wk). Strong $16,000 in 5 days. Last week, lusty $18,000.

United Artists (United Detroit) (1,941; 70-95)—"Show-Off" (M-G) and "Sunset Pass" (Mono). Smart $18,000 in 5 days for Red Skelton's comedy. Last week, "Undercurrent" (M-G) and "Sunset Pass" (RKO) (3d wk), stout $12,000.

'Skies' Terrif $21,000, Denver; 'Time' Fine 26G

Denver, Dec. 30.

Despite snow and cold, "Blue Skies" is packing the Denham, equalling and perhaps topping record held by "Song of Bernadette" at this house.

Top total goes to "Time, Place, Girl," fine in three spots.

Estimates for This Week

Aladdin (Fox) (1,400; 35-74)—"Nobody Lives Forever" (WB) and "Wife Wanted" (Mono), after week at Denver, Esquire, Webber. Thin $3,000. Last week, "Always Loved You" (Rep) and "My Dog Shep" (SG) (m.o.), $3,000.

Denham (Cockrill) (1,750; 35-70)— "Blue Skies" (Par). Smash $21,000 and equals house record. Last week, "Two Years Before Mast" (Par) (4th wk), $7,000 in 5 days.

Denver (Fox) (2,225; 35-74)— "Time, Place, Girl" (WB), day-date with Esquire, Webber. Fine $17,000. Last week, "Nobody Lives Forever" (WB) and "Dangerous Crest" (Mono), same as Esquire, Webber, $9,000.

Esquire (Fox) (742; 35-74)—"Time, Place, Girl" (WB), also Denver, Webber. Fast $5,500. Last week, "Nobody Lives Forever" (WB) and "Wife Wanted" (Mono), $2,000.

Orpheum (RKO) (2,600; 35-74)— "Show-Off" (M-G) and "Cockeyed Miracle" (M-G). Sock $21,500. Last week, "Gallant Bess" (M-G) and "Two Smart People" (M-G), $8,000.

Paramount (Fox) (2,200; 35-74)— "Gallant Journey" (Col) and "Lady Chaser" (PRC). Fair $9,000. Last week, "Wake Up, Dream" (20th) and "Deadline for Murder" (20th), poor $6,000.

Rialto (Fox) (878; 35-74)—"Always Loved You" (Rep) and "My Dog Shep" (SG), after week at Denver, Esquire, Webber. Fair $5,000. Last week, "Never Say Goodbye" (WB) and "French Key" (Rep) (m.o.), $3,000.

Webber (Fox) (750; 35-74)—"Time, Place, Girl" (WB), also Denver, Esquire. Good $4,500. Last week, "Nobody Lives Forever" (WB) and "Wife Wanted" (Mono), $2,000.

'Song' Colossal $32,000 In D.C.; 'Show-Off'-Vaude 33G, 'Clouds' Lofty 25G

Washington, Dec. 30.

Christmas week is giving film theatres along with a mild push the usual shake-in-the-arm. Biz rallying after pre-Xmas slump, with new entries hoping return of "Song of South" at RKO Keith's is sensational, with "Show-Off" plus vaude, at Loew's Capitol, showing plenty of action.

Estimates for This Week

Capitol (Loew's) (3,434; 44-60) —"Show-Off" (M-G) with vaude. Big $33,000. Last week, "Home Sweet Homicide" (20th) plus vaude, low $18,000 in 6 days.

Columbia (Loew) (1,263; 44-70)— "Strange Woman" (UA) (m.o.). Strong $8,000 for third downtown week. Last week, "Gallant Bess" (M-G) (2d run), $4,500 for 5 days.

Keith's (RKO) (1,830; 44-70)— "Song of South" (RKO). Wow $32,- 000, and holds. Last week, "Werewolf" (FC) (reissue), fine $16,000.

Little (Miller) (285; $1.20-$2.40)— "Blue Skies" (Par) (18th wk). Sticks to capacity $6,500, after slight fall to $6,000 last week.

Palace (Loew) (1,513; 44-70) —"Return of Monte Cristo" (Col). Strong $8,500. Last week, "Wild Bill Hickok Rides" (WB) (reissue), fair $6,000.

Palace (Loew) (2,370; 44-70)— "Till Clouds Roll By" (M-G) (m.o.), $25,000. Last week, "Strange Woman" (UA) (2d wk), slow $11,000 in 5 days.

'Edge' 26G, 'Jolson' 16G, 'Show-Off' 15G, Seattle

Seattle, Dec. 30.

Big news in current week is the terrific biz being done by "Razor's Edge," which may come near the house record set by "Jolson Story" and "Show-Off" also are big.

Estimates for This Week

Blue Mouse (H-E) (800; 45-80) "Blue Skies" (Par) (5th wk). Good $7,000. Last week, okay $5,500.

Fifth Ave (H-E) (2,368; 45-80 —"Razor's Edge" (20th). Near house

(Continued on page 18)

'DOLL' SOCKO $13,000, INDPLS.; 'MARGIE' 18G

Indianapolis, Dec. 30.

Film biz under holiday stimulus has rebounded nicely from year's low in pre-Christmas week last session. "Margie" is the big noise at the Indiana, with "Show-Off" at Loew's and "Magnificent Doll" at Keith's big to fancy.

Estimates for This Week

Circle (Katz-Dolle) (2,450; 40-60)— "Lady Luck" (RKO) and "Criminal Court" (RKO). Nice $12,000. Last week, "Sketch Book" (RKO) and "Rendezvous With Annie" (Rep), thin $6,000 in 6 days.

Indiana (Katz-Dolle) (3,300; 40-60) —"Margie" (20th). Hefty $18,000. Last week, "Verdict" (WB) and "Earl Carrol Sketchbook" (Rep), $8,000.

Keith's (Indie) (1,300; 40-60)— "Magnificent Doll" (U). Big $13,000, and likely holds. Last week, "If I Had My Way" (U) and "Shadow of Doubt" (U) (reissues), $3,000.

Lew's (Loew's) (2,450; 40-60)— "Show-Off" (M-G) and "Devil's Playground" (UA). Fancy $15,000. Last week, "Two Smart People" (M-G) and "Cockeyed Miracle" (M-G), $9,000.

Lyric (Katz-Dolle) (1,600; 40-60)— "Spider Woman Strikes Back" (U) and "House of Horrors" (U). Neat $8,000. Last week, "Martha Ivers" (Par) (m.o.), $4,000.

'Song,' Skies' Big 20G Each in Prov.

Providence, Dec. 30.

Biz is perking up this week with all stands spurting after slight Christmas drop. "Blue Skies" at Strand, "Show-Off" at State and "Song of the South" at Albee look standout.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 44-65)—"Song of South" (RKO) and "Falcon's Adventure" (RKO). Opens Monday or near. Last week, "Westerner" (re. issue) and "Dick Tracy Vs. Cueball" (RKO), fast $6,000.

Carlton (Fay-Loew) (1,400; 44-65) —"Nobody Lives Forever" (WB) and "Secrets Sorority Girl" (PRC) (2d downtown wk). Fair $4,000 after hitting $4,500 in second stanza.

Majestic (Fay) (2,200; 44-65)— "Razor's Edge" (20th). Opens Sunday (31). In ahead, "Margie" (20th) (2d wk), fair $8,000. First week was good $12,000.

Metropolitan (Snider) (3,100; 65-88)—"Bowery Bombshell" (Mono) and eight acts of vaude. Opened New Year's Eve. Last week, "Mysterious Mr. Valentine" (Rep) and Earl Carroll "Vanities" revue on stage for three-day weekend run, good $7,000.

State (Loew) (3,200; 44-65)—"Till Clouds Roll By" (M-G). Opened Christmas Day. In ahead "Show-Off" (M-G) and "Devil's Playground" (M-G), sock $24,000. Last week, "Gallant Journey" (Col) and "Betty Co-Ed" (Col), $17,000.

Strand (Silverman) (2,200; 44-65) —"Blue Skies" (Par). Opens Wednesday (Jan. 1. First sesh was knockout $20,000. Last week, "1,001 Nights" (Col) and "Wouldn't Say Yes" (Col), $10,000.

Balto Hotsy; 'Edge' Wow $23,000, 'Doll' Big 19G, Skelton 20G, 'Time' 18G

Baltimore, Dec. 30.

Everything look a spurt here this week with big entries for holiday sessions bringing some top figures. Of current list, mostly Xm ; Day starters, "Razor's Edge" is leading the parade at the New. Also big are "The Show-Off" at Loew's Century and "Magnificent Doll" at Keith's.

Estimates for This Week

Century (Loew's-UA) (3,000; 20-60)—"Show-Off" (M-G). Great $20,000 for new Skelton comedy. Last week, "Gallant Bess" (M-G), fairish $9,000.

Hippodrome (Rappaport) (2,240; 20-70)—"Falcon's Adventure" (Col) plus Freddie Slack, orch and Ella Mae Morse. Stage show counting for most of next $16,000. Last week, "Sea Of Grass" (M-G) plus Louis Prima orch, offset pre-holiday blues at $18,600.

Keith's (Schanberger) (2,460; 20-60)—"Magnificent Doll" (U). Nicely spotted at $19,000. Last week, "They Were Sisters" (U), fair $8,800.

Mayfair (Hiller) (980; 25-55)— "Bachelor's D ughters" (UA). Average $4,000. Last week, "Home In Indiana" (20th), $4,200.

New (Mechanic) (1,800; 20-60) — "Razor's Edge" (20th). Leading current parade with terrific $23,000. Last week, "Wake Up, Dream" (20th) (3d wk), $6,200.

Stanley (WB) (3,280; 25-74)— "Time, Place, Girl" (WB). Drawing well at $18,000 or near. Last week, second of "The Verdict" (WB), $9,200.

Hub N.S.H. But 'Best Years' Great 16G, 'Show-Off' Fast 38G; 'Deception' 25G

Boston, Dec. 30.

New holiday product all around served as hypo to limping holiday biz, but it's still well off expectancy. "Show-Off" day-date at State-Orpheum, looks best and likely to do strong session. "Song of the South," at the Memorial, despite desultory picketing on basis of its so-called unfairness to Negroes, still is nice on holdover. "Best Years of Our Lives," at Esquire, off to fast start.

Estimates for This Week

Boston (RKO) (3,200; 50-$1.10)— "Wake Up, Dream" (20th) plus Earl Carroll "Vanities" revue on stage. Nice at $26,000. Last week, "Werewolf" (UA) (reissue) plus Stan Davis orch, others, on stage, $22,000.

Esquire (M-P) (1,200; $1.80)— "Best Years Lives" (RKO). Road show run opened here Christmas day (25). Can do about $17,000 at scale on a two-day basis. First week looks great $16,000. Last week subsequent runs.

Fenway (M-P) (1,373; 40-80)— "Blue Skies" (Par) (2d wk). Nice $10,000 after same last week. This is fifth week holdover here.

Majestic (Indie) (1,500; 40-80)— "Story of Pope" (Indie) (2d wk). Fine $6,000 at $6,000. Last week was $6,500.

Memorial (RKO) (2,900; 40-80)— "Song of South" (RKO) and "Dark Horse" (U) (2d wk). Fancy $20,000 after nice $25,000, first. House was picketed during Christmas shopping season on account racial aspect.

Metropolitan (M-P) (4,367; 40-80) —"Deception" (WB) and "Dangerous Millions" (RKO) (20th). Good $30,000. Last week, "Verdict" (WB) and "Plainsman Lady" (Rep), $20,000.

Orpheum (Loew) (2,900; 40-80)— "Show-Off" (M-G) and "So Dark Night" (Col). Strong $24,000 and holds. Last week, "Strange Woman" (UA) and "Secret Whistler" (Col) (2d wk-5 days), $15,000.

Paramount (M-P) (3,700; 40-80)— "Blue Skies" (Par) (2d wk). Nice $16,000 after $15,000 opener. Moved from Metropolitan after weeks at Met.

State (Loew) (3,200; 40-80)— "Show-Off" (M-G) and "So Dark Night" (Col). Stout $15,000 on this. Last week, "Strange Woman" (UA) and "Secret Whistler" (Col) (2d wk-5 days), $10,000.

Translux (Translux) (900; 40-74)— "Notorious Gentleman" (U) and "Don't Gamble Strangers" (Mono). Excellent $4,500, and big for this house. Last week "Murder My Sweet" (Indie) and "Let's Get Vaccinated" (Mono) (reissue), $4,000.

'Razor' Slick 44G, Det.; Skelton 18G

Detroit, Dec. 30.

Biz is rebounding nicely this week after pre-Xmas slump but not measuring up to hopes. Outstanding promise to be "Razor's Edge," "Notorious" and "Show-Off."

Estimates for This Week

Adams (Balaban) (1,740; 70-95)— "Return of Monte Cristo" (Col) and "Blondie's Big Moment" (Col. Fine $15,000. Last week, "Notorious Gentleman" (U) and "Inner Circle" (Rep) (2d wk), okay $7,200 in 5 days.

Broadway - Capitol (United Detroit) (3,309; 70-95) — "Notorious" (RKO) and "Vacation in Reno" (RKO). Stout $32,000. Last week, "Kings Row" (WB) and "Bill Hickok Rides" (Rep) (reissues) (2d wk), fair $12,000.

Downtown (Balaban) (2,683; 70-95)—"Dark Mirror" (U) (m.o.) and "My Dog Shep" (SG). Lour $11,000 in 6 days. Last week, "Captain Caution" (SG) and "Captain Fury" (SG) (reissues) (2d wk), $8,000.

Fox (Fox-Michigan) (5,100; 70-95) —"Razor's Edge" (20th). Socko $44,000. Last week, "Dark Mirror" (U) and "Dangerous Millions" (2d wk), good $13,000 in 5 days.

Michigan (United Detroit) (1,866; 50-60)—"Searching Wind" (Par) and "Night in Casablanca" (M-G). Good $1,800 in 3 days. Last week, "Stranger" (RKO) and "Black Beauty" (20th), $2,200 in 3 days.

Michigan (United Detroit) (4,039; 70-95)—"Cloak and Dagger" (WB) and "Genius at Work" (RKO) (2d wk). Nice $14,000 in 5 days. Last week, loud $34,000.

Palms-State (United Detroit) (2,- 976; 70-95)—"Blue Skies" (Par) and "Wife Wanted" (Mono) (6th wk). Strong $16,000 in 5 days. Last week, lusty $18,000.

United Artists (United Detroit) (1,941; 70-95)—"Show-Off" (M-G) and "Sunset Pass" (Mono). Smart $18,000 in 5 days for Red Skelton's comedy. Last week, "Undercurrent" (M-G) and "Sunset Pass" (RKO) (3d wk), stout $12,000.

'Skies' Terrif $21,000, Denver; 'Time' Fine 26G

Denver, Dec. 30.

Despite snow and cold, "Blue Skies" is packing the Denham, equalling and perhaps topping record held by "Song of Bernadette" at this house.

Top total goes to "Time, Place, Girl," fine in three spots.

Estimates for This Week

Aladdin (Fox) (1,400; 35-74)—"Nobody Lives Forever" (WB) and "Wife Wanted" (Mono), after week at Denver, Esquire, Webber. Thin $3,000. Last week, "Always Loved You" (Rep) and "My Dog Shep" (SG) (m.o.), $3,000.

Denham (Cockrill) (1,750; 35-70)— "Blue Skies" (Par). Smash $21,000 and equals house record. Last week, "Two Years Before Mast" (Par) (4th wk), $7,000 in 5 days.

Denver (Fox) (2,225; 35-74)— "Time, Place, Girl" (WB), day-date with Esquire, Webber. Fine $17,000. Last week, "Nobody Lives Forever" (WB) and "Dangerous Crest" (Mono), same as Esquire, Webber, $9,000.

Esquire (Fox) (742; 35-74)—"Time, Place, Girl" (WB), also Denver, Webber. Fast $5,500. Last week, "Nobody Lives Forever" (WB) and "Wife Wanted" (Mono), $2,000.

Orpheum (RKO) (2,600; 35-74)— "Show-Off" (M-G) and "Cockeyed Miracle" (M-G). Sock $21,500. Last week, "Gallant Bess" (M-G) and "Two Smart People" (M-G), $8,000.

Paramount (Fox) (2,200; 35-74)— "Gallant Journey" (Col) and "Lady Chaser" (PRC). Fair $9,000. Last week, "Wake Up, Dream" (20th) and "Deadline for Murder" (20th), poor $6,000.

Rialto (Fox) (878; 35-74)—"Always Loved You" (Rep) and "My Dog Shep" (SG), after week at Denver, Esquire, Webber. Fair $5,000. Last week, "Never Say Goodbye" (WB) and "French Key" (Rep) (m.o.), $3,000.

Webber (Fox) (750; 35-74)—"Time, Place, Girl" (WB), also Denver, Esquire. Good $4,500. Last week, "Nobody Lives Forever" (WB) and "Wife Wanted" (Mono), $2,000.

'Song' Colossal $32,000 In D.C.; 'Show-Off'-Vaude 33G, 'Clouds' Lofty 25G

Washington, Dec. 30.

Christmas week is giving film theatres along with a mild push the usual shake-in-the-arm. Biz rallying after pre-Xmas slump, with new entries hoping return of "Song of South" at RKO Keith's is sensational, with "Show-Off" plus vaude, at Loew's Capitol, showing plenty of action.

Estimates for This Week

Capitol (Loew's) (3,434; 44-60) —"Show-Off" (M-G) with vaude. Big $33,000. Last week, "Home Sweet Homicide" (20th) plus vaude, low $18,000 in 6 days.

Columbia (Loew) (1,263; 44-70)— "Strange Woman" (UA) (m.o.). Strong $8,000 for third downtown week. Last week, "Gallant Bess" (M-G) (2d run), $4,500 for 5 days.

Keith's (RKO) (1,830; 44-70)— "Song of South" (RKO). Wow $32,- 000, and holds. Last week, "Werewolf" (FC) (reissue), fine $16,000.

Little (Miller) (285; $1.20-$2.40)— "Blue Skies" (Par) (18th wk). Sticks to capacity $6,500, after slight fall to $6,000 last week.

Palace (Loew) (1,513; 44-70) —"Return of Monte Cristo" (Col). Strong $8,500. Last week, "Wild Bill Hickok Rides" (WB) (reissue), fair $6,000.

Palace (Loew) (2,370; 44-70)— "Till Clouds Roll By" (M-G) (m.o.), $25,000. Last week, "Strange Woman" (UA) (2d wk), slow $11,000 in 5 days.

'Edge' 26G, 'Jolson' 16G, 'Show-Off' 15G, Seattle

Seattle, Dec. 30.

Big news in current week is the terrific biz being done by "Razor's Edge," which may come near the house record set by "Jolson Story" and "Show-Off" also are big.

Estimates for This Week

Blue Mouse (H-E) (800; 45-80) "Blue Skies" (Par) (5th wk). Good $7,000. Last week, okay $5,500.

Fifth Ave (H-E) (2,368; 45-80 —"Razor's Edge" (20th). Near house

(Continued on page 18)

Chi Hot; 'Skies'-Ives 90G, 'Razor' 60G, 'Show-Off'-Grayson 77G, 'Life' 35G, 'Jolson' 32G, Sock New Entries

Chicago, Dec. 30.

After a few weeks of slow biz, many long holdovers have disappeared from Chicago's loop, making way for some strong product. Aside from nine new films, a new first-run house opened with the Rialto abandoning burlesque in favor of pictures. "Rage in Heaven," first film, looks healthy $27,000.

Fact that nearly every house will benefit from New Year's Eve big coin is boosting totals all over. Top grosser looks to be "Blue Skies," with Burl Ives heading stage, at the Chicago. Should hit terrific $90,000. Oriental, with "Show-Off" plus Kathryn Grayson and Johnny Johnston in person, looks second best with great $77,000.

"Razor's Edge," at State-Lake, is heading for terrific $60,000. "It's a Wonderful Life" shapes as fancy $35,000 at the small Grand. "Jolson Story," at Apollo, is big $32,000 for this small-seater. "Undercurrent," at United Artists, is lush $30,000.

Estimates for This Week

Apollo (B&K) (1,200; 65-95) — "Jolson Story" (Col). Big $32,000. Last week, "Big Sleep" (WB) (10th wk), $7,000 for 4 days.

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; 65-95) — "Blue Skies" (Par) with Burl Ives heading stagebill. Giant $90,000 or over and looks like longer than usual run for this house. Last week, "Cockeyed Miracle" (M-G) and Cab Calloway orch (2d wk), $33,000 for 4 days.

Civic (Wildberg) (900; $1.10-$2.20) —"Henry V" (U) (21st wk). Long run drawing to close. Just $5,000. Last week about same.

Garrick (B&K) (900; 65-96)—"Return of Monte Cristo" (Col). Strong $25,000 or near. Last week, "Darling Clementine" (20th) (9th wk), $6,500 in 4 days.

Grand (RKO) (1,500; 65-95)—"Wonderful Life" (RKO). Huge $35,000. Last week, "Nocturne" (RKO) (4th wk), nice $16,000.

Oriental (Essaness) (3,400; 65-95) —"Show-Off" (M-G) with Kathryn Grayson-Johnny Johnston on stage. Great $77,000 or over. Last week, "Earl Carroll Sketchbook" (Rep) with Raymond Scott and Dorothy Donegan on stage, fairish $31,000.

Palace (RKO) (2,500; 65-95) — "Song of South" (RKO) and "Falcon's Adventure" (RKO) (2d wk). Same as last wee at nice $20,000 or better.

Rialto (Indie) (1,700; 65-95) — "Rage in Heaven" (M-G) (reissue). Looks like new policy for this house will pay off with staunch $27,000. Last week, burlesque.

Roosevelt (B&K) (1,500; 65-95)— "Never Say Goodbye" (WB). Big $25,000. Last week, "Gallant Journey" (Col) (2d wk), $5,000 in 4 days.

State-Lake (B&K) (2,700; 65-95) —"Razor's Edge" (20th). This one is topping the straight-filmer with sock $60,000. Last week, "Deception" (WB) (7th wk), $11,000 in 4 days.

United Artists (B&K) (1,700; 65-95) — "Undercurrent" (M-G). Fancy $30,000. Last week, "Three Wise Fools" (M-G) (3d wk), $15,000.

Woods (Essaness) (1,200; 95-$1.20-$1.40-$1.80)—"Best Years of Lives" (RKO) (2d wk). No stopping this one, which comes up with sensational $55,000 after last week's record $44,000. Late grinds here helping.

'Razor' Keen 25G, K.C.; 'Skies' 23G, 'Life' 13G

Kansas City, Dec. 30.

Biz is looking up at all spots this session. "Razor's Edge" and "Blue Skies" are leading the pack of strong entries. "It's a Wonderful Life" at the Orpheum also shapes strongly.

Estimates for This Week

Esquire - Uptown - Fairway (Fox Midwest) (820, 2,043, 700; 45-65) — "Razor's Edge" (20th). Bullish $25,000, or near. Holds. Last week, "Wife of Monte Cristo" (PRC), $10,000.

Midland (Loew's) (3,500; 45-65)— "Show-Off" (M-G) and "Devil's Playground" (UA). Average $14,000. Last week, "Gallant Journey" (Col) and "Crime Doctor's Manhunt" (Col), $10,000.

Newman (Paramount) (1,900; 45-65) — "Blue Skies" (Par). Colossal $23,000, top figure here. Sure of holdover. Last week, "Human Bondage" (WB), $9,000.

Orpheum (RKO) (1,900; 45-65)— "It's Wonderful Life" (RKO). Good enough at $13,000 or better. Will hold. Last week, "Kings Row" (WB) and "Wild Bill Hickok" (WB) (reissue), $8,500.

Tower (Fox-Joffee) (2,100; 45-65) —"Stars Over Texas" (PRC) and "Scandal in Paris" (UA) with Roscoe Ates heading stagebill. Biz up to $10,000 or over. Last week, "Home in Oklahoma" (Rep) and "Decoy" (Mono) with vaude, $8,500.

Grosses Are Net

Film gross estimates, as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net, i.e., without the 20% tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U.S. amusement tax.

'Song' Loud 26G, L'ville's Leader

Louisville, Dec. 30.

Busineess at downtown houses took a spurt Christmas Day, and pace is strong. Product is good. "Song of South" at the Rialto is topper with terrific week in sight. "Show-Off" at the State is another solid entry, while "Time, Place Girl" at the Mary Anderson also is sturdy.

Estimates for This Week

Brown (4th Ave.-Loew's) (1,000; 40-60)—"Wake Up, Dream" (20th) and "Little Miss Big" (U) (m.o.). Trim $5,000. Last week, "Darling Clementine" (20th), $4,000.

Kentucky (Switow) (1,200; 30-40) —"No Leave" (M-G) and "Partners in Time" (RKO). Virile $3,500. Last week, "Roll On Texas Moon" (Rep) and "Spanish Main" (RKO), $3,100.

Mary Anderson (People's) (1,100; 40-60)—"Time, Place, Girl" (WB). Aiming at sturdy $8,500. Last week, "King's Row" (WB) (reissue), $6,500.

National (Standard) (2,400; 40-60) —"Thrill of Brazil" (Col) and "Death Valley" (Rep). Likely good $8,500. Last week, "Searching Wind" (Par) (2d wk), $6,500.

Rialto (Fourth Avenue) (3,400; 40-60)—"Song of South" (RKO). This one looks to grab bumper first week take. Pointing to terrific $26,000 and likely holdover. Last week, "Wake Up, Dream" (20th), all right $14,000.

State (Loew's) (3,300; 40-60)— "Show-Off" (M-G) and "Devil's Playground" (UA). Big $22,000 or near. Last week, "Return Monte Cristo" (Col) and "Boston Blackie and Law" (Col), $12,000.

Strand (Fourth Avenue) (1,400; 40-60) — "Plainsman and Lady" (Rep) and "Mysterious Mr. Valentine" (Rep) sharing in current upturn to land good $7,000 or near. Last week, "Bowery" (20th) and "Sun Valley Serenade" (20th) (reissues), $5,000.

Rooney Boosts 'Falcon' To Smash 45G, Frisco; 'Edge' Sockeroo at 46G

San Francisco, Dec. 30

Biz is spotty here with Mickey Rooney pulling Golden Gate up to great week with "Falcon's Adventure." "Razor's Edge" also is sock at Warfield with great crix praise. Otherwise, town is largely holdover, and not faring so well.

Estimates for This Week

Fox (FWC) (4,651; 55-95)—"Undercurrent" (M-G) (2d wk). Colorless $18,500. Last week, fair $24,500.

Golden Gate (RKO) (2,844; 60-95) —"Falcon's Adventure" (RKO) plus vaude headed by Mickey Rooney. Great $45,000. Last week, "Lady Luck" (RKO) (2d wk) plus vaude headed by Mills Bros, nice $20,000.

Orpheum (Blumenfeld) (2,448; 55-85)—"Return of Monte Cristo" (Col). Neat $18,000. Last week, "Notorious Gentleman" (U), $12,000.

Paramount (FWC) (2,646; 55-85) —"Rage In Heaven" (M-G) (reissue). Modest $16,000 in 6 days of second week. Last week, only $17,500.

Stagedoor (Ackerman) (350; $1.80 to $2.40)—"Henry V" (UA) (14th wk). About $7,000. Last week, capacity $7,500.

State (FWC) (2,133; 55-85) — "Duffy's Tavern" (Par). Just $2,000 in 4 days. Last week, "The Verdict" (WB), only $7,000.

United Artists (Blumenfeld) (1,207; 55-85)—"Strange Woman" (UA) (2d wk). Okay $16,000. Last week, nice $19,000.

Warfield (FWC) (2,656; 55-85)— "Razor's Edge" (20th). Tremendous $46,000 or near. Last week, "Brennan Girl" (Rep) (2d wk), $12,500 in 5 days.

Pitt Xmas Disappoints But 'Show-Off' Bright 12G; 'Man' Mild 17½G

Pittsburgh, Dec. 30.

Business this holiday week is not so bright and way off over the same time last year. Most of pictures are doing only slightly better than an average and nothing like holiday expectations. Penn has reissue of "Rage In Heaven" and Stanley is showing "Man I Love," but neither is doing much. "Show-Off" at Warner looks best new entry.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,700; 40-70)— "Suspense" (Mono). Ice-skating melodrama doing so-so at $9,000 or near. "My Darling Clementine" (20th) follows and management hopes for a run since product is tightening up a bit at this spot. Last week, "Brennan Girl" (Rep), $3,500.

Harris (Harris) (2,200; 40-70)— "Return of Monte Cristo" (Col). In 9 days will do around $16,500, not bad. Last week, "Bachelor's Daughters" (UA), $3,000 in 4 days.

Penn (Loew's-UA) (3,300; 40-70) —"Rage In Heaven" (M-G) (reissue). Hastily pencilled in at last minute, with a switch of "Show-Off" to Warner. Nothing exciting at $17,000 or under. Last week, "Two Smart People" (M-G), $7,000 in 5 days.

Ritz (WB) (800; 40-70)—"Lady Luck" (RKO) (m.o.). Here from Stanley and doing probably worst holiday biz in its history at $2,000 or less. Last week, "Undercurrent" (M-G) (3d wk), okay $2,500 in 5 days.

Senator (Harris) (1,750; 40-70)— "White Tie and Tails" (U) and "Bamboo Blonde" (RKO). Only about average at $3,500 in 6 days. Last week, "Margie" (20th) (m.o.) big $4,500.

Stanley (WB) (3,800; 40-70)— "Man I Love" (WB). Not so hot at $17,500, or near and may shift to Warner for New Year's week. Last week, "Lady Luck" (RKO), $13,000.

Warner (WB) (2,000; 40-70)— "Show-Off" (M-G). Got this one at last minute when "Notorious" (RKO) was eased out on a run deal. Doing all right at around $12,000. Last week, "Nocturne" (RKO) (m.o.), nice $7,500.

'Time, Place' Hot $49,000 in Philly

Philadelphia, Dec. 30.

Holiday week biz is beyond all expectations here with indications of record-breaking New Year's Eve trade helping. All mid-city houses, excepting those operated by Goldman, are hiking their scale for New Year's Eve. High will be the $1.30 charged by Fox.

Heaviest biz is being done by "Razor's Edge" at Fox, "Time, Place, Girl" at Mastbaum and combo of "Vacation in Reno" with Louis Prima band at Earle. "Undercurrent," "Cross Heart," "Song of South" and "Blue Skies" also are showing great strength.

Estimates for This Week

Aldine (WB) (1,303; 50-94)—"Song of South" (RKO). Fancy $21,000. Last week, "Strange Woman" (UA) (4th wk), $10,000.

Arcadia (Sablosky) (700; 50-94)— "The Verdict" (WB) (2d run). So-so $4,000. Last week, "Never Say Goodbye" (WB) (2d run), $4,800.

Boyd (WB) (2,350; 50-94)—"Undercurrent" (M-G). Fine $31,500. Last week, "Return Monte Cristo" (Col) (2d wk), fairish $16,000.

Earle (WB) (2,760; 60-99)—"Vacation Reno" (RKO) with Louis Prima orch. Wham $48,000 or near. Last week, "Crime Doctor's Manhunt" (Col) and Dr. Neff's "Madhouse of Mystery" on stage, $20,000.

Fox (20th) (2,250; 50-94)—"Razor's Edge" (20th). Terrific $50,000. Last week, "The Bowery" (20th) (reissue), $13,500.

Goldman (1,300; 50-94)—"Cross My Heart" (Par). Solid $27,000. Last week, "Dark Mirror" (U) (4th wk), $16,000.

Karlton (Goldman) (1,000; 50-94) "Rage in Heaven" (M-G) (reissue) (2d wk). Stout $17,000. Last week, "Smart People" (M-G), only $2,800 in 5 days, second run.

Keith's (Goldman) (1,500; 50-94)— "Dark Mirror" (U) (2d run). Fair $7,500. Last week, "Sister Kenny" (RKO), $3,500, second run.

Mastbaum (WB) (4,350; 50-94)— "Time, Place, Girl" (WB). Sock $45,000 plus big $4,000 for Sunday at Earle. Last week, "The Killers" (U) (3d wk), oke $17,500.

Stanley (WB) (2,950; 50-94)— "Blue Skies" (Par) (5th wk). Bright $32,000. Last week, $18,000.

Stanton (WB) (1,475; 50-94)— "Nocturne" (RKO). Sweet $24,500. Last week, "Kings Row" (WB), only $9,500.

Pix (Cummins) (500; $1.95-$2.60)— "Henry V" (UA). Fine $12,000. Last week, subsequent-run.

Holiday Pushes B'way to New Peak Of $1,086,000; 'Razor's Edge,' 'Time, Place,' 'Humoresque,' 'Clouds' Rolling Records

Despite a prolonged, unseasonable rain last Sunday (29) and changeable weather, Broadway first-runs snapped back from the pre-holiday lull aod are doing smash business this session. In fact, the 18 Broadway film deluxers will soar to a record of $1,086,000 or over in current stanza, helped, of course, by expected sock New Year's Eve trade when virtually all houses will tilt their scale.

Records look to fall during the week, with the Roxy, Strand, Hollywood and Music Hall probably hanging up all-time highs. And such theatres as the Astor, Paramount, Palace and Globe will show strong pickups over previous weeks.

Outstanding is the colossal $186,000 or better looked for by the Roxy with "Razor's Edge" and stageshow headed by Rosario & Antonio. This is for the sixth week ending Tuesday (31) and includes New Year's Eve. Figure is best of entire run and by far the biggest made by any film theatre ever. It means the Roxy breaks its own record thrice in one engagement with the same picture, "Razor's Edge."

Only a step behind, on present indications, is the Music Hall with a gigantic $172,000 for "Till Clouds Roll By" and Xmas pageant on stage, in fourth week. This, too, is a new house record, the Hall having not only the biggest amount of money but also its greatest attendance.

Strand also is hanging up a new high with "Time, Place, Girl" and Vaughn Monroe band heading stage bill. Looks to hit $98,000, huge for this house, and only possible with Strand's capacity via upped holiday and New Year's Eve scales. "Humoresque," at Hollywood, seems certain of a new record at terrific $58,000.

Best of other newcomers is "Secret Heart," with stageshow headed by Tommy Dorsey band. On first stanza, including New Year's Eve, it looks to hit smash $103,000. Another strong new entry is "Stairway to Heaven," which launched the Park Avenue on reserved seat policy under Universal management oo Dec. 25. Will get sock $24,000 or practically capacity, with extra New Year's Eve show helping. "Temptation," at Criterion, is on disappointing side at $25,000. Victoria looks to do fancy $21,000 with "Beast With Five Fingers," which opened, Dec. 25.

Paramount and Palace will show marked improvement over pre-Xmas session. "Cross My Heart," which is being helped at Par by strong stage layout headed by Andrews Sisters and Tony Pastor's band, will soar to sock $110,000 in second week which takes in New Year's Eve, far ahead of initial round. "Song of South," in fifth week at Palace roared ahead to double its previous session's business, and wind up with great $50,000. Pickets outside the theatre last Saturday, who denounced the picture as unfair to Negroes, were lost in the crowd in line to buy tickets.

"Wonderful Life" is displaying real strength in its second week at the Globe to hit near $42,000, ahead of first week's $40,000. "Abie's Irish Rose," at the Gotham, and also picketed Saturday, is sagging badly in first holdover stanza to $9,000. "Best Years of Lives" is showing nice improvement to land great $60,000 or thereabouts in sixth week at the Astor.

While most of bigger Broadway film houses planned raising to $2.40 top New Year's Eve, all of them were not definitely set on scale. Paramount set $2.20 after 8 p.m., Tuesday (31), same as always charged. Roxy likely ditto, since weekday night scale now is $1.80. Same is true of Strand.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,300; 70-$1.40) —"Best Years of Lives" (RKO) (6th wk). Plenty of lines for this one this session. Looks to reach great $60,000, which is a big pickup over fifth week's $45,000. Continues.

Capitol (Loew's) (4,820; 70-$1.50) —"Secret Heart" (M-G) plus stageshow headed by Tommy Dorsey orch. On first stanza, ending Dec. 31, including New Year's Eve, smash $103,000 or better. Not far from house high. Last week, "Uodercurreot" (M-G) with Frankie Carle orch heading stagebill (4th wk-6 days), strictly pre-Xmas and $36,500 reflected it.

Criterion (Loew's) (1,700; 60-$1.25) — "Temptation" (U) (2d wk). Initial holdover week started Dec. 31. First session ending Monday (30) was around $25,000, not so good for holiday week. In ahead, "Magnificent Doll" (U) (2d wk-10 days), only $23,000.

Globe (Brandt) (1,500; 70-$1.20)— "Wonderful Life" (RKO) (2d wk). Roaring ahead on second round, ending next Friday (3) to about $42,000; first was strong $40,000, but below hopes.

Gotham (Brandt) (900; 70-$1.40)— "Abie's Irish Rose" (UA) (2d wk). Stumbling badly on first holdover frame to $9,000; first was nice $15,000. May move out next Saturday but film not set.

Golden (767; $1.20-$2.40)—"Henry V" (UA) (18th wk). Picking up about as expected over recent dip, with solid $12,500 in till for 17th week ended last Saturday (28) night; 16th session was $8,000.

Hollywood (WB) (1,499; 70-$1.10) —"Humoresque" (WB). Starts second week on Wednesday (1). First week soared to new record at this house, terrific $58,000, being helped by strong press and New Year's Eve. In ahead, last five days of 10th week for "Deception" (WB) was only $8,000.

Palace (RKO) (1,700; 60-$1.20)— "Song of South" (RKO-Disney) (6th wk). Fifth week ending Tuesday (31) looks to climb to smash $50,000, being helped by swarms of kids now out of school; fourth was mildish $22,000. Picketing on Saturday had no effect.

Paramount (Par) (3,664; 70-$1.50) —"Cross My Heart" (Par), aod, on stage, Andrews Sisters, Tony Pastor orch, Les Paul Trio, others (3d wk). Third week starts Wednesday (1). First holdover stanza, which included New Year's Eve roared ahead to sock $110,000 as against big $80,000 done opening week.

Park Avenue (U) (583; $1.80-$2.40) —"Stairway to Heaven" (U) (2d wk). Second stanza starts Wednesday (1). First week hit smash $24,000 and virtually capacity. House is getting in extra New Year's Eve performance to swell total. Last week, subsequent-run.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (5,945; 70-$2.40)—"Till Clouds Roll By" (M-G) and Christmas pageant on stage (4th wk). Climbing to new record at terrific $172,000 for week ending Wednesday (Jan. 1). Third was big $151,000. Holding over indef. Current week not only is breaking all money but also all attendance marks at Hall.

Rialto (Mayer) (594; 35-85)—"Overlanders" (U) (2d wk). Big $8,000 is likely this frame after the same in opening week. Holds again. Running time of picture is slowing turnover at this small-seater and cutting into take.

Rivoli (UA-Par) (2,092; 60-$1.25)— "Darling Clementine" (20th) (5th wk). Fourth week ended last Monday (30) night picked up to stout $27,000; third was mild $20,000. Stays until after first of year with "California" (Par) due in next.

Roxy (20th) (5,886; 90-$1.50)— "Razor's Edge" (20th) with Rosario & Antonio heading stagebill (7th wk). Sixth week ending Tuesday (31) night but including New Year's Eve business likely will hit colossal $186,000 or better, new high for house and any theatre. This exceeds second week's total, which previously held record; fifth stanza was $86,000. This combo also topped previous Christmas Day high.

State (Loew's) (3,450; 43-$1.10)— "Undercurrent" (M-G) (2d run) and vaude topped by Johnny Morgan and Yvette. Smash $46,000 or near. Last week, "Two Years Before Mast" (Par) (2d run) with vaude headed by Joey Adams, Mark Plant, Tony Canzoneri, Pat Rooney, good $28,000 but below hopes.

Strand (WB) (2,756; 75-$1.50)— "Time, Place, Girl" (WB) and stageshow headed by Vaughn Moorce orch. Soaring to nearly $98,000, easily all-time high and unheard of at this house. Week includes New Year's Eve biz with upped scale. Last week, "Verdict" (WB) with Vincent Lopez orch heading stagebill (2d wk-6 days), only $35,000.

Victoria (Maurer) (720; 70-$1.20) —"Beast With Five Fingers" (WB) (2d wk). First week ending Tuesday (31) looks like fancy $21,000. Holds. In ahead, "Wanted for Murder" (20th) (2d wk), $10,000.

Winter Garden (UA) (1,312; 60-$1.20)—"Wicked Lady" (U) (2d wk). Second session ending Friday (3) likely will hold to big $35,000; first week, which included three days of Christmas week upbeat reached great $40,000 albeit way under expectancy.

Cummings Buys 2 Yarns

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Sandy Cummings, who is checking off the Columbia lot today, has purchased two options on story properties for independent production.

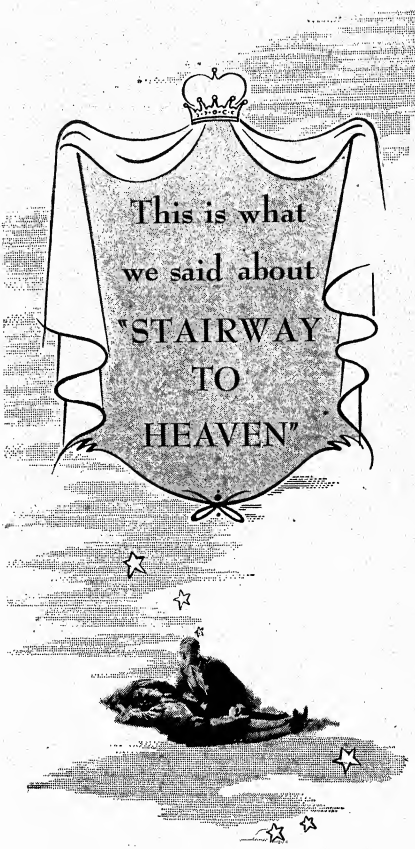
Yarns are "The Flags Were Three," a novel about New Orleans, and "Wheels of Dust," an original screenplay.

AUER'S N. Y. SHOOTING

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

John H. Auer, Republic producer-director, and lensman John Alton are en route to New York to shoot exteriors for "Crime Passionelle." Film will star Vera Ralston and John Carroll.

Pic is Auer's first under his new dual ticket.



Why was "STAIRWAY TO HEAVEN" selected as the first motion picture to have a Command Performance? A distinction no other film can claim!

There is a good reason for this—"STAIRWAY TO HEAVEN" is not only an extraordinarily good motion picture, but it is also "advanced" in every phase of production. It is evocative of all the fine things that can be achieved by the magic of creative elements. It contains poetic dialogue which takes it up to heaven yet down to earth in its universal appeal. It presents something entirely new in chromatic technicolor. It has acting which has not been surpassed—a story that may be rightly acclaimed as different...yet something that is appealing to everyone. To sum it up, "STAIRWAY TO HEAVEN" signifies the motion picture of tomorrow with the appeal of today!

J. Arthur Rank presents
DAVID NIVEN · RAYMOND MASSEY · ROGER LIVESEY
Stairway TO HEAVEN in Technicolor
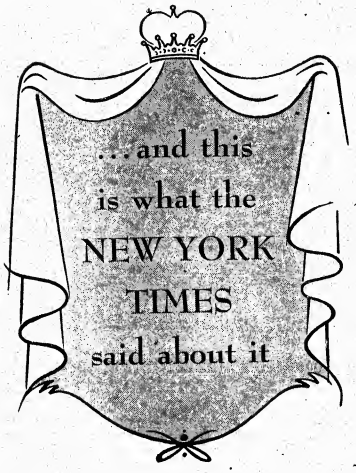
with Kim Hunter · Marius Goring



THE NEW YORK TIMES, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1946.

THE SCREEN IN REVIEW

'Stairway to Heaven,' a British Production at Park Avenue, Proves a Holiday Delight—

By BOSLEY CROWTHER

Had you harked you would have heard the herald angels singing an appropriate paean of joy over a wonderful new British picture, "Stairway to Heaven," which came to the Park Avenue Theatre yesterday. And if you will listen now to this reviewer you will hear that the delicate charm, the adult humor and visual virtuosity of this Michael Powell—Emeric Pressburger film render it indisputably the best of a batch of Christmas shows.

If you wished to be literal about it you might call it romantic fantasy with psychological tie-ins. But literally is not the way to take this deliciously sophisticated frolic in imagination's realm. For this is a fluid contemplation of a man's odd experiences in two worlds, one the world of the living and the other the world of his fantasies—which, in this particular instance, happens to be the great beyond. And the fact that the foreword advises, "any resemblance to any other worlds, known or unknown, is purely coincidental," is a cue to the nature and the mood.

We've no time for lengthy explanations—other than to remark that, by all the laws of probabilities, Squadron Leader Peter Carter should have been killed when he leaped from a burning bomber without a parachute over the Channel on May 2, 1945. And that is the natural assumption which revolves in the back of his injured mind. But, still alive after a freakish salvation and in love with a thoroughly mortal American Wac, he resists the hallucinary "messenger" who keeps summoning him to the beyond. Indeed, he resists so strongly—in his disordered mind, that is—that he conceives an illusory "trial" in heaven in which his appeal to remain on earth is heard before a highly heterogeneous tribunal. And through this court (and by a brain operation), he is spared.

That gives you a slight indication of the substance and flavor of this film—and we haven't space at this writing to give you any more, except to say that the wit and agility of the producers, who also wrote and directed the job, is given range through the picture in countless delightful ways: in the use, for instance, of Technicolor to photograph the earthly scenes and sepia in which to vision the hygienic regions of the Beyond (so that the heavenly "messenger," descending, is prompted to remark, "Ah, how one is starved for Technicolor up there!").

We haven't space to credit the literate wit of the heavenly "trial" in which the right of an English flier to marry an American girl is discussed, with all the subtle ruminations of a cultivated English mind that it connotes, or the fine cinematic inventiveness and visual "touches" that sparkle throughout, notably in the exciting production designs of Alfred Junge.

Nor have we the space to say more than that David Niven is sensitive and real as the flier chap; that Roger Livesey is magnificent as his physician (and later advocate in the Beyond); that Kim Hunter is most appealing as his American sweetheart and that many more do extremely well, including Raymond Massey, who plays the lawyer for the Court of Records at the heavenly "trial." (Mr. Massey represents the spirit of the first Boston patriot killed in the Revolutionary War.)

But we'll have much more to say later, when we've got Christmas out of our hair. Till then, take this recommendation: see "Stairway to Heaven." It's a delight!

Duel in the Sun
(COLOR)

Hollywood, Dec. 29.

Selznick Releasing Organization release of Vanguard (David O. Selznick) production. Stars Jennifer Jones, Gregory Peck, Joseph Cotten; features Lionel Barrymore, Lillian Gish, Walter Huston, Herbert Marshall. Directed by King Vidor. Screenplay by Selznick, adapted by Oliver H. P. Garrett; suggested by novel by Niven Busch. Second units directed by Otto Brower, Reaves Eason; camera, Lee Garmes, Hal Rosson, Ray Rennahan, Chas. P. Boyle, Allen Davey; score, Dimitri Tiomkin; editor, Hal C. Kern; dances, Tilly Losch, Lloyd Shaw. Previewed Dec. 29, '46. Running time, 134 MINS.

Pearl Chavez....................Jennifer Jones
Jesse McCanles....................Joseph Cotten
Lewt McCanles....................Gregory Peck
Senator McCanles....................Lionel Barrymore
Mrs. McCanles....................Lillian Gish
The Sinkiller....................Walter Huston
Scott Chavez....................Herbert Marshall
Sam Pierce....................Charles Bickford
Helen Langford....................Joan Tetzel
Lem Smoot....................Harry Carey
Mr. Langford....................Otto Kruger
The Lover....................Sidney Blackmer
Mrs. Chavez....................Tilly Losch
Sid....................Scott McKay
Vashti....................Butterfly McQueen
Gambler....................Francis McDonald
Gambler....................Victor Kilian
The Jailer....................Griff Barnett
Ken....................Frank Cordell
Ed....................Dan White
Jake....................Steve Dunhill
Capt. U. S. Cavalry....................Lane Chandler
Caller at Barbecue....................Lloyd Shaw
Engineer....................Thomas Dillon
Bartender....................Robert McKenzie
Sheriff Hardy....................Charles Dingle

The familiar western formula reaches its highest commercialization in "Duel in Sun." It is raw, sex-laden, western pulp fiction, told in 10-20-30 style. It is pre-sold via advance exploitation and unusually strong marquee names. It has rough, rowdy and raucous action, factors that always have clicked at the boxoffice. "Duel" is a cinch for resounding ticket sales. Sex angle alone makes for boff b.o.

As a production it adds no class distinction to David O. Selznick but assures him a top commercial success. The star lineup is impressive. Vastness of the western locale is splendidly displayed in color by mobile cameras. Footage is overwhelming expansive, too much so at times considering its length.

Rarely has a film made such frank use of lust and still be cleared for showings. Features with much less open display of illicit sex have felt stern bluenose pressure. It's daring, even though all who love, when and where they can find it, meet production code punishment in the end.

While locale and plot are western, sensuality is the prime motivation. Development makes sure all action centers around sex. With that as a basis, producer Selznick has screenplayed a story of Texas cattle barons, encroaching railroads, wanton killings and other stock action of prairie thrillers. There are moments when the script leaves the bedroom and injects high spots of a different type of color and movement.

Single scenes that will stand out include Jennifer Jones' peril in riding bareback on a runaway horse, filmed against the vast scope of the western scene; Gregory Peck's taming of a sex-maddened stallion; the tremendous sweep of hundreds of mounted horsemen riding to do battle with the invading railroad. There are others, too, that will arouse thrill-seeking audiences. They are staged in a grandiose manner calculated to stimulate imagination.

Some of the more intimate dramatic scenes are likely to arouse different reaction, particularly among younger theatregoers. These sequences, played with melodramatic gusto and flamboyance, include Lillian Gish's death scene; Miss Jones' bawdy love dance; the sequence in which she pleads with Peck to take her on his flight from the law, and the finale when the two lovers kill each other only to cling together in death.

King Vidor's direction keeps the playing in step with production aims. He pitches the action to heights in the top moments and generally holds the overall mood desired. Sharing director credit on the mass sequences are Otto Brower and Reaves Eason.

Plot concerns a half-breed girl who goes to the ranch of a Texas cattle baron to live after her father has killed her adultress mother and lover. The baron's two sons fall for her but the unrestrained younger one captures her emotions. So strong is physical desire that he murders one man who wants to marry her and tries to kill the brother, shown in latter attempts to make the girl a lady. Finale is lovelorn depiction of the girl's determination to kill her master and then die in his arms. Majority of the principal roles are flamboyant, occasionally almost to the burlesque. Miss Jones as the half-breed proves herself extremely capable in quieter sequences but is overly meller in others. Same is true of Peck as the virile younger Texan, raised to love 'em and leave 'em. The role has no audience sympathy but will call a great fascination for the femmes. Contrasting is Joseph Cotten as the older son. Role in his hands is believable and never overdrawn. As the father, Lionel Barrymore uses the stock characterization of an irascible old man.

Lillian Gish is the suffering mother, doing a quiet job until her death scene. A brief, but fine, bit is played by Charles Bickford as the man who wants to marry Miss Jones. Same is true of Joan Tetzel as Cotten's fiancee. She contributes one of the few genuine emotional scenes. Herbert Marshall, Butterfly McQueen, Harry Carey, Walter Huston, Otto Kruger, Charles Dingle, Scott McKay, Sidney Blackmer and Tilly Losch are among others permitted to do not more than pad advertising credits.

Photography credits are multiple, and all contribute to the outstanding color lensing. It is a choice job, well done. Music score by Dimitri Tiomkin has an ear-shattering volume in mass scenes, distracting from the movement but otherwise proves an adequate bridge for dramatics. A catchy song, "Gotta Get Me Somebody to Love," by Allie Wrubel, is deftly planted for romantic interludes. Brog.

The Shocking Miss Pilgrim
(COLOR—SONGS)

Hollywood, Dec. 31.

20th-Fox release of William Perlberg production. Stars Betty Grable, Dick Haymes; features Anne Revere, Allyn Joslyn, Gene Lockhart, Elizabeth Patterson, Elisabeth Risdon, Arthur Shields. Written for screen and directed by George Seaton. From story by Ernest and Frederica Maas; songs, George and Ira Gershwin; camera, Leon Shamroy; dances, Hermes Pan; editor, Robert Simpson. Tradeshown Dec. 21, '46. Running time, 87 MINS.

Cynthia Pilgrim....................Betty Grable
John Pritchard....................Dick Haymes
Alice Pritchard....................Anne Revere
Leander Woolsey....................Allyn Joslyn
Saxon....................Gene Lockhart
Catherine Dennison....................Elizabeth Patterson
Mrs. Pritchard....................Elisabeth Risdon
Michael Michael....................Arthur Shields
Herbert Jothan....................Charles Kemper
Mr. Foster....................Roy Roberts
Office Clerk....................Tom Moore
Lookout in Office....................Stanley Prager
Quincy....................Ed Laughton
Peabody....................Hal K. Dawson
Viola Simmons....................Lillian Bronson
Mr. Packard....................Raymond Largay
Sarah Glidden....................Constance Purdy
Miss Nixon....................Mildred Stone
Wendell Paige....................Pierre Watkin
Mr. Carter....................Junius Matthews

In stringing some George Gershwin tunes dug up out of the trunk a few years ago on a slim thread of a story, the William Perlberg-George Seaton team have gone about the whimsy in too heavy-handed a manner. As a result of which, except for a few flashes of the brilliant wit and tunefulness that inevitably made a show with a George and Ira Gershwin score a standout in the past, "The Shocking Miss Pilgrim" will have to rely on cast names—not to mention the gaudy Technicolor trappings—for its b.o. power.

Story concerns entry of Cynthia Pilgrim (Betty Grable) into Boston's "man's world" of commerce in the 1870's. Draped in fabulous Orry-Kelly gowns that belie her $8-a-week salary, Miss Grable wins her diploma in a New York business school and proceeds to shock Beacon Hill by applying for a job in the office of Dick Haymes' shipyards. She gets it only because of the pull exerted by Anne Revere, suffragette relative of Haymes. Gal makes good at the job, under great difficulties, but refuses to give up her fight for equal rights for women, upon which she has embarked with Miss Revere, when Haymes asks her to marry him. He finally realizes it's a losing battle, and they clinch.

Gag about Miss Grable being "a new typewriter" is okay the first few times, but carried throughout the picture it becomes tiresome. Other gags are belabored as well, and lines like "a woman's place is in the home" are sledge-hammered. Music is standout, most hummable tunes being "For You, for Me, for Evermore" and "Aren't You Kind of Glad We Did?" One that has all the flavor of the Gershwin freres' topmost sophisticated musicomedy stuff is "But Not in Boston." Others that listen well are "Changing My Tune," "Stand Up and Fight," and a fetching waltz.

Plenty of care has been taken that the Victorian drapings don't conceal too much of Miss Grable's figure, and the gal looks tops with a darker shade of blondine than usual. She also turns in a slightly more subdued thesping job than is her habit. Haymes looks and sounds good, too, dividing singing chores, which don't intrude too harshly, with Miss Grable. Support is tops, especially Miss Revere's suffragette, Elizabeth Risdon's not-too-Back-Bay-ish portrayal of Haymes' mother, and Gene Lockhart's sourpuss office manager.

Crackpot denizens of the boarding house at which Miss Grable stays, all of whom hate Boston, are Allyn Joslyn as a poet, Arthur Shields as a painter, Elizabeth Patterson as housekeeper, Lillian Bronson as a spinster who spends her time rewriting the dictionary, and Charles Kemper as a musician. All make their footage count plenty.

Leon Shamroy's camera work is slick. Music, as put together by Ira Gershwin, Kay Swift, Herbert Spencer and Edward Powell, comes through in a lush manner under Alfred Newman's baton. There isn't much dancing, but the waltzes staged by Hermes Pan make pleasant interludes. Sum total is a film that's easy on the eye and ear but not too bright. Mike.

Goldwyn Pacts Rosenfeld

Isidro Rosenfeld, former rep for Warner Bros. in Chile, has been named by Samuel Goldwyn Productions as special sales rep for northern half of Latin America.

He'll make his headquarters in Mexico City.

Miniature Reviews

"Duel in the Sun" (Color) (Selznick). Western with sex, cast names and tremendous boxoffice possibilities.

"Shocking Miss Pilgrim" (Color-Songs) (20th). Betty Grable, Dick Haymes and Gershwin score spell good b.o.

"Stagecoach to Denver" (Rep). Latest in Red Ryder series with Allan Dane up, okay for oater fans.

"Les Miserables" (French). Superb acting of Harry Baur, great story, good direction hold marathon-length film together for top arty b.o.

"La Otra" (Panamerican). Dolores del Rio in Rian James' yarn makes this loom as top Mexican-made this year.

"Queen For a Night" (Saga). Swedish-made operetta looks strong bet for arty theatres; Jussi Bjoerling starred.

Stagecoach to Denver

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

Republic release of Sidney Picker production. Stars Allan Lane; features Bobby Blake, Martha Wentworth, Roy Barcroft, Peggy Stewart, Emmett Lynn. Directed by R. G. Springsteen. Original screenplay, Earle Snell; based on cartoon strip, "Red Ryder," by Fred Harman; camera, Edgar Lyons; editor, Les Orlebeck. Previewed Dec. 27, '46. Running time, 56 MINS.

Red Ryder....................Allan Lane
Little Beaver....................Bobby Blake
The Duchess....................Martha Wentworth
Big Bill Lambert....................Roy Barcroft
Beautiful....................Peggy Stewart
Coon-Skin....................Emmett Lynn
Sheriff....................Ted Adams
Duke....................Edmund Cobb
Doc Kimball....................Tom Chatterton
Dickie Ray....................Bobby Hyatt
Blackie....................George Chesebro
Felton....................Edward Cassidy
Braydon....................Wheaton Chambers
Matt Disher....................Forrest Taylor

This saddle entry in Republic's Red Ryder series measures up as okay fodder for the Saturday matinee trade. There's plenty of action and Allan Lane as Ryder proves a bit more accurate with his six-shooter than the usual film cowpoke. Sidney Picker did better than average with production values considering budget and R. G. Springsteen keeps tight directorial hand to assure proper pacing and plenty of action.

Original script by Earle Snell contains more story development than expected in a western, lending interest to basic formula of a land grab that Ryder busts up. Plot concerns Ryder's efforts to find out why a stagecoach was wrecked, injuring a young protege and killing a land commissioner. Plot thickens when a new commissioner and the boy's aunt, latter rushing to kid's bedside, disappear and two phonies take their places. There are a lot of angles to resolve in 56 minutes running time but Ryder's range-sleuthing cleans them up, exposing town's bigshot as a land stealer and juggler of survey lines.

Lane makes a stalwart Red Ryder and Bobby Blake is excellent as Little Beaver. Chief heavy is Roy Barcroft, turning in expert skullduggery. Peggy Stewart, the phoney aunt; Bobby Hyatt, Ryder's protege; Emmett Lynn, Martha Wentworth and others show up well. Edgar Lyons' lensing is actionful and Les Orlebeck's editing concise. Brog.

Les Miserables
(FRENCH-MADE)

Distinguished Film release of Pathe Consortium Cinema-Raymond Borderie production. Stars Harry Baur, Josselyne Gael; features Charles Vanel, Jean Servait, Charles Dullin, Arane Demazis. Directed by Raymond Bernard. Screenplay, Raymond Bernard, Andre Lang, from novel "Les Miserables," Victor Hugo; camera, J. Kruger; music, Arthur Honneger. At Apollo, N. Y., Dec. 29, '46. Running time, 209 MINS.

Jean Valjean....................Harry Baur
Javert....................Charles Vanel
Cosette }
Fantine }....................Josselyne Gael
Thernadier....................Charles Dullin
Mme. Thernadier....................Gaby Triquet
Marius....................Jean Servait
Eponine....................Arane Demazis
Gavroche....................Emile Genevois

(In French; English Titles)

Any ordinary film, when loaded with the handicaps piled on "Les Miserables," would stagger and drop with a resounding flop. But this (actually it's two pictures) is no ordinary product, but two films, "Jean Valjean" and its sequel, "Cosette." Holding it all together is the thespic strength of the late great Harry Baur, who supports this spliced epic with a power strangely comparable to that of the Jean Valjean he played. It should do well in the arty houses despite short turnover due to the extreme length (209 mins.).

Neither of the films is new, both having been made some 10 years ago and then re-edited for a single presentation. Despite groaning length, and the actual separateness of their production, continuity is excellent; a few short frames of annotation are used to bring plot forward the few years between the end of "Jean Valjean" and the beginning of its sequel, "Cosette."

Added to the three and a half hours' running time, "Les Miserables" labors under atrocious sub-titling, the poorer makeup and costuming of an earlier period of film-making, imperfect prints and occasional overacting. And yet it's a fine picture. Baur is powerful, disciplined and moving in the lead role, while other lead and supporting players, Charles Dullin and Charles Vanel in particular, are far better than average. Raymond Bernard's sharp direction under productive supervision of Raymond Borderie is constantly in evidence.

Distrib's intention is to present the pic much in the same manner as "Gone With the Wind," a film of comparable length. Marquee pull of Baur's name alone is probably still strong enough to insure good arty-theatre returns.

Story is still essentially a moral essay, with Baur the reformed criminal who becomes the embodiment of good under constant flagellation of a scrupulous conscience. Film opens with his release from prison and metamorphosis through the kindness of a Bishop. He rises to mayoralty of a town and subsequent wealth, only to be forced by his conscience to declare his criminal identity, thereby saving another from prison. He escapes the police to carry out a mission to care for a dying woman's daughter (Josselyne Gael). There is a gap of eight years, where the second portion of the film takes up in 1832, following the Bourbon reaccession of the French throne. Miss Gael falls in love with a young revolutionary who mans the barricades against royalist troops. Although he disapproves, Baur finally effects their rescue and marriage, then dies.

Vanel, as Javert, the police inspector who constantly haunts Baur, is excellent; Dullin plays a scurrilous inn-keeper. Scenes of the abortive revolutionary attempts are outstanding, while camera work throughout is on a high plane. No credit line is given for the titling, which is just as well, since titles are misspelled and often laughable. Tomm.

La Otra
("The Other One")
(MEXICAN-MADE)

Mexico City, Dec. 17.

Panamerican Films release of Mauricio de la Serna production. Stars Dolores del Rio; features Agustin Irusta, Victor Junco and Jose Baviera. Directed by Roberto Gavaldon. Screenplay, Jose Revueltas and Gavaldon based on story by Rian James; camera, Alex Phillips. At Cine Olimpia, Mexico City. Running time, 93 MINS.

Of elegant simplicity, this Gallic-Latinesque tragedy starring Dolores del Rio shapes up as one of Mexico's top 1946 film offerings. Direction and photography are in keeping with the fine thesping of Miss del Rio who contributes one of the best performances of her career. Marquee lure of star's name alone should provide added pull in the U. S. market.

Hewing closely to the Rian James yarn, scripters have combined a melange of murders, morgues, cops and cemeteries into a taut tale with little comedy relief. Dialog is pointed and held to a minimum. Miss del Rio plays the dual role of two twin sisters, one who weds a millionaire and the other who ekes out a drab existence as a manicurist. Latter, rebelling from her station in life, murders her twin and carries on a masquerade which leads her into various jams including a 30-year rap for a murder she didn't commit.

Male support of Agustin Irusta, Jose Baviera and Victor Junco is top-flight. Miss del Rio, treasurer of the producing company which made the pic, shades the funereal tones of her role possibly a bit too darkly. Her costuming especially hits a macabre note with much of her garb resembling that of a femme undertaker. Director Gavaldon, whose technique is more of the best French school than Hollywood, rates laurels while the film's technical aspects are definite assets. Grah.

Queen for a Night
(Musical)
(SWEDISH-MADE)

Saga Films production and release. Stars Jussi Bjoerling. Directed by Willy Hildebrand. Screen story by Gardar Sahlberg from story by George Martens; music, Jules Sylvain; lyrics, Sven Olof Sandberg, Karl-Ewert, Nils Thoren. Previewed N. Y. Dec. 27, '46. Running time, 91 MINS.

Madame La Grage....Gurli Lemon Bernhard
Pireo....................Jussi Bjoerling
Eva....................Inga Brink
Lars Hjelm....................Gosta Kjellertz
Gustaf III....................Torsten Winge
Count Hedencrona....................Hilding Gavle
Erik....................Ake Soderblom
Johansson....................Thor Modeen
Sergel....................Wexler Hildebrand

(In Swedish; English Titles)

This is Sweden's first screen operetta, and as such first-rate. Jussi Bjoerling, of the Metropolitan Opera Co., and some other excellent Swedish voices, including Gurli Lemon Bernhard, Gosta Kjellertz and the Royal Opera of Stockholm chorus, are all superb. Film looks like a first-rate bet for arty theatres in the U. S. but a bit too slow-moving and long for general American consumption.

Basically, this is a Cinderella story concerning a modiste who finds her lover drifting away when he falls for a French singer visiting Stockholm at a command performance in 1785. Their love affair appears headed for the rocks until Sweden's king accidentally overhears her at a masked ball and decides to bring the two together.

The Ballet of Venus, held outdoors before the royal party, is a highlight, although Miss Bernhard, clad in silken, revealing garb as Venus, does not measure up to Hollywood standards of streamlined beauty. Kjellertz bursts into song on the slightest provocation but is easily matched by Miss Bernhard's super vocalizing.

There are many closeups of buxom blonde femmes, some of them outdoing Jane Russell, but withal the story and sequences follow a routine operetta pattern. Acting is above par for a Swedish picture with laurels going to Miss Bernhard, Inga Brink, the little dressmaker who met a king; Bjoerling and Kjellertz. Wear.

New Foreign Films
(Unlikely for Anglo-U S Market)

"Saltstaenk och Krutgubbar" ("Gay Old Time") (SWEDISH). Sandrew Bauman release of Schamyl Bauman production; stars Sigurd Wallen; features Gull Natorp, John Elfstroem, Ludde Gentzel, Ernst Christenson, Carl Hagman; directed by Schamyl Bauman; screenplay, Ragnar Arfvedsson, Eric Lundegard, Torsten Lundqvist, based on story by Albert Engstroem; camera, Sven Nyqvist. Reviewed in Stockholm. Running time, 112 MINS.

Swedish comedy paints some interesting and humorous pictures of island life not far from Stockholm. With thesping honors deftly handled by Sigurd Wallen, film's chances are enhanced by top lensing of newcomer Sven Nyqvist. Should do well in Sweden but U. S. appeal is negligible.

"Iris Och Lojtnantshjarta" (SWEDISH), Svensk Filmindustri production and release; stars Mai Zetterling, Alf Kjellin; features Ake Claesson, Holger Loewenadler, Margaretha Fahlen, Ingrid Borthen, Einar Axelson, Stig Jaerrel; directed by Alf Sjoeberg; screenplay, Sjoeberg; camera, Gosta Rosling. At Roda Kvarn, Stockholm. Running time, 96 MINS.

Better than average Swedish film due to fine direction and good scripting. Based on a best seller by Ollie Hedberg, story makes a fine vehicle for Alf Kjellin and Mai Zetterling. Incidentally, this was last one Miss Zetterling did here before joining J. Arthur Rank organization in England. Okay lensing enhances film's chances at U. S. arty houses.

"Odemarksprasten" ("The Country Priest") (SWEDISH). Sandrew-Bauman Film release of Anders Sandrew production; stars Olof Widgren, Birgit Tengroth; features Arnold Sjoestrand, Carl Cidbiorn Knudsen, Ake Claesson, Bjorn Berglund, Mona Ericsson; directed by Goesta Folke; screenplay, Rune Lindstrom, based on novel by Harald Hornborg; camera, Goeran Strindberg. At Grand, Stockholm. Running time, 98 MINS.

Topflight scripting of Rune Lindstrom has turned Harald Hornborg's novel into an okay vehicle for Olof Widgren and Birgit Tengroth. Goesta Folke's direction stands out. Film looms as a success in Scandinavian countries, but story hampers its possibilities in the U.S. Wins.

"Le Bataillon du Ciel" ("Sky Battalion") (FRENCH). Pathe Cinema release of C.I.C.C. production; stars Pierre Blanchar, Rene Lefevre, Jaque Crispin; directed by Alexander Esway, screenplay, Joseph Kessel. Reviewed in Paris. Running time, 165 MINS.

Sure heavy grosser here and a good entry for arty theatres in the U. S. "Le Bataillon du Ciel" is an 18-reel epic of the French parachuters who dropped in Brittany at the time of the Normandy invasion. One of the biggest recent French productional efforts, cooperation of the R.A.F. and the French Army permitted use of planes and parachutes on a Hollywood scale. Acting is realistic but length of film along with fact that war heroics are getting dated will hurt the picture's chances for general release in America.

"Adieu Cherie" ("Goodbye Darling") (FRENCH). Osso release of Osso-Reilfeld production; stars Danielle Darrieux; features Gabrielle Dorziat, Salou, Larquey, Jacques Berthier; directed by Raymond Bernard; screenplay, Jacques Companeez. Reviewed in Paris. Running time, 115 MINS.

Film misses out because of unsatisfactory screen treatment and technique which has Danielle Darrieux portraying a role similar to that done by Michele Morgan in the pre-war "Taxi Girl." An adventuress, she tries and fails to be accepted as the bride of young Jacques Berthier in the respectable family headed by Larquey and Gabrielle Dorziat. Male lead is weak and poor direction fails to bring out capabilities of an able supporting cast. Maxi.

"Don Simon de Lira" (MEXICAN). Filmex release of Bracho Films production; stars Joaquin Pardave, Manuel Medel; features Elsa Aguirre; directed by Julio Bracho; based on Ben Jonson's "Volpone"; music, Raul Lavista; camera, Ezequiel Carrasco. At Cine Metropolitan, Mexico City, Dec. 18, '46. Running time, 118 MINS.

Though local crix have panned this, it has points of appeal. "Don Simon de Lira" is a silly story about a rich old fool who's so stupid that one wonders how he ever got to be rich. Yarn is supposed to be based on Ben Jonson's sparkling comedy. Julio Bracho's direction is not up to his usual standard. Cancan dance sequence, one of best in picture, is cut to a mere flash. Looks strong for top spot here, and also may do for U. S. arty houses. Grah.

YOU CAN'T GET AWAY FROM IT!

"THE BEAST WITH FIVE FINGERS" IS THE INDUSTRY'S NEW SCARE SENSATION!

It's at the VICTORIA on Broadway Now! And it's a screaming, Smashing, Solid Success!

Starring ROBERT ALDA • ANDREA KING • PETER LORRE with VICTOR FRANCEN • J. CARROL NAISH

Directed by ROBERT FLOREY • Screen Play by CURT SIODMAK, WILLIAM FRYER HARVEY From a Story by • Music by MAX STEINER • Produced by WILLIAM JACOBS

Warner Picture!

Soviet Won't Follow U. S. Lead For Austrian Studios' Return to Owners

Vienna, Dec. 18.

Sudden U.S. Army move closely connected with previously announced arrangements for MPEA to take over all American film distribution in Austria as of Jan. 1, tossed the American-held parts of former Nazi monopoly, Wien Film, into immediate Austrian government trusteeship for eventual return to private operation.

Most important properties handed over by Wolfgang Wolf, acting films officer for Army's Information Services Branch and chief of the forthcoming MPEA operation, are the Sievering Studios and associated laboratories in Vienna. Larger and more modern Rosenhuegel Studios remain in Soviet hands, with no sign of Moscow intentions to give anything back. Dr. Peter Krauland, Austrian Minister of Property Control, received the turnback on behalf of his government.

There's an unofficial understanding that Austrians won't turn the Wien Film plants and assets back to Karl Hertl and his associates, including Creditanstalt Bank, which have continued under U.S. administration the management they created under Goebbels. But there's no other local group in sight considered to have necessary experience plus political acceptability.

Army pondered holding onto its control still longer, but since pix industry was the last major Austrian seizure retained in custody after President Truman's turnback directive of last September, decision was made to hand the headache to the Austrians. Not that it's a financial headache. Wien Film's operation, based on rental of studio and lab facilities, plus revenue from old German and Austrian product, has been extremely profitable.

However, new deal leaves Wien Film with only a dozen or so prewar titles they made themselves while Army will return over 150 other active German language features to U.S. distribution in Germany only. They've played every available date in Austria many times and with increasing quantity of imported product incoming, plus probable Soviet or so new Austrian made titles in 1947, the old product is no longer necessary to keep houses busy.

Wien Film will get its bank accounts back in enhanced condition, but loss of the Rosenhuegel property heavily offsets this. Probability is that Soviet-operated Sovexport-Film will claim Rosenhuegel permanently as a Nazi asset seizable under the Potsdam agreement.

U.S. PIX STANDOUT IN '46 NORWEGIAN B.O. LISTS

Oslo, Dec. 17.

Top b.o. pix in Norway for the first half of 1946 were two Norwegian films, "Vi Vil Leve" ("We Want to Live") and "Englandfarere" ("Travelers to England"), followed by the U. S. films "That Hamilton Woman" (UA), "Jesse James" (20th) and "Tom, Dick and Harry" (RKO).

Other Hollywood product rating mention were "Thief of Bagdad" (20th), "All This and Heaven Too" (WB), "Gentleman Jim" (WB), "Casablanca" (WB) and the "Jungle Book." Swedish pix also did well, especially "Hets" ("Frenzy") and "Anna Lans."

Weather Chief Snag In British Pix Production

London, Dec. 26.

Fower and coal cuts, duc to Arctic climatic conditions, are further hindering film production in England. Result is a decided lag in studio schedules.

Shortage of studio space, bad enough at present, is expected to be even more pronounced next year. Hence current reduction in power and heating only serves to aggravate a difficult situation.

Cocteau Shuttling

Paris, Dec. 17.

Paul Graetz, currently producing "Diable au Corps" for Universal release, has signed Jean Cocteau to adapt and direct his play, "Double Headed Eagle," for Paris production.

Filmization will probably not take place until Cocteau has directed a screen adaptation of Victor Hugo's "Ruy Blas" which he has scheduled for independent production.

'Heaven' Sets Record As Mexico's Top Grosser

Mexico City, Dec. 26.

All-time record for a pic at one theatre in Mexico is claimed for "Leave Her to Heaven" (20th-Fox) with a gross of $750,000 (Mex.) at the Cine Alameda, first-run house, where it played for six weeks.

Runner-up was the Mexican film, "The Divorcee", which grossed $497,000 in a six-weeks run at one theatre. "Heaven" played to the new high of $5 (Mex.) during its first week, $4 (Mex.) for the two other weeks and the rest of the time at $3.

There is some talk about $5 (Mex.) succeeding $4 (Mex.) as the standard admittance nick for first-run cinemas in Mexico in '47. Most exhibitors discount the rumor. But all agree that $4 (Mex.) will continue indefinitely, so popular are pix down here.

Hongkong Plans Quota System to Aid British Films Compete With U.S.

Hongkong, Dec. 18.

A quota system for J. Arthur Rank's productions may be introduced in Hongkong soon. A bill is at present before the Legislative Council recommending that British films must be shown on a minimum of seven out of 70 days in the first and second-run theatres. If this is passed it will bring to an end a year-old controversy against the exhibitors started by the European population of the colony.

British pictures, according to European film fans in Hongkong, are now being given the chance they deserve since the eight American companies—already well established before the war—grabbed all the first-run and second-run theatres after the colony's liberation, leaving not more than one date a month for the new British company Eagle-Lion.

All the British films so far shown, such as "Blithe Spirit," "Henry V," "The Map in Grey," "The Wicked Lady" and half a dozen others, have met with generous support from the European audiences, but the exhibitors point out that this is less than 20% of their audiences. The real boxoffice records are scored by the Chinese, who claim that they fail to understand the mainly-dialog films and demand "action."

The result is that British films are having two-and-three-day runs, while lavish American productions such as "Bathing Beauty," together with "action-filled" epics, run for as long as two or three weeks.

If the bill, which is similar to that being enforced in Britain, is passed, a fine of $70,000 will be the penalty for failing to abide by it, it was reported.

U. S. Negro Film Exec Is Manila 'Poor Man's Friend'

Manila, Dec. 20.

Successful American Negro business man here is ex-serviceman Dr. Dunbar McLaurin, who's known to his Filipino brethren as "Honest Mac—the poor man's friend."

Besides being an exec of Oriental Pictures, McLaurin also is managing director of McLaurin Enterprises, which deals in Army motor vehicles.

Neal's Caribbean Post

Jack R. Neal, former manager of Republic's branch at Porto Rico, has been signed to Caribbean supervisor for the company.

Neal was formerly associated with the Warners' exchanges in Denver and Seattle, and later worked as branch manager for Metro in Panama and Caracas.

New Mex House Burns

Mexico City, Dec. 26.

Fire that took eight hours to quench destroyed the Cine Cosmos, 5,000-seat theatre here that was to have opened New Year's Eve.

Owners Jesus and Adolfo Grovas, film producers, figured loss at $3,000,000 (Mex.)

Ray Josephs writes that

"1947 Is Likely to Provide All-Time Peak for U. S. Show Biz in Latin America"

* * *

an editorial feature of the forthcoming

41st Anniversary Number

of

VARIETY

Allies Mulling Future Jap Radio System; Nip Ownership Eventually

Tokyo, Dec. 24.

Control and ownership of radio broadcasting systems in Japan has been the chief topic at recent Allied Council meetings here.

W. MacMahon Ball, United Kingdom member of the Council, today stated the present setup should remain unchanged for the purposes of the occupation, which is rolling along smoothly, but the ownership and operations in the future should be ultimately determined by the Japanese people themselves. Ball said he came to the conclusion because western democracies were still confused as to what constituted democratic broadcasting.

He pointed out that a single government monopoly in the form of BBC existed in Great Britain while all stations in the States are owned and operated by private companies. On the other hand, he remarked, Australia has adopted a synthesis of the two, with private companies operating stations alongside of Government-managed Australian Broadcasting Corp. For this reason, he said, he felt it would be difficult to say what particular type of ownership or operation was "more democratic" than the others.

Police Tab Tabarin

Paris, Dec. 30.

The Bal Tabarin, top nitery in Paris, was shuttered by police Thursday (26) as an aftermath of a raid Christmas eve.

It's claimed that Pierre Sandrini, spot's operator, refused to cooperate with the gendarmes by interrupting the floorshow then in progress, so that the police could search for their quarry.

'RHINE' IN VIENNA

Vienna, Dec. 20.

Volkstheatre is rehearsing Lillian Heilman's "Watch on the Rhine" (titled here "Vor dem Entscheidung") with Adrienne Gessner, who recently returned from U. S. Attila Hoerbiger and Siegfried Breuerin leads.

Current London Shows

London, Dec. 30.

"And No Birds Sing," Aldwych.
"Anthony-Cleopatra," Piccadilly.
"Bertram Mills Circus," Olympia.
"Between Ourselves," Playhouse.
"Clutterbuck," Wyndham.
"Duke," Garrick.
"Fifty-Fifty," Strand.
"Fools Rush In," Fortune.
"Grace of God," St. James.
"Grand National Night," Apollo.
"Guinea Pig," Criterion.
"Here Comes the Boys," Saville.
"High Time," Palladium.
"Honeymoon," York's.
"Lady Frederick," Savoy.
"Men From Ministry," Comedy.
"Message for Margaret," Duchess.
"Mother Goose," Casino.
"Night and Laughter," Coliseum.
"No Room at Inn," Winter Garden.
"Our Betters," Playhouse.
"Pacific 1860," Drury Lane.
"Perchance to Dream," Hipp.
"Peter Pan," Scala.
"Piccadilly Hayride," Wales.
"Poltergeist," Vaudeville.
"Red Riding Hood," Adelphi.
"Shephard Show," Princes.
"Shop Sly Corner," St. Martins.
"Song of Norway," Palace.
"Sweetheart Mine," Vic Palace.
"Sweetest and Lowest," Ambass.
"The Gleam," Globe.
"Under the Counter," Phoenix.
"Windermere's Fan," Haymarket.
"Winslow Boy," Lyric.
"Worm's View," Whitehall.

NIP STIX YEN U.S. PIX; SPECIAL HOUSES BUILT

Tokyo, Dec. 24.

Popularity of American films in Japan is apparent with the boom of theatres for U. S. pix exclusively in medium and small towns, Hideo Tsumura, Jap film authority, declared today in the Nippon Times. This, despite the dearth of film projectors, which are definitely a critical item in the Nip entertainment field today. Before the war, American films were rarely shown outside of the larger cities.

According to Tsumura, "American dramatic films may contain points hard for Japanese farmers and fishermen to comprehend because of the difference of language and customs, but American news and documentary films are readily understood with the aid of a little explanation. And these films will not only serve as living textbooks for teaching the Japanese democracy, but will also prove a powerful factor in advancing the Jap welfare."

Tsumura also claimed Jap producers have run to morbid extremes lately, hoping to compete with U. S. money-makers.

Minerva Directors Seek OK to Sell Aussie House; Price Set at $348,000

Sydney, Dec. 17.

Directors of Minerva Centre, covering Minerva Theatre, King's Cross, are seeking o.k. of stockholders to sell theatre for $348,000.

To permit sale going through, it will be necessary to obtain the surrender by the Tivoli Circuit of its rights under its present agreement for a lease of the theatre for span of 15 years from June, 1947. Stockholders will be asked to approve payment of $36,000 to Tivoli for the lease surrender.

Minerva is valued at $310,524 on the unit's books, excluding rights over adjacent properties, valued at $8,500. Company earned a net profit of $24,196 for year ended June 30, compared with $8,332 previous year. Preference dividend paid to June 30 amounted to $9,540 and 5% on ordinary shares will take $12,700. $9,540 was set aside for depreciation.

E. A. Nettlefold is chairman of directors of Minerva Centre, with Dave Martin, managing director. Other directors include Neil Maver and F. A. Dixon, with Dan Casey now seeking selection to the board. Nettlefold, Martin and Maver are the big moguls behind Tivoli vaudeville loop.

Theatre has been showing live shows since opening and is at present on lease to Whitehall Productions, operated by Kathleen Robinson and Peter Walton. Current attraction is "Life With Father," a major click likely to run until next spring. Belief is that Whitehall Prod. will purchase the Minerva from the Centre group.

Dan Casey, seeking appointment to the Centre board, is sales manager of Universal. Dave Martin was for long span a top executive of Universal here.

'Ministry' Suits London; Hylton's 'Hood' Favored

London, Dec. 26.

"The Men from the Ministry," a topical play, opening Christmas Eve, was well received at the Comedy and a moderate run seems likely.

Also preeming the same evening at the Adelphi was Jack Hylton's pantomime production, "Red Riding Hood," starring Nervo and Knox. Timely seasonal fare, show has sizable advance ticket sales.

'Outlaw' Tops 20G, Breaks London Pavilion Record

London, Dec. 12.

With the showing of Howard Hughes' "The Outlaw," UA's ambition to top $20,000 for one week's gross at the London Pavilion has been realized. Although pic has been given only five shows daily, it topped that figure in the first week, breaking all records of house. Number of payees for first week was 29,680, in house that seats 1,217, an unprecedented record.

Pic is in for six weeks, but is expected to hold up at least eight. It's been booked for entire Gaumont-British circuit.

Par's Reshuffle In Aussie, Orient

Paramount realigned its Australia-New Zealand and Orient distribution sales setup last week by filming F. C. Henry as division manager to cover Japan, Korea, China, Philippines, Siam, India, East Indies, Indo China, Straits Settlements and Burma. However, other portions of the Orient which were under the wing of James E. Perkins, now Par's managing director in Great Britain, stay under district managers. Perkins formerly was division manager covering the Far East, Australia-New Zealand and South Africa.

Par International left Australia and New Zealand under Harry Hunter, managing director for that territory. Clay Hake remains in South Africa as Paramount representative. Morey Marcus, who was district manager for India, Burma, Ceylon and Malaya, stays as is.

Robert V. Perkins, son of James E. Perkins, who has been in the Philippines since the war, becomes district manager for that territory, effective Jan. 1, 1947. He has worked for Par and Universal in the Asiatic market for a number of years.

George Weltner, Par International press, in making the Henry appointment, said that the new Orient boss will divide his time equally between the N. Y. office and the Orient. Henry planned in from Shanghai recently and will stay in N. Y. for some time.

A commander in the Navy during the war, Henry has been a Par overseas rep for the last 15 years. He became the company's Philippines manager in 1932, holding the post until November, 1941, when he went on active duty with the Navy. In May, 1942, he was captured at Corregidor and remained a prisoner of war until September, 1945, when liberated from Toyama prison camp. He was promoted to full commander while still held by the Japs.

More recently, Henry went to Shanghai as district manager for Par in China, Philippines and Indo China.

FILIPINO FILMS FIND SIAM, MALAYA MARKET

Manila, Dec. 20.

Filipino pictures will shortly be exhibited on a commercial scale in both Malaya and Siam, according to L. Araullo and G. Santiago, managing directors of the Malayan Film Exchange. They have just arrived from those countries after establishing branches of their company for distributing Philippine and other films with territorial rights.

The exchange is accredited with being the first Filipino enterprise to introduce Philippine pictures in Malaya and Siam following liberation. Its first production "Dugo Ng Bayan" ("Blood of the Nation"), starring Fernando Poe, Pat Mijares and other Filipino screen personalities, has already been booked for showing in the first-run theatres throughout British Malaya and Siam. This has been made possible because of the company's connections with various theatrical syndicates in both Malaya and Siam.

Araullo believes that Filipino pictures have a distinct appeal to people in Siam and Malaya. These new markets, according to him, are now open for good-quality Filipino films, and it is up to Filipino producers to make good pictures for these two neighboring countries.

Weekly Attendance Up To Million in Bavaria

Washington, Dec. 30.

Attendance is up to 1,000,000 per week in the 331 film houses now operating in Bavaria in the American zone of operation, according to the MG report. At Tempelhof studios tests are now being made for the voices to synchronize the German language soundtrack to "Ziegfeld Girl."

Military Government also reports that an office to coordinate and promote youth activities in the drama is to be opened in Munich. Already there is a combined British-American committee registering artists and actors.

YEARLING

LOS ANGELES WORLD PREMIERE

Twice Daily Reserved Seats Carthay Circle Theatre

WRITES NEW PAGE IN FILM HISTORY! NEW RECORDS! NEW ADJECTIVES! HAPPY NEW YEARLING!

Watch for repetition of Los Angeles triumph when it opens at Radio City Music Hall in New York!

Congratulations to all who made
M-G-M's
"THE YEARLING"
starring
GREGORY PECK
JANE WYMAN
A CLARENCE BROWN PRODUCTION
CLAUDE JARMAN, JR.
as "JODY"
CLEM BEVANS MARGARET WYCHERLY
FORREST TUCKER
Photographed in TECHNICOLOR
Screen Play by Paul Osborn • Based on the Pulitzer Prize Novel by Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings
Directed by CLARENCE BROWN
Produced by
SIDNEY FRANKLIN
A Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Picture

March of Dimes — Jan. 24-30

Indiscriminate Release of Oldies Hurting Carefully Selected Reissues

Alleged indiscriminate releasing by certain distribs of old product under the guise of reissues is creating considerable concern among other distribs, who feel some of these oldies will hurt the chances of their own carefully-selected and specially-handled reissues. Exhibs booking the oldies as second-features on their dual bills have also lodged complaints with the distribs, presumably figuring also that their customers won't go for any reissues if they're fed too steady a diet of the ultra-oldies.

Chief squawk against the reissues in question, some of which date back to 1933 and 1934, is that the dresses and hair-dos worn by the actresses are so outmoded as to draw either laughs or complaints from customers, regardless of whether the picture is a heavy drama or comedy. Distribs such as Metro, 20th-Fox and Paramount have kept this in mind when selecting their reissues and have consequently released only those pictures of not more than four or five years' vintage or else period pieces in which the costuming doesn't matter.

Survey of reissues currently playing in metropolitan New York reveals such oldies as "A Chance at Heaven," released by RKO in 1933; "We Live Again," United Artists release of the following year; "Toast of New York," RKO release in 1937, and "Bringing Up Baby," released by RKO in 1938. Such films, according to exhibs, may be high in entertainment value but the incongruity of the dresses worn by actresses elicits the same scoffs from audiences as old newsreel clips of the flapper era. Lobby displays and newspaper ads on several of these bury the fact they're reissues in small type, resulting in customers' objections that they've been deluded into buying tickets to see old pictures.

Poor Prints Also

Another cause for complaint is the poor condition of the prints on the oldies. Distribs who have decided to book their reissues as top new releases have been careful to furnish only new prints and accessories. Again, the fact that a customer might see one of the old prints first would create antagonism in his mind against all reissues on the assumption that he'd been duped, according to certain distrib execs.

M-G Day-Dates

Continued from page 3

for the world preem of "Duel in the Sun," on Dec. 30.

Jackson Park Bugaboo

Practice of simultaneous playing of pix by a major is shadowed by doubt because of indie exhib claims that it throttles the flow of film and causes shortages of product in subsequent runs. Jackson Park decision which ruled out the habit in Chi, besides banning moveovers, has M-G concerned because it doesn't want to lay itself open to further anti-trust wallops. Trade circles predict that M-G will lose over $1,000,000 annually in film rentals because of its step.

Extension of day-and-date system to other localities has been widely predicted in the industry as a means of hoisting rentals without a hike in admission scales. Reps for other majors assert that they will not take similar steps unless so directed judicially.

Selznick-FC

Continued from page 5

split with United Artists. Key men in the supervisory sales setup Agnew established while still associated with UA will meet in New York Friday (3). SRO prexy said. He stated there would be about six of them on hand for the talks on the organization's future.

Aside from Agnew, officers of SRO named last week are E. L. Scanlon, board chairman; Leonard R. Case, assistant secretary and assistant treasurer; Robert H. Dann, assistant secretary, and Richard Greenlee, assistant secretary.

Board will consist of Selznick, Daniel T. O'Shea, Agnew, Greenlee and Scanlon.

Majors' Profits

Current standing of the Big Seven league which hoists the total to $99,000,000 is as follows:

Paramount — $33,877,000 for nine months ending Sept. 30.

Columbia—$3,450,489 for year ending June 30.

20th-Fox—$16,219,815 for 39 weeks ended Sept. 28.

Metro — $12,579,245 for 40 weeks ended June 6.

Universal — $3,206,354 for 39 weeks ending Aug. 3.

RKO — $9,963,906 for nine months ended Sept. 30.

WB's $19,424,000

Continued from page 3

700,000 in '45. Company report pointed out that since the fiscal year cut across the excess profits repeal, Warners paid two-thirds on the reduced tax and one-third on the old.

Upped B.O. Scales Up Gross

Statement of Harry Warner, prexy, disclosed that company's film rentals increased both at home and abroad. Foreign rentals continued to grow despite a dip on returns from England in the past few months. Attendance in Warner houses since Aug. 31 have been about the same as last year, he added, but b.o. receipts have been larger because of upped scales.

Inventories on Aug. 31 had climbed $3,916,000 over the previous year, amounting to $47,104,000, Warner said. Jurisdictional battles on the Coast had substantially increased the cost of producing films, according to the WB prez. Commenting on the anti-trust suit, Warner said, "it will be impossible to determine just what effect will be had upon the business of your company" until appeals, if any, have been disposed of and experience is gained in actual operations.

H'wood's Heaven

Continued from page 7

thoroughly in dream sequences, interpolated bits of fantasy, and such, and now Heaven is being definitely written into the motivation of the scripts.

Heavenly Sparkplug

In Frank Capra's "It's a Wonderful Life," Heaven is depicted largely by implication and inference, but nevertheless plays a major part in sparking the plot of the story. The audience is treated to a pan shot of the universe, showing various galaxies, stars, planets, nebulae and such, while an unseen Heavenly narrator lets the folks in on what's happening in the firmament. One of the stars is presently brought into larger focus, begins to brighten and blink to the accompaniment of dialog that tags the spot as Heaven, plants a guardian angel named Clarence in the story and brings out the fact that he is being sent to Earth to tend to a tough job of guardian-angeling in aid of James Stewart.

Now, this scene brings up an interesting bit of coincidence and a reminder that the Hollywood boys aren't the only ones who have discovered Heaven. Released by Universal-International at virtually the same time as RKO put out the Capra biggie was "Stairway to Heaven," British production shipped over here by J. Arthur Rank. The picture shows both the stairway and Heaven itself—in fact a good portion of the picture and some its most important dramatic sequences take place in the courts of Heaven. Coincidence is in the fact that the picture opens with a pan shot of the universe, very much like the one in "It's a Wonderful Life," with a narrator doing a travelog for the customers. Analogous to the guardian angel of the Capra picture is a Heavenly "messenger" sent to Earth to bring back a soul who, through carelessness in the Heavenly record department, continued to live on earth after his number was up. In both pix the angel role is worked for comedy, in their second childhood.

Bertram Bloch

Writes About

"Hollywood Vs. Writers"

* * *

an editorial feature

of the

41st Anniversary Number

of

VARIETY

Out Next Week

Owl Shows Blink At Juve Delinquency In Ky., Schine Drops 'Em

Lexington, Ky., Dec. 30.

After hearing complaints of juvenile officials that midnight film shows were a factor in juvenile delinquency here, Lew Hensler, division manager, and Bob Cox, city manager of Schine interests, voluntarily announced that owl shows would be eliminated. Only exceptions mentioned were late shows New Years Eve, Hallowe'en and in the event of a premiere.

Six houses under Schine control were affected.

Police and other officials complained that teen-agers were running the streets as late as 2 a.m., and the theatres were singled out as a cause.

Lingo Pix

Continued from page 5

outfit, headed up by Noel Meadow and B. L. Garner, disclosed it was negotiating to revamp a large store in the Times Square area as an art house.

Prestige Pictures, the J. Arthur Rank distribution outfit handling American release of films considered too arty for the average American house, has added consistently to its number of outlets. Prestige recently lined up three more houses, including the Tele-News in Dallas, owned by the Interstate Circuit, a Paramount partner; the Ritz, a Memphis nabe, and the Vogue in Baltimore. Latter had previously run only the so-called sex pictures, such as "Bali," etc. Herbert Rosener circuit on the Coast has converted its six art houses into full-time foreign film outlets.

Chief factor in the booking bottleneck heretofore has been the utter disdain of most exhibs for any kind of foreign pix. Smalltowners, claiming that even British-produced films are poison at the boxoffice because of British accents, have refused in the past even to consider foreign-language pix. Distribs of the latter have no hopes they'll ever be able to break into the small towns but see a gradual mushrooming of the outlets available because of the steadily-growing interest in the films.

GI and Campus Influence

Fact that the large number of American importers shopping for French films has not created a sellers' market in France is attributed to the large backlog of French films available. At least 50 pictures made before and during the war have never played in the U. S. and the success of the five-year-old "Well-Digger's Daughter," currently in its third month in N. Y., is taken as evidence that many of these have good U. S. potentialities.

U. S. importers usually purchase rights for five years, guaranteeing the French producers a flat figure against a percentage of the net gross.

French Quotas

Continued from page 5

time and relaxed quota laws for American pix playing in France.

A secondary point in the discussions will be an increase in the number of French releases accepted in this country. French products have long campaigned for what they termed more equitable balance of product released between the two countries, claiming that U. S. distribs have had by far the best of it. Need for increased acceptance of French product has evidently been hypoed by the shortage of dollar exchange in that country.

Picture Grosses

Continued from page 10

SEATTLE

record at terrific $26,000. Last week, "Wake Up, Dream" (20th) and "Dangerous Millions" (20th) mild $8,200.

Liberty (J&VH) (1,650; 45-80) — "Jolson Story" (Col). Smash $16,000. Last week, "Kings Row" (WB) and "Hickok Rides" (WB) (2d wk), $6,000.

Music Box (H-E) (850; 45-80) — "Notorious" (RKO). (5th wk). Good $6,000. Last week, big $5,300.

Music Hall (H-E) (2,200; 45-80)—"Show-Off" (M-C) and "Phantom Thief" (Col). Great $15,000. Last week, "Meet John Doe" (FC) (reissue) and "War Wilderness" (Rep), only $5,000 in 8 days.

Orpheum (H-E) (2,600; 45-80) — "Never Say Goodbye" (WB) and "Secrets of Sorority Girl" (PRC) (2d wk). Mild $6,000 in 5 days after $7,500 opener.

Palomar (Sterling) (1,350; 45-80) —"Fabulous Suzanne" (Rep) and "Neath Canadian Skies" (Golden Gate) plus stageshow headed by Zorima. Nice $9,000. Last week, "Beauty and Bandit" (Mono) and "My Dog Shop" (FC) and vaude, fair $7,200.

Paramount (H-E) (3,039; 45-80)—"Nobody Lives Forever" (WB) and "Great To Be Young" (Col) (2d wk). Fair $8,000 after good $9,300 last week.

Roosevelt (Sterling) (800; 45-80) —"Wake Up, Dream" (20th) and "Dangerous Millions" (20th) (2d wk). Good $6,000. Last week, "Always Loved You" (Rep) (2d wk), $4,200.

'Life' Wonderful 24G, Mpls.; 'Time' Fast 18G

Minneapolis, Dec. 30.

Two newcomers, "It's a Wonderful Life" and "The Time, the Place and the Girl," are standout here, with former terrific at Orpheum. Bad weather has been a boxoffice handicap.

Estimates for This Week

Century (Par) (1,600; 50-70) — "Kings Row" (WB) (reissue). Moderate $6,500. Last week, "Wake Up, Dream" (20th), okay $5,000.

Gopher (Par) (1,000; 44)—"Bowery" (20th) (reissue). Good comeback at $4,000. Last week, "Pal Trigger" (Rep), $3,000.

Lyric (Par) (1,100; 50-70)—"Wake Up, Dream" (20th) (m.o.). Slow $4,500. Last week, "Two Years Before Mast" (Par) (4th wk), satisfactory $4,000 in six days, giving it smash $47,000 for loop run.

Orpheum (RKO) (2,800; 50-70)—"It's Wonderful Life" (RKO). Raves for this one and box-office is responding accordingly at gigantic $24,000. Last week, "Westerner" (FC) (reissue), big $12,000.

Radio City (Par) (4,000; 50-70) — "Time, Place, Girl" (WB). Fast $18,000 or near. Last week, "No Leave" (M-G) (2d wk), all right $9,000 in 6 days.

RKO-Pan (RKO) (1,600; 50-70)—"Return Monte Cristo" (Col). Fairly good $9,000. Last week, "Thrill of Brazil" (Col), $4,000.

State (Par) (2,300; 50-70)—"Man I Love" (WB). Only moderate at $11,000. Last week, "The Chase" (UA) (2d wk), fair $6,000.

Uptown (Par) (2,300; 50-70) — "Strange Woman" (UA). Fair $3,500. Last week, "Sister Kenny" (RKO), $2,500.

World (Par-Steffes) (350; 50-99)—"Strike Me Pink" (FC) (reissue). Profitable $2,000. Last week, "Young in Heart" (UA) split with "Christmas Carol" (M-G) (reissue), $1,500.

'LIFE' GREAT $18,500, BUFF.; 'GOODBYE' 15G

Buffalo, Dec. 30.

Biz is not too big this week, with "It's Wonderful Life" standout. New James Stewart picture is doing socko trade.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Shea) (3,500; 4,070) — "Never Say Goodbye" (WB) and "Wife Wanted" (WB). Neat $15,000. Last week, "The Verdict" (WB) and "Dangerous Millions" (20th), big $20,000.

Great Lakes (Shea) (3,000; 40-70) —"Rage in Heaven" (M-G) (reissue). Trim $15,500 or over. Last week, "No Leave" (M-G) (2d wk), $9,000.

Hipp (Shea) (2,100; 40-70)—"Angel on Shoulder" (UA) and "Susie Steps Out" (UA). Nice $9,500. Last week, "Strange Woman" (UA) and "Dangerous Business" (Par) (m.o.), $8,000.

Teck (Shea) (1,400; 40-70)—"Notorious Gentleman" (U) and "Below Deadline" (Mono). Okay $3,500. Last week, "These Our Children" (Mono) and "Where Are Your Children?" (Mono), $2,500.

Lafayette (Basil) (3,300; 40-70)—"White Tie and Tails" (U) and "Dark Horse" (U). Good $11,000 or near. Last week, "So Dark Night" (U) and "Blondie Knows Best" (Col), $5,500.

20th Century (20th Cent) (3,000; 40-70) — "It's Wonderful Life" (RKO). Great $18,500. Last week, "Housekeeper's Daughter" (UA) and "One Million B.C." (UA) (reissues), $7,000.

'Skies' Tall 17G, Mont'l

Montreal, Dec. 30.

New stuff at all main stem spots. "Big Sleep" at Capitol and "Blue Skies" at Loew's look standout despite cold wave.

Estimates for This Week

Capitol (CT) (2,700; 35-63)—"Big Sleep" (WB). Strong $14,000 or near. Last week, "Three Wise Fools" (M-G), fairish $11,700.

Imperial (CT) (1,850; 30-50)—"White Tie and Tails" (U) and "Cuban Pete" (U). Nice $5,500. Last week, "Death Valley" (Indie) and "Blonde for Day" (Col), $4,500.

Loew's (CT) (2,800; 35-67)—"Blue Skies" (Par). Sock $17,000 or over. Last week, "Always Loved You" (Rep) (2d wk), $12,000.

Palace (CT) (2,300; 35-63)—"Margie" (20th). Big $13,000 or close. Last week, "Waltz Time" (Indie), $10,500.

Princess (CT) (2,300; 35-53)—"Angel on Shoulder" (UA) and "Vacation in Reno" (RKO). Okay $7,500 or better. Last week, "Black Angel" (U) and "Slightly Scandalous" (U), same.

UA—Video

Continued from page 3

trol of the film for video or the profits that might accrue.

United Artists, principal outlet for indie pix, has devised a form of compromise clause covering television in its contracts. Other companies with fewer indies usually more or less follow the UA contract form, so it is expected that the clause will eventually become the pattern for the industry—at least until video becomes a lot more important from a financial and picture exploitation standpoint and a more specific clause is devised to cover the change in the situation.

Companies are principally fearful, of course, of dissipation of theatrical value of a film via widespread television showing and that is naturally prohibited during general release unless there is mutual agreement between the parties. UA retains the right, however, to use a picture or part of a picture on video for publicity and exploitation purposes.

Compromise comes in sale of video rights. Producer retains the privilege of peddling the rights, but before accepting any bid, he must allow UA to match it. If the company chooses not to exercise this option, producer is free to sell prior to expiration of the five-year period from date of release, for which UA is assigned exclusive theatrical distribution.

Indie Financing

Continued from page 4

derived on the film by the distrib. Guaranty Trust, of New York, as long ago as six or eight months almost completely bowed out after being an important factor in production financing for years. Other banks have reduced the percentage of production cost they'll put up and otherwise gotten more conservative.

Despite the backwatering on these financial fronts, the obtaining of backing for production still remains fairly easy for the picturemaker with a good setup; that is, an acceptable story, some name players, a good director and the other ingredients that go into a film.

One of the factors most disturbing to Hersh is the length of time between making his loan and getting his coin back. He fears changes not only in the b.o. picture, but in public taste in the interim. Ideal's experience, he said, was that six to nine months was taken up from the time the loan was made until the script was ready, cast assembled, studio space set and other financing obtained. Another four months was chewed up in photography, between a 60 to 90-day shooting sked and the weekends, holidays and delays involved. Then 90 days was required for cutting, editing and dubbing and two to three months more was needed by the distributing company for advertising-publicity campaign and setting theatre dates. After that, the bank starts getting its coin, with the payoff—if the pic did okay—taking four to six months. Not until then does the secondary finance outfit begin to get return on the money it put up some two years before.

The Best Of All Greetings!

A HAPPY NEW YEAR

from

A. J. BALABAN

Founder, Balaban & Katz Theaters

Celebrating His 40th Happy New Year

In Show Business!

A. J. BALABAN EXECUTIVE MANAGING DIRECTOR

ROXY THEATER

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

10 Nat'l Theatres Dept. Heads Given 7-Year Pacts; Other Xchange News

Los Angeles.

Charles P. Skouras, National Theatres prexy, handed seven-year contracts to 10 department heads, being the first time the company has inked its execs to long pacts.

Contractees, who have been with Skouras since 1932, are George Bowser, general manager of Fox West Coast; Richard Spier, FWC Northern California division manager; Cullen Espy, FWC film buyer; W. H. Lollier, real estate chief; M. A. Lundgron, head of FWC film statistics; George Topper, FWC treasurer; O. A. Collins, FWC controller; Andrew J. Krappman, head of merchandising for NT; William Lyris, head of NT's candy and popcorn department, and R. H. McCullough, director of television for NT.

San Antonio Gets New House

San Antonio.

Cornerstone to a new $1,000,000 international trade building to be known as the "Casa de Mexico" was laid here recently. It will house an auditorium and offices for Mexican government officials. Part of the building will be a new Mexican theatre to be called the Alameda.

Brooks to D. C. Par Sales

Pittsburgh.

Bill Brooks, for long time in charge of Paramount booking department here, goes to company's Washington branch in the sales organization. Bill Kloos, back after serving in the Army, replaces Brooks.

New 1,200-seat theatre, in Erie, Pa., is planned by Herman Lorence, veteran exhibitor who now owns 18th Street house there.

Bob Finkel, son of Bill Finkel, local exhib, resigned at Mode-Art Pictures and returns to coast for another crack at pictures. He was writer and assistant director for indies before going into service four years ago.

Lee Byers, formerly manager at Ritz, Clarksburg, W. Va., joined staff of Dr. and Mrs. C. P. Church in Mannington, W. Va. Churches are reopening the Burt, which was closed several years.

St. Loo May Vote on Daylight Time

St. Louis.

Special committee of picture theatre owners here will circulate petitions for a city-wide vote on whether daylight savings time shall continue in St. Louis. Fred Wehrenberg, national head of the MPTOA, and head of the Wehrenberg-Kaiman circuit, and James Arthur, Fanchon & Marco Service Corp. prexy, are co-chairmen of this committee.

They pointed out that when daylight savings ordinance was in effect last summer it worked to a real disadvantage to exhibs, the theatre owners don't want to take a position against a majority of the city's residents. Proposed election would give the people of St. Louis the first chance to express their ideas on the subject. Only one public hearing was held when the bill was introduced last spring. Measure then was passed. It covers from June until late in September.

Since the return from wartime savings time, there has been much agitation in favor of abolishing daylight savings time.

McCarthy to Memphis for WB

Memphis.

Jim McCarthy, Warner manager in Madison, Wis., transferred to Memphis to take over management of Warner theatre, company's Main Street showwindow here. Succeeds Jim Barnes, who goes to Oklahoma City for same circuit.

Joe Simon, resident manager at the local Warner, resigned to become city manager for Flexer theatres.

New K. C., Kans., House

Kansas City.

The Avenue, 853-seater, opened Christmas day in Kansas City, Kans., is reputedly the first entirely new theatre built in that city for the last 15 years. Avenue will be a subsequent run house.

W. E. Fulton is owner of the house. He also runs the Vogue in K. C., Mo., and State on the Kansas side. H. E. Walters, g. m. for Fulton, moves over from the Vogue to manage the Avenue, and Leo Stolzer goes to the Vogue from the State. John Mincey steps up from assistant manager's spot to handle the State.

Dipson to Athens

Buffalo.

Nikitas D. Dipson, president of Dipson theatres, Constellationing to Athens to join his wife and daughter, who are visiting Mrs. Dipson's mother.

Interstate Shakes Up Mgrs.

Houston.

Staff changes among Interstate Theatre skippers include naming of Lionel Hannington to manage the new Santa Rosa. Replacing Hannington at the Blue Bonnet is John Ellis, former head of the University. Emory Borne is new head of the Alabama, coming here from the Yale where he was assistant manager.

New York Theatres

The Razor's Edge
20th Century-Fox
and Great Stage Revue!
ROXY 7th Ave. & 50th St.

Dennis MORGAN
Jack CARSON
Janis Paige • Martha Vickers
In Warner Bros. Hit
"The Time, the Place and the Girl"
In Technicolor
In Person
Vaughn MONROE
AND HIS ORCHESTRA
Plus
A BIG STAGE REVUE
Broadway at 47th Street STRAND

"Great as drama, lively and lovely as comedy"—SUN
"The BEST Years of Our Lives"
Continuous Performances ASTOR B'WAY and 45th ST.

JOAN CRAWFORD • JOHN GARFIELD
In the New Warner Achievement
"HUMORESQUE"
with
OSCAR LEVANT
J. CARROL NASH
Directed by Jean Negulesco
Produced by Jerry Wald
Broadway at 51st Street HOLLYWOOD

RKO PALACE B'WAY AND 47 ST
WALT DISNEY'S
SONG OF THE SOUTH
in Technicolor

RADIO CITY MUSIC HALL
Rockefeller Center
"TILL THE CLOUDS ROLL BY"
JUDY GARLAND • VAN JOHNSON
JUNE ALLYSON • ROBERT WALKER and MANY OTHER STARS
In Technicolor - An M-G-M Picture
SPECTACULAR STAGE PRESENTATION

CAPITOL B'way at 51st
Claudette COLBERT
Walter PIDGEON
June ALLYSON
in M-G-M's
The Secret Heart
IN PERSON
TOMMY DORSEY
HIS AUGMENTED ORCH. of 40
AND OTHERS!

LOEW'S STATE
ON SCREEN
Thurs., Jan. 2
1st N. Y. Showing!
'The Return of Monte Cristo'
Louis HAYWARD
Barbara BRITTON
A Columbia Picture
IN PERSON
Paul Small presents
SHOWTIME OF 1947
Starring THE Slate Bros.
Plus All-Star Cast

Par's Final 5 for '46

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Paramount is winding up the year with five pictures in production, including the recent starter, "Road to Rio," with Norman Z. McLeod directing and Bing Crosby and Bob Hope in the top roles.

Others in work are "Variety Girl," directed by George Marshall; "I Walk Alone," by Byron Haskin, and "Blaze of Noon," by John Farrow.

Hy Gardner
does a tea-leaf preview on 'Variety' 10 Anniversaries from Today"
* * *
an editorial feature in the forthcoming
41st Anniversary Number
of
VARIETY
Out Next Week

Heineman-NT

Continued from page 5

plans to sell top British pix at terms equivalent to those obtained by A bracketed Yank films, Heineman said. Bookings are slower than ordinarily followed by American distribs in playing U. S. films because there still is some exhib resistance to British films, Heineman conceded. Strong showing of "Stairway" in U's recently acquired Park Ave. theatre, N. Y., following general rave notices will batter down resistance further, Heineman believes.

"Stairway" is playing to top business on its $1.80-$2.40 reserved seat policy at the Park Ave. Houses added a third ticket agent because of rush for ticket reservations with patrons already asking for February seats. U has only six prints of the Technicolor pic in the U. S. and has no idea of when more will be available. Consequently, limited road-show policy in U. S. may be followed until print pinch eases.

Sam Goldwyn

Continued from page 5

is being shown this week-end to the Prime Minister privately.

On question of advertising cost of pictures, he mentioned that he is spending $1,000,000 in America alone on the exploitation of "Years."

Goldwyn Hosts Attlees

Prime Minister and Mrs. Attlee were guests of Samuel Goldwyn at a screening of his "The Best Years of Our Lives" here prior to the producer's departure for New York last week aboard the Queen Elizabeth. Foreign Minister Molotov of Russia saw the film for the second time on the eastbound trip of the Elizabeth.

Goldwyn arrives in New York New Year's Day. He was guest of honor of the British Film Critics Circle at a luncheon a few days before he left.

Korda's Aide

Continued from page 5

by Korda, but he'll also take a looksee at other studios, he said. He disclosed that Korda is spending more than $4,000,000 on the new Shepperton studio, which will have seven sound stages, new shops, workmen's canteens, etc. Because of the shortage of building materials, however, several of the stages will not be ready for another 9-12 months.

British are currently experiencing severe difficulties in production, according to Stapleton, because the "whole situation of equipment is abominable." Lumber is still severely rationed so that it's difficult to build sets and the shortage of clothing makes it tough to get new costumes. Labor situation in England is better than in the U. S. because British producers have not been stymied by strikes, but relations between capital and labor are "difficult," Stapleton said. He attributed this mostly to postwar nervousness.

Stapleton declared that there's not the slightest chance now of the British government attempting to nationalize the film industry. Recent recommendation by a Socialist committee in Parliament for the government to take over 500 British theatres to play English product only is unfeasible, he said, because there aren't enough British pix being produced today to keep the theatres operating 52 weeks a year.

Hold On to Your Heads, Folks

Continued from page 1

the end of March. The present idea is for a cut in income taxes. The original plan of 20% across the board stands a good chance of being scrapped in favor of something which will result in an average 20% cut. In other words, small earners will wind up with reductions of more than 20% and big earners will get less. The feeling is now that there should be no attempt to consider reduction in the wartime excise rates until the "quickie" bill is out of the way and Congress can consider a more comprehensive revision of the tax structure.

There is talk about getting such a bill through the latter part of this year to affect 1948. However, it is now hoped to recess Congress about the latter part of July until the beginning of 1948. This is particularly bad news for the niteries where biz is starting to slide off sharply and for theatres where the drop is a little more gradual but is still noticeable. Present indications are that showbiz people had better start working out early and often on their friends on Capitol Hill to emphasize the need of a return to prewar tax rates for admissions.

3. Petrillo: Some time in 1947 the Supreme Court is expected to rule on the so-called anti-Petrillo bill which was found unconstitutional by a trial judge in Chicago. Already a number of Congressmen are readying bills to serve as substitutes in case the High Court agrees with the district court. Petrillo's name is definitely poison to some members of Congress and they are willing to keep trying until they find a check-rein for him, no matter how long it takes. One of those ready with a new bill is Rep. Clarence J. Lea (D., Calif.), author of the present act.

4. FCC A resolution to investigate FCC is expected early in the session, probably by Rep. Richard Wigglesworth (R., Mass.) If a special committee is appointed, he would be the logical chairman. However, under the Congressional streamline bill, the idea is to have regular standing committees do most of the investigating and eliminate the dozens of special committees which are running loose all over the map.

The probable head of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee will be Charles A. Wolverton (R., N. J.) who, incidentally, represents Camden county, seat of the RCA-Victor factory. Wolverton is an extremely liberal man but the nature of any investigation of FCC under him would depend upon the subcommittee he would select to make it. That might depend upon the Republican leadership of the House which has expressed itself as strongly anti-Blue Book.

5. Hollywood. Why should the 80th Congress be different from all other Congresses? In some guise or for some excuse, they practically all investigate Hollywood or try to beat its brains out. Rep. John E. Rankin (D., Miss.) will no longer be the guiding spirit of the House Un-American Activities Committee and Rep. J. Parnell Thomas (R., N. J.), the new chairman, is not afraid to oppose Rankin's ideas.

However, that does not mean that the committee will not decide to look into Hollywood again. In addition, there are Republicans convinced that the motion picture industry has been so strongly pro-New Deal that it makes good sense to put the fear of God and the U. S. Congress into it. It makes good sense for Hollywood to expect the worst.

6. Motion Picture Export: The recent hearing of the House Post-War Economic Policy sub-committee on the film industry made clear that sound members of Congress are finally aroused to the importance of helping the State Dept. make markets for pictures overseas. Legislation along these lines may be introduced although industry spokesmen made clear at the hearings that they preferred to take their chances in a free market without special tariff assistance or the like.

However, Rep. Eugene Worley (D., Tex.), who chairmanned the hearing, has also indicated that he believes some kind of legislation is necessary to keep Hollywood from exporting pictures which give a cockeyed impression of what Americans are like. That such a bill could become law is exceedingly unlikely, but not impossible.

7. Anti-Trust: Sen. William Langer (R., N. D.) made a lot of noise in the 79th Congress threatening bills for theatre divorcement, anti-block booking, etc. He is now re-elected, so that the issue will have no political importance for him in the 80th Congress. Even if he should introduce such bills, however, they would not get anywhere. This Congress appears unlikely to do anything which could be construed as a positive move against even a segment of business, though it might be profitable to another segment. The only anti-trust activity on the horizon: the crop of suits in the Justice Dept. And when they are run their course, there will hardly be any new ones.

Johnston Chides

Continued from page 3

Columbia's forthcoming "Assigned to Treasury," which was made with full cooperation of the Treasury Department's Narcotics Bureau. If after viewing the picture, the Legion finds it objectionable, is Johnston's stand, it will be perfectly within its rights in placing it in the "C" (condemned) classification. MPA prexy is certain, however, that the pic will be entirely satisfactory to even the strongest proponents of a world narcotics ban.

2. The screen has as much right as the press, Johnston spokesman said, to "speak out against evil." Any interpretation of the constitutional and moral guarantee in America of freedom of expression which denies to films what it permits the press is "a damnable and tortured interpretation," according to the Johnston spokesman. The very papers which are campaigning against the Code's liberalization are taking to themselves the right of freedom of expression which they deny to motion pictures, he declared.

Fight against the Code change, which broke into the open at a meeting of bishops in Washington a few weeks ago, was picked up by the Washington Post and has been carried on via the standard newspaper campaign routine of getting all sorts of public figures, many of them with dubious knowledge of the subject, to speak out against "the evil" of films on dope. Campaign centers around the amendment made by the MPA last September from the provision: "Illegal drug traffic must never be presented," to:

"The illegal drug traffic must not be portrayed in such a way as to stimulate curiosity concerning the use of, or traffic in, such drugs; nor shall scenes be approved which show the use of illegal drugs, or their effects, in detail."

Meantime Col is going ahead with plans to release "Assigned to Treasury," which stars Dick Powell, in mid-February. It is currently conducting a contest among employees for a new title, with a $50 prize being offered. Material in the film has been taken directly from Narcotics Bureau files, permission having been granted writer Jay Richard Kennedy to use the files by former Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr.

THERE'S ONLY ONE
Lord Tarleton
MIAMI BEACH
OCEAN FRONT • 40th to 41st Sts.
Reservations Invited • Walter Jacobs

Mr. Exhibitor: Investigate Filmack's NEW Prevue Trailer Service before signing any trailer contracts. Write, wire or phone Filmack 1327 S. Wabash, Chicago 5, Ill. and receive full details.

ATT'N CLIENTS: SPACE FOR SALE

Allen Sees Red Again

The Fred Allen-NBC censorship wrangle flared up anew Sunday (29) when, less than an hour before broadcast time, the network's "continuity acceptance" boys tossed back at Allen some bluepencilled lines on the "Titus Moody" alley routine. The comedian, it's reported, was so burned over the latest of the censorship incidents that he was ready to put on his hat and walk. Allen got off a crack on the air when he got to the Moody sequence concerning the treatment given the script, but it was mild-tempered compared to what he wanted to say.

Allen was particularly incensed because the deleted lines had been given a previous okay. The script had been in NBC's hands since Friday afternoon; the last of the bluepencilled lines was the brainstorm, according to J. Walter Thompson execs, "of the night guy in charge of censorship" and was thrown back at Allen 7:45 Sunday evening, just as he got back from dinner.

The Allen burn over NBC censoring of his scripts goes way back and only recently he reportedly threatened to haul his Alley over to CBS.

Projected Upping of NAB Dues Irks Stations; Feel Expense Too Big Now

A number of stations around the country are doing some squawking-in-advance over the projected move of the NAB board of directors at its upcoming San Francisco meeting on Jan. 5-6-7 to revise its dues schedule to take care of its hiked budget for 1947. The NAB needs more coin because of its expanding in almost all phases of activity, including programming, staff additions in the various departments, regional commitments, etc.

Just how much additional coin it will entail is problematical. It's expected that the board may recommend a budget hike of from 15 to 25%. And lots of stations will oppose the increase in dues (which are assessed on the volume of station business) because they say their operating costs have gone up and because of overall business uncertainty in '47. But chiefly it's the feeling that, while by large they concede Justin Miller as prexy of the NAB is making a distinct contribution to industry improvement, the NAB is attempting too many things at once and is over-extending itself to the degree that it's becoming too expensive an operation.

Under the NAB by-laws, network dues are not to exceed 10% of the total kitty, the feeling being that the webs should not make too large a contribution in order to offset criticism that the NAB is too strongly dominated by network influence. However, under the revised dues schedule, the webs may be called on paying closer to 12% of the kitty.

The feeling that the networks enjoy too dominant a position within NAB ranks may also lead to action at the Frisco meeting excluding network representation from board membership. Currently Frank Stanton of CBS and Frank Russell of NBC sit on the board. The web reps are reportedly in favor of stepping down and making their contribution from the sidelines on the grounds that basically the NAB is more vitally concerned with station matters.

The general impression is that ABC will come into the NAB ranks during 1947, just as Mutual did in '46, and that ABC execs would, as in the case of MBS prexy Ed Kobak, prefer to "sit it out" as far as board representation was concerned.

Who's 'Ignorant' Now?

Further evidence of agency thinking that "there's nothing wrong with a show that a rating can't cure" is revealed in the Milton Biow weekend handsprings when "It Pays To Be Ignorant" spiraled up to 12.3, giving it the top cross-the-board Hooperating for the Friday night at 10 slot.

Only a few weeks back the Biow agency and sponsor Philip Morris were whetting their chops in eager anticipation of a replacement show.

CBS in Year-End Shifting Throes

Year-end finds CBS programming dept. back at its old auditioning stand, prepping a number of shows for submission to agencies as potential commercials or as replacements for current sustainers. For one, "Cinderella, Inc." is going off the afternoon sustaining schedule this Friday (3) and the network must decide this week, which of several newly auditioned shows gets the nod for a preem next Monday.

At the moment chief emphasis is being put on daytime programming in a bid to close some of the non-commercial gaps. "Cinderella," the half-hour cross-the-board show which invited people from all parts of the country to New York for a

(Continued on page 26)

Guedel Cool to CBS Co-op Idea on His 'House Party'; Prefers Single Sponsor

CBS, anxious to retain the John Guedel "House Party" afternoon package which General Electric is relinquishing Jan. 10, has proposed to Guedel that it stay on the network on a co-op basis. During the past year or so when GE was only picking up the tab three days a week, it was being sold on a co-op basis the other two days and CBS says that Guedel was picking up a nice piece of change by the arrangements. Hence the feeling by the network that it'll get wide co-op acceptance.

But from all indications Guedel is anxious to wrap up a single sponsorship deal. He's holding off on any commitment to CBS while the show goes a-peddling.

PLENTY SLOTS AVAILABLE

A year-end check of the four major networks reveals, contrary to the belief that "we've nothing left to sell," plenty of wide open spaces on the daytime and nighttime schedules. True, NBC is sold solid after dark. No other network, however, can make that statement. ABC's daytime schedule is the envy of the three other networks. But its nighttime roster, like Mutual's, is something else again. CBS has more daytime slots for sale than it would like to talk about. And that Tuesday night 9:30 to 10:30 (opposite Fibber & Hope) gap goes way back.

Here's a breakdown of network time that can be had for the asking (finding a program for the slots is another story):

NBC: Sunday afternoon 4:30 to 5 open. So is 5 to 6, but it's fr zen for anyone who will buy the NBC Symphony. Nighttime is sold out. Daytime vacancies include the 10 to 10:30 slots, 11 to 11:30 (Fred Waring) three days a week, and cross-the-board 12 to 2 (station time).

CBS: Sunday afternoon 2 to 2:30 is open. The 2:30 to 3 slot goes commercial soon when Hires moves over from ABC. Saturday night 7 to 7:15 is open, as is the Tuesday night 9:30 to 11 strips and Monday night 10:30 to 11 (eastern network). Daytime vacancies include 10 to 10:30, 11 to 11:30; 3 to 4 (station time) in the afternoon. The 4 to 4:25 period also opens up when General Electric "House Party" exits Jan. 10. The 4:30 to 5 slot is open two days a week. The 5 to 5:30 period is a house-must ("School of the Air") but 5:30 to 6 is also open.

ABC: Sunday afternoon from 2 to 3 is open. So is 4 to 5. The 6 to 6:30

(Continued on page 29)

NBC Peddling Waring Three Days a Week

The Fred Waring morning show on NBC is back on a two-days-a-week sponsorship basis, with the web carrying the half-hour musical on a sustaining basis the remaining three days.

Florida Citrus Assn., which picked up the tab Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, has dropped out of the sponsorship picture (strictly a seasonal splurge), while American Meat Institute has renewed for another cycle on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

'Pirating' of Shows Irks ABC, MBS; Feel Other Webs Should Join in Job Of Finding New Clients for Industry

Garry Moore
reveals
"My Secret Life With the Great Nose-Piece"
* * *
in the
41st Anniversary Number
of
VARIETY
Next Week

For some time now there's been a recognition on the part of both ABC and Mutual networks that, the minute good time starts opening up on NBC and CBS, a mere lifting of the finger on the part of the latter webs will invite a wholesale switchover of clients to the two stronger networks. ABC and Mutual are aware that it's not a pretty picture to contemplate, but due to the generally favorable business conditions and the NBC-CBS nighttime SRO it still remains in the threat stage.

Nevertheless, there's been sufficient switchover activity of late to cause some uneasiness, particularly around ABC headquarters in New York, where the feeling of the web brass has been reflected in year-end pep talks to the sales staff. The ABC boys resent the fact that a mere hint from NBC that Hudnut to cancel out on its ABC show to buy NBC's "Grand Marquee" program; that for more than a year ABC built up the Hires "Sunday Party" show only to have CBS snare it for a Sunday afternoon spotting. It remembers, too, how only recently Wildroot gave "Sam Spade" the ABC-to-CBS treatment and Alka-Seltzer did an ABC-to-NBC with "Quiz Kids."

ABC acknowledges that, as in love and war, all's fair in big business, but they feel they're justified in taking the position, as translated to the sales boys, that "the well-fed nets are feeding off us. And they'll continue to feed off us. We've got to be twice as good in the sales department as they are. We're the ones who must take the initiative in inviting new clients into the industry, or recapturing ex-clients, as witness the John Hancock Insurance and Reichhold symphony deals and the new Goodyear contract. But let time open up on NBC or CBS, and where are we? Except to start over again and woo new clients."

'Ba-a-d Boy' Barry Talks Self Into Something Good

After 23 months on the air over WOR, N. Y., during which time he's made a mortal enemy of a half dozen of New York's most potent columnists, disk jock Barry Gray has talked himself out of his all-night spot but into a position in which the CBS network is competing against WOR for his services. Each is offering him two spots, and in each time he would have far greater listening potentials than he had on the WOR all-night stint where he adlibbed himself into trouble.

Columnists whom Gray has riled, with some claiming he libeled them, include Leonard Lyons, Dorothy Kilgallen, Lee Mortimer, Dantor Walker and Ed Sullivan. It was a series of cracks he took on the air in the last couple of weeks, without naming anyone but describing the person by his manner of dress, that culminated in Gray's and WOR's series of moves last week.

Mortimer claimed he had been libeled and demanded a retraction on threat of slander suit. Gray wouldn't retract. Finally, Gray decided to take his annual vacation, and hired

(Continued on page 26)

IT'S 'MURDER' FOR WINE GROWERS ON ABC IN JAN.

ABC's Saturday night 9:30 to 10 period, being vacated by "Sherlock Holmes," which moves to Monday nights, has been sold by the network to the Wine Growers Guild for a new mystery show tabbed "Murder and Mr. Malone." Show is authored by Craig Rice.

"Murder" moves in on Jan. 11.

A Swig of Chicago Beer— And You Hear Everything

Chicago, Dec. 30.

Unique package deal sold by WIND last week calls for a solid three-hour show for local beer account on Sunday afternoons. Starting at 2:30 p.m. the segment is devoted to just about everything in the radio book.

Show opens with a half-hour whodunit, "Haunting Hour," followed by Bert Wilson, local sportscaster, reporting Chicago Stags pro basketball games from the Chicago Stadium. Sport event will change with the seasons. After the sports comes a shot of dance music followed up by another half-hour of mystery, "The Avenger."

Schwimmer & Scott is the agency.

An Exec in Every Stocking

CBS found itself this Christmas with so many new CBS and CRC executives all eligible for the annual "20th floor cocktail party" that the shindig had to be moved across the street into Studio 24. Studio was transformed with rugs and furniture into a "drawing room" for the occasion.

As previously, Mrs. Frances Wilder and Helen Sioussat represented the feminine sex among CBS execs.

41st Anniversary Number
OF
VARIETY
OUT NEXT WEEK
JANUARY 8

Mack Tells FCC Off in WCAM Case, Takes Tough Stand but Offers Deal

Washington, Dec. 30.

The long wrangle over the WCAM-Mack Radio Sales Corp. deal was aired again before FCC last Friday (27) with the FCC being told that it was a private arrangement between Mack and the City of Camden, N. . — and none of the commission's business.

The "nuts to you" stand was presented to the FCC by Paul M. Segal, counsel for Mack Corp., at a hearing over renewal of license of the station owned by the city. FCC has been threatening to put WCAM out of business because of the contract under which WCAM has sold Mack the bulk of its weekly broadcasting time for Mack to chop up and resell as it pleases. WCAM has no control over the time, according to FCC findings.

In addition to telling FCC to mind its own business, Segal suggested that his client, Aaron Heine, owner of Mack Radio, would be glad to make a deal. He would cancel his contract if FCC would license him to build and operate a 1,000-watt station of his own in Camden. Previously FCC had nixed Heine's application.

John R. DiMona, City Solicitor of Camden, explained that WCAM was trying its best to get out from under the 10-year contract signed in 1938. He said he had filed suit in the U. S. district court asking that the contract be voided on the ground that FCC would withdraw the station's license otherwise.

Friday's hearing was an appeal from proposed decisions under which FCC would put WCAM off the air pending termination of its contract with Mack Sales and also approving a new station, WKDN, for the Camden area. It would be owned by Ranulf Compton, of Madison, Conn.

Also applying for the channel was WHAT, Philadelphia, which now shares a channel with WTEL in Philly. William A. Koplovitz, counsel for WHAT, claimed that William A. Banks, head of WHAT, and lifelong resident of Philadelphia, could better serve the area than a man from Connecticut. However, Arthur H. Schroeder, representing Compton, said his client would serve Camden full-time while WHAT would devote only one hour daily of programming to that city.

A decision is expected in a month or two.

CBS Scripters Set for 'School'

Under a new arrangement at CBS headquarters in New York the Program Writing Division has taken over the full job of providing scripts for the "American School of the Air" series, which Education Division and Leon Levine, as producer, operate.

This reverses previous policy of freelancing many of the scripts although Frank Ernest Hill in the Education Division always provided some writing. Current writer assignments on "Nations" School series are as follows:

Jan. 6—Russia—William K. Clarke.
Jan. 13—Italy—Elwood Hoffman.
Jan. 20—Cuba—Draper Lewis.
Jan. 27—Korea—Sylvia Berger.
Feb. 3—Turkey—James Hart.
Feb. 17—Poland—Vincent McConnor.
Feb. 24—Argentine—Elwood Hoffman.
Mar. 17—Ireland—Draper Lewis.
Mar. 24—Liberia—James Hart.

Irna Phillips Settles 'Guiding Light' Suit

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Irna Phillips has made a settlement for an undisclosed amount of the legal action taken against her and Carl Wester for an accounting of "The Guiding Light." Payoff was made to Emmons Carlson of NBC in Chicago, who claimed a half interest in the serial and was upheld in court. Washup came as attorney for Carlson was preparing to file an accounting action.

Matinee opera was taken off the air by General Mills pending outcome of legal skirmish but no decision has been reached on resuming with it.

Met Life's CBS Show

Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. has bought a 15-minute strip on CBS, Mon.-Fri., 6-6:15 p.m. for a news show, starting Feb. 17. Young & Rubicam is the agency.

So far, only 41 stations have been cleared in the deal, and no personality has been set for it.

Sponsors Can Now Build Own Hookup

Principal feature of the new rate card, according to Fred Thrower, veepee in charge of sales for the net, is in tying discounts to dollar volume instead of to the number of stations. Until now, the discount increased when an advertiser bought more of the outlets. Now, the total amount spent for time will determine the amount of discount.

By changing this structure, said Thrower, and allowing the advertiser to pick his own stations—after purchasing time on the basic net—the man who pays the money can decide to use a station in town A in Pennsylvania, and in town B in Kansas, if he is interested in those specific markets.

The more stations the advertiser buys, the higher discount, regardless of the location of those stations. He can virtually make up his own net, after he has contracted for the basic. The only group, aside from the basic, where he cannot get stations to add to his net at will is the Mountain-Pacific group of ABC outlets.

The new structure, said Thrower, "stabilizes discount requirements on a dollar basis; gives the sponsor greater freedom in the selection of his stations; and provides higher discounts for smaller networks, to encourage the potential national advertiser to use network radio more easily."

Network hookups are entering a new stage of crazy-quilt criss-crossing as a result of a move effective this week on the ABC web which may soon be followed by the other major nets.

ABC is putting its new rate card into effect tomorrow (Wednesday). And part of its new discount scheme is giving coast-to-coast sponsors a virtual premium for making things tough for the engineers in charge of the hookups. Within certain limitations in regard to the basic network and the Mountain-Pacific area, sponsors will now be able to build their own networks. A sponsor will be able to use only 170 out of ABC's total of 235 stations, cutting off 65 of the net's stations and still come out with a top discount of 45% for daytime and 42½% for nighttime programming.

60,850,000 Radio Sets In U.S. for 1946 Marks New All-Time Record

Washington, Dec. 30.

Ownership of radio sets has hit an all-time high, according to a survey by the NAB research department. The study, to be distributed to NAB members in the near future, estimates a set ownership of 60,850,000 as of the close of this year, a jump of 3,000,000 over the total for 1945.

NAB figures that approximately 34,800,000 of the nation's 38,120,000 families own radio receivers. Remainder of sets in relation are either extra units in the homes, radios in business firms, in institutions, hotels, etc., for a total of 19,050,000 plus another 7,000,000 installed in automobiles.

NAB figured broadcast advertising at close to $433,000,000 for 1946, a jump of $21,452,000 over 1945, which was a sock year. Billings are broken down as follows; national networks, $191,000,000; Regional webs, $9,000,000; national spot, $117,000,000, and local retail, $116,000,000.

Mutual Scorecard: 384

Mutual's march toward its goal of 400 stations brought 19 more outlets to the web in December, latest joining, effective May 1, being WBBC, a 1,000-watter, for a total of 384.

SILVER-TONGUED ANNOUNCER
LEE JONES
National intercollegiate debate champion; wears a Phi Beta Kappa key; has been silver-tonguing commercials over KLZ for 3 years.
KLZ, DENVER.

WNBC Ties In With WPAT To Salute Paterson In 'Affiliate' Switcheroo

For at least one show on Jan. 24, WPAT, Paterson (N. J.) indie, will become an NBC outlet, while WNBC, the net's New York flagship, is likely to become a temporary "affiliate" of WPAT for about 30 minutes that day.

Switcheroo is on the schedule in connection with WNBC's exploitation of its listening area, during which it stages a "Salute" to a different city in its region every couple of weeks.

As part of its plan, the NBC station is tying in with newspapers, civic organizations, etc., in the various communities which it salutes. When it came to planning "Salute to Paterson," station manager Jim Gaines and field exploitation director Murry Harris invited WPAT's cooperation on the theory that the station, sole local radio outlet, is as much a part of the local scene as any other major enterprise.

Sidney J. Flamm, veepee-general manager of WPAT, and Dave Golden, station's publicity director, worked out the plans with Gaines, Harris and WNBC's flack chief Bob Davis.

In keeping with its routine on all "Salutes," WNBC will program its entire daytime schedule, from 6 a.m. to 6:40 p.m., to tieins with Paterson. During the day, there will be one show, originating at WNBC, which will be called "Salute to WPAT." The local station will carry the show. Plans are under way also for a possible origination from WPAT to be aired by WNBC.

"Salute" will close with WNBC's "Serenade to America" show, 6:15-6:40 p.m.

B'WAY DOESN'T TALK SO WOR SHOW MAY EXIT

"Broadway Talks Back," the Mutual show which has been on the air Monday nights, 10-10:30 on WOR, N. Y., and a half hour later on the net, may go off in another three weeks.

The show has not attracted as much attention as had been hoped for it. Chief reason is said to be that, except on rare occasions, producers of Broadway legiters pull their punches and don't really "talk back" to the critics. Often, too, the crix who'd been toughest on certain shows become sweet as sugar when they go on the air, willing to forget all and patting on the back the same guys they'd previously rapped in print. Result is that the show had too often been a love feast, when fireworks were expected.

Show is going to be given another whirl for a few weeks. But unless it picks up, WOR, which initiated the project, is willing to call the whole thing a mistake.

Ring In the New

First 1947 contract placed by WOR, N. Y., was agreed to last week, effective Jan. 6, embracing a 24-week schedule of five 15-minute shows a week for General Foods.

Program, slotted in the 12:45-1 p.m. spot, will be a quiz on romance, titled "This Is Love," with Eddie Dunn as emcee. Product to be plugged will be Maxwell House coffee. Benton & Bowles is the agency.

From the Production Centres

IN NEW YORK CITY . . .

Bing Crosby still owes Kraft Music Hall two guest shots and J. Walter Thompson agency is hoping he'll come through on his visit to New York next month....That hectic CBS routine has resulted in Red Barber giving up his Scarsdale home and moving into town in a Park ave. apartment.... Two of Fred Allen's scripters, Terry Ryan and Harry Barley, are ex-piano players with dance bands....Edward Everett Horton, now that he's off the Kraft show, has returned to his perennial touring fave, "Springtime For Henry," while working his way back to the Coast to do a film....Lyle Sudrow added to "Lora Lawton"....Francis DeSales joins "Rose of My Dreams" players....Rene Gekiere new to "Just Plain Bill"....Richard Janaver added to "David Harum"....Barry (WOR) Gray's "Gall Through the Night" book, which Frederick Fell, Inc., will now publish as an autobiographical, will be revamped, in view of his new show format. Gray switched publishers when Reader's Press wanted him to make it more of a text book.

Jack Doyle, copy editor at Mutual flackery, has resigned....NBC's "Orchestras of the Nation" Saturday show now being carried sustaining by 120 affiliates....WWRL sales staffer Tom Delaney in hospital with head injury as result of Christmas Day fall....Arthur Hayes, WCBS manager, elected to exec. committee of Catholic Institute of the Press....Emmett Heerdt new business manager for CBS' spot broadcasting division, Radio Sales....ABC commentator Gene Hamilton launches his "Footlighters," dramat group at Baldwin, L. I., with production of "Let Us Be Gay," leads played by radio actors Tom Gorman and Sam Raskyn....Detroit Symphony Orch, which starts series of broadcasts on ABC, Jan. 19, skedding series of road tours....Kenyon & Eckhardt agency radio dept. forming flying club....Radio literati in print in next couple of months include Helen J. Sioussat, CBS talks director, with an article in Pageant mag on "Why Women Don't Get Along With Men in Business," and Joseph Liss with a piece on the radio scripter's trials and tribulations in Theatre Arts Monthly....As of tonight (Tuesday) WHOM goes into all-night operation, with Sid Torin and Ray Carroll jointly doing a midnight-5 a.m. "After Hours" disk jockey whirl....Arnold Horwitt to writing stable for Kraft Music Hall....Births to families of WMCA staffers piling up, with girls added to menages of director Joe Gottlieb and announcer George Willard ....WLIB chief of promotion and publicity Fred Methot has resigned to pay more attention to his Mutual network show, "Crimes of Carelessness," and to make other tieups for 1947. He's succeeded by Saml Elfert.

Larry Menkin back from his Warners lot chore on the Coast and readying Franchot Tone air series based on Upton Sinclair's Lanny Budd chronology.

Moss Hart and Kitty Carlyle will do a Jan. 5 guest shot for Hildegarde ....Ted Collins back on the "Kate Smith Speaks" show by remote; he's still so weak from illness that program airs from his Manhattan apartment ....Girl, Dana Lou, born Friday (27) to the Danny O'Neils....ABC's Ed Noble will team with Jim Farley, Paul Whiteman and RCA-Victor baritone Robert Merrill in a special ABC hour's broadcast Sunday (5) for the Salvation Army Fund....United Parents Assn. commended "House of Mystery" and "Superman" as "definitely worthwhile programs for children," blowing into a cocked hat the holier-than-thou comments on the thrill shows....Paul Laval was signed last week to do series of spring season children's concerts at Town Hall. First of the shows will bow in Easter week....Lyn Farnol, Sam Goldwyn's top ad-publicity man, takes to the lecture platform next Monday (6) at Dick Pack's NYU radio course to tell the story of film-radio tieups and their boff payoff....Arnold Hartley of WOV bedded again after relapse....That double-entendre commercial on the Jean Sablon show last Saturday (28) which looked innocent enough on paper and which got an okay right down the line, had CBS squirming over the weekend.

IN HOLLYWOOD . . .

It was Harry Witt, assistant to Don Thornburgh at CBS, who smoothed down the ruffled feelings of Frank Sinatra upon his return to Hollywood. Swooner had insisted on rehearsing in the net's Vine St. theatre despite that it was overrun with Elgin holiday stars and Lou Bring's band. It was not until the night before that Sinatra succumbed to the honeyed words of Witt and moved into a studio at Columbia Square....Frank Hodek, one time NBC music director on the Coast, finally getting out of the Army and resuming his career. He has been stationed in Alaska where the temperature, he says, hit as low as 72 under the zero point....Nate Tufts added Jim Newton to his staff at W. Earl Bothwell agency....Art Marquette here to look over things including the Rose Bowl game.... Norman Blackburn, for eight years with J. Walter Thompson in the Hollywood office, has been made a veepee to match headman Cornwall Jackson's title....NBC is tossing a dinner for Edgar Bergen at the Bevhills hotel Jan. 19 to observe his 10th anni with Standard Brands....Sybil Bock, who retired last season as organist for Lum and Abner and other programs, returned to pump the pedals for Bill Stern....Howard Blake pulled out as writer-producer of "Meet the Missus" to devote full time to his packaged "That's Life," audience participator carried by CBS.

Benay Venuta getting active again, working in a picture and doing a guest shot for Ed Gardner....George Hope left Eddie Bracken's writing staff, now reduced to Wilkie Mahoney, Leston Nickerson and John Elliott ....Jack Benny slated for three guest shots in as many weeks; with Dennis Day, Screen Guild Players and The Kenny Baker show....The Henry Morgan sponsor-belittling twist is catching on here, the latest copyer being a used car lot sponsoring hour of disks on KXLA nightly. Plug copy is twitted and bankroller, "Wild Man" Pritchard, gets a gentle twitting, too. On New Year's eve Easter records were played....Ted Hediger, scripter of Bill Gargan's "I Deal in Crime," flew to Switzerland to settle an aunt's estate. He advanced the show four weeks of script.

IN CHICAGO . . .

Judith Waller, NBC Central Division educational director, off to Austin and speeches at Univ. of Texas....WIND staffers hit by avalanche of cigars after two babies in one week, girl for flack Bob Tunison and ditto for news ed Jimmy Dale....Mel Drake, manager of WDGY, St. Paul, named grand champion swimmer by Minneapolis Athletic club....Bill Dooley, long time WBBM salesman, now with WKLX, Lexington, Ky.... DeWitt Mower, Mutual midwest sales topper, became a daddy again.... Two Ton Baker aired his new original "Eachy Peachy Pie" via a guest shot on Hal Tate's "Strictly Show Business" a la WAIT....Chuck Wiley, of Mutual's midwest office, off to Dallas where he will produce New Years Day Cotton Bowl game, while Connie Rivard, MBS Chi publicity staffer, treks to Coast for Rose Bowler....Larry Nuss, formerly with KOL, Seattle, is new sales exec at WDGY, St. Paul....Bill Murphy, NBC Central Division script manager, hospitalized....Bill Downs, CBS correspondent, and Bikini atom observer, and bride of two weeks, visiting Chi....Wilma Gwilliams, WLS publicity, returned after visit to Fowler, Indiana....Kirby Hawks replaces Russ Young as producer of WBBM Schaeffer's "Adventurer's Club"....Craig Claiborne, ABC Central Division publicity staffer, due back from Mississippi after vacation ...Bill Thompson, of Fibber McGee show, in town seeing old friends....WGN airing salute to Chicago Tribune's centennial year.

Looks like Don McNeil and his ABC "Breakfast Club" will go before Hollywood cameras even though deal with Monogram fell flat last year. Current dickering has two film companies after show, with McNeil pretty certain of accepting one....Everett Holles, WBBM news editor, leaves Washington Jan. 14 for 30-day tour of American occupation zones in Europe, after being chosen one of seven newsmen by War Dept....Mayor Kelly and Burl Ives guested on Nate Gross Sunday nite WBBM spot.... Breakfast Club's Jack Owens crooning took second place to his recent laryngitis.

WRITERS, PRODUCERS IN SNARL

Large Crew Races Clock for Preem Of Corwin 'One World Flight' Jan. 14

A crew of nearly a dozen has been working day and night shifts at CBS to meet the deadline on the first broadcast of the Norman Corwin series under the title "One World Flight," set for Jan. 14. Material for the programs, culled from wire recordings and platters of interviews made by Corwin on his Wendell Willkie memorial trip round the world, is being transcribed to paper tape, Ediphoned on rolls, and then typed out on what will eventually total between 3,000 and 5,000 pages.

Of the 150-160 hours of interviews with people, ranging from prime ministers to laborers, only about 6% will reach the air directly, according to Corwin and his aide, Lee Bland. The rest will go into background notes and file material which Corwin will use to write around the direct quotes to build the 13 half-hour weekly shows. Since at least three of the six-and-a-half hours total of programming will be recorded, special dispensation has to be obtained from CBS board chairman William Paley to negate the net's long-standing veto on the use of transcriptions.

In setting up the programs, all of the recorded material, some of it on wire spools and the rest on platters, is transferred for editing to paper tape. Then the tape is played onto Ediphone rolls, from which six operators, three by day and three by night, type it out. From the written text, Corwin refers to the paper tape, where interviews are cut and spliced. Tasks are rendered doubly difficult in some cases by the fact that translations and some times broken English have to be played over and over and taken down word by word, while foreign-language conversations are skipped entirely until the translator comes in. There are eight cylinders for each hour of recording, and it takes about an hour to decode each roll.

So far this crew has worked 16 hours a day for three weeks, and typed over 700 pages of copy. Beside Corwin and Bland, there are two engineers, Bob Saron and Gene Rider, making the transfers from wire and platter to paper tape.

No "Austere Tract"

Concerning the format of the shows, Corwin said, "We don't intend to produce an austere social tract. Rather we'd like to have the lights and shadows o' the show correspond with the lights and shadows of our trip. Where something funny happened, the program will be humorous." Corwin said that there'd be very little acting in the programs, since as much as possible he'll use direct quotes from the interviews, and the rest of the time would be taken with musical background and briefing, and his own narration. Only thesping would come when it became necessary to "synthesize the action with things that weren't picked up on the machine." He added that he'll aim the shows to be "as antiseptically objective as possible," with pro and con material used indiscriminately. Corwin said he wants to take listeners along on the trip, giving them the sense of a world flight."

The press of the broadcast deadline has kept him from considering innumerable offers from magazine and publishing companies, Corwin stated. But early next summer, when the series is finished and the material in order, he will probably put the trip in book form. It's highly possible, too, he said, that important sections of the interviews as well as factual matter would be made available to colleges and universities which requested them. Some of these requests have already come in.

In editing for the broadcasts, Corwin marks out those portions of the written material that look significant, has the corresponding sections of paper tape brought up and listens for quality and significance, then makes his cuts. From the final cut and spliced tape, he will dub in the recorded portions of his show around the narration and acting.

What, No Studebaker?

National Laugh Week Foundation has just completed a survey to determine what were the 10 top routines that kept the gag writers outgagging each other during 1946. Here's what it came up with:

1. Kilroy.
2. Lost Weekend.
3. Senator Claghorn (it's a joke, son) routines.
4. Fountain pens that write under water.
5. Pres. Truman's piano concerts.
6. Gromyko's walkout at UN.
7. Mexican League.
8. Brooklyn Dodgers.
9. Petrillo.
10. Crosby's horses, Hope's nose, Sinatra's skin and bones.

CBS Takes 6% Nosedive In 1946 Billings

CBS billings for 1946 totaled $60,063,905, representing a 6% nosedive when compared with the web's 1945 billings of $63,724,851.

Procter & Gamble was the top spender among advertisers, with $6,644,551 billings, while Young & Rubicam topped the agencies, latter being represented by $6,601,846.

Top 10 Advertisers

Procter & Gamble	$6,644,551
Lever Bros.	3,964,263
American Home Prdts.	3,800,965
General Foods	3,713,323
Campbell Soup	2,491,030
Eversharp	1,715,931
Colgate	1,516,931
Philip Morris	1,448,495
Manhattan Soap	1,437,200
Sterling Drug	1,432,413

Top 10 Agencies

Young & Rubicam	$6,601,846
Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample	6,544,748
Blow Co.	5,156,544
Ruthrauff & Ryan	4,139,431
J. Walter Thompson	4,072,533
Foote, Cone & Belding	3,545,233
Compton	2,899,162
Benton & Bowles	2,497,559
Weir Wheelock	2,451,403
BBD & O	2,121,718

Industry Classification

Automotive	$ 3,261,613
Building Materials	851,329
Cigars, Cigaret, Tobacco	4,319,343
Clothing & Dry Goods	537,036
Confectionery
& Soft Drinks	1,522,421
Drugs & Toilet Goods	18,373,635
Financial & Insurance	822,217
Food & Food Beverages	13,359,843
Garden	103,700
House Furniture
& Furnishings	3,126,682
Others	13,776,086

Ballantine Coming Back On Air With Baseball

Ballantine Ale, which checked out of radio when it gave up the Barry Fitzgerald NBC program last season, is returning to the air via the baseball sponsorship route this summer. Outfit will co-sponsor the Yankee games on WINS, N. Y., with White Owl. Last season it was a White Owl-Pabst Beer dual bankrolling job.

Both White Owl and Ballantine are J. Walter Thompson accounts and a reported factor in the new teamup was Larry McPhail's decision to minimize the headaches by working out of a single agency.

OPEN MARKET FOR 'CRIME'

"Crime Photographer," the CBS mystery package sponsored by Anchor Hocking, is buying a few scripts in the open market for backlog purposes. Max Ehlich and Robert Sloane are among those making sales.

Show spreads permanently scripted by Alonzo Deen Cole.

'YOUR FAULT,' EACH INSISTS

With the freelance radio writing market as narrow now as it ever was, and more and more scripters falling over each other in an effort to place shows, a widening rift has been noted of late between writers on the one hand and those with whom they deal—producers, story editors, directors—on the other.

Each side claims the other is wrong, and neutrals in the trade concede that there are indeed faults on both sides. The rift is likely to become a major issue in the next few months, with the only possibility of peace seen in head-on tackling of the problem by the two guilds closest to it—Radio Writers Guild and Radio Directors Guild. Some way should be found by both guilds, it's felt by many involved in the increasing arguments, to stabilize the relations between the writers and those who run the shows.

Writers' major gripes concern accusations that story editors, producers and directors too often play fast and loose with the scripter's economic needs. They say that the writing-on-spec evil has become more pronounced than ever. It's a buyer's market, the radio freelance scripting is concerned, and the writers are forced to crawl on their knees, give ideas away, stand in line virtually with hand to sell a piece, and stand for the vagaries of the people in charge of the shows who, say the writers, "call for the time don't know themselves where they want their show to go, or how."

The other side presents its counter-arguments. One producer known for her personal liberalism and a scripter who is very active in the Writers Guild but is a "straw boss" over writers in his capacity as story editor for a freelance show, say they do only "what comes naturally" and can't help it if writers are hurt. They say it's the nature of the business, and they can't help it if they must make most experienced writers take spec assignments.

The femme in this case says she has got her agency to give her a special budget to pay in part for scripts she can't use, and that's as fair as she can be.

"The credits a writer has may be a mile long," she insists, "but that doesn't say he or she can write for my show. I do what I can, give them a special kit with do's and don't, sample scripts, etc. But I simply can't buy a show that won't go on my program."

Writers come back with the assertion that "very often these people are frustrated writers who feel they can write better than the professional writer. They may know the general line their show wants to take, and there's some doubt there. But they certainly don't know how to execute that line scriptwise, and experiment at our expense."

Some of the problems, such as assignments on spec, rewrites, payment for ideas and outlines, are among the tough ones to be tackled by the Writers Guild in the new contract negotiations to be started with ad agencies early in 1947. But many of these people on both sides feel, could be ironed out if the members of the two Guilds got together informally and tried to iron out their relationship wrinkles.

John R. Andrew
(of Muzak)
appraises
The Transcription Business
(Present and Future)
* * *
an editorial feature in next week's
41st Anniversary Number
of
VARIETY

Adman Ups From Floor With Lethal Punch to Prove He's a Showman

Spots In Your Pelts

Sears-Roebuck wants all fur trappers to rush their pelts pronto to Chi. To advise the hunters of the need for speed, S-R has taken to the air with urgent messages.

And those radio SOS spots go out, live, from a station in the North Countree called WOR, N. Y. The one-minute spots are voiced by Joe Bier on WOR's "News of the Farm" show every ayem between 5:45 and 6:30.

Mutual Puts '46 Biz at $25,806,460; $5,200,000 Hike

Mutual network gross time sales for 1946, on the basis of estimated billings for December, total $25,806,460, representing an increase of $5,200,000 over the previous year's billings of $20,600,000. Figures are Mutual's, assembled by its research dept., and show Erwin, Wasey Co. in the top billings spot among agencies, with $2,330,122, and Coca-Cola topping the list of Mutual advertisers with $2,012,253. (Coke outfit recently cancelled out on its "Spotlight Bands" three-times-a-week show).

TOP 10 AGENCIES

Erwin, Wasey	$2,330,122
D'Arcy	2,012,253
Ruthrauff & Ryan	1,718,520
Gardner	1,489,764
Neal D. Ney	1,219,400
Ted Bates	1,044,224
Wade	1,027,408
Compton	1,007,361
Kenyon & Eckhardt	957,241
Roy S. Durstine	946,889

TOP 10 ADVERTISERS

Coca-Cola	$2,012,253
Ralston Purina	1,489,764
Bayuk Cigars	1,219,400
Serutan Co.	1,136,696
R. B. Semler	1,048,131
Carter Products	1,044,224
Miles Labs	1,027,408
Procter & Gamble	1,007,361
Kellogg Co.	957,241
General Motors	903,739

'REAL STORIES' BANKED FULL WEB BY WHITEHALL

"Real Stories from Real Life," which used to be on Mutual five nights a week, then canceled the time, now net except the New York and Chicago outlets (WGN, WOR), is going back on the full web this week (1).

Bankroller is Whitehall Pharmacal, which curtailed its schedule because it seemed that Anacin, the product peddled, would be in for a shortage. But with a pickup in production, the sponsor wants to get back to full radio operation.

Show on the net will occupy its old time, 9:15-9:30 p. m., Mondays to Fridays.

WOV Scoops Pope on Pope

Capitalizing on fact that Pope Pius' Christmas Eve message was to be in Italian, New York bilingual indie WOV nixed a local scoop in favor of carrying rebroadcast of Papal address at 6 p.m. last Tuesday (24). Station had Pope's message retransmitted via U. S. via RCA shortwave from Rome, and recorded here.

While WOV tallied an exclusive with the feature, particular victim of the scoop was WHOM, lingo indie recently acquired by Generoso Pope and hopeful contender for toppling Italian spot long held by WOV. Pope (Generoso) has been trying to promote his new property through strong lineage in his Italian daily, Il Progresso, and by substantial expenditures on Italian sustainers.

By CARROLL CARROLL

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

There's been so much written by so many people urging that radio be given back to "the showmen," it's time someone asked, "what showmen?", and said a few words in defense of the guys responsible for most of the good radio programs, advertising men. The main criticism leveled at them is that they're not showmen. What do their critics think advertising is if not a certain kind of showmanship? And what do they think a showman is? Where do they think showmen come from, cocoons in the Shuberts' washrooms?

There is not one case on record of an obstetrician walking out of a delivery room and saying to a new father, "Congratulations, your wife has just presented you with a fine eight-pound showman." One of the greatest showmen alive today was born a baby boy and grew up to be a champion stenographer. The motion picture industry is owned and operated largely by men who did not come to it from show business. The truth is that the industry was developed in spite of many famous showmen, not with their cooperation.

Radio has a parallel history. The showmen ignored it, laughed at it. The men who brought radio to reality almost immediately gave over control of it to showmen. That the showmen who took over what happened to be in the advertising business is immaterial. The fact is this. If the men and companies who owned the facilities in radio's infancy had really been showmen, they never would have allowed themselves to lose control of a force they obviously didn't appreciate.

National advertisers and their agents do, today, exercise about 90% of the showmanship in radio. They put on most of the shows most of the people want to hear most. They would not be doing this if they were not better showmen and better business men than those from whom

(Continued on page 30)

ABC '46 Billings Tops '45 by 571G; Gen. Mills Leads

ABC network winds up 1946 with total gross time sales of $40,617,130, as compared with billings of $40,045,866 for 1945, an increase of $571,164. General Mills was in the No. 1 spot among top-spending clients on the network, with $2,916,752 spent for time, while Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample led in agency billings with $4,076,892.

TOP 10 ADVERTISERS

General Mills	$2,916,752
Procter & Gamble	2,404,091
Miles Laboratories	1,965,231
Kellogg Co.	1,834,793
Sterling Drug	1,813,985
Quaker Oats	1,799,151
Swift and Co.	1,717,591
Philco	1,712,271
Libby, McNeill & Libby	1,609,684
U. S. Steel	1,167,110

TOP 10 AGENCIES

Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample	$4,076,892
J. Walter Thompson	3,766,584
BBD&O	3,307,199
Kenyon & Eckhardt	2,993,995
Compton	2,305,677
Wade	1,963,231
Young & Rubicam	1,799,427
Hutchins	1,712,271
Benton & Bowles	1,677,120
McCann-Erickson	1,550,664

INDUSTRIAL CLASSIFICATIONS

Foods, Food Beverages	$13,292,373
Drugs, Toilet Goods	9,483,782
Stationery, Publishers	2,731,241
House Furniture, Furnishings	2,385,649
Laundry Soaps, Housekeepers Supplies	2,375,722
Confectionery, Soft Drinks	1,922,676
Financial, Insurance	1,329,908
Automotive	1,779,400
Building Materials	1,362,108
Others	4,504,370

Campaign to Educate Public In Know-How on Tele Sets Seen Vital

First trickle of television sets on the market points up the necessity for a concerted campaign—backed by the entire industry to educate not only the public but, more important, the general retail salesmen as to exactly how television works, according to video officials.

Public, it's pointed out, is in a state of utter confusion, as evidenced by the number of questions put to retailers when customers come in to shop for sets. In addition to confusion raised by the inter-industry color squabble, many prospective set buyers have read numerous irresponsible stories in the press to the effect that their landlords might object to a television antenna on the roof, that installation of a set might create a fire hazard, etc. Salesmen, besides being unable to answer these questions, cannot even advise the customers on the comparative merits of the different models.

One salesman in a N. Y. department store, it's reported, didn't even know how to turn on a set. Another, asked to tune in a set in the early afternoon, asserted there was nothing at all to be seen and had to be told by the customer that the stations were all transmitting test patterns. Majority of the public believes a tele set works by merely plugging it into a wall socket, much the same as a radio, and the salesmen have no knowledge to pass on about the complicated and all-important problem of correct installation.

In light of all this, several manufacturers are plugging for a series of institutional ads to educate the public but are wary of taking on the costs themselves, unless the entire industry joins in. It's also suggested that a symposium for salesmen, something like the technical symposium for dealers carried on by Viewtone Television during the last several months, would be in order. Again, however, manufacturers point to the necessity for such campaigns to be sponsored jointly by the entire industry.

NBC's DuMont Nix On Rose Bowl Tele

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Watch-dogging its 18-year-old rights to Rose Bowl matters, NBC here turned down the DuMont interests' request for permission to film the traditional game, Jan. 1. Refusal was the net's second, having nixed Television Productions, Inc. (Paramount) last week when Teleprod asked to telecast the game live.

Though NBC is not yet telecasting here, having only last week been granted permission by the FCC to build, it won't let anyone else move in on it and cop some prestige. Story goes that the net has for many years sold the Bowl brass and Pacific Coast Conference on its singular ability. Only NBC can do broadcasts or televize well, is the theme they have reportedly sold the Bowl interests. Therefore, it cannot now lessen the glamour by admitting, in effect, that others are equally capable.

DuMont wanted only to film highlights of the game in the manner of newsreel coverage. The film would have been shipped to New York for airing. However, NBC plans to telecast film of the entire game on its own station there. Telefilms, Inc., was to lens the event for DuMont but will now confine itself to a celluloid chunk of the accompanying Tournament of Roses.

Paramounters were plenty peeved, regarding the network as extremely selfish.

Chi Radio School Sues Ex-Staffers for $160,000

Chicago, Dec. 30.

American Television Laboratories Inc. of Chicago filed suit in Chi Federal court last week for $160,000 damages against M. C. Flynn, Francis Ondrey, and Alton L. Weber, all former members of American Tel sales staff, on charges of conspiracy to obtain students for a competitive school while working for American and using its facilities.

Tele Prod Dickers For Various Faiths' Rites

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Having telecast the solemn high Xmas mass of the Roman Catholic Church, Television Productions, Inc., here will follow that with airings of Protestant or non-sectarian Easter doings, and a yearly highlight Jewish service. Effort is being taken to dispel any thought of favoritism.

An attempt will be made to line up the Easter sunrise service at Hollywood Bowl, in addition to a tieup with a leading synagogue for telecast of Yom Kippur or another Jewish holiday event.

Draper Telecast Snarled by IA

Labor union bogey, one of the chief stumbling blocks in television's path, forced cancellation of another video show last Friday (27) night when stagehands at City Center, N. Y., members of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, asked for allegedly exorbitant wages in an attempt to set a precedent for tele remotes of stage shows. WNBT (NBC, N. Y.) was reportedly unwilling to kick through with the money and so called off its scheduled telecast of the Paul Draper-Larry Adler concert from the Center.

Following the cancellation of the Graziano-Cowboy Shanks prize fight from Madison Sq. Garden Friday night because of Graziano's illness, WNBT arranged to substitute the Draper-Adler pickup. Stymied at first by the American Federation of Musicians' ban on live musicians for tele shows, since Draper dances to a piano accompaniment, NBC got around this by arranging for Draper to dance during the half-hour the show was to be on the air to the accompaniment of only Adler's harmonica. Latter is excluded from the AFM ban since the union doesn't consider the harmonica a musical instrument.

Late Friday afternoon, however, the IA stagehands advised NBC of its wage demands, which NBC reportedly considered exorbitant. Since the show was to have been the first ever picked up from a professional stage, web officials reportedly figured the precedent would be too high to carry for the future and cancelled the program, shoving in as a second replacement (or the original replacement a PRC western.

Previous instances of labor disputes in television have revolved around jurisdictional battles, where IA members have refused to work the same show if NBC's television cameramen, members of the independent National Assn. of Broadcasting Electrical Technicians, appeared on the scene.

Relay Link Snag Snarls Attempts to Televise The Circus in Chicago

Chicago, Dec. 30.

Attempt to televise a circus by WBKB last week, which would have made one of the best video shows yet from this outlet, petered out when a relay link between the mobile remote telecasting unit and the station failed to respond.

Some unknown obstruction in Chicago's Loop prompted engineers to erect a relay link atop the Morrison hotel. This figured to erase the obstruction and permit the show's being aired.

WBKB engineers at first were puzzled wher the show was unable to be televised as the remote was considered a cinch, since the station televised a golf tournament during the summer from a distance of more than 18 miles. The circus, at the Coliseum, is only about two miles from the outlet. The station has been successful in televising sports events from all over the city.

Capt. Bill Eddy, WBKB topper, attributed the failure to a "cancellation phenomena effect of the ultra high frequency waves," which existed in one of the two relay links.

JACK LAWRENCE

Singers often write "hit" tunes (or sign them), but few composers can make coffee and cake via the vocal route: Jack Lawrence (If I Didn't Care, Sunrise Serenade, Sleepy Lagoon, Symphony) is an outstanding exception. His new Lang-Worth transcriptions stamp him a vocal artist as commercial as a silver dollar.

LANG-WORTH, INC., NEW YORK

Color Dispute Still Up in Air

Color television controversy remained in a state of animated suspense this week as only CBS, champion of its own developed sequential system, had accepted the FCC invitation to demonstrate its color video at the next commission hearings, slated for the Customs House, N. Y., on Jan. 27. Although most FCC members have seen demonstrations of all color systems, they've asked for new demonstrations in the pending showdown hearings so that they can be written into the record.

RCA, leader of the faction opposing the CBS petition for the FCC to set commercial color standards immediately, has made no announcement to date on whether it will demonstrate its all-electronic system. Latter was revealed to the FCC and press several months ago, but RCA officials emphasized at the time the method was still in its primary stages of development and wouldn't be ready commercially for at least four years. DuMont, whose color system is substantially the same as RCA's, has also indicated no intention of doing a repeat on its recent demonstation.

Industry observers, however, are confident that one of the two all-electronic proponents will set up shop at the hearing resumption, if only to take some of the wind from the CBS sails. FCC members were reportedly impressed with the latter's long-distance color transmission last month. Should RCA or DuMont decide to demonstrate, however, it's expected they'll follow their usual course of attempting to show color video is not yet ready, which might militate against them if the CBS show is again successful.

Neither of the two factions, meanwhile, would comment on their future course of action once the FCC makes up its mind about the CBS petition, although CBS prexy Frank M. Stanton has already indicated his web might give up should the commission nix its bid. Speaking at the first color hearings in Washington last month, Stanton stressed that CBS had spent plenty of time, manpower and money in its fight.

Worthington C. Miner

(Director CBS Television)

discusses

"Television's Potential as a Reporting Medium" an editorial feature next week in the 41st Anniversary Number of

VARIETY

ABC Telescoped Field

ABC television, still the only major broadcaster without its own studio facilities, has had probably more varied shows and sponsors during the last year than any other station. Survey of ABC's operations for 1946 reveals the web produced 75 different shows over its five rented outlets, 22 of which were sponsored. These include 16 different bankrollers, pointing up the success of Paul Mowrey, the web's national tele director, in interesting as many different sponsors as possible in the medium.

With Mowrey's emphasis on both news and special events films, 19 of the web's 75 shows were presented via motion pictures. Of these, nine were sponsored. List of films includes such special events as the Easter parade in N. Y. and Atlantic City, the Automotive Golden Jubilee from Detroit, the Elks' parade, Minneapolis Aquatennial, Cleveland Air Races, Saratoga Races, etc. ABC climaxed its film work for the year last week with a public relations picture, sponsored by the entire automotive industry, presenting the reasons why so few new cars have hit the market.

ABC Taking Big Strides in Tele Field With Full Network Ready by 1948

With television construction permits for Los Angeles, Detroit and Chicago already under its belt, and confident that the FCC will grant its similar applications for New York and San Francisco, the ABC network is ready to start building toward a television network in full bloom by 1948.

Work will start on ABC's television buildings, transmitters, and studios n' later than the middle of 1947. While the budget has not yet been worked, "wads" of money will be spent.

These were the plans announced last week by Adrian Samish, ABC veepee in charge of radio programming, who was promoted to a post in which he doubles up his old job with that of vice-prexy in charge of television.

'Stepchild' No More

Samish's appointment to the top television job in the network means that, for the first time, ABC's video operations have been stabilized to a point where the board of directors can hold an officer of the corporation responsible for progress or the lack of it. Until now, it has been in one sense "a stepchild." Paul Mowrey, director of ABC video, had been responsible partly to Mark Woods, the prexy, and partly to treasurer Nick Prialoux.

Which meant that, organizationally, television operations were not the concern of any one officer, since Woods' overall network supervision didn't give him time to pay much attention to video. On the other hand, it meant also that television lacked a properly authorized spokesman before the board of directors.

Samish, who is leaving for the Coast Monday (6), will start on the budget before his departure, and that job will be finished during his absence by Mowrey. He will present the figures to the board shortly after his return, and contracts will be let as soon thereafter as possible.

Meanwhile, the net is "pulling in its horns" on programming for television, which may mean curtailment in programming staff. ABC has, until now, been broadcasting over other people's facilities, using WABD (DuMont) in N. Y., WRGB (G.E.) in Schenectady, WTTG (DuMont) Washington, WPTZ (Philco) Philadelphia, and WBBK (Balaban & Katz), Chicago.

"We feel we have learned something about programming, and we are ready now for the second stage of development, the building part," said Samish. "By 1948, we will combine stages one and two to go into the third phase, which will be programming over our own transmitters."

Television Review

BORDEN ENTERTAINS
With Lew Parker, emcee; Golden Gate Quartet, Florence Desmond, Arnaut Bros. Roberto & Alicia
Producer: Wes McKee
Director: Fred Coe
Set: Bob Wade, Ray Kelly
30 Mins.; Sun. (29), 9 p.m.
BORDENS
WNBT-NBC, N. Y.
(Young & Rubicam)

Borden Co., still experimenting with different programming techniques for the 9-9:30 Sunday night slot it's tied up on WNBT (NBC, N. Y.), presented what was probably the most ambitious and costly television variety show to date Sunday (30) night. Bolstered by some of the top talent currently available in N. Y., the show was highly entertaining. Insofar as television is concerned, though, all thoughts of what the medium could have done to add interest seemed to have been forgotten.

As with the first experiment several weeks ago, the show was staged in NBC's studio 8G, second largest in the web's N. Y. headquarters. This gave producer Wes McKee a chance to build a mammoth set under supervision of Bob Wade and Ray Kelly, which resembled something out of the lush atmosphere of Billy Rose's Diamond Horseshoe. Except for the first entry of two page girls to announce the show, however, all functional use of the set was completely disregarded, and it served for the rest of the show merely as a backdrop.

Director Fred Coe's camera work also left much to be desired. For the most part, he simply trained his cameras on the various acts and let things take their course. With so much apparent space in which to operate, it's difficult to understand why he didn't move the lenses more to add the necessary variety of shots obtainable.

Responsible almost entirely for the entertainment value in the show, consequently, was the talent. Actor Lew Parker made an affable emcee, with his teeoff monolog indicating he might become television's Bob Hope. Golden Gate Quartet, current at the Blue Angel, N. Y., did two spirituals in fine fashion; and the Arnaut Bros. elicited plenty of yaks from the unseen studio audience with their bird-whistle routines. Femme impressionist Florence Desmond was capital, and Roberto and Alicia, current at the Hotel Pierre's Cotillion room, presented a well-staged flamenco dance.

Commercials went off okay as long as they were confined to amusing spots by Parker. Lengthy middle plug, however, presenting what was supposed to be the average American family and its choice of the various Borden's products, was corny to the extreme. Stal.

L. A. Times Tees Off New Video Plant

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Arrival here over weekend of two new Image Orthicon cameras from RCA to the Los Angeles Times marks kickoff of video for the newspaper. Arrival marks second delivery of I.O.'s in this area, Paramount's Television Productions, Inc., having received the initial two about a month ago.

Times plans no actual video operation yet due to lack of facilities and vital equipment. However, the cameras will be used to spark its plans, initial step being a Times building lobby display of the lens boxes to stimulate public interest. That will be followed with setting up of the cameras at the Pasadena Playhouse for experimental "piped" program within the building.

'UNCLE SAM WANTS YOU' VIA VIDEO BALLYHOO

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Television looms as another U. S. Army recruiting lure here. The public relations section of recruiting branch is currently sleuthing local video with an eye to augmenting its radio and film coverages. Feeling is that all the avenues in both of the latter have been pretty much exhausted and something new must be found.

Idea behind the plan is not to seek special programs or direct pitches but to handle it more subtly. How many rookies the service could lure via the 500 wealth-situated sets here is problematical. However, the present notion is to spot posters and other come-ons where convenient in existing shows or devise other coated lures.

$10,000,000 TRANSCRIPTION BIZ

Highbrow WQXR Pattern Pays Off, Longhair Luxury Items Bring 750G

Broadcasting industry's unique indie, WQXR, N. Y., which set out on a definite plan a decade ago and stuck firmly to its commercial and cultural guns despite the pressure of heavy deficits in the early years, is winding up 10 years of operations on a solid financial base. It cost the station $500,000 to sustain and expand operations during the first seven years of its existence, according to Elliott M. Sanger, WQXR's exec vice-prexy, but the 1946 gross will top the $750,000 mark, paying off with a substantial profit.

Popularly dubbed as a strictly longhair station, WQXR managed to build up a large and consistent following of dialers by filling a gaping vacuum in the eastern area's program schedules in 1936. While the nets were jamming the afternoon air with soap operas and juve serials and the local indies with jazz platters and spot plugs, John L. Hogan, WQXR prez, and Sanger, launched their policy of full time airing of music in the Bach - Beethoven-Brahms genre. Corollary to its program policy, WQXR instituted an unusually high standard for its commercials which put an absolute ban on laxatives, deodorants, female announcements or any copy objectionable to mixed groups.

Pepsi a la Mozart

One of the major running problems facing the station's commercial staff is getting the ad agencies to turn out, on receipt from WQXR's continuity department, special copy suitable to its specialized audience. Classic case of WQXR's hypercritical, ultra-highbrow attitude towards spot plugs was that of the w.k. Pepsi Cola jingle which, although hitting every other station in the country in identical form, underwent a classicalizing treatment for WQXR on the celeste which made it sound like Mozart minuet.

In 1944, the station's execs, after having come out of the red in 1942, sold a controlling interest to the N. Y. Times. Although Hogan and Sanger were eager for a newspaper tieln to further the station's venture into FM transmission and facsimile experimentation, they had turned down earlier bids from other metropolitan dailies, among them the Daily News, who wanted to buy in. According to Sanger, the sale was made to the N. Y. Times because it was the nearest approximation in journalism to the quality, style and taste of WQXR's broadcast policy. Complete mating between the newspaper and station will take place in 1944, when WQXR will move its headquarters to the new annex of the Times building now under construction.

Several years ago, WQXR innovated another experiment in programming. It organized the WQXR advisory committee composed of more than 4,000 listeners taken from various economic strata and geographic locations. This group, who are among the station's 40,000 regular subscribers to its monthly program booklet, are used as a sounding board for new program ideas tested on the station. Programs are yanked or retained depending upon the reaction noted in the questionaires mailed out to the committee. Closer attentiveness to the recommendations of this gratis-serving committee, Sanger declared, because they represent the most accurate cross-section of any audience knowable to any station.

Sanger refuted the popular misconception that WQXR caters either exclusively to the hoity-toity Park Avenue set or the art-loving set from Bohemia by pointing to listener surveys which indicated a widely scattered taste for good music among all sectors of the population. However, the audience concentration in upper-bracket income areas is revealed by the number of luxury items, such as expensive champagnes and perfumes, that are plugged exclusively over WQXR.

The station currently has an application pending before the FCC for a power boost to 50kw.

Operation Ulcer
by
Dick Mack
gives a radio producer's view of this here radio racket

* * *

An Editorial Feature in Next Week's

41st Anniversary Number
VARIETY

FCC Nixes Plea To Hear Hearst On WBAL Action

Washington, Dec. 30.

Drew Pearson and Robert Allen have lost a minor point in the preliminary sparring in their action to grab WBAL, the Hearst-owned Baltimore station which was cited by the FCC Blue Book. FCC last Thursday (26) nixed a request by Pearson and Allen for information as to whether the commission would summon William Randolph Hearst to testify at the hearing scheduled for Jan. 13.

"The commission is of the opinion," said FCC, "that in a comparative hearing such as the instant one, each of the parties should undertake to present its full case without regard to any presentation which may be made by the commission's staff. Accordingly, your request cannot be complied with."

What the commission did in effect was to tell Cohen and Marks, counsel for Pearson and Allen, to subpoena Hearst themselves if they feel he is necessary to their case. This may be done.

It has been a long time since Hearst has testified at a public hearing. However, for him to duck an FCC subpoena would sit poorly with the commission and is not expected. If such a subpoena is issued, Hearst might plead inability to come East from San Simeon because of his age and health. In such a case, it is likely that he would be asked to make a deposition on the Coast which could go into the record of the case.

Artzt Gets Slap And Apology From Bernard

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Don Bernard, producer of "Blondie," got off with a reprimand from Musicians Local 47 for cuffing Billy Artzt, music director of the airshow, following a flurry of invectives resulting from a missed musical cue. Bernard took exception to a strong word and whacked Artzt across the face with the back of his open hand. Local 47 heard the case and ordered Bernard to apologize to the maestro in the presence of his band, which was done.

Bernard's penalty was tempered with leniency due to his record of never before having had a run-in with a musician in his 25 years in radio.

Martin Takes $17,500

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Tony Martin's threatened suit to collect $57,000 for his dismissal by Bourjois has been settled for $17,500. Singer claimed he was deprived by correspondence that he would be renewed for 26 weeks at $2,000 per and was dropped week after he had turned down Texaco.

Settlement was reached by law firm of Gang, Kopp & Tyre for Foote, Cone & Belding as papers were being filed for court action.

HERE TO STAY, DESPITE SNAFUS

By TOM GRIES

Success or failure of the much-publicized Bing Crosby-Philco platter series notwithstanding, the electrical transcription industry seems to have passed the critical stage.

That's the considered opinion of e.t. execs, men who have been with the infant offspring of radio since its inception in the early thirties and subsequent orphanage during the following 10 years. And orphan it was, for station managers, union bosses and network heads were quick to see a threat, however vague, to their respective positions.

But through the universal radio language of fewer dollars plus greater listener quality, the platter industry has considerably lessened, if not dissipated opposition in many quarters. The end of 1946 sees a total of approximately $10,000,000 for the year cross the table for recorded shows varying in length from 30 seconds to a full hour.

It's still a struggle. Talent unions in general and the American Federation of Musicians in particular are avowedly "out to get" transcriptions; the two major networks, NBC and CBS, won't countenance the use of platters on their web facilities; and many independent station managers and salesmen aren't eager to split advertiser fees with a platter producing firm.

According to transcription toppers, men like Frederick Ziv's John Sinn, Bill Seth of NBC recording, Jack Meyerson and Herb Gordon of World Broadcasting, Larry Finley and others, most of the adverse thought regarding plattered programs rises out of misconception of their purpose. Contrary to network thought, transcription companies have no aspirations to web programming; rather they intend their platters for the local stations and local advertisers who can't otherwise afford the talent and production values available to mass program output.

In other words, network level programming is on a local level. For this reason, e.t. people maintain that the

(Continued on page 26)

Unions Threaten Action Vs. ABC, NBC; Say Bonus Slur' Shows Collusion

The NBC-ABC "slur" against labor unions last week, when both nets gave bonuses to all employees "except those whose wages and working conditions are determined by outside organizations," may wind up in a major action by the unions, either before the FCC or before the Dept. of Justice.

Union people have been burned since the "discrimination" became known. The only union that protested officially was Radio Writers Guild.

However, an accusation that might prove serious if it stands up has been made by some union employees of the ABC network. These claim that ABC had bonus checks all made out to everybody. They say that the checks were withdrawn, and distributed after NBC had decided not to give bonuses to union people. They say that proves that NBC and ABC, which were divorced corporatively by FCC order five years ago, are in effect still being operated as a unit in some respects.

Some union people are of a mind to begin action before the National Labor Relations Board instead of at the FCC. Others insist there is a possibility of "collusion," which might justify anti-trust action by the Dept. of Justice.

Carmine Into Prexy Spot?

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

James H. Carmine, Coasters bear, will be moved into the presidency of Pallco Co., after first of the year.

He's now veepee in charge of advertising and is credited with swinging the Bing Crosby transcription deal.

Pioneer Spirit Gone, Sez Scribe; Notes 'Shameful Brushoff' of Foreign News

Arnold Hartley
(Program Director of WOV, N. Y.)
writes about
"Saga of Radio Outlets, Sweet and Sad, But Profitable Period Lies Ahead"

* * *

an editorial feature in next week's

41st Anniversary Number of
VARIETY

Does WOR Want No Part-a-Ya, LaGuardia?

Fiorello H. LaGuardia, released from his ABC network contract, may end up with WJZ, the same net's New York flagship, instead of WOR as his local N. Y. outlet when he goes on the Mutual web on a coast-to-coast co-operative deal. Reason is that WOR, Mutual's key station in New York, won't handle LaG unless it gets him exclusively for the area, and there is a 10G differential in the way which no one wants to pay.

LaGuardia, in addition to his ABC show (originally sponsored, for six months, by Liberty mag) has a Sunday noon, half-hour commentary sponsored by June Dairy locally over WJZ. The dairy outfit bought that time for four years, and there's three years still to run. When the time was bought, WJZ's rate card listed the time, Sunday from noon to 12:30, as morning time.

Now WOR wants LaG exclusively or not at all, and if he moves to WOR the time charge will cost $10,000 a year extra. LaG is willing to move to WOR, but won't pay the 10G. Neither will the sponsor. Neither will WOR sacrifice that $10,000.

Mutual's prexy, Ed Kobak, is burned at his New York organization. But WOR sales head R. C. ("Pete") Maddux is adamant. He says his station never took a gabber unless it had him exclusively, and he won't handle LaGuardia unless the latter goes off WJZ's Sunday spot or transfers it to WOR.

Kobak and LaG went on a Mutual closed circuit Monday (30) to tell the Mutual outlets what LaG would give them when he goes on the net next Saturday (4).

LaGuardia had been dissatisfied with his ABC spot because he had no outlets in Chicago or Washington. He is still not signed up in Chi, and his New York debut is snarled.

But, says Mutual, he is going on the net as scheduled, nevertheless.

WOR may find itself facing FCC action as a result of insisting on LaGuardia exclusively. A move got under way, as soon as the news leaked in the trade, to get the Civil Liberties Union interested in the case as a test against a station that would bar a gabber because he also talks over another outlet.

Chi's WGN Axes Sustainers

Chicago, Dec. 30.

In a general retrenchment plan WGN canceled two half-hour sustaining programs, "Garrity The Great" and "Mystery Playhouse," effective Jan. 12. "Garrity" had the Thursday evening slot from 7 to 7:30 and "Playhouse" was spotted Saturday evenings from 8 to 8:30.

Notice was given last Thursday (26) to seven actors on Garrity and five on the Playhouse program. Also affected were four announcers and one sound effects man.

Radio is giving foreign news "a shameful brushoff," thus doing it-self a double disservice as well as negating the broadcasting industry's "pious pretensions to an interest in one world."

Those are the opinions of Edd Johnson, ABC net and Chi Sun correspondent in Germany, who has just returned from three years overseas.

Johnson was with CBS before the war, and set up that web's shortwave listening post. Later, with Robert E. Sherwood and Joseph H. Barnes, he initiated the U. S. Government's shortwave broadcast services which, subsequently, were folded into the overall Office of War Information under Elmer Davis.

"The American radio," said Johnson last week, "still technically the most developed of the broadcasting industries around the world, has lost its pioneering spirit, when it comes to news. It is robbing itself of good, hard money which could come from sponsorship of foreign news, properly handled. It's thinning out its own public service dossier. And, perhaps, what's worse, it is making a farce of its own pious pretensions. Instead of helping the people of the U.S.A. to learn more about the world, it's driving them to deeper, more abysmal isolationism by making them believe that the rest of the world is something much less important than a band remote from a Jersey night club.

"Our radio industry started out like a house afire when once we discovered that there was gold in them foreign spots. But we forget now fast, back in 1938 and 1939, when we were developing our foreign news services on the American networks, we were giving a public service. Foreign coverage was just that, something the network gave as a service to its listeners. Came listeners, high Hooperatings, and, inevitably, the sponsors. Bankrollers were then there, just begging for foreign news shows to buy. And, of course, we sold them, which was okay by everybody, including the listeners.

Newspaper Technique

"Now the pendulum has swung, but it's radio that's doing the swinging, not the listeners. During the lush years, radio did not bother to develop one new technique in the handling of foreign news. It just allowed that phase of the work to grow by itself. It didn't matter. Everything was new and sponsors were willing. But there was no styling, no growth. Radio correspondents—except for a very small handful—were newspapermen writing yarns for the next edition. They were not writing for this new medium of radio. They were beating the newspaper's deadline.

"As long as listeners itched to hear the latest communique soonest, that newspaper technique worked and paid off. But the war is over. And radio, instead of developing its foreign news coverage, has dropped it.

"If a music show flops on the radio, or a comedian starts falling on his Hooper, something is done—reformed, replaced, a new band leader is hired, a writer gets his head chopped off, but someone carries on. There is no thought of dismantling the transmitter because a show has flopped. However, in the case of foreign news, these former pioneers in radio act like tired old men. If interest has—and, remember, the fault for that lag is radio's—their only answer is not to change the format, but to cut it out altogether. That's certainly not typical of American enterprise, but there it is.

"Radio's foreign correspondents now, what few there are, are frustrated gabbers who don't get a chance to project. On the net's Public Affairs Broadcasts, the air every two minutes, 45 seconds to the last month. Can that man be expected to make his coverage interesting and to keep listeners?

"Ask the veepees, and they'll point to the Hooperatings of some of the domestic news shows as an answer. But they put money, effort, imagina-

(Continued on page 30)

Coast AFRA to Follow East on Pact But Sound Men Sound Off Vs. Terms

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Following the lead of the New York and Chicago locals, the American Federation of Radio Artists here voted to support the national board in whatever steps it takes to conclude an agreement with the networks. The San Francisco local voted Sunday (29) following the arrival there of Claude McCue, executive secretary of the Hollywood chapter and western region leader.

No action was taken here on the rejection or acceptance of the national nor regional pacts, the latter an integral part of the master contract to be made between both parties. Claude McCue made his first report on the national negotiations, and then called for the obviously directed vote to help force the network minds.

The action apparently helped some, for now there is virtual accord, following four days of negotiations with the Coast net brass. Formal meetings as a group have ceased while net attorneys now form a tentative agreements for final revision. However, the NBC affiliate, KFI, with which a separate ticket must be written for the staff announcers, is being tough, and ABC is reportedly being a mite difficult. McCue had one meeting with KFI management and expects to resume with both on return here today (30) in the hope of concluding agreements.

Sound effect men here were loud in their disagreement with the 30% increase obtained for them. Though New York and Chicago got only 25% each, the scale here is currently lower than theirs, a situation annoying to them to a great degree and which they wanted corrected by balancing up the difference over and above the increase obtained under the national agreement. Though going along with others here in voting the board the authority, the soundmen insisted that their formal protest to the board be included in the supporting resolution.

Writers To Set Up Talks

Radio Writers Guild is readying to tackle NBC in Hollywood, with increased demands for newsroom men. Guild has a contract with the net that holds for another year. However, there is a clause that permits reopening on wages only and the Guild will avail itself of it. Following a meeting this week with those affected, the Guild will probably set an asking figure and date to open negotiations. Year is up Feb. 1, so it's likely that mid-January will mark the start of negotiations.

Directors To Meet

CBS has agreed to Dec. 31 date for the resumption of negotiations with the Radio Directors Guild in Hollywood for the latter's initial net contract. Opened about two months ago, negotiations were postponed while CBS brass wrangled on the new AFRA agreement.

Sustainer Announcer Status Deadlocks Chi AFRA Negotiations

Chicago, Dec. 30.

Possibility of an AFRA strike loomed here again last week, when the three-week negotiations between representatives of stations, agencies and Ray Jones reached a stalemate Friday (27). Impasse resulted when station owners and operators refused point blac' to abolish sustainer announcers' status and Ray Jones, AFRA rep, walked out of the meeting after giving the station operators an "or else" ultimatum.

Some operators took the position that there should be some apprentice classification for young announcers and further that in cases such as WENR which shares its wave length with WLS, a sustainer announcer is peculiarly appropriate. The general concensus of the operators was that it was a minor point in the whole negotiations anyway, and that the union was taking an autocratic and arbitrary position in attempting to force an issue.

All other points had been successfully negotiated with a general wage increase of 20% agreed upon for actors and commercial announcers and a 30% raise for the sound effects man. Unique angle to the deadlock was that actual money involved between sustaining announcers and commercials announcers, even including the skedded raise, would amount to $36.12 per man or $288.96 for all eight sustaining announcers of all five stations per week.

WENR-ABC now has four sustaining announcers, WBBM-CBS has one, and WGN has three out of the total of 71 announcers in the class "A" group, with the WGN and WBBM men devoting 90% of their time to FM programs.

PHIL DAVIS

"HIRES TO YA' "
FOR SECOND YEAR
HIRES SUNDAY PARTY
ABC, COAST-TO-COAST

SCRIPTWRITER AVAILABLE

Background of Continuity, Publicity, News and Research in commercial and public service broadcasting. Four years' experience with leading stations. Available January. Excellent references. This ad is placed by his employers in acknowledgement of his valuable part-time service. Box 7821, Variety, 154 W. 46th St., New York 19.

WNBC Audits Its Breaks To Disprove Plug Claim

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

Your Dec. 11 article about "WNBC's almost exclusive plugging of its own rather than network shows during station breaks" is a very interesting theory but bears no relation to the facts.

During the week of Dec. 1-7, the week immediately prior to the article and one which we believe is a typical week, we broadcast a total of 169 promotional announcements. Of this number, 71 or 42% were in behalf of network commercial programs; 41 or 24.3% were in behalf of local programs, commercial and sustaining; 51 or 30.2% were announcements in the public interest; 6 or 3.5% promoted the audience reaction sessions conducted by NBC Research.

Nintytwo of the 169 announcements scheduled during this week were broadcast between the hours of 8 and 11 p.m. Of this number (92), 36 or 60.86% were in behalf of network commercial programs. Eighteen or 19.56% were announcements in the public interest. Fifteen or 16.3% were in behalf of local programs, commercial or sustaining viz., Bob Smith, "Hi! Jinx," Metropolitan News Roundup, etc. Three announcements or 3.26% were in behalf of NBC's audience reaction session.

James M. Gaines,
Manager, WNBC.

Early Birds Get Editor

Cleveland, Dec. 30.

Following up his revelation that radio has early morning listeners, Stan Anderson, Cleveland Press radio editor, has consented to serve as judge in WHK's "What I Like To Hear on the Radio Before 8 a.m." contest.

Anderson doubted radio has listeners before 9 a.m. and asked those listening to WHK's early shows to call him. His line was jammed for hours.

CBS Year-End

Continued from page 21

month at CBS expense so they could relate their experiences on the air, had a wide station acceptance in the year or so it's been on, but the web has been disappointed in its audience pull.

Possible successor to "Cinderella" may be the new Johnny Faulk show, "Welcome Stranger," which will put chief emphasis on Faulk's gift of gab, although he'll no longer be spotted as the rustic of the sum-mer series of "Johnny's Front Porch" sustainer. Also auditioned last week was a new audience participation show by Bob Dixon (who emceed "Cinderella"), tabbed "Change Your Mind." On Saturday (28) three sample recordings were made of a CBS-built serial, "Counsellor-At-Large," with Johanna DeWitt as author, John Becker as director and Bob Landry as producer. On the Coast Cy Howard has auditioned a new situation comedy "My Friend Irma" on which the network is pinning high hopes.

Educational type quiz "Watch Your Language" is also up for audition. It's a proposal of Mortimer Frankel, an associate script editor in the program writing division. Will be auditioned within next fortnight.

$10,000,000 Transcription Biz

Continued from page 25

Crosby programs have no bearing on the case of disks vs. live shows, since for network use by national advertisers.

At the recent negotiations between recording companies and the AFRA, James Petrillo made no bones about how he felt concerning e.t.'s. The union chief admitted that he'd been working on plans to have musicians' pay for playing of transcriptions parallel that for live shows. Where the commercial record companies were given a 37½% rate hike, e.t. firms took a 50% bounce. Platter people counter with the fact that most of the small stations they service couldn't afford to hire musicians anyway, so the disks aren't depriving AFM members of work.

Probably the most important obstacle to wide circulation now encountered by transcription firms is in the small stations themselves. When a station manager or salesman, or both if it's a one-man operation, deals with the local grocer for radio advertising on a $500 budget, he can show more profit and better commissions on the full amount than on what's left after a kick-back to a purchaser of transcribed programs. As a result, the $500 is more likely to go into a local disk jockey program garnished by a few short spiels than into a planned production which requires a payment of a hundred dollars or more to a platter company.

To answer this, transcription companies point to two pertinent facts: One, the FCC Blue Book frowns upon this sort of practice; two, lesser quality, while bringing more immediate profit, will hurt in the long run by losing listeners, especially on the fringes of areas covered by powerful metropolitan stations. Outside of these considerations, there are the obvious facts. With every type of program available, a sponsor can choose the variety best suited to his business and feature top name talent, important in prestige value to a local merchant.

For the local time salesman, the programs are there for the listening, so that anyone who's interested can audition them instead of buying blindly. Low cost for value gained is another important sales factor. For NBC's "Playhouse of Favorites," a show featuring names like Elissa Landi, Signe Hasso and John Carradine and costing about $2,500 an episode to produce, the local sponsor on smaller stations pays about $9 a platter.

Dollar volume isn't the only indication of lessening resistance to e.t.'s. Among the networks, NBC has probably the most extensive transcription library available today, and the web has not stinted in assigning its top acting, writing and producing talent to the output of transcribed shows. Of the unions, AFRA has been the most receptive to platters since, prior to its formation, people who are now its members helped to pioneer the transcription field.

Actors and writers, in the early platter days of 1933-36, pooled their talents with promoters to produce disks on a purely speculative basis, with everyone participating in the sometimes negligible returns. The very fact that Petrillo was amenable to negotiations is seen by some transcription men as an encouraging sign. And station-wise, every outlet in the country has given time over to platters, with the smaller stations devoting a major percentage.

Transcription firms admit that a resounding success by the Crosby series can act as a springboard to their operation, if only by the wider acceptance gained from publicity. But they also know that his failure wouldn't affect them adversely; if the show doesn't go over, they feel it's generally realized that it won't be the fault of e.t.'s.

One platter head put the matter succinctly when he said, "We're selling quality programs at a low price. If listeners can hear a good show they don't give a damn how it's brought to them. We've arrived and we know it."

Barry Gray

Continued from page 21

Russ Dunbar to substitute for him. That started the night of Dec. 23.

Four nights later, Dunbar started playing a recording of Gray's voice, a brief spot, in which Mortimer was not named. On this recording, Gray apologized to Mortimer. The spot was played three times each night for three successive nights. That, Gray and WOR lawyers felt, ended the Mortimer suit threat.

Meanwhile, WOR decided to put Gray on at a time when he could snag listeners, giving him the Saturday afternoon, 3-5 p.m. slot. On that time, beginning Saturday (4), Gray will play records, have guests—but it will be a planned show, with the commentator approximately what he's going to say, and with a ban against naming columnists. Gray had been getting $200 a week for his seven-nights-a-week all-night stint. He will get the same coin for his two hours Saturday afternoon as long as he's a sustainer, and $400 when and if he goes commercial.

WOR is also putting him on Monday night, 10-10:30, in place of "Broadway Talks Back," if that show goes off the air. It's likely that program will go off in the next three weeks. For that, he would get $150 a week, and double if it goes commercial.

But CBS has entered the picture. The network wants Gray for two possible shots. One would be in place of the "Cinderella" show which is going off, at $500 a week sustaining and $1,250 commercial. The other would be for a Monday night half-hour at $250 sustaining, and $500 commercial.

CBS has cut an audition platter for this possible new show, with Patti Clayton as guestar, a small orchestra, and Goodman Ace supervising the show. Decision on the CBS plans will be made Friday (3).

Whether Gray will go to CBS, or stick to WOR exclusively, will be decided by the end of this week. He may be permitted to do one shot locally on WOR and stay on the CBS net at the same time.

To culminate his tribulations, Gray is going into Loew's State, N. Y., for a week, Jan. 23, at $1,750.

Paul Small is now handling his business affairs.

know the ropes

● It looks complex but if you know the ropes it's simple. Weed and Company men know the ropes and know the people.

WEED TELEVISION CORPORATION
RADIO STATION REPRESENTATIVES
New York ● Boston ● Chicago ● Atlanta
Detroit ● San Francisco ● Hollywood

'NAME' PERSONALITY
FOR YOUR DISK PROGRAM

Nationally prominent name IN MUSIC (presently active) would entertain proposition as Disk Jockey. All replies held in confidence.

BOX 7261
Variety, 154 West 46th Street, New York 19

Hooper Ratings continue to show that WTAG has more listeners than all other stations heard in the area combined.

WTAG WORCESTER

The FAT MAN hits a 10.8

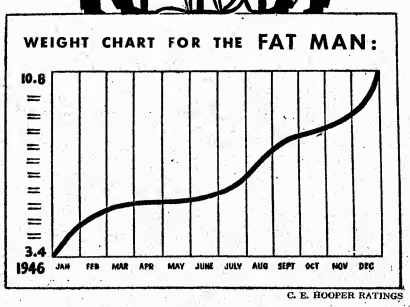
Sets in use—43.9

Share of audience—24.5

Now carried in 30 Hooper cities

Our baby is growing up! The Fat Man is a whale of a show with a Hooperating that's getting bigger and bigger and bigger. On the air less than a year, The Fat Man has had practically no advertising or promotion to hypo it—yet today try to find a higher-rated sustainer on any network. Broadcast Mondays, 8:30 p.m. EST. Starting Jan. 10, it will move to Fridays at 8:00 p.m. EST. It's available at a weekly cost that is surprisingly low: a really fat prize for some smart advertiser.



C. E. HOOPER RATINGS

ABC American Broadcasting Company

A NETWORK OF 238 RADIO STATIONS SERVING AMERICA

NOEL, NOEL
With Richard Bell, Madeleine Lee, Jackie Diamond, Alan Devitt, Jane Hernandez, Elliott Sullivan, Louise Barclay, Hester Sondergaarde, Adelaide Kline, Mildred Clinton, Carol Peterson, Paul Potter
Writer-Producer: Arnold Hartley
30 Mins., Tues. (24), 9:30 p.m.
WOV, N. Y.

Arnold Hartley, WOV's program director, whose contribution to radio's literature has been too infrequent during the past year, made a notable re-entry on Christmas Eve when he presented as the station's participation in the Yuletide season one of his finer creative efforts to date.

He called his new play "Noel, Noel," and it is Noel rang out truths that rasped because of their very truth, and lingered by the urgency of their demands. As Christmas Eve fare goes, Hartley's play was not wrapped in the aura of calm and beauty. Peace and goodwill were magnified by their absence.

In telling the simple story of Joseph and Mary and the Birth, the beauty of the symbolism faded. "Noel, Noel" turned into an analogy whereby the present-day chaos in the countries torn asunder by political plotting, monopolistic conniving and hunger, misery and despair threw into sharp relief the utter failure of the message that the Bethlehem tale rings forth on Christmas Eve.

First in China, then in Greece, and again in Spain, Hartley's "Noels" contrasted the turmoil of the decimated countries with the promise of the clear starlit night. But it was in his closing episode at Flushing Meadows in the empty chamber of the UN sanctuary that Hartley found the characters that best spoke his message to Americans. Three foreign-born charwomen and an American grandchild of one of them, in a symbolic mock session, made a plea for the hopes of achieving the peace as envisioned by the shepherds at the first Noel and now being fought for so desperately at the UN assembly.

Fortunately, "Noel" was given a full-bodied production, and the casting, directing and musical background were superior to that generally allowed by WOV production outlays. Hartley cornered some of the top acting talent around New York and directed them to their top capacities. Rose.

GLORIOUS CHRISTMAS
With Margaret Daum, Thomas L. Thomas, Evelyn MacGregor, Jean Dickenson, Bob Hannon, Remo Bolagnini, Victory Young Orch and chorus; Howard Claney announcer
Producer: Frank Hummert
60 Mins., 7 p.m., Wednesday (25)
BAYER'S ASPIRIN, DR. LYONS TOOTH POWDER, PHILLIPS MILK OF MAGNESIA
WNBC-NBC, N. Y.

(Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample)

Merger of three sponsors to elevate the daytime radio level to evening standards came as a neat Christmas Day package over NBC with the time consolidation of Dr. Lyons, Phillips and Bayers, uniting in a co-sponsored venture, "Glorious Christmas."

Actually program was a collaboration of six separate programs, inasmuch as the talent from "American Album of Familiar Music," "Manhattan Merry-Go-Round" and "Waltz Time" was used on this hour session, as time came from the commercial segments usually occupied by "Stella Dallas," "Young Widder Brown" and "Backstage Wife."

Result was a restful, smooth-flowing hour that created and sustained a holiday mood. Unmarred by commercial announcements and a minimum of identifying spiels, the session remained in a devotional groove during which time a talent cast, including Thomas L. Thomas, Donald Dame, Margaret Daum, Jean Dickenson, Evelyn MacGregor, Bob Hannon and orchestra and chorus under direction of Victor Young rendered a variety of religious tunes ranging from the pop carols to the more classical.

Frank Hummert took the correct line in conceiving a low-keyed tempo, inasmuch as the show was in direct competition with the first half of the Elgin show which carried top-flight comics in its entourage.

The program provided almost a continual flow of music, with sufficient variety to sustain interest, and in keeping with the religious spirit of the holiday. Jose.

JUNE IN JANUARY
With Henry George's Orchestra, Cunningham Sisters; Dick Roll, announcer
Producer: Bob Spencer
15 Mins.; Thurs., 6:30 p.m.
Willoughby Machine & Tool Co.
WTAM, Cleveland

A pleasant quarter hour of supper music delightfully framed around the "June in January" theme is the newest commercial show over WTAM. Although the music of Henry George's orchestra is a bit thin, the vocal trio of the Cunningham Sisters makes listening easy.

Company sponsors a gas-conversion burner, and hence the June in January theme which is used to tie the musical program together. Orchestra could use additional pieces to supplement its eight instruments and lend more tone to their numbers. All told, the 15-minutes contains five musical numbers, two by the orchestra, two by the trio and one utilizing both. Announcing and commercial by Dick Roll is treated with professional clarity and nice change of gab. Mark.

CLEVELAND'S Chief STATION SAYS

3 HEADS BETTER THAN 1!

When Cleveland's CHIEF station carries the ball for you . . . every program packs a triple threat—WJW gives you three-way service as master entertainer, super salesman, potent advertising medium! When WJW calls your sales-signals you gain an enviable position—an enviable listener acceptance in a great market . . . Cleveland

BASIC ABC Network CLEVELAND, O.

WJW 850 KC 5000 Watts DAY AND NIGHT

REPRESENTED NATIONALLY BY HEADLEY-REED COMPANY

BOB SMITH SHOW
With Smith, Tex Antoine, announcer
Producer: William Patterson
55 Mins.; Mon. thru Sun., 7:05-7:30 a.m.; 6-6:30 a.m.
Participating
WNBC, N. Y.

Bob Smith's early morning git-up-and-git gambol of disk jockeyry on NBC's N. Y. flagship follows without much deviation the formula standardized by Arthur Godfrey's pre-breakfast chatter on the rival WCBS station. Like Godfrey, Smith dispenses innocuous, easy-to-take talk with a pleasant informality that doesn't jar a sleep-befogged brain into a sudden waking state.

Secret of the show, which is divided into two half-hours separated by an interval of news and announcements, is devoted to pop musical tunes. Smith, who has a singing voice that can pass muster in the pre-dawn hour, takes frequent turns at pattered vocals delivered in a quiet style with piano accompaniment. Platter numbers are also selected with an ear for early morning tastes, being mostly on the light, melodious, non-jive ballad side. Plugs are given straight treatment, with no over-emphasis or kidding, either. Herm.

ABC CHRISTMAS PARTY
Writers: Welbourne Kelley, others
Directors: Charles Harrell, Paul Schaefer, Larry Robertson
Producer: Harrell
90 Mins., Tues, (25), 10 p.m.
Sustaining
WJZ-ABC, N. Y.

The ABC Christmas Party, done for an hour and a half on the holiday eve, was a sort of a stroll-in showcase of the web's wares, having on it as it did much of the net's most colorful talent. But the scripting, wobbly direction and generally creaky production made of it a disjointed affair which, while it contained some good spots, could have kept very few listeners tied to the dials. While one assumes Welbourne Kelley did an overall continuity, bits and dabs were done by the regular writers of many of the shows—with corresponding result.

High point on the broadcast was a gabby piece done in the name of "Theatre Guild on the Air," in which Basil Rathbone and Geraldine Fitzgerald starred. Stephen Vincent Benet's beautifully meaningful "A Child Is Born." Low point came when a pair of emcees were hooked up to mikes in the homes, respectively, of Tom Breneman on the Coast and Don McNeill in Chi. Between them and radio carol singers, the show ranging from the mediocre to the trite.

Walter Winchell delivered a platitudinous sermon, J. Scott Smart ("The Fat Man") cast his character in a boring burlesque, and Henry Morgan's imitations which were supposed to rib various types of radio shows but, in the main, ribbed only Henry Morgan. Claude Lasher and Norris Goff ("Lum 'n' Abner") did okay with a special little Xmas-in-the-tall-grass number.

Whenever there was music, it was good, Paul Whiteman's orch, and chorus carrying their share well, and Harry Babbitt's combo on the Coast coming in with expert licks. Patrice Munsel's singing was tops. Both Whiteman and Don Wilson made the best of their emceeing chores, but they had little worthy of extending themselves. Bing Crosby closed the overlong program with a reading from the Bible. Cars.

FOR THESE WE SPEAK
With Paul Ford, Elizabeth Morgan, Ellen Dunlap, Abbey Lewis, Helen Choate, Bob Donelson, narrator
Writers: Jack Neher, Alex Sareyan
Director: Drexel Hines
15 Mins.; Mon., 9:15 p.m.
Sustaining
WINS, N. Y.

Presented under the auspices of the New York committee of the National Mental Health Foundation, this series of dramats is designed to shed some light on psychiatric problems and upset some of the popular prejudices towards mental cases that have been a carryover from the Middle Ages. A group of 18 indies are airing this laudable series of transcriptions which are also being picked up by the Canadian Broadcasting System.

Show is severely handicapped by the 15-minute time limitation which is hardly enough to permit anything beyond a few quick story brush strokes. Opening session, entitled "Aunt Milly and the Family Skeleton," was themed to the idea that mental illness is no disgrace. Story, which revolved around a small town family which was forced to commit one of its members to a state institution for the mentally ill, pointed up the irrationality of the embarrassment flowing from such a necessity. Thesping and scripting were high calibre and show, despite its frank public service pitch, should garner a considerable amount of average dialer interest.

In a brief intro to the story, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt also stressed the falsity of the ancient notions still current about insanity. Herm.

HARLEM HOSPITALITY CLUB
With Willie Bryant, Maceo Birch, Loumel Morgan Trio; Beulah Bryant, guest Writers: Bill Redford, Sam Levine
Producer: George Bresnik
30 Mins., Mon. through Fri., 3:30 p.m. Sustaining
WNYC, N. Y.

This is a fresh variation on the multitudinous audience participation shows, the twist being that show comes from Harlem, N. Y., and is the first such bigtime all-Negro program. (Show is a Mutual network presentation, but is heard in N. Y. on WNYC because of previous commercial commitments at that hour on Mutual's N. Y. flagship, WOR). Show is also fresh in that it has an unlimited quality of rare in such programs, with a good deal of fun, and sufficient variety to hold one's attention.

A general air of informality and abandon pervades the whole thing, affecting emcee, supporting acts and audience. Studio audience evidently is having a wonderful time, and the mood communicates itself in good measure to the home listener, even though the latter is aware he is missing much of the fun. Program is broken up nicely with a musical trio and a guest singer interpolating numbers. Support they get from an audience clapping hands at time to their music is also suggest the uninhibited quality of the occasion.

But what really carries the show is the emceeing of Willie Bryant, who is glib, gay, prying but never offensive, and who carries the program through with nary a suggestion of condescension or racial slant. Show is constructed in the form of a "Harlem Hospitality Club," with Bryant as the Grand Mogul and High Potentate, and Maceo Birch as the secretary. The studio audience are the members, with the invited sisters or brothers who are called on getting handsome presents for their appearance and participation.

Thursday's (26) program was a good sample of program's appeal and showmanship handling. "Members" brought to the mike included a "sister" from Jamaica, B.W.I. with a penchant for telling Florida who the West Indies men more "capable" than Harlemites; a 59-year-old, 230-pound woman from Florida who was going on a diet, hoping to snare a young man around 23, and a 69-year-old Harlem gentleman who had been a Gold Star Mother on a trip to France in 1930. Bryant's kidding with the first two on their ages, romantic leanings, etc., and serious handling of the third woman, was effective contrast. Gimmick of having the middle-aged femme "members" walk around the 1,200-seated Savoy ballroom to pick their "dream man of the afternoon" and Bryant's treatment of trio and man, was a good stunt, lending itself to much ribbing. Bryant's musical trio, and his guest Beulah Bryant, also presented some smart music. Bron.

THE WAYNE KING SHOW
With Nancy Evans, Billy Leach, Franklyn Mac Cormack and John McCormick, announcers Producer-Director: Hal Miller
Writer: Mort Hall
30 Mins.; Sat., 9:45 p.m.
SEAN-A-MEEZAGE
WBBM-CHICAGO

(Weiss & Geller)

The same format used on the summer replacement show for Jimmy Durante and again for the platter program for Frederic Ziv is used here to the tune of a half-hour of sweet and restful music in a vein so typical of Wayne King that it has long been a tonal signature for identification.

Definitely not for the jive jumpers, the mood is dominated by the string section and the sax. Opening theme, as always, "The Waltz You Saved For Me," was followed by 10 numbers. Included were "Vienna Life," "One Morning In May" and "Pretty Girl Is Like a Melody," which last included a solo by King on his gold sax—just like the old Aragon days. Evelyn Davis featured a lusty violin, with "Dark Eyes" and "Russian Lullaby" being backed by the strong string section.

The vocal contribs were a smooth and restful "That Is This Thing Called Love" and "Buttermilk Sky" from Nancy Evans and a regaling "Dem Dung" and "Let It Snow" from Billy Leach. In between gab, commercial and continuity, went through with excellent timing.

The aud response gimmick is a giveaway of compacts to the women who write the most interesting reasons as to why they wish to hear a certain song played. So far these missives haven't been put on the air.

JOLLY BILL AND JANE
With Bill Steinke, Pat Pichard, Sandra Rowan, organist
15 Mins.; 5-5:15 p.m., Mon.-Thru-Fri.
Sustaining
KPO, San Francisco

Bill Steinke, former New York Mirror cartoonist and an NBC network favorite way-back-when, is offering his "Jolly Bill and Jane" show to a large audience of the pig-tail-and-scooter set, if gauged by the fan mail which is pouring in from kids and parents alike. Mail is hit-

(Continued on page 30)

ELGIN CHRISTMAS SHOW
With Bob Hope, Edgar Bergen, Cass Daley, Ginny Simms, Roy Rogers, Sons of Pioneers, Benny Goodman and Sextet, Charioteers, Amos and Andy, Alan Reed, Bob Crosby and orchestra, Set Svanhoim, Frances Robinson, Lou Bring orchestra; Don Ameche, emcee; Ken Carpenter, announcer
Writers: Ed Heiwick, Jean Holloway
Co-producers: Earl Ebb, John Christ
120 Mins.; Wed. (25), 4 p.m.
ELGIN WATCH CO.
WCBS-CBS, N. Y.

(J. Walter Thompson)

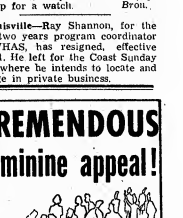
For the fifth annual time, Elgin Watch presented its Christmas Day gift of two hours of variety and stars to CBS listeners Wednesday (25). There was a little bit of something for everybody, in a potpourri of comedy, drama, longhair and pop music, carols and spirituals. The show had some faces new to the act, but with most of its standbys back. A more imaginative format might have woven all those acts together into a central theme, appropriate to so special a holiday as Christmas—as F&G did, for instance, with its soapers on Thanksgiving Day. The Elginites passed up the opportunity, however, giving its listeners instead the usual fare. But it was good fare, in typical choice segments of Bob Hope or Edgar Bergen humor, Benny Goodman or Bob Crosby music, a Ginny Simms song, a Roy Rogers ballad, the comedy of Amos 'n' Andy or the quips of Alan Reed, the Wagnerian soarings of Met tenor Set Svanholm, or the plain foolings of Victor Borge. There wasn't too much originality in the presentation, one act seguing into another with only a bare introduction from emcee Don Ameche. A dramatic bit on Handel and his "Messiah," towards the seventh furlong, made amends in bringing some point to the otherwise free-for-all show.

Commercials were frequent but not too intrusive or annoying, and a couple of them were worked cleverly into the routine, as with Mortimer Snerd's troubles in telling time, or Bob Hope's bit about paying up for a watch. Bron.

Louisville—Ray Shannon, for the past two years program coordinator of WHAS, has resigned, effective Jan. 1. He left for the Coast Sunday (29) where he intends to locate and engage in private business.

TREMENDOUS feminine appeal!



Mutual's "MARRIED FOR LIFE" SUNDAY 2 PM EST

1. 2. 3. ed cashman HOLLYWOOD

WSPR, WMAS Defend Operations Vs. Claim Of Snafued News Coverage

Indictment of Springfield, Mass., local stations for snafued news coverage during current three-months strike of the town's dailies, is rebutted by execs of WSPR and WMAS. Answering overall charges that both stations lacked radio news "know-how," they counter with claims of rendering a completely adequate emergency news servicing job.

Robert Donahue, station manager for WMAS, Springfield's CBS outlet, says: "We are not operating our news service to suit the striking reporters, nor any other group. On the basis of years of experience we're doing the best job we can of putting on the air anything we think will be of interest or value to any sizeable portion of our audience. As we see it, that is our obligations and some people—in fact, a lot of people, go so far as to say we're doing an excellent job."

Howard S. Keefe, promotion manager for ABC's outlet, WSPR, charges that a total misconception exists concerning the function of radio during the newspaper strike. Radio, he says, is making no attempt to supersede the dailies, and only has the avowed intention of providing emergency service in giving widest possible dissemination of essential news.

Keefe adds: "For many a long day there has existed on the part of newspapers in general an utter lack of cordial regard for radio. That feeling has not been reciprocated, because it has been the conviction of radio broadcasting that it is in no wise predestined to replace the newspaper. It cannot, in our judgement; nor shall it ever. This local emergency seems to have presented to many holding membership in the 'Fourth Estate' what they consider an opportunity to say: 'See! What did we tell you?' There must be agreement on the obligation — and the extent of it—placed upon radio stations in this community by the discontinuance of publication of its four daily and one Sunday newspapers; there must be such agreement before the evaluation of radio's success in meeting that obligation may be rightfully made."

'Aldrich' Duo to 'Go Live' For March Dimes Trek

Jackie Kelk and Ezra Stone, of the "Aldrich Family" air show, will "go live" when the two stars embark on a tour of the hospital circuit to put on a "Henry and Homer" routine for wounded vets. Second junket on March of Dimes will follow.

Tour tees off Jan. 3-4 in Lyons, N. J.; 5-6 in Coatesville, Pa.; 7 in Newcastle, Del.; 10-11 in Richmond, Va.; 12 at Mount Alto Hospital, Washington, and 13-14 at Newton D. Baker Hospital, Salisbury, West Va.

MOD tour will start Jan. 17 at Hartford, and follow with Boston, Atlanta, Cleveland, Detroit, Louisville and Chicago.

Space for Sale

Continued from page 21

Sunday evening time opens up when Hires moves to CBS and the 7:30 to 8 Sunday night slot is also for sale. The morning 9 to 12:30 time is sold out solid. Station-time co-ops fill 12:30 to 2:30, and in the afternoon there's only one hour open—15 minutes of "Ladies Be Seated" and the 3:45 to 4:30 periods. But Monday nights ABC has open 8:15 to 8:30, 9 to 10 and 10:15 to 11. Tuesday nights, 8:15 to 8:30 and 9:30 to 11. Wednesday nights, 8:15 to 9:30. Thursday nights, 8:30 to 11. Friday nights, 8 to 8:30. Saturday nights, 8 to 8:30 and 10 to 11.

Mutual: Sunday afternoon is all sold out. Sunday evening 8:45 to 9 is for sale. Daytime commercial vacancies include 11 to 11:30 (recently made network time); 11:30 to 11:45 (open Tuesdays and Thursdays); 2:15 to 2:30 in the afternoon; 3 to 3:30, 3:30 to 4 and 5 to 5:15. Open nighttime slots (network time starts at 8:30) include: Monday, 9:30 to 10; Tuesdays, 8 to 8:30 and 9:30 to 10:15 (latter an immovable sustainer); Wednesdays, 8 to 8:30 and 9:30 to 10:30; Thursdays, 8 to 9 and 10 to 10:30; Fridays, 8 to 9 and 9:30 to 10; Saturdays, 8:30 to 10:30.

NOVEL TRIO BIDS FOR INDIE STATION OKAY

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Hollywood hucksters have added a new gimmick to broadcasting. Application for a new indie station has been made to the FCC by a combination of local personalities that is unique in the trade and certain to cause some raised eyebrows here if okayed. Request to the FCC comes from the innocently-named Beverly Hills Broadcasting Co., representing as its three major stockholders, A. Lester Kelley, of the Kelley Kar Co.; Howard Tullis, of the Tullis Co., an advertising agency, and Harold Anderson, partner in the toney Beverly Hills hotel.

Kelley outfit is one of the town's heaviest air time spenders. The Tullis Co. handles a sizeable chunk of the accounts now scattered among the local indies. The hostelry, too, is an advertiser. The triumvirate should be successful for obvious reasons.

Opposing them, however, is established indie, KWKW, which seeks the same channel, 830. Now operating on 1430, the latter seeks a switch and a power change from 1,000 to 5,000 watts. Believed to have applied previously, KWKW may upset what promises to be a happy picture for some.

Arthur Hale News Show In Revamp on Mutual

Arthur Hale, gabber doing a three-times-a-week, 15-minute, 7:30 p.m. news show for Richfield over Mutual, is changing the format of his show, reducing his shows to two days a week, but adding 31 stations to his coverage.

Change, going into effect tonight (Tuesday) puts Hale virtually on the Mutual news staff. Until now he has worked outside the Mutual news room, using Associated Press material exclusively.

With the same sponsor bankrolling him, he will be on only Tuesdays and Thursdays. But through the use of the news bureau's facilities, he will pick up remotes from any spot around the world where hot or interesting news is happening.

WOKO GETS EXTENSION

Albany, Dec. 30.

WOKO, which was to go off the air Feb. 1 in accordance with a U.S. Supreme Court decision of Dec. 9 upholding an FCC edict to deny a license renewal because of concealed ownership evidence, has been granted another temporary extension—until Mar. 1.

FCC notice of extension was issued "pending action of the mandate of the Supreme Court."

Shoestring Budget for N.Y. Bureau Points to Hopes for Decent Coin

Albany, Dec. 30.

Hopes are being held by some politicos and by a number of radio people around the state that the New York State Radio Bureau may get a decent budget from the State for the next fiscal year, giving it an opportunity to function as it should.

For a while, the bureau, after it was set up more than a year ago, got a skeptical reception, especially from operators of stations in New York City and in the other larger cities around the state. Most felt it was intended to be some kind of a spearhead for ballyhooing Gov. Thomas E. Dewey's political aspirations.

Since last April, however, when Miller Heberer, former prof of radio and speech at Kansas State College, was appointed director of the bureau, much of that skepticism has been dissolved. Feeling now seems to be almost universal among ops of the 69 stations in the state that there is a real place for the bureau. Trouble with it now is that it operates on a shoestring.

$6,500 for Chief

For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1947, the bureau has a budget of only $35,000, and most of this goes for salaries, although the salaries are not at all what they might be. Heberer gets only $6,500 a year (plus a 14% cost-of-living bonus), and he has a staff of five, including three writers.

Bureau, it's felt, should have a staff of about 18 people and a total budget of about $440,000 for a year. While it's not expected that the Legislature will spring for quite that maximum program, it is hoped that the solons here may up the bureau's budget to at least $200,000 for the next fiscal year, to give it a chance to do its stuff.

Heberer's bureau sends out spot announcements, packets messages on safety, health, etc., for state departments, and plans some transcriptions. These are all placed on stations on a cuffo basis. A plan is under way also to siphon to the radio stations around the state some of the state's folding money. The State Publicity Bureau currently spends money for advertising resorts, etc., in magazines and newspapers, but none of this coin goes to radio.

OF BETTER SERVICE TO WGN LISTENERS AND ADVERTISERS

An aggressive program of expanded radio reception and facilities will be carried out by WGN in 1947. Our new television station, WGNA, will be in operation. Our new building will move towards completion with additional studio facilities. WGNB will continue to furnish FM listeners with top programming.

We look forward to a year of even greater service to the middle west and our advertisers.

A Clear Channel Station . . . . . Serving the Middle West

WGN CHICAGO 11 ILLINOIS 50,000 Watts 720 On Your Dial

MUTUAL BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Eastern Sales Office: 220 East 42nd Street, New York 17, N. Y.
West Coast Representatives: Keenan and Eickelberg
235 Montgomery St., San Francisco 4 • 411 W. Fifth St., Los Angeles 13

Radio Reviews

Continued from page 28

ting KPO from as far north as Washington state with obvious approval of this non-blood and thunder five times weekly epic in the tradition of the kid shows which prospered before the "Tennessee Jed," "Tom Mix," "Superman" and "Captain Midnight" killer-dillers took over.

Using Frisco's famed "Cable Cars" as a device to "transport" his to his realm of daily fantasy, Jolly Bill weaves his stories with his expansive voice to good effect. Each day he also invites his young listeners to send in drawings on suggested subjects, mentioning the names of the moppet-contributors as they are received. The formula used by Steinke is almost as old as radio itself but it is a welcome relief from some of the gory goo that is handed out by super-duper spine chillers.

Supporting Steinke is Pat Prichard who, using a juvenile falsetto, simulates the role of Jolly Bill's "niece" to good effect. She handles the song end and the femme chatter. Eloise Bowen, organist, provides competent musical support. Ted.

POPULAR PLAYHOUSE
("Of Unsound Mind")
With Rupert Caplan, Bob Goodier, Eileen Clifford, Gerald Rowan, Rudy Stoeckel
Director-producer: Rupert Caplan
Writer: Harry Junkin
Music: Alexander Brott
30 Mins.; Thurs., 8 p.m.
Sustaining
CBS Trans-Canada

A "Gaslight" in reverse describes this opus to the letter. Harry Junkin took the familiar I'm-going-to-drive-you-nuts theme used so successfully for sock b.o. effect in the flicker "Gaslight" and turned out an expertly written, flesh-creeping piece of work. Tension was held throughout for a compact and gripping 30-min. show.

What Junkin did here was to take a wife whose husband, a wounded vet, had just been released from a mental hospital, and make her the villain of the piece. She'd been playing around with some other guy while her mate was at war, and decided to get him out of the way by pointing out relapses in his memory, hinting that he was not all there, etc. Other guy finally got conscience-stricken and told the husband the truth. Whereupon hubby did away with his wife.

Although familiar stuff, show was a socko job commercially. Ending was slightly anti-climactic and fell a little short of the pace and tension set through the whole play. Production by Caplan was superb. Not a little of the success was due to score by Alexander Brott, one of Canada's top composers.

Acting was also on a high level with Caplan walking off with the honors as the husband. Eileen Clifford as the wife was most convincing and Robert Goodier, Gerald Rowan, Rudy Stoeckel and others maintained the high level of the production. Laza.

Follow-up Comment

Bert Lahr, Marlene Dietrich and songsmith Arthur Schwartz (wotta trailer for his latest WB filmusical, "Time, Place, Girl"!) were a good parlay on Hildegarde's show. Lahr, a funny man always, again came into his own as a guester, and again brings up the question anew how come he couldn't click as headman of his own show....Phil Harris-Alice Faye not only getting better with their own Fitch half-hour, but almost makes the trade forget why was NBC nervous about their Hooper?....Winchell getting mellow? But mellow or not, in print or on the air, his stuff's punchier than ever. Must be the Florida climate.

Mgt. LOU CLAYTON
UNITED REXALL DRUG CO.
Friday—CBS—9:30 p.m., EST
M-G-M—"This Time for Keeps"
"It Happened in Brooklyn"

THE VOICES OF MARLIN BLADES
SATTLER'S DEP'T STORE
ADAM'S CLOVE-BEEMAN'S GUM
JINGLES
that don't
JANGLE
RADIO'S MOST COMPLETE, EFFECTIVE JINGLE SERVICE
YOUR Jingle Sung - or - Written, Packaged, Produced:
'LANNY & GINGER' GREY
545-5th AVE., N. Y. C. - AT. 9-4021
ADAM HATS, ETC., ETC.

FORT INDUSTRY SELLS WHIZ IN ZANESVILLE

Toledo, Dec. 30.

Fort Industry Co., Toledo, has sold WHIZ, Zanesville, to three Zanesville men, subject to FCC approval. The buyers are Orville B. Littick, president of the Zanesville Publishing Co., which publishes the Times-Recorder and the Signal; his brother, Clay Littick, secretary-treasurer and business manager of the firm, and Ernest B. Graham, Zanesville attorney.

Littick said the station would be operated independently of the publishing concern. Application has been made for approval of the transfer Jan. 1.

'Whistler' Vice 'Finegan'

"The Whistler," mystery drama that got its air audition on CBS during last summer's hiatus, has been bought by Household Finance Co. as replacement for "That's Finegan," Thursday's, 10:30-11 p.m.

Substitute goes in on CBS, except in the Pacific area, March 20. On the Coast, "Finegan" stays on for another sponsor, Signal Oil Co.

MARKLE'S PLANS INDEF.

Fletcher Markle passed through New York enroute to Toronto for holidays, sans mustache and not recognized by some of his acquaintances at CBS where he directed a couple of Workshops earlier in 1946. He's been with Orson Welles in California and Mexico.

Future plans indef but director-writer does not plan to stay in Canada where he made his rep.

"Say! Speaking of Champions! They ought to name one of these games the Wheaties Bowl!"

10 ABC SUSTAINERS' 'SHUFFLE ALONG' TIME

Ten ABC shows, nearly all sustainers, are being moved around in the next two weeks in a New Year's shuffle edict by veepee Adrian Samish, in charge of programming.

Paul Whiteman Show, which has had the 8 p.m. Sunday time, goes to the 8:30-9 slot, Wednesdays, for a couple of weeks, then will settle down into the 9-9:30 time, Wednesdays, after Jan. 29. Other Sunday shows being switched are: "Stump the Authors," to Thursday at 9:30; "The Clock," into "Stump" place, Sunday at 7:30, and "Willie Piper," to Wednesday at 8:30.

Two Tuesday night shows are being bumped to an hour later the same night, "The O'Neills" going into the 9:30 time, and Rex Maupin's orchestra into the 10 o'clock slot.

"The Fat Man" vacates the Monday night at 8:30 time for "New Adventures of Sherlock Holmes," which moves over from Saturday night. "Fat Man" goes into the 8-8:30 p.m. time Fridays. "So You Want to Lead a Band" also goes to Monday night, at 9:30, vacating its old Thursday night time. And "Court of Missing Heirs" moves from Friday at 8 to Sunday at 6.

Adman Ups

Continued from page 23

they took over. The fact that so-called showmen have not come up with any showmanship powerful enough to wrest audience interest from commercial programs, seems to offer all the proof necessary.

It's true that not one officer of the American Tobacco Co. writes Jack Benny's program. Nor did Johnson create Fibber McGee and Molly while waiting for a batch of wax to boil. It is highly improbable that Lord Leverhulme has written so much as one usable gag for Bob Hope.

Producers Don't Write 'Em

But how many plays have been written by Charles B. Dillingham or The Theatre Guild? How many motion pictures have the Warner Bros. or Louis B. Mayer ever sweated out over a hot typewriter? They're producers, angels, as it were, to the creative artists of the theatre and pictures. That's the role advertisers play in radio.

How wisely they select the productions they'll finance and how wisely they cast them is the measure of their showmanship. And this measure is again measured by the wisdom with which they choose the men to create and/or carry on their successes. Give radio back to the showmen? What showmen? The ones who didn't have enough showmanship to realize what they had when they had it? You don't have to be born with a stage-brace in your mouth to be a showman. It's a quality inherent in many men of many callings. A doctor can be a playwright. A sailor can be an author. A couple of real estate operators can produce Broadway hits.

Showmanship is merely the ability to be successful in show business. If radio is showbusiness, it is certainly successful showbusiness, or how is so much money being made in it? On this basis the men who make it successful are showmen and these men are, for the most part, either advertising men or men selected and deputized by advertising men to act for them, just as all creative people are selected and deputized to work for the capital behind any show.

Sometimes writers and producers create independently and sell their creation to an advertiser. Other advertisers prefer to employ skilled writers and producers to create specially for them. Whichever way it works, it's working. Just as it's always worked in the theatre and in pictures. And if there's anything wrong with radio under the present setup it's in direct proportion to what's wrong in every other professional, artistic and business setup. None is perfect.

If advertisers sometimes butt into the jobs of the writers and directors, so, too, does the money on Broadway and in Hollywood dictate to the creative echelon. But advertising men are attacked for doing what bankers and other angels do. Actually the only real difference is that radio, with the deference it owes to its elders and the self-consciousness of youth, defends itself from attack by apologizing. It's time radio stopped apologizing and started blowing as hard as most big successes blow.

Inside Stuff—Radio

Among the four network flagships in New York, WOR (Mutual) is the only one that leads the city's principal indies in the number of commercials aired. The NBC, ABC and CBS key stations in the city are all, in that respect, behind four of the town's independent local outlets.

These are among a mass of figures, embracing a 600-page report with 18,000 entries, made up for the New York market by Radio Reports, Inc. This monitoring outfit clocked and counted the commercials on nine N. Y. stations for a week, Dec. 4-10, logging every commercial by type, length, who delivered it, at what time, including every airer from 7 a.m. to 11 p.m., during the period.

Warning that the log shows, primarily "the commercial traffic on the stations and, to some extent, the nature of that traffic," but not the dollar-volume of the commercial business on the stations, RR does indicate the competitive picture of payola plugs in the market. It proves the contention of the flagships that they don't crowd so many commercials into their schedules, since some of them take no spot business at all with the possible exception of time signals.

In the order of the number of commercials, the log lists the nine leading stations as follows: WOR, WHN, WNEW, WMCA, WINS, WNBC, WJZ, WCBS, and WQXR.

An antenna that glistens isn't necessarily a gold mine and the peculiar public feeling that millions are to be made in radio station operation can be vividly disproved, as witness one example in the west. In a town not too distantly north and east of Hollywood there's an indie station that has in its year of existence dropped $40,000 for its owners. A locale that never really rated its own outlet, it is one of the many getting the first or an additional station, thanks to the blind eagerness of veterans and others, plus the largesse of the FCC. Without thought to results so long as applicants qualify under the regulations, the FCC is ladeling out stations at an accelerated pace. Green newcomers to the business and, in some cases, those with a foot in—and no business brains, i.e., announcers, engineers, et al, are stepping in. Foregoing is a prime example of an engineer gone owner-manager—with serious regrets, and who would now just as eagerly sell.

Capitol Records and Transcriptions is attempting to build good will for its products by supplying cuffo live shows to newcomer radio stations in the west. The plattery sends shows comprised of its talent roster and production staff to preeming-stations for live inaugural programs. In return, it's presumed that Cap gets an edge in purchases of disks and library service. Those stations already benefiting are KLOK, San Jose, and KIST, Santa Barbara; KOAT, Albuquerqe, and KTRC, Santa Fe. The latter is now being lined up, with Cap paying the freight.

Sig Schy is pressing the Al Jolson albums at $48.96 each—he has over 100 orders to date—at World Broadcasting, as an independent proposition, away from Barry Gray. Latter didn't want WOR to get complicated (Decca was threatening suit, etc.) so turned everything over to Schy. The Jolson album is the result of an interview he did ad lib with the disk jockey some months ago.

A service which is to specialize in public and private financing for the radio industry has been set up by Stark & Co., Inc., of New York. Outfit will also handle negotiations for sale and purchase of radio properties. Howard E. Stark, formerly with Lehman Bros., is prexy of the firm; Stanley Rubin is veepee; Sonia Bram is secretary.

Pioneer Spirit

Continued from page 25

tion into many of those shows. Further, there is a continuity there. People listen to Gabriel Heatter or Elmer Davis because the personalities had been built up. Where is there a personality covering foreign news now?

Crystal Set Thinking

"Radio has not taken the trouble to build a peace-world frame of reference for its foreign pick-ups. During the war, when Ed Murrow came on with 'This Is London . . .' people knew, saw, felt, sometimes smelled and tasted London. Now a guy comes on and says 'This Is Berlin,' but it isn't Berlin—it's a guy reading something from some place, and that place could be New York or Hollywood just as credibly. The novelty of listening to a man just because he is in Berlin or Rio de Janeiro, instead of New York or Washington, has long since worn off. There were times when picking up Cincinnati on a crystal set was also exciting. But both those excitements belong to a dead era. Only, in the case of foreign coverage, radio's imagination went dead with the era.

"Foreign news can pay off, in public service, and in sponsorship, if any one in radio tried to build it, make it interesting, give it life and showmanship. The Hooperatings might take six months or so in reaching respectability. But Fred Allen didn't land among the Top 15 overnight, either. The difference is that in most types of service radio cares about improvements. In the case of foreign news, radio has conveniently folded up and died. But the blame is not the listener's; it's the broadcasting industry's."

Wylie Play to Dowling

Max Wylie's play on India which was under option for some time with the Theatre Guild has now passed into hands of Eddie Dowling for prospective Broadway production. Wylie, radio program supervisor employed at Young & Rubicam and brother of novelist Philip Wylie, takes a strong anti-imperialist slant in his play, it's said.

Wylie is just out of hospital after emergency op.

DO YOU NEED MONEY? HM-M-M?

Baltimore, Maryland—

Ralph Powers, who wakes up Maryland 6 days a week, asked for contributions toward an airplane fund during the war. The river of money that poured in bought not a tail assembly—not a motor—but two Martin Bombers!

For WFBR is a living, breathing radio station not just a spot on a dial. WFBR offers all the glamor of Radio City in smaller replica — studio audiences — product displays—all the plusses that smart advertisers want and buy. It pays to advertise on Radio Station WFBR. Ask the Blair man or write WFBR, Baltimore.

MGM Records to Roll in Jan.; 20th-Fox To Buy Jack Robbins' 26% in Pub Cos.

Shortly after the new year Metro expects to have its decks cleared in two directions. MGM Records will start pressing in January, utilizing the Zenith radio stores as merchandising outlets, and the long negotiating deal for 20th Century-Fox to take over Jack Robbins' 20% interest in the Big Three (Robbins, Feist and Miller Music Corps.) will be consummated. Robbins' slice of the three firms was purchased by Metro six months ago.

Metro will sell to 20th-Fox the Robbins interest for the same $675,000 gross amount for which it bought out Robbins. Idea is to make a profit from 20th-Fox's more active participation in the publishing adjunct. While 20th has about 11 more years to go under a 20-year contract with Robbins-Feist-Miller, it's been an open secret that it couldn't control its songsmiths. Mack Gordon segued to Bregman-Vocco-Conn, for instance. When an Ira Gershwin does a score (such as the upcoming "Miss Pilgrim") that means he publishes it through his own Max Dreyfus connections.

Even Metro couldn't keep Harry Warren happy and had to set up a subsidiary company for that songsmith, after buying off E. H. (Buddy) Morris' hold on Warren for around $50,000.

Joe Moskowitz and Bill Michel for 20th-Fox, and Lep Friedman and Charlie Moskowitz for Loew-Metro are consummating the details whereby both film companies become partnered in the music publishing firms more actively.

However, they will not be linked in MGM Records which outfit is under Moskowitz-Friedman's general executive supervision, with Marvin Schenck, Frank Walker, Henry Myerson and Jesse Kaye (Hollywood) handling the talent. Latter includes Lauritz Melchior, Kate Smith, Jimmy Dorsey and eventually is expected to bring in many Metro film personalities of the calibre of Judy Garland, Jose Iturbi, Gene Kelly, et al., when contractual commitments permit.

Sepia Syndicate May Buy Avodon

Los Angeles, Dec. 30.

Syndicate headed by Eddie "Rochester" Anderson is evincing interest in buying Avodon ballroom and turning spot into a straight-policy Negro nitery. It is understood that Joe Louis will be invited into picture to share with Anderson front billing. Three nights last week Anderson prowled the ballroom, sizing up operations and talking with Jack Rogers, owner.

Reportedly, Rogers wants $400,000 for his investment in site, which bowed last May and has had rather rugged going since. Rogers holds 14-year lease on property and pays approximately $600 weekly rental. He spent approximately $285,000 redecorating the spot.

When current Count Basie band opened at Avodon three weeks ago, management lowered color bar and commenced admitting Negro customers along with white. Biz blossomed and during recent weeks site has been only ballroom hereabouts doing well.

Cap Records Nabs Over 10 Million To Double '45 Period

Capitol Records, now looked upon as the fourth major record manufacturer, along with RCA-Victor, Columbia and Decca, turned up an earnings statement here last week which justifies the labelling. For the 10 months ended Oct. 31 last, Capitol just about doubled its 1945 billings for the similar period, raking in $10,331,195 as compared to the $6,391,685 gross of the entire 12 months of last year.

Out of this, the company realized a net income of $736,263 after preferred dividends, taxes, etc., to pay $1.60 per share on the 430,000 shares of common outstanding.

What caused the sales and subsequent earnings jump was Capitol's buyout last year of the Scranton Record Manufacturing Co. setup. This gave the company a sizeable jump in production.

Harriman, Aquarium Op, Buys Mardi Gras, N.Y. Site

Ben Harriman, operator of the Aquarium Restaurant, New York, has bought the building housing the Mardi Gras and expects to occupy the site in early February. Talent policy and name for a cafe he expects to open on the Mardi Gras site hasn't been selected yet. Harriman also owns the Metropole, nearby restaurant which uses old-time song and music talent.

Harry Finklestein, Mardi Gras' op, has been notified to move his operations early in January.

Meanwhile, reports have been current that the Aquarium had been sold to a cafeteria firm. Harriman emphatically denies it saying that the name band showcase will continue. Gene Krupa and Louis Prima have contracts to open there to follow the current Lionel Hampton.

Cosmo in 41G Payoff (Plus $16,000 Owed) To McIntyre Orch

Though the Cosmopolitan Records label has, during the past month or so, been doing some sharp weaving and bobbing to avoid knockout punches by creditors, never having reached the point of prestige in the recording field promised for it when first set up, the firm has paid some interesting monies to at least one of the bands it records.

Hal McIntyre, since he entered into a Cosmo deal guaranteeing him $50,000 a year against royalties, which subsequently was broken and a flat per-date deal substituted, has collected approximately $41,500 in cash in 11 months and is currently owed another $16,000 by the firm. As a result, McIntyre has drawn more money from Cosmo in cash, plus what he's owed (for which he's placed a claim with the American Federation of Musicians), than the majority of bandleaders tied to major firms have been able to earn during the past year. The sum he has collected seems unbelievable to people familiar with Cosmo's career since last Jan. 1, and it may even be increased in the event the firm catches up to its royalty statements and McIntyre is found to have more coming on the basis of sales.

Total he has received so far, however, puts him among the better-paid recording artists with the exception of the very best names on major labels.

Cosmo, incidentally, recorded again recently, doing an album of "Cluny, the Clown" with an orchestra of approximately 40 men. Date cost somewhere between $5,000 and $6,000.

Producer-Composer
Arthur Schwartz
presents
"The Dreyfus Case"
(on intimate closeup of the one and only Mox Dreyfus)
* * *
on editorial feature of the 41st Anniversary Number
of
VARIETY
Out Next Week

After 35 Years Berlin's Top Song Is 'White Xmas'

By ABEL GREEN

The saga of a single popular song, which today looms as perhaps the world's most valuable single copyright, revolves around Irving Berlin's "White Christmas." In more than a third-of-a-century as a songsmith Berlin finds that this song, written as part of a Paramount picture score ("Holiday Inn") some five years ago, is not only his all-time bestseller, but, if he elected—or if any other music publisher had no other song in his catalog—it could make him a pretty good living indef. "White Christmas" has hold 2,300,000 copies of sheet music to date; 6,000,000 records, of which Bing Crosby alone sold 2,000,000, and, according to Decca prexy Jack Kapp, will hit another half-million this year, and thus looms as the type of ballad

(Continued on page 33)

Hilton Quits As Musicraft Prez

Peter Hilton, president of Musicraft Records, resigned that post last week and expects to go back into the advertising business. He was with the Maxon agency before moving into the Musicraft picture about a year ago. His duties will be taken over, for the present, by Irving M. Felt, president of Musicraft Recording Corp.

There have been consistent reports during the past few weeks over changes in personnel at Musicraft. These followed the entry of the Atlas Corp. into the company's financial picture. Atlas handed Musicraft the first installment on a coin deal several weeks ago and another, said to amount to about $400,000, is due in mid-January.

Road, In-Town Salary Differences Create Payoff Problem for Maestros In Formula to Cut Operating Costs

Various top name maestros and their managers, faced with the problem of reducing operating costs to coincide with reduced b.o. takes, are cudgeling their brains endeavoring to work out trick methods of payment to musicians. It's all caused by the fact that, no matter how they look at the problem of getting costs down to more reasonable levels, a musician working in town and one working the road are two different personalities, and the twain just won't meet at certain pay levels.

With rooms on the road that went at one time for $1.50 a night now calling for $3 and up, meals just about doubled in price, and laundry and other necessities difficult and expensive, the road salary that looked mighty attractive prewar won't keep musicians in smokes these days. As a result, maestros are having a difficult time making in-town and out-of-town salaries coincide with the sums they want to pay on an average over a period.

One leader is trying to develop an idea whereby his men will get so much over scale for one job, the overage applying to another on which he won't be able to afford a high price. This figuring, however, is constantly being interrupted by varying AFM scales and the risk of paying below the minimum, to which a higher salary somewhere else might apply to strike an average. This formula, the leader feels, leaves him open to union retaliation if any of his men become disgruntled for one reason or another. He's still burning the candle trying to figure it out.

Minn. AFM Local Refuses Debate With Newspaper

Minneapolis, Dec. 30.

After hitting back at the Sunday Tribune for running a letter over a name which could not be identified in the city directory, which criticised the musicians' union here for its demands for standby musicians at the municipal auditorium, George Murk, union president, declined the newspaper's invitation to use its columns to explain the union's position publicly.

Letter, published in the paper's forum column, challenged the union to justify its demands. Murk's only explanation to the Tribune was that "the musicians' union is democratically-operated, that its decisions are made by a majority vote and that it does not discuss questions or policies in the newspapers, but on the union floor."

Charlie Ross Shifts To Rep., World In Expansion Move

Charlie Ross, formerly general professional manager of Barton Music, shifted to Republic and World Music firms yesterday (Monday), the move inaugurating plans to expand both companies. Ross left Barton at least partially because he wound up in the middle of the months-old situation between Ben Barton and Hank Sanicola on one side and Frank Sinatra on the other.

Sinatra, owner of two-thirds of Barton stock along with similar holdings by the other two, originally figured on getting out of the firm and selling his piece back to Barton and Sanicola, Ross was to get a portion of his returned holdings. Sinatra, however, is keeping his shares even though he's no longer actively connected with the firm, and since neither Barton nor Sanicola could give Ross a portion of their pieces without becoming minorority stockholders, Ross didn't have a chance. He therefore cut out.

Coincidental with Ross' move to Republic and World, Allan Ross, his brother, moved from T. B. Harms to be with him. Sherman Brands also left Barton with him to join Frank Abramson and Jack Schiffman, who have been with World and Republic for some time. A Chicago office and representative are being added, and a Coast branch will be opened.

Air Line Hypo By Lombardos

Long Island Airways, new local line operating out of New York, which was inaugurated last summer by Guy and Carmen Lombardo in conjunction with music publisher Lester Santly, will be considerably enlarged next season when it resumes schedules. Service has already been granted a charter to operate planes on regular runs between N. Y. and Albany, following the Hudson River, and expects to secure added grants to operate on schedule up into New England's summer resorts.

After running all summer between N. Y. and Long Island shore and fishing points, with a terminus at Montauk Point, the line ceased operations for the summer, and the planes it used transferred to Florida. Lombardo completed a deal with Pan-American for the use of larger "Mallard" type ships and transferred four smaller "Widgeon" types to charter work between Miami and Bimini, fishing center off the Florida coast. All will be returned north next spring to resume along with a batch of new planes which will be dellvered to the line by then.

Thayer Quits MCA, Lombard in Vamp From Wm. Morris

Two major booking agency executives quit their posts last week, immediately starling rumors that they were dissatisfied with bonus checks, etc. First was Lyle Thayer, co-head with Eames Bishop of the band department of Music Corp. of America's Hollywood office. Other is Pat Lombard, head of William Morris agency's band division in Chicago.

Thayer, with MCA 12 years, interrupted by two and a half years with Kay Kyser, during which time, however, he was on MCA's payroll, resigned the day before Xmas, effective immediately. His move was not connected with bonus money; it was simply a general dissatisfaction, although the split was amicable. His future is at the moment indefinite.

Lombard's resignation also had nothing to do with bonuses since Morris agency Xmas checks haven't yet been distributed. His move is effective tomorrow (Wednesday). His future is also indef.

41st Anniversary Number
OF
VARIETY
OUT NEXT WEEK
JANUARY 8

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By George Frazier

In a week as unenterprising as this, the release of an album of fine new show tunes is likely to be a greater satisfaction than it might be in more prolific times. RCA-Victor's set of songs from "Finian's Rainbow," however, needs no such backhanded compliment. It would sound good any week. Fact that "Finian's Rainbow" has yet to open in New York makes this album a rather special undertaking. Record companies usually make it a point to wait until a show has established itself on Broadway before investing in its music. Victor, therefore, has shown unprecedented faith. If the music is any indication of the show's all-round merit, however, we don't think Victor has a worry in the world. "Finian's Rainbow" has a distinguished score.

With admirable backing from Russ Case and his band, Audrey Marsh sings "How Are Things in Glocca Morra?;" the Deep River Boys in "Necessity;" Jimmy Blair "When I'm Not Near the Girl I Love;" Carroll and the Guild Chorister "That Great Come and Get It Day;" Miss Marsh and the Choristers "Look to the Rainbow;" Miss Marsh, Carroll, and the Choristers "If This Isn't Love;" Miss Marsh and Blair "Something Sort of Grandish;" and Carroll "Old Devil Moon." Of these eight Burton Lane-Yip Harburg numbers, at least three—"When I'm Not Near the Girl I Love," "Look to the Rainbow," and "Old Devil Moon"—sound like Hit Parade stuff. Diskbox operators would be wise to stock up on them. It goes without saying that this is an album for both jocks and home consumers. It is a collection of better-than-average songs accorded better-than-average treatment. This set should do handsomely.

That Victor is going all out for "Finian's Rainbow" is further proved by Charlie Spivak's latest release, which couples "If This Isn't Love," with "Old Devil Moon." Victor is chirped by The Stardreamers, the latter by an unidentified gal. She is really bad, by the way, and Victor is being very merciful in not naming her. The Stardreamers are much more competent, but still nothing to write home about. All in all, this isn't much of a record.

Cass Daley is out on Decca this week with "That's the Beginning of the End" and "Mama's Gone Goodbye." As things turn out, she is (for us anyway) a far more exciting vocalist than she is a wag. For one thing, she doesn't—like most girl singers — over-sentimentalize, and, for another, she has a clear strong voice which she employs with a minimum of tricks. We like these faces and commend them to jukes, jocks, and home buyers.

Two extracts from "The Fabulous Dorseys"—Walter Donaldson's ageless "At Sundown" and "To Me" make up Tommy Dorsey's newest Victor. "Sundown," a fine performance, should do very well in Wurlitzer locations patronized by the kids. "To Me" should appeal to sinonatics. T. D. fans will want "Sundown" for their collections.

This, as we've already said, has been a dreary week for disks and it is extremely difficult to work up much steam over most of the releases. There are, however, a few items which sound as if they'll pay their freight. One is The Sons of the Pioneers' "Tumbling Tumbleweeds" and "Cool Water" (Decca). Both are highly proficient hillbilly jobs and cinches for the cactus corners. Freddy Martin's "Save Me a Dream" and "There's No Holding Me" (Victor), both will assail you from the nickelodeons. "Holding," an extract from the musical "Park Avenue," is the face we personally prefer, but there is reason to suspect that its reverse will do the business. Both are extremely danceable. Clyde Rogers is the vocalist in each instance.

It seems likely that Tony Martin's Mercury of "Years and Years Ago" and "Sonata" will provide him with another jukeroo to follow his "Rumors Are Flying." Martin has a boudoir voice and when he puts it to work on pash items like these, the nickels pour in.

Other hits of the week's releases are The Ink Spots' "Bless You" and "Address Unknown" (Decca) and Hoagy Carmichael's "Talking Is a Woman" (Decca). The Spots' "Bless Me" is one of their customary workouts and, as such, is guaranteed a sizable play by both the pancake turners and the jukoperators. Carmichael, who would seem to be one of the hottest things in the music business at the moment, does nicely with the novelty "Talking." It's in his idiom. Backing is his own "Old Buttermilk Sky." Inasmuch as we have unkind memories of "Canyon Passage," in which it was featured, this cannot be objective about "Old Buttermilk Sky," but we must admit that there are those who seem to like it.

If you are curious about hearing some of the worst music ever put on records, you might look into "New Fifty-Second Street Jazz" (Victor). It is really incredible. Emphasis is on a thing known variously as re-bop or be-bop. For further details, see the inside-the-cover explanation offered by the kid who presumably supervised the recordings. Being nothing if not a businessman, he also managed to include a composition of his own in the album. Chief exponent of be-bop would seem to be a trumpet player named Dizzy Gillespie—Who turns out to be a real virtuoso wasting his time and talent on something pretty silly. The album has one virtue, however. It is Pete Brown's work on alto saxophone.

Best Bets

Dance—"There's No Holding Me" (Freddy Martin).

Hillbilly—"Cool Water" (Sons of the Pioneers).

Ballad—"That's the Beginning of the End" (Cass Daley).

"When I'm Not Near the Girl I Love" (Jimmy Blair), "Old Devil Moon" (Jimmy Carroll), "Look to the Rainbow" (Audrey Marsh), "Bless You" (The Ink Spots).

Hot—"At Sundown" (Tommy Dorsey).

Suggested Programs

"Are All My Favorite Bands Playing or Am I Dreaming?" (Victor). Bud Freeman is the unidentified vocalist in this satiric classic.

"Davenport Blues" — Adrian Rollini (Decca).

"I Can't Miss That Ball Game" —Frank Luther (Decca).

"The Man I Love"—Mary Lou Williams (Disc).

"When I'm Not Near the Girl I Love"—Jimmy Blair (Victor).

"Divorce Me C. O. D."—Merle Travers (Capitol).

"What Is This Thing Called Love?" — Tommy Dorsey (Victor).

GOODMAN RE-SIGNS WITH COL. RECORDS

Benny Goodman, whose Columbia Record contract expired recently, was re-signed by that company last week. Goodman elected to remain with Columbia after long talks with rival disk manufacturers. M-G-M, in particular, was hot after the clarinetist, offering a deal said to have been far beyond his Columbia terms. And he's one of Columbia's highest paid artists.

Goodman, currently on the Coast, from where he originates his Lucky Strike commercial with Victor Borge, will cut his first sides this week under the new agreement. Columbia is also issuing an album of some of his past hits.

VARIETY

John G. Paine
(General Manager of ASCAP) stresses
"The Significance of Music in International Relations"
* * *
an editorial feature in the 41st Anniversary Number
of
VARIETY
Out Next Week

Totem Pole's Low Prices ($1.50 Couple) A Factor in Big Biz

Boston, Dec. 30.

Totem Pole Ballroom, near here, has been doing a healthy business all through the fall and winter while all other dance spots locally have been as far off their feed as the rest of the country. Roy Gill, Totem Pole operator, ascribes the condition to only one thing—"low prices." He has scaled his house at $1.50 per couple, plus tax, for Wednesday night, Friday and Saturday, the only days he's open during the winter, and doesn't vary the tab.

This means, points out Gill, that patrons heading for his spot know that an entire evening at the Totem can't cost them more than approximately $3 a couple, including refreshments. He doesn't dispense beer or liquor, only soft drinks and ice cream, etc. And he uses local bands most of the time which supply straight dance music only. Occasionally, a name is bright in, but when this happens prices almost always remain the same.

Gill feels that the same thing will occur with other dance spots which use name bands exclusively once the latter's price quotations are whipped into line, allowing promoters to post more acceptable admission taps.

Program Two

"Dodging a Divorcee"—Reginald Forsythe (Columbia).

"Song of India" — Tommy Dorsey (Victor).

"Sugarbush" and "The Capetown Girls" — Josef Marais (Decca).

"Am I Blue?" — Muggsy Spanier (Disc).

"I'll Close My Eyes"—Mildred Bailey (Majestic).

"Don't Be That Way"—Benny Goodman (Victor).

"The Shelk" — Red Nichols (Brunswick).

JAMES' EASTERN TRIP STILL UP IN THE AIR

Whether Harry James' orchestra will be able to come east in February, as planned, is now uncertain. Music Corp. of America, which has been endeavoring to get the leader to forsake California during the winter for the first time in several years, has had no definite answer one way or the other, the possibility of a new picture chore at 20th-Fox during that month being responsible for the delay.

If James does come east, MCA is trying to get him to do theatre work, a line of effort he has not gone into in several years. Location work is also planned.

Cardinal Tag Dispute Looms Between Waxers

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Joe MacCaughtry, prez of the Cardinal Co., radio program packagers and transcription recorders, has protested use of the label name "Cardinal" by new pop-platterry headed by Harry Bank. Although MacCaughtry's firm has not market disks for pop consumption, claim is that name is copyrighted and has been registered in 11 states and that company someday may invade the record biz and in that event would use tag.

First beef to Bank has been via mail, but MacCaughtry states he is going to N. Y. on Jan. 11, at which time he will see Bank, if latter has not switched label by that time. Bank announced formation of his new firm earlier this month and already has prepped two sides by Charlie Barnet and inked Martha Raye for an album.

Xmas Bonuses Okay

While business has been off considerably in recent months, which stopped the nonsense of the various booking agencies far below the norm of the past few years, Xmas bonuses to executives and other employees in most instances maintained last year's pace. Probable reason is the lifting of excess profits taxes, which allowed more cream even though billings were down overall.

Among music publishers, the same condition held. And sales of music have been slow for a much longer period.

Band Reviews

GEORGE TOWNE ORCH (11)
With Mary Anne Wayne, Howard Reese, Russel Drew Edison Hotel, N. Y.

Probably the only lawyer fronting a band in these parts, George Towne presents a clean cut crew for terpers who like it smooth and soft. After a summer stay at the Pelham Heath Inn, band is set in Green Room until after the first of the year.

Towne uses his 4 brass, 4 reed and 3 rhythm in exactly the style called for by his surroundings. Not for hipsters or the Broadway crowd, band plays it straight and sweet, sticking to pops and standards. Without much in the way of originality, band has the usual muted brass riding a light reed melody, keeping the floor crowded but not disturbing ringside conversation.

Maestro fronts well, taking an occasional chorus with chirper Mary Ann Reese. Gal makes efficient use of a small voice. Out of the sax section, Howard Reese is adequate, but grooming for male vocalist is being given Russell Drew. Latter is good-looking youngster who needs only the poise that comes with experience to become one of the better workmen around. Tomm.

LAWRENCE WELK ORCH. (14)
With Joan Mowery and Bobby Beers
Trianon Ballroom, Chi.

While most bands have been cutting sidemen in the last few months Lawrence Welk has added two violins, which add punch to Welk's style. Band was on the light side, but with 3 violins now sounds fuller. Orchestra now has three violins and a bass, two trombones, two rumpets, three saxes and drum-rhythm.

Maestro still takes a hand occasionally with the squeeze box, but tends more to fronting than before. Since labeled the "Polka King," he has swung a bit to the left and will do no hop-skin numbers unless requested. Also stays away from slow ballads and torches while leaning heavily on the waltz book. Scored numbers so that dance melodies have lots of lift. Use muted trumpet to carry melody with violins in front, not as background.

Vocalists are Joan Mowery and Bobby Beers, Miss Mowery, raven haired beauty, does well vocally. Male member, Bobby Beers, is strong on production numbers, etc.

Welk's tunes done in Dixie land style comprise a good part of Welk's library, Bob "Tex" Comer doing most of them, too. Most of the men in the orch double on vocals with emphasis on novelty and comedy songs. This is Welk's 17th return to the Trianon. Band is set for four-month run.

Mel Tormee has been signed for the Copacabana, N. Y., starting in April. He's a songwriter as well as a singer.

Lecuona Cuban Boys Lose 35G Library In Fire at N. Y. Resort

Lecuona Cuban Boys orchestra, playing the Concord hotel, near Ellenville, N. Y., were hit hard the morning after Xmas by a fire that destroyed the resort's Casino. Band lost all instruments and library in the blaze, latter assuming the proportions of a major catastrophe since they had no copies of the parts stashed away against such an occurrence.

Band, which had opened at the hotel only three days before, continued to play out its contract, however, with instruments secured from neighboring towns by the Concord's owner. They performed arrangements from memory. Library was assessed at $35,000.

Most bandleaders nowadays protect themselves against loss of libraries by having the individual pieces photographed on film, which makes up onto a small spool. When the occasion arises, almost any photography shop can project the entire score or missing parts and duplicate it quickly. This practice is almost general among top maestros since so many in recent years were hit the same way as the Lecuona outfit.

ELMAN'S NEW ORCH IN DEBUT AT LOUISVILLE

Ziggy Elman's new orchestra will debut Jan. 10 at Club Madrid, Louisville, on a two-week run. Thereafter it heads out for three weeks of one-nighters. At the moment, there are no plans to bring it into a metropolitan N. Y. spot.

Band has been in rehearsal in N. Y. for the past few weeks.

Dorsey Bros. to Disk Film 'Concerto' for RCA

Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey will be coupled on one recording for the first time since they split as co-bandleaders 10 years ago. RCA-Victor, which records T.D., is planning to market a 12-inch Red Seal release of their "Concerto For Trombone and Sax," written for and included in the "Fabulous Dorseys" film they made last summer and which will be released in February.

Piece, penned by Leo Schulkin, runs eight minutes and will cover both faces of a 12-inch platter. It was recorded with a 50-piece orchestra, solos by both brothers.

10 Best Sellers on Coin-Machines

1.	Old Lamplighter (7) (Shapiro-B)	Sammy Kaye, Victor / Kay Kyser, Columbia
2.	Ole Buttermilk (12) (Burke-VH)	Kay Kyser, Columbia / Connee Boswell, Decca
3.	For Sentimental Reasons (6) (Leeds)	Ella Fitzgerald, Decca / Charlie Spivak, Victor
4.	Zip-a-Dee-Doo-Dah (4) (Santly-Joy)	Sammy Kaye, Victor / Johnny Mercer, Capitol
5.	Gal In Calico (3) (Remick)	Tex Beneke, Victor / Bing Crosby, Decca
6.	Rumors Are Flying (14) (Oxford)	Frankie Carle, Columbia / Andrews Sisters, Decca
7.	Whole World Singing Song (4) (Robbins)	Les Brown, Columbia / Jack Smith, Capitol
8.	Huggin' and Chalkin' (1) (Hudson)	Hoagy Carmichael, Decca
9.	Things Did Last Summer (9) (Morris)	Vaughn Monroe, Victor / Frank Sinatra, Columbia
10.	Passe (2) (Felst)	Tex Beneke, Victor / Margaret Whiting, Capitol

Coming Up

Sooner or Later (Santly-Joy)	Sammy Kaye, Victor
Just Squeeze Me (Robbins)	Paul Weston, Capitol / Dick Jurgens, Columbia
Guilty (Felst)	Margaret Whiting, Capitol
Winter Wonderland (BVC)	Perry Como, Victor / Andrews-Lombardo, Decca
On the Boardwalk (BVC)	Dick Haymes, Decca / Starlighters, Mercury
Best Man (Vanguard)	King Cole Trio, Capitol / Les Brown, Columbia
Oh, But I Do (Remick)	Dinah Shore, Columbia / Margaret Whiting, Capitol
Christmas Song (Burke-VH)	King Cole Trio, Capitol / Les Brown, Columbia
If I'm Lucky (BVC)	Perry Como, Victor / Jimmy Dorsey, Decca
This Is Always (BVC)	Harry James, Columbia / Dick Haymes, Decca
You Keep Coming Back (Berlin)	Bing Crosby, Decca / Jo Stafford, Capitol
Miserlou (Colonial)	Jan August, Diamond
Sonata (Oxford)	Perry Como, Victor / Carmen Cavallaro, Decca

On The Upbeat

New York

Sleet storms over N. Y. during past week playing havoc with suburban spots; Frank Dailey, for example, forced to sand Route 23 for a mile in each direction from his Meadowbrook, one night last week to prevent patron accidents.... Jimmie Lunceford orchestra signed to General Artists last week... General exodus of record, agency execs from New York after Xmas; Manie Sacks to Florida, David (Sonny) Werblin to Florida, Eli Oberstein to Coast, along with Joe Glaser....McFarland Twins band back in circulation temporarily; their Northport, L. I., spot closes tonight (Wed.) for winter....Irene Carroll renewed as singer at Iceland Restaurant....Jack Carroll, former Les Brown singer now soloing on National disks, worked with Brown on Columbia platter session last week...."Illinois" Jacquet five-piece combo racked up $3,300 gross Xmas night at Mercantile Hall, Philadelphia....George Towne orchestra, now at Edison hotel, N. Y., signed to Sonora Records.

Hollywood

Skip Nelson quit as vocalist with Vido Musso orchestra . . . Jimmy Mundy now doing Count Basie arrangements for records. Crew waxes first under new pact with RCA-Victor this week, with Eli Oberstein on from N. Y. for the session...Billy Butterfield, vacationing at home over holidays in Douglas, Ariz., heads back to N. Y. Thurs. (2)... Dick Kerr crew starts eight-week stint at Commercial hotel, Elko, Nev. tomorrow (1)...Sam Lutz, personal manager for Lawrence Welk and other combos, to San Francisco on prowl for bookings ..Joe Glaser in from east ..Harold Stern inked for fortnight at Last Frontier hotel, Las Vegas, starting Jan. 31...Allen Schrader band inked for platters by Black & White. First disking session, Jan. 7...Jack Teagarden off the pallet after three-week pneumonia siege and again in front of sextet at Suzy Q nitery...Desi Arnaz Latuners set for Aragon ballroom, Jan. 17-18-19...Alfredo Garmon's combo intermishing for Charlie Spivak, at Palladium... Louis Jordan set for vaude week at Lincoln, Los Angeles Negro house, Jan. 7. Then combo is carded for Billy Berg's Hollywood nitery for eight stanzas at $3,500 per, starting Jan. 15.

Pittsburgh

Tommy Carlyn band has had its option picked up at Bill Green's through month of January. He'll be followed by Baron Elliott . . . Jimmy Spitalny orch opens Monday (6) at Vogue Terrace, replacing Freddy Shaffer and his Victory Sweethearts . . . Ralph Grove trio, with Dave Gifford and Joe Ohlmer, into new lounge of Cafe Concord for an indefinite run . . . Marian Berger, harpist on KDKA, is playing intermission music at Jackie Heller's Carousel . . . Herb Conrad is new organist at Snaveley's Seahorse Bar, Oakland . . . Tony Pastor band booked for a one-nighter at Syria Mosque Jan. 22 . . . Art Farrer, bandleader, in from Coast to spend the holidays with family.

TOP HITS OF YESTERDAY
GREAT POPULAR STANDARDS TODAY

THE FABULOUS SONG
From the Charles R. Rogers Production
"THE FABULOUS DORSEYS"
AT SUNDOWN
Words and Music by Walter Donaldson

The Newest, Fastest Growing Revival Hit!
SUGAR
Words by Sidney Mitchell and Edna Alexander
Music by Maceo Pinkard

For new artist copies and arrangements, write or phone
PHIL KORNHEISER, Manager,
Standard Exploitation Dept.,
The Big 3, 1619 Broadway,
New York 19, Circle 6-2939

Musikers Crack Down On Charity Pay Hoists

Los Angeles, Dec. 30.

Musicians' Local 47 again last week reminded all members that they must not submit to slices being cut out of wages for Community Chest or any other charity.

This year, following numerous kicks, Local 47's board of directors ruled musikers can donate privately and individually, but cannot permit place of employment to make a deduction out of salary. Union asked members to report any instances of pressure being applied.

Always Sung — All Ways Popular
MILLS PROGRAM SUGGESTIONS
WHEN YOUR OLD WEDDING RING WAS NEW
•
SIDEWALKS OF CUBA
•
STARS FELL ON ALABAMA
MILLS MUSIC, INC.
1619 Broadway New York 19

A Happy New Year To All
EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT
ASSOCIATED BOOKING CORP.
JOE GLASER, Pres.
745 Fifth Ave. New York 22 PL. 5-5572

British Best Sheet Sellers

(Week ending Dec. 20)

Five Minutes More......Morris
We'll Never Grow Old.Strauss-M.
Bless You............Noel Gay
You Hurt One You Love.B. Wood
Someday You'll Want Me..Dash
Pretending.............B. Wood
Too Many Irons in Fire..Connelly
To Each His Own.......Victoria
It's All Over Now.....Connelly
Let It Be Soon..... F. D. & H.
All Through the Day..Chappell
The Green Cockatoo.Cinephonic

Second 10

Old Lamplighter.... Shapiro-B.
Anytime at All.....Macmelodies
Till Then.............Chappell
Be Lost Without You....Stirling
This Is Always.........B. Wood
Voice in the Night.....Southern Mister Moon...Lawrence Wright
Somewhere in the Night ..N-W
My Heart Isn't In It .....Leeds
Goodnight Darling...Macmelodies

REICHHOLD RETURNING TO RECORD BUSINESS

Henry Reichhold, Detroit moneyman who went for $75,000 in Cosmo Records in that firm's earlier days, is figuring on getting back into the record business on his own. Disking would be only part of an overall setup that already includes his own string of nightclubs, talent agency, theatres, etc.

At present, Reichhold is concerned with plans to launch a nitery atop the Detroit Music Hall, which houses the Detroit Symphony. Latter group is under his wing; to record it was the spark that caused him to go into Cosmo. Outfit also will broadcast on the American Broadcasting Co. Sundays, 8-9 p.m.

'White Xmas'

Continued from page 31

which is good for a 250,000-300,000 steady annual sale.

Considering that the life of this copyright has 50 years yet to go, and in its five years has already earned more than what is the yield from the lifetime of any other smash song, this pop assumes extraordinary economic proportions. The 250G figure is not out of line when its earnings are computed roughly to date.

Firstly, Berlin as a songsmith gets 8c per copy, which means that the more than 2,000,000 copies alone have earned him a songwriter's royalty revenue of over $160,000. As the publisher thereof, with a minimum of exploitation expense, since the song's values are now accumulative and seasonally given impetus, it figures an easy 10c net revenue per copy. Multiply that by 2,300,000, and that's over $200,000 there alone. Figuring the average disk royalty of 1½c for the 6,000,000 platters, that's another $90,000.

Most important, of course, is the value of the song's synchronization rights. Berlin has certain sync privileges therein. Considering that one of his oldie ballads, "Always," earned $51,000 in some 18 months from nonexclusive synchronization usages in three pictures, that gives an idea of the importance and value of a seasonal situation song, of the calibre of "White Christmas."

The saga of "Always" is unique in itself. Firstly, it's virtually the real-life love song of Ellin and Irving Berlin.

As a matter of fact, the copyright is owned by Mrs. Berlin—a gift from her husband. When Sam Goldwyn wanted the usage of "Always" in "Pride of the Yankees" several years ago, because it was also the real-life love song of Lou Gehrig and his wife, the sync fee was $15,000. Universal paid $18,000 for its use in a Deanna Durbin picture, "Christmas Holiday"; and the Noel Coward filmization of his "Blithe Spirit" (British) fetched another $18,500 for its use. All this took place within a period of one and one-half years, hence the 51G yield from that one ballad.

Incidentally, "Always" crowds "Alexander's Ragtime Band" for No. 2 honors with Berlin, although the former was a bigger money grosser, since "Alexander," in 1911, was in the era of 10c (Woolworth chainstore) music, as against today's 35c-40c sheets. "God Bless America" (which copyright Berlin doesn't own; he ceded it to the Boy and Girl Scouts of America Foundation) also sold 2,000,000 sheets and has earned the phenomenal sum of $140,000 for the Foundation. Runners-up in Berliniana bestsellers are "Blue Skies," "A Pretty Girl Is Like a Melody," "Remember," "How Deep Is the Ocean" and "All Alone."

Expected Wrangling by Pubs on New Disk Pacts Fails to Materialize

There has been none of the trouble which might have been anticipated by music publishers in getting put into general use new disk licensing contracts. These agreements are designed to cover separately any individual disk released by record manufacturers, and the royalty terms they call for can never be applied to the same disk, if in the future it may be reissued, or applied to other diskings of the same song.

Pubs half expected that there might be some negative reaction to the licensing plan when it was first broached through Harry Fox, publisher agent and trustee in mechanical and synchronization rights, but none has developed. New licenses were put into use a fortnight ago, and there has been no objection to their terms from any of the major or minor manufacturers.

There have been many cases, even during the past year, wherein diskers have reissued recordings of revived songs while the royalty fee paid publishers remained at the same level as when the original license was issued. Since most label prices have been increased lately, this was considered by publishers as untair. One tune revived this year, for example, was put back on the market under a license calling for a royalty of 1c per side, issued when the particular disk company was not in good shape as against the 1¾c per side now called for by retail prices. This is what the new contracts are designed to stop.

Domino Music Corp. chartered to conduct a music publishing business in New York, with a capital stock of 200 shares, no par value. Directors are: Emil Coleman, Ruth and Harry Coleman.

BMI Pin Up SHEET

Hit Tunes for January
(On Records)

ANOTHER NIGHT LIKE THIS (Marks)
Dick Haymes—Dec. 22731 • Desi Arnaz—Vic. 20-2052 • Hal Derwin—Cap. 336
Herb Kern-Lloyd Sloop—Tempo 984 • Hal Winters-Jose Morand—Apollo 1034
Don Alfredo—Pan-Amer 876 • Claude Thornhill—Col. *

BEST MAN, THE (Vanguard)
Les Brown—Col. 37086 • King Cole Trio—Cap. 304 • Beno Vincent—Dec. 23749
Sunny Skylar—Mercury 5004

COFFEE SONG, THE (Valiant)
Louis Prima—Maj. 7191 • King Sisters—Vic. 20-1943 • Frank Sinatra—Col. 37089
Andrews Sisters—Dec. 23740 • Dorothy Claire—Enterprise 227

EV'RYBODY LOVES MY BABY, MY BABY (Goode)
Tex Beneke—Vic. 20-1914 • Pied Pipers—Cap 279 • Three Suns—Maj 7180
Gene Krupa—Col 37078

(I LOVE YOU) FOR SENTIMENTAL REASONS (Duchess)
Eddy Howard—Maj. 1071 • Charlie Spivak—Vic. 20-1981 • Ella Fitzgerald—Dec. 23670
Dinah Shore—Col. 37188 • King Cole Trio—Cap. 304 • Art Kassel—Vogue 781
Fran Warren—Cosmo 514 • Brown Dots—Manor 1041 • Skip Strahl—Emerald 106

HOLD ME, HOLD ME, HOLD ME (Stevens)
Vaughn Monroe—Vic. 20-2015 • Harry Cool—Sig. 15038 • Russ Morgan—Dec. 18922
Orrin Tucker—Musicraft 15096 • Jimmie Palmer—Arvid 7050

I GUESS I'LL GET THE PAPERS AND GO HOME (Campbell-Porgie)
Mills Brothers—Dec 23638 • Hal Derwin—Cap. 288 • Les Brown—Col. 37066
Herbie Fields—Vic. 20-1962 • Hal McIntyre—Cosmo 507 • Ray Herbeck—Four Star 1132
Shep Fields—Vogue 764 • Tommy Ryan—Famous 7004

I'LL NEVER LOVE AGAIN (La Borrachita) (Peer)
Dinah Shore - Xavier Cugat—Col. 37090 • Andy Russell—Cap. 20035 • Desi Arnaz—Vic. 20-2020
Tito Guizar—Mercury 5006

IT'S ALL OVER NOW (BMI)
Peggy Lee—Cap. 292 • Charlie Spivak—Vic. 20-1981 • Russ Morgan—Dec. 18922
Three Suns—Maj. 7205 • Orrin Tucker—Musicraft 15091 • Vera Massey—Diamond 2089
Frankie Carle—Col. 37146 • Connie Haines—Mercury 3034 • Harry Cool—Sig.*
Artie Wayne—Bel-Tone* • Herb Kern—Tempo* • Jack McLean—Coast 8002
Jimmy Palmer—Arvid 7050

MANAGUA, NICARAGUA (Encore)
Freddy Martin—Vic. 20-2026 • Guy Lombardo—Dec. 23782 • Kay Kyser—Col. 37214
Max Gordon Trio—Sonora 3032

MI VIDA (Marks)
Dick Haymes—Dec. 23731 • Desi Arnaz—Vic. 20-2052 • Jack McLean—Coast 8003
Herb Kern-Lloyd Sloop—Tempo 984 • Pat Friday—Enterprise 243
Don Alfredo—Pan-Amer. 876

RICKETY RICKSHAW MAN, THE (Peer)
Eddy Howard—Maj. 7192 • Two Ton Baker—Mercury 3047

ISN'T THIS BETTER THAN WALKIN' IN THE RAIN (Republic)
Ray Anthony—Sonora 3037 • Buddy Clark—Col.*

WHAT MORE CAN I ASK FOR? (London)
Guy Lombardo—Decca 23782 • Jack McLean—Coast 8003

*Soon to be released

BMI
BROADCAST MUSIC, INC.
580 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 19, N. Y.
New York • Chicago • Hollywood

Breaks All Records in Musical History!

#1 SONG IN ENGLAND FOR 24 STRAIGHT WEEKS . . .

A SURE SMASH HERE!

BLESS YOU

FOR BEING AN ANGEL

By Eddie Lane and Don Baker

8 GREAT RECORDS

- EDDIE HOWARD . . Majestic
- THE INK SPOTS . . . Decca
- BETTY RHODES . . . Victor
- DICK JURGENS . . Columbia
- PHIL BRITO . . . . Musicraft
- CLARK DENNIS . . . Capitol
- HARRY COOL . . Signature
- GRIFF WILLIAMS . . Sonora

SHAPIRO, BERNSTEIN & CO., Inc., Music Publishers • 1270 6th Ave., New York City

Songs With Largest Radio Audiences

The top 32 songs of the week, based on the copyrighted Audience Coverage Index Survey of Popular Music Broadcast on Radio Networks. Published by the Office of Research, Inc.

Survey Week of December 20-26, 1946

A Gal In Calico—†"Time, Place, Girl"..... Remick
A Garden In the Rain..... Melrose
All Around the Christmas Tree..... Stuart
Among My Souvenirs..... T. B. Harms
And So To Bed..... Famous
Blue Skies—†"Blue Skies"..... Berlin
Christmas Song..... Burke-VH
Either It's Love Or It Isn't—†"Dead Reckoning"..... Mood
(I Love You) For Sentimental Reasons..... Duchess
For You For Me Forever—†"Shocking Miss Pilgrim"..... Chappell
I Guess I'll Get the Papers and Go Home..... Cam'ell-Porgie
I Haven't Got a Worry in the World..... Williamson
I'll Be Home for Christmas..... Melrose
In My Merry Oldsmobile..... Witmark
It's All Over Now..... BMI
Let It Snow..... Morris
Oh, But I Do—†"Time, Place, Girl"..... Witmark
Old Lamp-Lighter..... Shapiro-B.
Ole Buttermilk Sky—†"Canyon Passage"..... Burke-VH
Parade of the Wooden Soldiers..... E. B. Marks Rickety Rickshaw Man..... Southern
Rumors Are Flying..... Oxford
September Song..... Crawford
Sooner Or Later—†"Song of South"..... Santly-Joy
Things We Did Last Summer..... Morris
Uncle Remus Said—†"Song of the South"..... Santly-Joy
What More Could I Ask For..... London
White Christmas..... Berlin
Winter Wonderland..... BVC
Whole World Is Singing My Song..... Robbins
You Keep Coming Back Like a Song—†"Blue Skies"..... Berlin
Zip-a-De-Do-Dah—†"Song of South"..... Santly-Joy

Following songs are those that did not have enough performance credits on the week to be included in the top group. They mostly are tunes rising in popularity.

Anniversary Song—†"Dead Reckoning"..... Mood
Anybody's Love Song..... Miller
Coffee Song—*"Copacabana Revue"..... Valiant
Gotta Get Me Somebody To Love—†"Duel in the Sun"..... Morris
Guilty..... Feist
Hold Me, Hold Me..... Stevens
If You Were the Only Girl..... Mutual
I'll Close My Eyes..... Maurice
Life Can Be Beautiful..... Melrose
Managua Nicaragua..... Encore
Senata..... Oxford
South America, Take It Away—†"Call Me Mister"..... Witmark
There Is No Breeze..... Robbins
This Time..... Dorsey Bros.
Too Many Times..... Advanced
Twilight Song..... Mutual
Years and Years Ago..... Bourne
You Are Everything to Me..... Paramount

† Filmusical. * Legit Musical.

10 Best Sheet Sellers

(Week Ending Dec. 28)

Old Lamplighter.....Shapiro-B
Ole Buttermilk Sky..Burke-VH
Sentimental Reasons...Duchess
World Singing Song....Robbins
Gal in Calico.....Remick
For You For Me.....Chappell
Zip-a-Dee-Doo-Dah...Santly-Joy
Rumors Are Flying.....Oxford
Sooner Or Later ....Santly-Joy
Girl That I Marry.....Berlin

Second 10

Huggin' and Chalkin'...Hudson
Things We Did Summer...Morris
September Song.....Crawford
You Keep Comin' Back...Berlin
I'll Close My Eyes.....Maurice
Oh But I Do .....Remick
Rickety Rickshaw Man ....Peer
Five Minutes More.....Morris
This Is Always.....BVC
Coffee Song.....Valiant

SALABERT, SACEM EXEC, KILLED IN PLANE CRASH

Francis J. Salabert, v.p. of SACEM, French performance rights society, who was killed in the TWA Constellation crash at Shannon, Ireland, last week, is the third foreign performance rights executive to die within the past couple months. Previously, Fred Markush, head of the Hungarian society, and Eduardo Marquina, head of the Spanish society, succumbed in New York following heart attacks.

While Salabert was v.p. of SACEM, actually, he was the power behind the organization. He was in N. Y. for the recent International Confederation of Music Societies at Washington, D. C., and was returning to France on business. It was while coming back to the U. S., where he had set up a music publishing company a short time ago, that he was killed. Mme. Salabert, who had come here with her two sons during the Confederation conclave, was awaiting him. She will return to France as soon as possible.

Salabert was one of the most influential music publishers in the business, abroad and in the U. S. He was in the process of completing a deal whereby J. Albert & Sons, Australian music publishers, would represent his catalog in Aussie. Julian T. Abeles, who was to have met Salabert's plane in N. Y., was negotiating for Albert.

McHUGH BACK TO LONDON

Jimmy McHugh, Jr., left over the weekend for the London headquarters of MCA.

McHugh, chief of the agency's British operations, was here over the holidays for sessions with home-office chiefs.

Bands at Hotel B.O.'s

Band	Hotel	Weeks Played	Covers' Past Week	Total Covers On Date
Emil Coleman*...	Waldorf (400; $2).....	12	2,575	33,225
Guy Lombardo...	Roosevelt (400; $1.50-$2).....	9	2,650	23,650
Chuck Foster....	New Yorker (400; $1-$1.50).....	0	†1,925	1,925
Jimmy Dorsey..	Pennsylvania (500; $1-$1.50).....	0	†875	875
Ray McKinley...	Commodore (400; $1-$1.50).....	1	1,150	1,800
Johnny Pineapple.	Lexington (300; $1-$1.50).....	8	900	7,750

* Indicates Floor Show at Waldorf.
† 3 days.

Chicago

Glen Gray (Panther Room, Sherman hotel; 950; $1.50-$2.50 min.). Gray's last week up a bit to 4,200, but not as good as should be.

Stephen Kilsey (Marine Room, Edgewater Beach hotel; 700; $2-$2.50 min.). Holiday biz hyroed take to 4,500.

Clyde McCoy (Boulevard Room, Stevens hotel; 550; $3-$3.50 min.). One of the best in town with hefty 4,800.

Joseph Sudy (Walnut Room, Bismarck hotel; 465; $1.50-$2.50 min.). Family parties built to very warm 3,500.

Griff Williams (Empire Room, Palmer House; 650; $3-$3.50 min.). New show which opened Thursday (26) with Dorothy Shay sellout. First three days top 3,000.

Los Angeles

Freddy Martin (Ambassador; 900; $1-$1.50). Surged back strongly, grabbing 3,300 tabs after pre-Yule lull.

Russ Morgan (Biltmore; 900; $1-$1.50). Roared right back, bountiful 3,450 covers.

Location Jobs, Not in Hotels

Chicago

Russ Carlyle (Blackhawk Restaurant; 500; $2-$2.50 min.). Carlyle fine 4,700.

Gay Claridge (Chez Paree; 650; $3-$3.50 min.). Final week of Sophie Tucker, Willie Shore, Bobby Breen great 5,800. Tony Martin, Jack Cole Dancers and Pearl Bailey debut Jan. 3.

Dick Jurgens (Aragon Ballroom: $0.90-$1.15 adm.). Boffo 19,000.

Buddy Shaw (Latin Quarter; 700: $3.50 min. second show). Slightly better at 3,500.

Lawrence Welk (Trianon; $0.50-$1.15 adm.). Ninth week swell 17,000.

(Los Angeles)

Count Basie (Avodon, B. Los Angeles, 3d wk). Still building. As all other spots staggered last week, new record set here with 16,000 customers.

Ray Herbeck (Meadowbrook, B, Culver City, 1st wk). Opened Thurs. (26) to scant attention, after Vido Musso crew had brutal going two previous days. Week didn't top 4,500, poor.

Will Osborne (Trianon B, South Gate, 4th wk). Over three-day weekend operation plus Spade Cooley on Xmas (25) one-niter; dim 2,100.

Charlie Spivak (Palladium, B, Hollywood, 1st wk). Opened rather strongly Thurs. (26); plus two days of Tommy Tucker earlier, around 13,000.

Ostfeld Ill in H'wood

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Jack Ostfeld, general manager of Stevens Music Co., is resting comfortably, but incommunicado, at his hotel here after suffering severe heart attack over weekend.

Last mid-week Ostfeld came here from N. Y. for opening of Charlie Spivak at Palladium Thurs. (26), with whom he planned series of conferences. Spivak is financially interested in Stevens firm.

Mercury Cuts, Adds

Chicago, Dec. 30.

Mercury Records last week dropped two orchestras and signed another. Those out were Vincent Lopez and Buddy Rich and new one is Caesar Petrillo and 28-piece symphonic group.

Caesar Petrillo, music director of radio station WBBM, here, and brother of James C., AFM head, will record an album of semi-classical tunes.

Top Tunes for Your Books
An All-Time Favorite
EXACTLY LIKE YOU
Music by . . .
JIMMY McHUGH
Shapiro-Bernstein

SANDOUT TUNES
The Ballad Hit for 1947
Let's Put Our Dreams Together
For January Release
Victor: CHARLIE SPIVAK
Columbia: ELLIOTT LAWRENCE
— with more to follow —
PAULL PIONEER MUSIC CORP.

LOCAL 47 KEEPS UP WORKING DEMANDS

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Though taking cognizance of fact biz has gone blowzy of late in most niteries and kindred after-sundown spots, Los Angeles Local 47, of AFM, has decided that as a general policy union will deny all petitions to reduce number of musikers employed. Local, well aware that fewer than 4,500 of its 13,000-odd members regularly are employed, wants to keep maximum jamming as long as possible.

More than a dozen of the bigger spots hereabouts, headed by Earl Carroll's and Florentine Gardens, have asked 47 to slash number of musicians, but local flatly refused. Pasadena Junior Chamber of Commerce just lost a week-long pitch to induce union to lower scale for Rose Bowl parade. C. of C. was told that prescribed as minimum were four bands of 30 men each, at current scale of $25 per for casual date; cost, $3,400. Parade promoters made plea that they had only $2,600 allocated, which was amount paid last year when old scale of $20 per man was in force. However, union resolutely stuck to guns and over weekend Tournament of Roses' execs agreed to get up the extra funds.

Two Smash Hits in COLUMBIA Pictures
The Sensational Song from "THE JOLSON STORY" ANNIVERSARY SONG
By AL JOLSON and SAUL CHAPLIN
* * *
From Humphrey Bogart's Terrific "DEAD RECKONING"
EITHER IT'S LOVE OR IT ISN'T
By ALLAN ROBERTS and DORIS FISHER
* * *
BOTH SONGS RECORDED BY ALL COMPANIES
* * *
MOOD MUSIC COMPANY, Inc.
DICK VOLTTER, Pres
SHAPIRO, BERNSTEIN & CO., INC. — Selling Agents
1270 Sixth Avenue, New York 20, N. Y.

SANTLY-JOY Standards
ALOHA, KUU IPO, ALOHA
(Goodbye, Sweetheart, Goodbye)
By DICK McINTIRE and RONALD A. BALL
SANTLY-JOY Inc.
1619 Broadway, New York 19
Tommy Valando, Gen. Prof. Mgr

Zanzibar, N. Y., Will Have 15G Talent Budget With Switch to Paleface

The Zanzibar, N. Y., which is changing to an olay policy about Jan. 30, will shell out around $15,000 weekly on entertainment at its changeover. Spot so far has booked Gertrude Niesen, Jan Murray, Hal LeRoy, with Donn Arden to do the production. Club is also dickering for Boyd Raeburn's 25-piece band.

Miss Niesen has been signed on a guarantee and percentage deal with $7,500 as the base and averages on grosses above $40,000, while Murray is getting $1,750 and LeRoy has been signed at about $1,000. With music and production, entertainment nut is likely to hit $15,000.

The current Zanzibar will shutter shortly after New Year's eve for refurbishing and will open with a new policy and name. New tag hasn't been selected as yet, but Cafe Broadway and Vanity Fair are reported being seriously considered by Joe Howard and Carl Erbe, operators.

Zanzibar, however, will continue operations on the site previously occupied by the Ole South. Sepia show policy will remain in effect there.

CAPPELLA AND PATRICIA

"Patricia is by far the best dressed dancer we've seen this season."

GEORGES BOURKS, Herald.

"Their Ballgoomology is out of the top drawer . . . they brought down the house . . ."

LARY, Variety.

HELD OVER 9TH WEEK AT THE EMBASSY CLUB

NEW YORK

Thanks to BILL MILLER BILL PICKS

USO-Camp Show Troupe Off on 6-Month Swing

Hollywood, Dec. 30.

Ten USO-Camp Shows troupers left on a six-month tour of entertainment for GI's in the Caribbean, South Atlantic and Alaskan areas.

Group includes Marcia Lencak, George Dunn, White and Stanley, Vivian Rae, Christine Maddell, Ray Trent's musical combo and Roberto's Mexican puppet show.

Salici Puppets Set For O&J Carnival Show

Salici puppets, due in this country from Italy, have been signed for the Carnival, N. Y., on the Olsen and Johnson show. Act has been having difficulty getting back into this country because of travel conditions in Italy. However, it's expected that they'll be here in time for the room's reopening Jan. 9. Carnival closes Jan. 1 for a week for a refurbishing job.

Corinne and Tito Valdez have also been signed for this show. Others previously pacted include Beatrice Kay.

Mayfair, Boston, Folding

Mayfair club, Boston, one of the Hub's top niteries, is set to close indefinitely Jan. 6. Spot, which customarily uses name talent, and is operated by Mickey Redstone, has been in a business slump for several months. Redstone's other operation, the Latin Quarter, will continue.

Talent contracts for the Mayfair are being shifted by Dick Henry of the William Morris agency, cafe dept., to other spots.

Veloz-Yolanda Tour

Veloz and Yolanda will open their season's concert tour in Portland, Ore., next Monday (6), having booked 53 appearances. Supporting the dancers in "Dansation of 1947," will be Elizabeth Talbot-Martin, Jerry Shelton, Robert Garretson and Ernest Hughes, Betty Black and Amelia Gilmore.

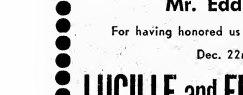
Attraction will again be under the management of George M. Gatts.

AIDS RUNYON FUND

Jack Silverman, operator of the Old Roumanian, N. Y., is holding a special night, Thursday (2) proceeds of which will go to the Damon Runyon Memorial Fund. Cover and minimum charges have been taken off for that night.

Fund will be used to aid cancer research.

Eleanor Powell, film dancer, has been set for the Town Casino, Buffalo, starting Feb. 2, for two weeks.



LEONARD GREEN AGENCY, inc.
139 E. 57th St., N. Y. C. PL. 9-7470

Copyright Attorney
Julian T. Abeles
humorously recalls his Ozark law days with a humorous piece
Blackstone in Them Hills
* * *
on editorial feature in next week's 41st Anniversary Number of
VARIETY

Waring Heads NAPA

Fred Waring was elected president of the National Assn. of Performing Artists to succeed the late Jimmy Walker, at a recent meeting in New York. Eddie Duchin was named secretary and Bing Crosby, veepee. Board members are Duke Ellington, Andre Kostelanetz and Fred Allen. Maurice J. Speiser remains general counsel.

Organization seeks to establish performing and royalty rights for performing artists.

A.&C.'s 30G From Nitery For Costello, Jr., Fund

Bud Abbott and Lou Costello's first cafe date since hitting the big-time, at Flamingo, Las Vegas, March 7, will net them $30,000 plus percentages for a 13-day stand, the take to go to the Lou Costello, Jr., Foundation. This is the fund in memory of Costello's infant son who died two years ago of infantile paralysis. A & C previously played theatre dates to aid the fund.

Date was booked by Paul Small who gave yeoman service to get them into their first nitery date after a continual round of burley houses. Comedy duo were being sought for a date at the Roxy theatre, N. Y. at $20,000 weekly, but deal fell through last week.

Emmett Kelly Shines In New London Circus

London, Dec. 21.

The Bertram Mills Olympia Circus, carried on by his sons, Cyril and Bernard, opened for first time since 1938 on Dec. 20, and will stay about seven weeks. Show has usual contingent of trained elephants, lions, horses and dogs, but nothing outstanding, due to restriction placed on import of acts.

Charles Rivels trio, with Rivels still imitating Charlie Chaplin which he has been doing for many years, is still a novelty with the newer generation. Outstanding novelty is act provided by the Idalys which comprises cycling upside down 80ft. midair.

For first time, the numerous clowns have an American among them. Emmett Kelly, a hobo, from Kansas City, who provides plenty laughs. Circus, which holds 6,000, is sold out for first four weeks, both afternoon and night shows, and should play to capacity for rest of season.

Saranac Lake

By Happy Benway

Saranac Lake, N. Y., Dec. 30.

Mose LaFountain, owner of Durgan's nitery, played Santa Claus to the kiddies of the colony on Christmas day. He invited all to special entertainment, dinner and gifted them on the way out.

Kay (RKO) Latta, who graduated from here, now employed at St. Anthony hospital, Warwick, N. Y.

Bernard Hilton (Earl Hart), who checked out of the Rogers, continuing the cure in downtown colony.

Gerry (IATSE) Vandermast, after a month of observation, has been upped for meals and pix privileges, while Frank (RKO) Sheedel given same privileges.

Among the downtown show folks who holidayed in the Big Town are Benny Kessler, Pauline Russell, Helen O'Reilly and Marty Fisher.

Lew Pettit, former WNBZ announcer, now the manager of Adirondack Room of the Fawn Club, Lake Placid.

Memories of the grand Yuletide banquet given the gang at the Will Rogers will linger for a long time. The chef and his staff deserve heaps of thanks for the spread. Santa Claus (Sam Schulman) gifted each patient with a present.

(Write to those who are ill.)

Night Club Reviews

Earl Carroll's, H'wood

Hollywood, Dec. 27.

"Earl Carroll's Vanities," with Beryl Wallace, Billy Reyes, Bobby Morris, Glen Richey, Costello Twins, Jimmy Nolan, Rickey Jordan, The Carrolliers, Dave Barry, Manny Strand Orch. Line (40); produced and directed by Carroll; music by Harry Revel, lyrics by Carroll; dance ensembles by Edwin Gale; costumes and scenery by Jean le Seyeux; with dinner $3.30, without $1.65.

It has been nine years since Earl Carroll gazed at the theatre-restaurant entering his name and exclaimed, "it'll make a good garage, donteha think?" He was never more wrong in life as his bank balance will mutely attest. Billed as America's Greatest Revue, this new issue of "The Vanities" doesn't fall far short of that distinction. That it's the best $1.65 buy extant admits of no quarrel. That it's a full evening in the theatre, with victuals and potables on the side, is also readily admitted. There may be some hesitancy, however, on the part of some night liters that this edition is the best of his nine-year string. It's lone liability is the lack of quality comedy. Pinky Lee is missed and Bobby Morris is a striking figure by the void. His routines are blueish, blatant and too often unfunny.

Production wise, the extravaganza is flush in the Carroll tradition and that means spectacle, glamor, leggy gals and gay costuming. There's a heavy overlay of phosphorescence but outlanders like flash and it all makes for a striking display. For other popular effect he has smoked incense pouring from the floor, rain in a single sheet from the roof and bubbles billowing over the heads of the showgirls. Entertainment content is diversified with secondary emphasis on comedy and music. Only trick act is the skating and cycling of Jean Richey, a talented youngster.

As in past revues, Beryl Wallace sparks the ensemble, foils for the dunces and otherwise cavorts with ingenuish vigor. Bill Reyes is making a career out of this stand and proves an able monologist, entrepreneur, mimic and juggler. Jimmy Nolan and Rickey Jordan handle the terpsichorealty, the Costello Twins are fast and supple in their twists and turns, Dave Barry's mimicry is solid effort new to these parts, and the vocal groups handle the tunes of Harry Revel and Carroll, adequately. Manny Strand in the pit is another Carroll "career man," having been around practically since the opening. His music is productionally adept and briskly tempoed for the dance of the payees on stage. Carroll's big problem is comedy and once that phase of the revue is improved he'll have clear sailing until year's end unless the current nitery depresh becomes acutely critical.

Helm.

Five O'Clock, Miami

Miami Beach, Dec. 26.

Diosa Costello, Marc Ballero, Pupi Campo and Orch, Howard McCreery Orch; $2.50 min.

Continuing their intime show policy the smartly decored Five O'Clock club has a string lure for the heavy rumba trade here, in the current setup.

Combo of Diosa Costello and Pupi Campo makes for a zingy session of Afro-Cuban antics with the ringsiders finding themselves involved in an uninhibited round of derriers tossing with the duo.

Marc Ballero tees off things with some neatly devised impreshes, done in double dinner. Tops stint with his Polish drunk takeoff, excelling Steve Evans with the origination.

La Costello makes for a welcome relief from the average Latin hipswing-singer. That dynamic personality and zesty purveying of the south of the border chants gets them all the way. Husband Pupi Campo does a song-dance spot on his own for good returns, then the pair join for some rumbantics that set the payees palm-whacky. All adds up to a breezy 40 minutes with the ringsiders wanting more.

Campo's unit brings the Latin-minded on the floor in heavy numbers. Howard McCreery's band does okay for the other terpers. Lary.

Copacabana, Miami

Miami Beach, Dec. 27.

Harvey Stone, Frances Faye, Paul Sydell & Dogs, Paul Haakon, Marais Mims, Ralph Young, Beatones (4), Line (17), Dave Tyler Orch (10), Noro Morales Orch (10), Henrietta Cannon; production staged by Benny Davis, choreography by Jane Taylor, original music and, lyrics by Davis; min. $3-$5.

The Copacabana ops, with this, their second show, can sit back and say they're offering one of the top shows in town with the edition. If the biz isn't there, then the rest might well look to it, as an indication of what's to come.

For in Harvey Stone, they've got a young comic, new to these parts, who rates with the Ritz brothers, Joe E. Lewis, Jan Murray and the other topnoters who played the swank boite in the past. The tall, easy moving laughmaker carried himself a spontaneous reception in his debut that matched any reaction ever garnered by an act in this room.

Coming on in the next to closing spot, after Frances Faye had left them pounding for more, he walloped across a session of yocks from his first lines to the boycott. The special material he utilizes had him looking and sounding like the freshest comedian to hit this comedy-jaded town in yea. All of it was purveyed with an easy unstrained delivery that got every giggle out of the jammed room. Opens with a lyric on his dicker for the job with owner Murray Weinger, then follows with a 30 minute sesh of tailored stuff that keeps the laughs coming in steady stream. Toppers are the sequence on his wife and married life e t a piece with a soft drink as the theme. Encores with

(Continued on page 38)

COMEDY PATTER

For All Branches of Theatricals

FUN-MASTER GAG FILES

Nos. 1 thru 20 @ $1.00 each (Nos. 21 thru 25 Ready Soon)

"BOOK OF BLACK-OUTS"

3 Vols. @ $20.00 Per Vol., or $50.00 for 3 Vols.

"BOOK OF PARODIES"

10 Sock Parodies for $10.00

"HOW TO MASTER THE CEREMONIES"

(How to Be an Emcee)

$3.00 Per Copy

No C.O.D.'s on any material! If on route, send permanent address.

PAULA SMITH

200 W. 54th St., New York 19, N.Y.

HELENE and HOWARD

'Comedy Dance Antics'

HELD OVER 2ND WEEK

GOLDEN GATE THEATRE

San Francisco

Dir.: MATTY ROSEN

START THE NEW YEAR WITH A BOFF!

JUST OUT! Send only one dollar for PUNCH LINES containing over 200 ORIGINAL, SUREFIRE gags written by a top radio gagman. Perfect for comics, gagmen, columnists (attention press agents!!).

LAUGHS UNLIMITED

276 W. 43rd St. BRyant 9-0774

New York City

ALWAYS WORKING

'WHITEY' ROBERTS

NOW COMMERCIAL HOTEL

ELKO, NEVADA

With Benny Busse & Orchestra

Dir.: WM. MORRIS

COMEDY MATERIAL FOR SALE

Three clever, special material comedy songs for comedian—never used—for sale at fraction of original cost.

Write Box 775, Variety

154 West 46th St., New York 19, N. Y.

Thank you

Mr. Eddie Davis

For having honored us by designating Sunday, Dec. 22nd as the

LUCILLE and EDDIE ROBERTS

Pre-Xmas Celebrity Party Nite

At Your World-Famous

LEON & EDDIE'S 33 West 52nd New York

You are indeed a grand host and we want you to know that our friends all had a wonderful time.

Gratefully,

The Roberts

P.S.: Thank you too—Miss Dorothy Gulman

Harry Green also thanks you

Curry, Byrd AND Le Roy

"BEDLAM IN THE BALLROOM"

ON TOUR

Direction MATTY ROSEN CLUB-DATES HARRY GREEN

Unit Producers See Greater Demand For Packages as Bandshows Fade

Unit producers anticipate a return of the package type entertainment during the coming year. Feeling that bandshows have outplayed themselves and there aren't sufficient top personalities to supply all vaudeers, unit shows may be the answer.

So far, only two new layouts have been formed, Paul Small has packaged "Showtime" and Jerry Rosen has formed a "Stars and Gripes" unit with Smith & Dale, Olsen & Joy, Ziggy Lane, and Moke & Doke. Currently on the road are Earl Carroll's "Vanities" and Harry Howard's "Star and Garter."

However, vaude bookers and house operators are generally unwilling to take chances on the package shows inasmuch as general selling price runs around $8,500 and overages. Protagonists of the unit idea feel that bookers will eventually be forced to use more of this type show during the coming year.

In the meantime, units now on the road are having comparatively tough sledding because of failure of major house bookers to take to the units in a big way. They're caught between inability to get consecutive bookings in any given area and insufficiency of houses big enough to support expensive shows.

Several shows have had to make jumps from southern territories to come into New York and New England, while "Vanities" has been forced to play a cafe in the absence of consecutive vaude time. Latter unit, which is operated by Bobby Vernon, is handicapped by the fact that Carroll is unwilling to have the unit play niteries. Its date at the 400 club, St. Louis, was played over Carroll's protests. A deal for the Latin Quarter, Chicago, had to be cancelled.

The producers, however, are counting on the fact that the bookers will be forced to turn to units, especially since there are no new bands of interest, and necessity to maintain big shows in many houses. They anticipate the unit show upbeat to make itself evident when paucity of new bands further decrease b.o. takes.

TO: HECHT & BASS

150 W. 49th Street

New York City

Thanks, KEN HECHT and SID BASS, for the terrific comedy medley which you created for me . . . and which is getting me loads of laughs at Loew's State, New York.

Johnny Morgan

WANTED!

Floor Shows, Variety Acts and Bands!

Break your jump here, no act too large, best spot in Arkansas, we have large seating capacity, will book 1-2-3 weeks, write, wire or phone, TED COPE, manager.

CLUB PLANTATION

Westwood 168 Little Rock, Ark.

STEVE EVANS

Offering

HAPPY TIMES & JOLLY MOMENTS

HELD OVER

GOLDEN GATE, SAN FRANCISCO

DIR.: MATTY ROSEN

Toots Shor Wins Suit To Restrain A. C. Spot Infringing on Name

Camden, N. J., Dec. 30.

The name and fame of Toots Shor's restaurant in New York belong solely to Bernard Shor, according to a ruling made here last week by Vice Chancellor Albert S. Woodruff.

The court held that when Bert Roland named his eating establishment in Atlantic City Toots Shor's Cafe the "attempt to deceive the public is obvious." Chancellor Woodruff granted Shor an injunction and ordered Roland to change the name of his place.

Roland maintained he named the restaurant after his wife nickname "Toots," and added Shores because it was located at the seashore.

Chancellor Woodruff's 20-page opinion said, in part: "Tourists visiting our eastern seaboard and looking for a good restaurant and good food in Atlantic City today probably will be in New York a day or two hence, pursuing the same purpose.

"The fame and good reputation of the complainant and his restaurant has extended to and beyond Atlantic City."

Acorn Draws 10-Yr. Term In Mont'l Stabbing Match

Montreal, Dec. 30.

William "Bill" Acorn, comedian, was sentenced to 10 years in prison last week on a charge of manslaughter which aros from the stabbing death of Lester Velez, 23-year-old U. S. boxer.

Acorn was playing at the Samovar last September when he became involved in a fight with Velez, and the stabbing resulted.

Judge Wilfred Lazure, of Court of King's Bench, who sentenced Acorn said in passing sentence that "When a jury reduces a verdict from murder to manslaughter, as in your case, the sentence is usually life in prison. But I feel that you had no intention of killing him, so I am reducing sentence."

Murder charge was made after the boxer's death at a rooming house run by Carol Grauer, manager of the Samovar. Acorn allegedly tried to commit suicide with the same knife that caused Velez's death.

Par Starlet's P.A.s

Olga San Juan, Paramount starlet, has been signed for a personal appearance at the Paramount theatre, N. Y., starting Jan. 15.

Miss San Juan will be on the bill with Mills Bros., Elliot Lawrence orch, and Tim Herbert, Jr.

MAXINE SULLIVAN

VILLAGE VANGUARD

NEW YORK

NOW

(Indefinitely)

Hazel Scott Breach Case Set for Trial in N.Y. Jan. 10

Breach of contract suit by Benjamin F. Kutcher, Trenton, N. J., concert promoter, against Hazel Scott has been set for Jan. 10 in the N. Y. supreme court. Miss Scott is being sued for $25,000 damages by Kutcher because of failure to fill a concert date at the Memorial auditorium, Trenton, Dec. 3, 1945. Miss Scott claims she was unable to appear because of impending birth of her child.

In a pre-trial examination last week, Miss Scott lost a motion to have Kutcher post a $250 bond to secure costs of trial in the event he lost the case.

Prep Icers For South America

Ice skating shows are beginning to assume international proportions. Popularity of this type entertainment has been established in the United States with the big touring shows as well as the hotel and nitery icers. This type show is also beginning to catch on in other countries.

England has a blades display at Stoll's theatre. Show has been playing to capacity houses, and house management is already at work on another edition. William Morris agency has been signing skaters for the new layout which will preem sometime next year.

Interest in blades displays has also been evidenced in South America. Argentine and Brazilian impresarios have been querying major talent offices about the export of frozen entertainment. Jules Stein, chairman of the Music Corp. of America board, after his recent South American trip, reported that ice-shows would clean up in those countries. The displays could be put on in outdoor games in the metropolitan areas for heavy gates.

JACK HARRIS STILL IN BAD WITH BRIT. TOOTERS

London, Dec. 20.

Jack Harris, now at the Bagatelle, Paris, where he has bolstered up trade, is here to arrange for his reinstatement as an English resident and look into his former company's—(Embassy Orchestras, Ltd.) —activities.

Immediately on his arrival here, agitation was launched against him by several musicians who made representation to the Ministry of Labour that he be refused permit to work here.

This despite fact no application has been made by Harris or anyone connected with him for a working permit.

Fri.-Sun. Policy of Local Bands for New'k Terrace

Terrace Room, Newark, which was turned into a ballroom last fall when top bands were not available to the previous cafe-style of operation, further pulls in its horns next month. From a full-week ballroom policy using medium-priced name combos, the Terrace will move into a Friday-to-Sunday dance policy with local bands, the remainder of the week being given over to catering to organizational parties, etc.

Simon LaFarge, who bought the Terrace equipment, etc., from the Rosenhaus brothers, owners of the building, is installing the Jack Arnold Press orchestra, a local outfit, for weekend work starting in mid-January and will try to hold that line.

J. Dorsey's B'way Cycle

Jimmy Dorsey's orchestra completes a cycle of Broadway band-show houses this spring when he goes into the Paramount theatre. Dorsey last played the Paramount seven or eight years ago, before he shot to the top of the band heap with a string of hit records. He then switched to the Strand, followed by the Roxy, then the Capitol, where he played his last Broadway date a year ago this month.

Date at the Paramount is for either March 19, 26 or April 2. It'll be in conjunction with the Bob Hope-Dorothy Lamour film, "My Favorite Brunette." Dorsey is currently at the Pennsylvania hotel, New York.

Florida Niteries Yearn for Seasonal Spenders to Take 'Em Out of Red

Indications that Florida bistro ops are apprehensive of the forthcoming season is seen in the withdrawal of shows from the Jewel Box, Miami Beach, which will operate as an eatery.

Despite the fact that the height of the season is still several weeks off, club owners are starting to prune budgets, feeling that the total Miami Beach revenue will not approach last year's figures.

The hotels are not yet fully booked probably because of the absence of any protracted cold spell in the north, and general unwillingness of the crowds to shell out.

As a result, Miami and Miami Beach niteries have gotten meagre crowds. Pattern of the current season, so far, have been heavy opening night crowds, and light patronage thereafter. The Latin Quarter, Copacabana, Beachcomber and other spots have been operating in the red, so far, but bonfides are hoping that a post-New Years surge of vacationers will provide a greater spread of trade.

Union Clears Songstress Of Ankling Nitery Date

Monica Boyar, songstress, was given the nod by American Guild of Variety Artists last week on charges brought by Bill Peterson, of Consolidated Radio Artists, that she inkled an engagement he had set for her at the Chateau, N. Y. nitery.

Hearing developed that Miss Boyar had never signed contract to play the spot but that her agent, Jack Miller, had okayed date without consulting her.

AGVA ruled there had been no breach on the singer's part since there had been no contract.

Jimmy Savo Agrees On Hub Nitery Date When AGVA Intervenes

Jimmy Savo, comedian, has patched up differences with management of the Bradford Roof, Boston, opening a three-week date there Jan. 9. Amicable adjustment was brought about through intervention of American Guild of Variety Artists, who advised the comic he had a moral, if not contractual obligation to play the date.

Controversy stemmed back to an option Boston nitery had held for services of Savo at time he was hospitalized for amputation of leg. Savo figured that such inability to play date at that time abrogated contract. Nitery management on other hand claimed differently, stating it had been given to understand he would play date later upon recovery.

Savo, on the other hand, has been getting better coin since Hub pact was made and figured he was not obligated to take the lesser deal. It's understood nitery made some adjustment on that too, but salary figures are not revealed.

Como's $7,500 Date At N. Y. Paramount

Perry Como is aiming to do theatre work this summer for the first time since start of his rise into the top brackets. Singer has been set for the Paramount theatre, N. Y., opening June 11. At the moment, it's the only booking for him. Others will follow.

Como is drawing $7,500 weekly, a price voluntarily set by the Paramount. Latter had an option on the singer from his last date there years ago, calling for a salary of $4,000 the first week and $3,750 and $3,500 for successive weeks. Date follows his final broadcast for Chesterfield, June 6.

Negotiations are proceeding for a run at the Oriental theatre, Chicago, to follow the Paramount.

SONIA CORTIS

INTERNATIONAL SINGING STAR

Currently Appearing at

BELLERIVE HOTEL

KANSAS CITY, MO.

Parodies! Special Songs! Bits!

★ Drew from our library, one of the largest, most comprehensive in Showbiz!

★ 1947 Catalog FREE!

★ Exclusive material our specialty!

J. & H. KLEINMAN

25-31-41 30th Road, L. I. City 2, N. Y.

Telephone: Astoria 8-6865

Night Club Reviews

Copacabana, Miami

(Continued from page 36)

his Army routine for a begoff finish.

Earning as sock a reception as Stone, Frances Faye, always a draw in these parts, had them all the way with her pianoing and singing. Has some new material which is top-drawer stuff, and her voice has never better. Was on for six numbers, and could have stayed for many more.

Paul Sydell and dogs made for the third new act in this edition. As usual his biz with the mongrel and the Mex mutt garner him solid palm-whacks.

Production wise, Benny Davis has held over the fine work of Paul Haakon and his class ballet interps, Marvin Mims, the slim miss with the spin-taps done in the better vein; Ralph Young, the swoon-singer, who improves with each appearance, and the Biontones to lend harmony color to the background songs and that nifty June Taylor line and choreography. The artfully staged group numbers still seem fresh and sparkling.

Dave Tyler rates a bow for his show cutting. He and his unit are one of the better show bands in town. Stone's accompanist, too, heightened the comic's stint with his piano backing. Nose Marvelis and Jack Durant added to the draw, power of the lineup with the hip-swingers jamming the floor to his Afro-Cuban rhythms. In the lounge, Henrietta Cameron keeps them happy with some neatly devised and skillfully played organ arrangements. Larry.

Chateau, N. Y.

Lillian Roth, Herman Chittison Trio, Bret Morrison, Patricia Milburn, Wry Guys (3), Chico; $3.50 min.

Eastside's latest contribution to the late-hour entertainment circuit, opened Sunday (27) in time for the lush New Year's eve trade and has a chance of staying around after the holidays. Spot has been redecorated and cocktail lounge of long-standing (Chateau Moderne), and embarked on its cafe career with the addition of talent and a refurbishing job.

Room is small with a capacity of less than 100 and is cheerfully decorated in a pastel shaded modern motif. Although the spot's size isn't conducive to large entertainment budgets, the $3.50 minimum and moderate beverages alone could conceivably make up sufficient revenue to atone for its small size.

Top items on this bill are Lillian Roth (New Acts) who's coming back to entertainment circles after a hiatus of several years, and the Herman Chittison trio, one of the top instrumental groups around.

The Chittison trio, long a mainstay at the Blue Angel, knew how to cater to spots devoid of dancing. They aim for and achieve a high degree of melody that make listeners out of singers.

Other item of interest on the show is Bret Morrison (New Acts) who deserted radio shows for this income, and is now starting to expand into niteries.

Patricia Milburn and the Wry Guys (both New Acts) complete the bill with the singularly named Chico making with the piano licks. Jose.

El Morocco, Monti'l

Montreal, Dec. 27.

Joey Bishop, The Buccaneers (6), Rosita & Dido, Line (6), Al Grant Orch (11); $1.50 min.

With the kind of entertainment being seen currently at this spot, it's no wonder that n.s.g. biz usually apparent at this time of the year seems to be missing. True, the ropes aren't up, but there are fewer tablecloths showing than in previous years.

Joey Bishop, back in a return engagement, tops the layout. It's obvious that he's a very improved comic since last here, though he did register big even then. His timing and delivery are smoother, and he doesn't waste time over a gag that goes flat; a point too many comics miss. His material, consisting of hits and quips rather than anything set, has also perked up considerably though he does dig back once in a while when things slow up. Held them all the way and off to plenty applause.

Vocalizing of the Buccaneers makes for nice balance of the parlay, the act indeed doing a bang-up job socko arrangements of tunes from current musicals. "Oklahoma!" medley is clicko teeoffer, with a mixture from "Annie Get Your Gun" also going over big. Appearance of six men on the small floor in this intimate boite is attention-getter and the slick harmonizing, range of voices and smart ending garner hefty mitts. Also heard are various novelty arrangements ("Alexander's Ragtime Band") and the inescapable "White Christmas."

Ballroomologists Rosita & Dino are clicko in the opening spot featuring plenty of tricks in the lift and spin departments. Short stature of the male partner is unusual but stint gets good results. Duo come back later to bring the payees on the floor for a samba lesson. Gimmick gets boffo response.

Line's routines are average. Al Grant's orch is much improved on the showcutting. Biz okay. Laca.

Rio Cabana, Chi

Chicago, Dec. 27.

Jerry Lester, Terry Lawlor, Berry Bros. (2), Nancy Doran, Don Bradfield, Cee Davidson Orch (8); $3.50-$5 minimum.

Top nitery news of the holiday season is Jerry Lester's sock opening here, sans the blue stuff, with the comic holding the floor for a solid hour, and having to beg off.

His imitation of Harry Richman, in which he hobbles to the mike and the floor with some crack about the bit being from one of Richman's latest pictures, which he made in 1910, takes about 15 minutes getting started. During this time you get everything from a talcum on Dick Haymes to some talented" juggling, all making for real yocks.

The Berry brothers, two colored boys in tails and top hats, come through with some nifty soft shoe prancing, then a routine fast hoofing to win hefty applause.

Red haired, white gowned, Terry Lawlor is no show stopper, but does a fair rendition of her specialty vocalizing. Tees off with "Coffee Song," then "Josephine" and "Pretty Baby Blue Eyes" for encores.

Line 'seems to have added some sparkle to their usual good terp work, resulting in a nifty Latin number, which turns into fast samba with appearance of ballerina Nancy Doran, who contributes a specialty routine. Don Bradfield's baritoning of production numbers also rates a nod.

Cee Davidson oreh okay on showbacking and customer dansapation. Loop.

Glass Hat, N. Y.

(HOTEL BELMONT-PLAZA)

Bob Russell, Blair & Dean, Frakson, Eddie Stone's Orch; $2.50 minimum.

This is a etter bifl than most for the Glass Hat, and the budget obviously is higher, too. It's unfortunate, though, that now and again the transient trade that frequents this spot can't hold its liquor sufficiently well to appreciate properly such capable performers as Bob Russell, Blair and Dean, plus Frakson the magician, whose show caught it was particularly brutal. It's a tribute to the bill that it could go on at all.

Russell remains an ingratiating emcee and singer, and he can toss off a line with the best of entertainment, however, he could brace his material. But his looks, baritone voice, manner and casualness help make him a good bet for a Broadway musical.

Blair and I can recently closed at La Martinique, just across town, and, as always, still sock over their ballroom stuff. Dixon's music is long since standard, always a puzzler and palm-winner. Kahn.

Kelly's Stable, N. Y.

Roy Sedley, Hal Hixon, Fatso Marco, Marsha Keat, Hilda Wilde, Allegro, Mary Osborne Trio, Bill Donahue Orch (3); $2.50 minimum.

In a harkback to the halcyon days of Jack White's old Club 18, boniface George Lynch has switched to a five pic. to zany entertainment with Roy Sedley carrying the pitch to a more adult theme than the younger element, which formerly frequented this 52nd street bistro. Minimum has been upped also in line with the house's fond belief that the new type of patron will tend to linger longer than the youth set which used to duck in and out, depending on the size of their allowance.

Emulation of the bandstand in favor of a miniature stage for blackouts in the rear of dance floor gives spot a bit more room, changing of show. Sedley is aided and abetted by Hal Hixon and Fatso Marco, all whom keep up a running commentary of ad libbing and comic battling which latter all take good naturedly. Despite his corny material—using such gems as "Is that your brother? . . . No, my brother's living!" variety—Sedley's humor is broad, clean and inoffensive and easily makes for a diverting hour.

Also contributing to the hilarities are Marsha Keat, a cute blonde chirper, who warbles "It's a Great Day for the Irish," and brunet Hilda Wilde, whose shapely chassis is set off to good advantage by a form-fitting black gown. She felchingly chants, "Love Is Sweeping the Country" and "South America Take It Away." Allegra, another femme vocalist, though a better one, contributs a shrill "Cosi Cosa."

Mary Osborne Trio, comprising bass, electric guitar and piano, is a so-so group whose chief value lies in Miss Osborne's voice and string strumming. Sam Donahue's three-piece combo supplies okay dansapation. Though coal blackout badly affected the street last week, biz was fair op night caught, Thursday (5). Remains to be seen however, whether a shift from name combos, which prevailed at this spot for some 20 years, to low-budgeted comedy will click the cash registers here when patronage is still diving everywhere.

New Acts

LILLIAN ROTH
Songs
15 Mins.
Chateau, N. Y.

Lillian Roth, who achieved eminence in musical comedy and films, is currently essaying a comeback after several years of retirement. Preem night at the Chateau indicates that she hasn't lost her songselling skill in the intervening years. She still has a robust and punchy delivery, knows her way around an audience, has a general adds up to worthy cafe fodder.

With the material she has on tap, which includes a medley of songs she's identified with, some special material numbers and excellent arrangements of some pops, she's likely to more than get by in vaude.

She comes by her strong stage instincts naturally. She's been on the boards for a long time, starting out as part of a moppet turn from which she graduated to a single and subsequently to musicals and films. Entire turn shows a great deal of know-how which her hiatus of several years hasn't dimmed. Jose.

BRET MORRISON
Songs
10 Mins.
Chateau, N. Y.

Bret Morrison, who's "The Shadow" on the air show, seems to be quite a versatile citizen. His income from radio work precludes necessity of taking on night work to augment it, but it's probably the fact that he wants a wider variety of experience that impels his cafe work.

He's definitely an elevated baritone in his nitery preem—one that has necessary smoothness and projection. But for intime cafe cheese, he must yet acquire a warmness to get him completely across. As he now stands, he's a newcomer's conception of what an east-side emcee should be like—cold and cultured. Which won't hurt his cause any.

He makes an extremely nice appearance in tails, and if he sticks at his cafe engagement he should do well. Jose.

VICTORIA SCHOOLS
Songs
Erie, Pa.
State, N. Y.

Victoria Schools has been around personal appearance theatre spots as well as soloist on concert tours and has recently completed a role in the late Hoyt Vinton's "Gypsy Lady." Consequently she shows a polished act. Miss Schools opens with a coloratura aria from "Romeo and Juliet" to reveal an essentially rich voice with a great deal of technical finish. She's able to take the trilly runs without losing vocal quality. At how caught, she did two numbers, closing with Jerome Kern's "You Are Love." All find favor with the pew-holders.

In the appearance department Miss Schools stacks up extremely well. She has looks and is modishly gowned. Jose.

WRY GUYS (3)
Comedy
10 Mins.
Chateau, N. Y.

The Wry Guys are attempting something different in the male trio type of turn—the spots as well as poor selection of material cuts down chances of showing off to advantage the talents of the individuals. The boys attempt literate takeoffs on various type of acts and radio commercials hung with special material songs, but their humor is the type that reads well but lacks punch when executed vocally.

They make a nice appearance and have good vocal equipment, but lack the experience and material for the cafe and vaude circuit. Jose.

PATRICIA MILBURN
Songs
10 Mins.
Chateau, N. Y.

Patricia Milburn, with additional cafe experience, will be a worthy item for intimeries. Voice needs additional polishing before she'll get the most she's striving for, but in delivery and appearance she stands up well.

Miss Milburn has a nice ballad style, but needs sharpening in the rhythm department. Jose.

Dixon's, N. Y., Expanding

Dixon's steak house, N. Y., which started as the Club 18, is dividing its layout into two parts, with separate entertainment in each room. Dardanella trio has been set for the front part of the house, while the Joe Mooney quartet will continue in the main room.

New operation starts Jan. 3.

Variety Bills

WEEK OF JANUARY 1

Numerals in connection with bills below indicate opening day of show, whether full or split week.
Letters in parentheses indicate circuit. (I) Independent; (L) Loew; (P) Paramount; (R) RKO; (W) Warner

NEW YORK CITY
Capitol (L) 1
Tommy Dorsey Orc
Mitch Ayres
Pl Psyhks & Jaquez
Music Hall (R) 1
Vanchakaina
Rockettes
Corps de Ballet
Skat Orc
Paramount (P) 3
Tony Pastor Bd
Andrews Sis
Jos Paul 2
Mitch Ayres
Martin Bros
Roxy (R) 1
Ramirez & Antonio
Betty Hannon
Emma Otero
Roxyettes
State (L) 2
Shep Fields Orc
Strand (W) 3
Vaughn Monroe Orc
Johnny Mack
BROOKLYN
Paramount (P) 31
Perry Como
Bob Nelson
Tex Beneke
Walter Nilsson
Modernaires
Trio
The Clowsers
Herb Howard
Jack Durant
Sarah Reed
Murrah Bros
A Donnelly & Bob
Lee Noble

Bob Evans
Tex Beneke Orc
HARTFORD
State (L) 3
Stan Kenton Orc
Steve Rogers
Meredith Ole
BOLTON
Valley Arena (I) 31
George Freeman
& Pantion
Rosita Page
Helene Dale
MIAMI
Olympia (P) 31
Burns 2 & Bonita
George Prentice
Lorraine Howard
Bert Wheeler Co
Lee Gleason
NEWARK
Adams (L) 2
Gene Krupa Orc
3 Rhythm Boys
Artie Dunn
NEW BEDFORD
Bailey Sq (I) 2-4
Gonzales Duo
Honey Murray
Brandy & Barrett
Doris Faye
Jack Conway
PATERSON
Majestic (I) 2-3
Harris & Allen
Bobby Long
Grace Drysdale
Jack Durant
The Reddingtons
3
PHILADELPHIA
Boyd (I) 31
Peter Chan
Frank Orchs
Jackie Jerome
Diana Lorraine
The Clowns
RAHWAY
Rapporteur (I) 31
Eddy Howard
Jack Durant
Murrah Bros
Trio
A Donnelly & Bob
Lee Noble

Bob Evans
Tex Beneke Orc
Welch Village Inn
T & G Reeds
Frankie Rivera
Chaves Rumba
Band
Ned Harvey Orc
Havana-Madrid
Pace Reyes
Gloria Lachman
Margaret Phelan
Theresa Sui
Catalino Orc
MIAMI
Olympia (P) 31
Burns 2 & Bonita
George Prentice
Lorraine Howard
Bert Wheeler Co
Lee Gleason
NEWARK
Adams (L) 2
Gene Krupa Orc
3 Rhythm Boys
Artie Dunn
NEW BEDFORD
Bailey Sq (I) 2-4
Gonzales Duo
Honey Murray
Brandy & Barrett
Doris Faye
Jack Conway
PATERSON
Majestic (I) 2-3
Harris & Allen
Bobby Long
Grace Drysdale
Jack Durant
The Reddingtons
3
PHILADELPHIA
Boyd (I) 31
Peter Chan
Frank Orchs
Jackie Jerome
Diana Lorraine
The Clowns
RAHWAY
Rapporteur (I) 31
Eddy Howard
Jack Durant
Murrah Bros
Trio
A Donnelly & Bob
Lee Noble

Matty Sundi
Steve Richards
Tony Fabian
Harris Gallay
Rubani Band
Marian & Miranda
Muriel Gordon
Ching Ling
Cuticle Willace 3
Leonard Elliott
3
Nat Charlles
Jean Sablon
Rose Perry Orc
Vendrillo
Village Barn
Zeb Carver
Garlands
Alicia Latimer
Bert Stone
Patsy Lucas
Jimmy Nola
Ray Pierrier
Village Vanguard
Maxine Sullivan
Josephine Premice
Dorothy Douglas
Pete Seeger
Dan Burley
Eddie Gibbs
3
Bob Lee
Gertrude Hill
Jean Abadie
Francisco
Norma Carman
Vivian Nickolson
Helen Gray Orc
Zanzibar
Phebna Pinkett
Bunny Briggs
Ethel Waters
Hot Shots
Bill Doyle
Eddie Vinson Orc
Al Morgan Orc

THE 3 RAYS
New at TOWN CASINO, BUFFALO
FOR 2 WEEKS
Per. Mgt.: BILLY CREEDON
EDDIE SMITH AGENCY
1501 Broadway, New York

Charles Seaman
D & D Perlines
3
Cole Sis
Lenny Lawyer
(Two to fill)
BOSTON
Keith's (K) 2
Jack Durant
Ray Pearl
Bill Kay Orc
Tommy Dix
Lambert
CAMDEN
Towers (I) 3-5
Peter Chan
Phyllis Wallis
Grandell Sis
Alan Weissman
John Van Dyke Orc
CHICAGO
Chicago (R) 3
Bird Trio
Jeanne Ragman
Pat Herbert
Ralph Young
Larry Storch
FINCH'S
Alhee (R) 2
Alvino Rey Orc
Paul Regan
Lane & Harris
Wally Boag
HOLLYWOOD
Palace (R) 6-8
E Howard Orc

PROVIDENCE
Metcalf's (I) 31-1
Gwenolyn Dunn
Lou Sis
Jimmy Murray
Doris Faye
Valentinos
3 Honey Bros
Skating Jacks
The Cabineers
SAN FRANCISCO
Golden Gate (R) 2
Thanes
Helene & Howard
Bob Shannon
Merry Macs
SPRINGFIELD
Court Sq (I) 31
The Kaisers
S & S Stevens
Clyde Hager Co
Edward Sis
Paige & Paige
Anthony & Rogers
Orch
WASHINGTON
Capitol (L) 2
Claire & Hudson
Diana Barry
John Bubbles
WOONSOCKET
Ivy Inn (I) 30
Rhondys & Rayes
Davis Fay
Pritchard & Lord
(One to fill)

400 Club
Tim Spencer Orc
Gwich Village Inn
Jackie Miles
Sherry Britton
Ned Harvey Orc
Hickory House
Ben Webster
Sid Catlett
Meade Lux Lewis
Marian McPartland
Pete Brown
Eddie Condon
Wild Bill Davison
Hotel Commodore
Johnny Long Orc
Hotel Dixie
Dolly Dawn Orc
Ray Hammond
Lou Bellet
Dean & Ray
Hotel New Yorker
Sammy Kaye Orc
Martha Raye
June Arnold
Ethel & Darlet
Alice Farrar
Bob Troup
Hotel Pennsylvania
Charlie Spivak Orc
Hotel Pierre
L & G Harris
Chas Reader Orc
Hotel Plaza
Hildegarde
Hal Kemp Orc
Monte Orc
Hotel Roosevelt
Guy Lombardo Orc
Hotel Taft
Enoch Light Orc
Waldorf-Astoria
Myrna
Fanning & Lang
John Molinari
Bill Coleman Orc
Mischa Borr Orc
Basanez Orc
Al Morgan

CHICAGO

Blackhawk
Russ Carlyle Orc
Eddie Howard
Woo Woo Sisters
Chez Paree
Tony Martin
Cyd Charisse
Jack Cole
Nina Landis
Gay Claridge Orc
Adorables (12)
Lucio Garcia Orc
Colosimo's
Ryan Bros
Ben Cooper
Evelia Jolie Pa'cho
Keith Models
Alexis Smith
Sol Poola Orc
Gaucho Room
Frank Parker
Jack Durant
Thy Reyes Orc
Jane Seymour Orc
Torres Twins
Wally & Bob
Jimmie Burrell
3
Hotel Bismarck
(Joseph Basil Orc Outfit
Cantu
Bernardis
Lenore
Annette Olsen
Montero & Yvonne
Phillips & Peters
Hotel Blackstone
Hartmans
Ramon Orch
Hotel Congress
Harding & Moss
Hal Dickinson
Margie Fields
Jack Cole Orc
Hotel Continental
Za Rachos
Marianne Reade
Sheldon Reed

Stephen Kisley Orc
Bryan Flores
Sensationalists
Diarlers
Rong Stylists
Lamae-Gaye
Jan Stewart
Ramon Lambert
Hotel Sherman
Glen Gray Orc
Carl Mathy
Phil Grandinetti
College Inn Models
Hal deLeon
Clyde Mercer Orc
Tamara
Billie Bennett
Wesley Landgreen
Boulevar-Jeans
Latin Quarter
Maurice Rocco
Lucille Ellis
Gene Barlos
The Wilsons
Paul Carleton
Bobby Sherwood Orc
Palmer House
Johnny Knight
Freddie Nagel Orc
Sally Rand
Blackburn (2)
Abbott Dancers (12)
3
Jerry Lester
Terry Lawlor
Berry Brothers
The Lovelies (16)
Nancy Doran Orc
Vine Gardens
Jessie Dixon Orc
Bill Meagher
Thomas & Thomas
Jill Fontaine
Pat Rogers
Jos Klein Orc
Abel Cole Orc

Cabaret Bills

NEW YORK CITY

Aquarium
Lionel Hampton O
Slim Gaillard
John Hinchmaster
Trio
Vicente Gomez
Hal Singer
Stuart Ross
Bill Harris 2
Golden Gate 4
Bandbox
(Downtown)
Pimlama
Susan Reed
Bill Greenhead
J C Heard Orc
La Martinique
(Uptown)
Dinah Shaw
Imogene Coca
Peter Donald
Peter Johnson
Dave Martin 3
Edmund Hall
Carnival
Allton Steele
Billy Ardelty
Marion Cowe
Ben Yost Singers
Milton Gaites
China Doll
Ted Straeter Tr
Francess Chan
Ben Lee
Ming Lang
Jose Curbelle Orc
Copacabana
Sid Stewart
Rene Rivera
Ann Rooney
Bobby Sudler
Blaze & Nelli
Olga Suarez
Michael Duroe Orc
Frank Marlo Orc
Diamond Horseshoe
Sid
Herman Hyde
Harry Delmar
Rosebuds
Bobby Gleason
Billy Banks
Dancing Twins
Tables Dunn
Renalo & Brady
Jack Mathews
Noble Sissle Orc
Syd Kramer Orc
El Chico
Rosita Rios
Miguel Alsinello
Chelo Villasuso

Iceland
Ice Revue
F Whiteman Jr Or
Kelly's Stable
Ray Sedley
Fatso Marco
Marsha Hunt
Hal Hixon
Bunny Briggs
Allegro Orc
La Conga
Chris Cahill
Carlos & Linda
Irma Henriques
Jimmy Reardon
Paul Campos Orc
La Martinique
Nic Dunham
Phil Foster
Jane Dale
Rene Stanford Orc
Latin Quarter
Hennie Spitalny
George Tapps
Dick Smith Sis
Arnaut Bros
Myrill & Freund
Chick Hamlin
Eadie
Wanger Line
Leon & Eddie's
Edith Davis
Dusty Fletcher
Franklin 2
Leblanc & Garcia
Sherry Britton
Art Carr Orc
Monte Carlo
Dick Gasparre O
Roberto
Silvers
Old Romanian
Jan Murvin
Sadie Banks
Nina Dover
Ralph Brest
Bobby Harrell
La Vie Boheme
Ralph Paul Orc
Marty Beck Orc
Rapp's Corner
Kernels of Corn
Hal Alonso
Gay Blades
Don Baker
Tom Tie Sod Orc
Stella
Embassy
Chu Chu Martinez
Camella & Patricia
Ralph Font Orc
Arthur Ravel Orc

Matty Malneck
Buddy Rich
Dodo Marmarosa
Tony Fabian
Harris Gallay
Rubani Band
Marian & Miranda
Muriel Gordon
Ching Ling
Cuticle Willace 3
Leonard Elliott
3
Nat Charlles
Jean Sablon
Rose Perry Orc
Vendrillo
Village Barn
Zeb Carver
Garlands
Alicia Latimer
Bert Stone
Patsy Lucas
Jimmy Nola
Ray Pierrier
Village Vanguard
Maxine Sullivan
Josephine Premice
Dorothy Douglas
Pete Seeger
Dan Burley
Eddie Gibbs
3
Bob Lee
Gertrude Hill
Jean Abadie
Francisco
Norma Carman
Vivian Nickolson
Helen Gray Orc
Zanzibar
Phebna Pinkett
Bunny Briggs
Ethel Waters
Hot Shots
Bill Doyle
Eddie Vinson Orc
Al Morgan Orc

CHICAGO

Blackhawk
Russ Carlyle Orc
Eddie Howard
Woo Woo Sisters
Chez Paree
Tony Martin
Cyd Charisse
Jack Cole
Nina Landis
Gay Claridge Orc
Adorables (12)
Lucio Garcia Orc
Colosimo's
Ryan Bros
Ben Cooper
Evelia Jolie Pa'cho
Keith Models
Alexis Smith
Sol Poola Orc
Gaucho Room
Frank Parker
Jack Durant
Thy Reyes Orc
Jane Seymour Orc
Torres Twins
Wally & Bob
Jimmie Burrell
3
Hotel Bismarck
(Joseph Basil Orc Outfit
Cantu
Bernardis
Lenore
Annette Olsen
Montero & Yvonne
Phillips & Peters
Hotel Blackstone
Hartmans
Ramon Orch
Hotel Congress
Harding & Moss
Hal Dickinson
Margie Fields
Jack Cole Orc
Hotel Continental
Za Rachos
Marianne Reade
Sheldon Reed

Stephen Kisley Orc
Bryan Flores
Sensationalists
Diarlers
Rong Stylists
Lamae-Gaye
Jan Stewart
Ramon Lambert
Hotel Sherman
Glen Gray Orc
Carl Mathy
Phil Grandinetti
College Inn Models
Hal deLeon
Clyde Mercer Orc
Tamara
Billie Bennett
Wesley Landgreen
Boulevar-Jeans
Latin Quarter
Maurice Rocco
Lucille Ellis
Gene Barlos
The Wilsons
Paul Carleton
Bobby Sherwood Orc
Palmer House
Johnny Knight
Freddie Nagel Orc
Sally Rand
Blackburn (2)
Abbott Dancers (12)
3
Jerry Lester
Terry Lawlor
Berry Brothers
The Lovelies (16)
Nancy Doran Orc
Vine Gardens
Jessie Dixon Orc
Bill Meagher
Thomas & Thomas
Jill Fontaine
Pat Rogers
Jos Klein Orc
Abel Cole Orc

MARRIAGES

Linda Stirling to Sloan Nibley, Hollywood, Dec. 20. Bride is a screen actress; groom a screen writer.

Charlotte Jablons to Leonard Sitomer, New York, Dec. 24. Bride is secretary to Earl Wilson, N. Y. Post saloon editor; groom is in the William Morris Agency legit dept.

Dean Cornell to Tom Means, Kensington, Md., Dec. 21. Groom is WDEL-Cosmos promotion director in Washington.

Ann McCormick to Jackie Coogan, Los Angeles, Dec. 26. Bride is an actress; groom is the former kid film star.

Peggy Gordon to Dick McCormick, Los Angeles, Dec. 24. Bride is a screen actress.

Burt Lancaster to Norma Anderson, Yuma, Dec. 23. Groom is film actor; bride is former USO entertainer.

Patricia Quinn to Forrest Standley, Dallas, Dec. 24. Both are members of the Dallas Symphony Orchestra.

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Cotuno, son, New York, Dec. 26. Mother is former Ida Joy Balaban, daughter of A. J. (and Mrs.) Balaban, general manager of the Roxy theatre, N. Y.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bratsburg, twin sons, Hollywood, Dec. 24. Father is known on radio as Henry Morgan.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Weltner, daughter, Pittsburgh, Dec. 13. Father's with RKO exchange in Pitt.

Mr. and Mrs. Hal Klein, son, Culver City, Dec. 23. Father is assistant director at 20th-Fox.

Capitol, N. Y.

Tommy Dorsey Orch (37) with Stuart Foster, Charlie Shaver; Jack Carter, Virginia Austin; "The Secret Heart" (M-G), reviewed in VARIETY Dec. 4, '46.

Tommy Dorsey's oversize band curr'nt at the Capitol is playing it's last theatre date for the present. With the present downward trend in theatrical economics, few vauders will be playing bands of that size. The stage-filling Dorsey crew which includes 20 femme-string section of a harp, cellos, violas and fiddles, plus an orthodox male crew of 17, is one of the last of the super-sized bands.

An added fillip is the addition of Walter Gross for solo spot in "Rhapsody in Blue." Uncut version of the piece is generally too long to sustain interest in vauders. However, the terrific arrangement and Gross' brilliant ivorying make it entirely palatable to the pewholders.

TD has already disbanded his regular crew, and current crop of musickers represents a prize detachment from Local 802. It may not be his magnum opus musically, but stagewise it's as potent a collection as he's ever gathered. Trumpet soloist Charlie Shaver, who at one time did the arrangements for John Kirby, contributes some lush horn embroidery along with Dorsey's smooth tromboning. Their hot pieces get a tremendous rise from the crowd as do the subdued pieces. Although the femmes are decorative, there's not much that they contribute outside of some counter-pointing and a few spots on their own. Altogether Dorsey puts on a bandshow that's on a level with anything he's done in local vauders and there's no complaint from either boxoffice or entertainment viewpoint. Stuart Foster, in the male solo spot, does "Beguine" and "Old Man River" to hit hearty mitts.

The rest of the show with Jack Carter and Virginia Austin similarly measures up to standard. Carter, who isn't new to Stem stage shows, hasn't lost his exuberance between Broadway appearances. He's the type comedian that breaks up the musicians as well as the audiences and never does the same show twice in a row. His zany impressions, choice line of small talk and throwaway gags get maximum response.

Virginia Austin's puppet act is on the cute side, sometimes overly so. She endows the clown doll with a fetching personality and skillful manipulation, but talk is too sugary for adult consumption. Nonetheless, she provides the novelty note on the program for a good take. Jose.

Adams, Newark

Newark, Dec. 26.

Paul Small's "Show Time of 1947," with Slate Bros., Fay Carroll, Betty Jane Smith; Ladd Lyon, Lucienne & Ashour, Dorothy Byton Girls (12); Fabulous Suzanne (Rep.).

A fast, flashy extravaganza sets up a furious 65 minutes for the holiday session. Paul Small, agent and entrepreneur, has shot the works in his new package. The pace is rapid and the individual acts are smartly routined. Plenty of cute costumes for the girlie line as well as brightly painted backdrops, some of them in luminous paint, make this something of an eye feast.

In spirit, the revue is something like clean burlesque. The slapstick and sketches are none too pointed and a good deal of the patter is tired stuff.

Liveliest of the performers—and onstage most—are the Slate Brothers, three lively lads equipped to sing, dance, tell stories, do acrobatics and sling pies at each other. They're funny. So is Ladd Lyon, equilibrist, who has a fine time ribbing the customers.

Fay Carroll, slim looker with strong pipes, leads a couple of sharp production numbers, best being "The Coffee Song." Lucienne and Ashour call a few new turns on standard apache routine and lead into a gag adagio involving the Slates and a dummy dressed like Lucienne for a wild finale.

Betty Jane Smith is featured dancer and trips about with a slack sort of tempo. It's a good show. Bran.

Apollo, N. Y.

Jimmie Lunceford Orch (17) with Nick Brooks, Smith Sisters (3), Mason & Vigal, Lewis & White; Tip, Tap & Toe; "House of Horrors" (U).

Harlem's top house has come up with a neat holiday package. With entertainment values on a par with marquee lure, there were plenty standees at session caught.

The Jimmie Lunceford aggregation shows enough drive to satisfy the tastes of a hep audience, but enough finesse and discipline to keep from being unpleasant. They open with a socko-rocko medley after Lunceford explains what he's trying to do musically, showing a light melodic pattern behind heavy rhythm and brass chords.

Three Smith Sisters follow with a run-of-the-mine dance act. Bill, incidentally, is slightly topheavy in two departments, terp and comedy. Gals have entertaining routine but their terpability fails to live up.

No bill here would be complete without a blackout, and Spider Bruce obliges nicely.

Band comes back with "'Tain't What You Do, It's the Way That You Do It" and then has Nick Brooks doing "The Things We Did Last Summer." Brooks has high-pitched tenor not unlike a certain spot of Ink. Salesmanship lacking, and returns are only fair.

Tip, Tap and Toe, a sock dance act, are spotted next to closing. These boys have plenty of terp selling ability and work well together in spite of the fact that their individual styles are extremely different. While one does a novelty slide dance, another toetaps for top returns, and the last goes through a straight clickeroo terp step routine. Aud loves it.

Lunceford brings out a quartet from the reed and brass sections to do "Sit Back and Relax" and "Margie." There's a nice balance between comedy and rhythm here, with Brooks showing better than he did solo.

Windup on the bill are Lewis and White, with fine comedy chatter, dance, and novelty layout. Act starts with a plant in an upper box and some chatter that's corny, but they put it over. Down on the stage one of the boys does a fair dance bit while the other shows some new twists to baton twirling. Socko closer. Tomm.

RKO, Boston

Boston, Dec. 28.

"Earl Carroll Vanities," with Mercer Bros., Joyce & Jimmy Vey, Joe Mole, Coley Worth, Vernon & Draper, Ben Yost's Vikings; "Wake Up and Dream" (RKO).

Routine stuff of a familiar nature but nicely produced, nice looking gals, and okay standard specialties. Pleases the holiday customers looking for cheesecake, and should build to a good New Year's Eve biz, what with a midnight show, though there wasn't much trade around on opener. It was building fast by second show, however.

Production numbers include a couple of extra good South American ditties, "Babalu" and "Sloppy Joe's." Both have suitably exotic ideas and offer the gals in suitable undercut costumes. Usual vocal routine is there but with no particular effect. Another number brings the gals out on bikes to do fairly tricky stunts, with Joe Mole highlighting it with tricks on bikes and unicycles, some of them gagged up and all of them plenty skillful.

Supporting acts, mostly dancing, are fine, with Mercer brothers in two spots getting staunch kudos for their comedy hoofing. Vernon and Draper, in comedy adagio, likewise well-liked, and Joyce and Jimmy Vey ditto in fast taperoos and xylophone specialty. These dancing acts, in fact, rank at the top, any one of them being ordinarily sufficient to carry the hoofery dept.

Coley Worth wows as usual in a couple of patter slots, one of them with his standard breakaway fiddle, and Ben Yost's Vikings, male chorus, click in the marching and chowder song division. All in all very okay in the standard but solid pattern. Elie.

Chicago, Chi

Chicago, Dec. 26.

Burl Ives, Larry Storch, Lorraine Rognan & Pat McCaffrie, Bob Whaling & Yvette, Lou Breese Orch (17); "Blue Skies" (Par.).

Midwest opening of Irving Berlin's "Blue Skies" is the main draw here with stage bill getting a fast run through between pictures. Bill seems a bit skimpy, but all the acts do a good job with the time allotted them.

Headliner is Burl Ives, folk ballad singer. He sets the holiday mood with his rendition of a hobo's dream, "Big Rock Candy Mountain," "Foggy, Foggy Dew," and "Blue Tail Fly." Has the old cracker barrel manner and plays his guitar and sings as if he just walked into a country store and was jest settin' a bit before going on.

Bobby Whaling and Yvette open with comic antics on a breakdown bicycle and get the gasps from the crowd with Whaling doing the finale on a 10-foot unicycle.

Larry Storch leads off his impressions with Cary Grant and then runs the gamut of George Sanders, Humphrey Bogart, Peter Lorre, and Frank Morgan. Young satirist builds up his skits with fresh material and good physical characteristics of his subjects.

Lorraine Rognan and her new partner, Pat McCaffrie, do their zany ballroom and hoke fooling around. Miss Rognan has a flexible body which lands in most every part of the stage. Gal, who is really a fine dancer, commits mayhem on her straight man to bring robust laughs. McCaffrie does creditable solo on the cornet while partner switches to her ballroom costume to waltz to the "Blue Danube." Duo do a very good job of straight dancing for two minutes and then the bodies fly—male member ending in the orch pit. Have to beg off.

Strand, N. Y.

Vaughn Monroe Orch (23) with Betty Norton, Moon Maids (5), Frank Fontaine, Ziggy Talent, Johnny Mack, "The Time, The Place and The Girl" (WB), reviewed in VARIETY Dec. 11, '46.

This guy Vaughn Monroe, whose voice has had more brickbats tossed at it than most current pop singers, puts on quite a stage show.

As a matter of fact, his current exhibition at this house should be seen by a good many of his contemporaries and if they drew some ideas from it perhaps there would be less beefing from theatre bookers about the entertainment value of name orchestras at the prices they ask. And that the process is not restricted to a band of the type Monroe leads is easily proved by Lionel Hampton, whose outfit can curl your hair at 300 paces, yet is one of the crack stage groups in the business, with choral bits, etc.

Monroe does his job with only one accompanying act, the remainder stemming from the band or people he carries with it—for example, Frank Fontaine. And there isn't a slow spot in the entire hour, including the getaway numbers.

Most bands, because somebody at the top of the heap started it, have been partial to a fast, throwaway number to launch a stage show. That's been wrong for years. Monroe does a brief item introducing his people, then pops right into two recorded numbers with the Moon Maids—"It's My Lazy Day" and "Things We Did Last Summer." Since both were good RCA record hits, most bandleaders wouldn't think of inserting them anywhere but in a prominent midway spot. For Monroe, they get his show off at a fast pace, which never slackens.

Too, there is only one musical flagwaver used all the way through, an arrangement of "March of the Toys" near the close. That would be inconceivable to most maestros accustomed to doing things one way, minus any of the imagination a guy able to earn $10,000 a week might be expected to have—or buy. Most of the remaining numbers are accompanied by five strings, muted brass, saxes, plus a definite rhythmic undertone. Monroe's eight brass, five sax, four rhythm, and strings, incidentally, forms a better band than any he has ever had.

Leader's vocals, of course, are the peg on which the whole thing hangs. He doesn't do too many alone, confining himself to "Somewhere In the Night" and "September Song" and working with the Moon Maids, an attractive looking quintet who do a nice job, on others. Also in the vocal division is Betty Norton and Ziggy Talent, latter from the sax grouping. Miss Norton tees off with a special arrangement titled, "Without a Man." It's a cute piece, portions of which seem to lack taste, and it doesn't seem to fit her too well. Nevertheless, the audience goes for it heavily; ditto for her succeeding "Ole Buttermilk Sky." Talent pops in late with, "Josephine Don't Lean On Bell" and a bit titled "Vitamins." He's also a solid click.

In one slot, Monroe takes a poke at drum solos, which are by now passe in band shows, but still used by some leaders. His drummer is brought to the mike with all his equipment. He starts knocking himself out until other musicians take his equipment away from him, piece by piece, and put it back in its proper place. Finally, the guy is bereft of even his drum sticks and with the crack. "I ain't going to quit now," he starts into a dance It's a comical, satirical touch.

Frank Fontaine, a non-playing member of the band, is a happy addition nevertheless. Guy's a clever mimic. He's on quite a while with vocal apings of the usual top stars then does an impression of a boiled peasant who came up a sweepstakes winner. He's great.

All in all, this show is one of the best by a name band in a Broadway house in recent months. Monroe deserves a lot of credit for applying himself toward staging something different. More maestros should do likewise. Wood.

Million Dollar, L. A.

Los Angeles, Dec. 27.

Cecil Gant, 3 Stooges, Sheila Rogers, The Stapletons (2), Emil and Evelyn; Al Lyons' Million Dollar Orch (9); "Missing Lady" (Mono).

Mighty smooth working vaude bill is playing the house for Christmas Week. Variety turns add up to laughs, songs and thrills. Headliners are the Three Stooges (Shemp and Moe Howard, and Larry Fine). For a low comedy trio, gags are surprisingly clean and they work hard to sell their fun. At show caught, trio apparently was as knocked out by material as the audience, indulging in a weird dramatic bit and a light opera rendition of a tune titled "I Have a Girl Named Nellie," plus other skits. It's a knock-about, broad turn that is clicking at this filmvaude house.

In different vein is the socko piano work of Cecil Gant. He opens with a boogie number then vocals special lyrics to "In a Little Spanish Town" and "Mr. Ghost." Encores are another boogie bit and solid keyboard workout on "Solitude. Sheila Rogers is singing comedienne who pleases with vocal impersonations. Best are her takeoffs on Joan Davis and stylized imitation of "Lauren Becool" that baits wolf calls from the audience. Gal does that on form alone, makin eyeful stage appearance.

The Stapletons, dance team, have the holiday spirit and grace their turn with neat routines out of the ordinary for terp work. Show opener is acrobatic act of Emil and Evelyn. They are slick balaneers and teeterboard artists, making difficult catches and lifts seem simple.

Al Lyon's pit band gets program under way with Christmas tunes played while giant-sized Yule card is illuminated on stage. Brog.

Oriental, Chi

Chicago, Dec. 26.

Kathryn Grayson, Johnnie Johnston, Gene Sheldon, The Fontaines (3), Bob Hopkins; "The Show-Off" (M-G).

Holiday show, plus Red Skelton in "The Show-Off" on screen, makes for a solid two weeks of heavy money. Bill has double action pull with Kathryn Grayson and her hubby-to-be, Johnnie Johnston grabbing the family trade and youngsters in the house. Rest of the bill is also pleasing.

Ray Lang moves his orch from the pit to gala holiday bedecked stage to open the show with the lead tune of "A Pretty Girl," bringing on the Fontaines, two men and gal who do fancy handstand bits interspersed with ballroom routines. Fem, a looker, does the understanding in most numbers.

Rubber faced Bob Hopkins does a series of rapid fire impreshes beside handling m.c. chore. Doesn't use the same old material that most of them do, and inter leaves one with the other, which gives them more than just a bit status. Really socks them with his imitates of theatre laughers and then encores with a drunk laugh to "Holiday For Strings," which set house chuckling.

Hopkins brings on Johnnie Johnston who sells his baritoning with case. Blond crooner sets a fast pace with "Route 66" and then brings out the screams with "The Things We Did Last Summer." Rounds out act with a Jerome Kern medley of the lesser sung numbers like "Yesterday," "Dearly Beloved," "Fine Romance," and "All the Things You Are." Does a boffo job on encore, "Old Man River."

Gene Sheldon, his guitar and vibrato knees, has the kids giggling all through the act. Harry Langdon type panto piece on "thank you" which gets yocks from the older people in the aud and even from the kiddies that don't remember the pace faced pantomimist.

Miss Grayson, songstress from the films, has plenty class. Does neat job on "Sempre Libra," "Jealousy" and "All of a Sudden My Heart Sings." Johnston returns for duo with her on "Down By The Sea," and "I Hear Music" to solid applause. House sold out for first show with the ropes up.

Capitol, Wash.

Washington, Dec. 27.

Gloria Gilbert, Murphy Sisters (3), Pansy the Horse (3), Pitchmen (3), Justin Lawrie Choir, Sam Jack Kaufman House Orch; "Show-Off" (M-G).

Capitol's bill is nicely tailored to fit town's taste and holiday mood. Accent is on comedy, with Christmas theme confined to special choral-orch number and to house organist Milt Slosser's community sing.

Though top billing is given to Christmas act, standouts in show are The Pitchmen, trio of zany musicians. Pivot of act is comedian, who handles gags, does variety of instrument imitations with mouth organ, and clowns with assortment of trick instruments. Pianist sticks to accompaniment and third guy fills in as straight man. Troupe's "Flight of the Bumble Bee" and imitations of name band leaders are side-splitting and get big returns.

Murphy Sisters, songsters, go over neatly. Offerings are standard, but gals are animated, work hard, and have a pleasant way with a song. Are out of their element with such semi-classics as "Summertime," but click in "South America, Take It Away" and a novelty ditty with character bits for each chantoosey. A solid hit.

Pansy the Horse, with an eye-filling babe as "trainer," is still good for laughs. Everybody knows what to expect, but effect is riotous, and gets plenty mitting.

Gloria Gilbert, terp curtain raiser, has a routine which amounts to variations of a fast toe twirl. Gal is a human top, and fills spot nicely.

The religious note is struck in the lavish Christmas spectacle, which is the standard Yule carol number, effectively staged behind scrim curtain, and complete even to angels in the boxes. Lowe.

State, N. Y.

Johnny Morgan, Yvette, Boy Foy, Peggy Taylor Trio, Mack Triplets, The Chocolateers (3), Louis Basil's House Orch; "Undercurrent" (M-G).

Holiday spirit permeates current stanza at Loew's State via Louis Basil and pitcrew spotted in an attractive setting on stage for medley of nostalgic tunes topped by Basil and two of the sidemen hammering out "Beer Barrel Polka" on suspended whiskey bottles. Novelty sets things nicely for the slick layout of acts that follow. There's plenty diversity in the latter, all standards who've been around and cach winning merited response from the outfronters.

Peggy Taylor Trio paces show in lively tempo with nifty adagio contrib, with male partners tossing Miss Taylor around for artistic posturing that sets well. Mack Triplets, femme songsters, follow and score in their close harmony stanza with "Coffee Song" and "Her Bathing Suit Never Got Wet" getting the best returns.

Boy Foy has them in the palm of hand throughout his juggling feats done on regulation and king-sized unicycles. Lad juggles balls, hoops and other objects while balancing self on the one-wheelers with surprising dexterity to win a loud sendoff.

Johnny Morgan, youthful radio comic, clicks in the comedy slot with his jibes at radio commercials, parody on housing shortage and ribbing of the hoss opera formula which sets him solid with the payees. Some of his stuff could stand punching up for better results, but most of it is commercial.

Yvette, song stylist, gets over neatly in her song stanza. Coming on to a nice reception she holds them throughout. Teeing off with a novelty number she follows with "I Know It's You I Love" for change of pace and then whams over "Doin' What Comes Natur'lly" for plenty palm-whacking. They bring her back for "I'll Be Yours," sung in French and English, for additional salvos.

The Chocolateers, male trio of sepia dancers, also register high on the decibels with their expert hoofing, interlarded with zany antics and practically knocking themselves out to please. A solid act for any bill.

Basil and crew provide the usual good backgrounding for the acts. Edba.

Tower, K. C.

Kansas City, Dec. 27.

Roscoe Ates with Nona Carver, Jackie Jay, Howard & Wanda Bell, Corina Pena, Tower Orch (9) with Jock Parks and Kenny Field; "Stars Over Texas" (PRC) and "A Scandal in Paris" (UA).

Talent lineup is a notable improvement over past couple of weeks. There's a neat tie-in in the personal appearance of Roscoe Ates along with film, "Stars Over Texas," in which he has comic role. Stuttering comic holds up his end of the vaude bill okay, and all around it's a better week.

Musical sendoff for show is the "Coffee Song" by Jack Parks and band with Kenny Field on vocal. Jackie Jay steps out of his standard wacky character to hold forth as m.c. and brings on Howard and Wanda Bell in the deuce spot. Couple's routine of adagio acrobatics, teeterboard spins and balancing are nifty and has the audience with them all the way.

Jay does his own round of tricks following. Varies his turn with music from pocketful of flute-like toys, imitation of Donald Duck, and a clarinet windup, all on the eccentric comedy side.

Ates is on in the closing spot beginning with a stuttering monology, and giving way to Nona Carver's vocal of "Sympathy." Two have a round of comic dialog, but pace lags somewhat on this. Ates closes with some tomfoolery on musical instruments borrowed from the band and gagged throughout. Quin.

Olympia, Miami

Miami, Dec. 26.

Gracie Barrie, Lou Saxon, Montana Kid & Campbell Sisters, Fiske & Tramma, Wilfred Mae Trio, Les Rhode House Orch; "Never Say Goodbye" (WB).

Blend of sophisticated, slapstick and corn in this weeks layout adds up to a biz drawing holiday show.

Gracie Barrie sockoes with her smooth song stint. The trim little stylist garners solid returns with "Doin' What Comes Natur'ly," among others. Begged off.

Lou Saxon emcees in top manner and in his own spot purveys some fresh gags and stories that click. Stuff is delivered in confident, easy manner for healthy reception.

On the novelty side, the Wilfred Mae trio offer up a hoop turn that gets laughs and gasps in equal proportion. Fiske and Trama, with an act remindful of Barto and Mann, gather a good portion of giggles.

Undiluted corn right from the range marks the stint of the Montana Kid and the Campbell sisters. It's all there, the drawling delivery, the guitar strumming and for a topper a black mare with a hoofful of tricks. Lary.

Plays Abroad

Pacific 1860

London, Dec. 20.

Premier Littler production of new musical romance in three acts by Noel Coward. Directed by Noel Coward; music and lyrics by Coward; at Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, London, Dec. 19, '46.

Rhea Salvador	Mary Martin
Ben Valentine	Graham Payn
Mrs. Sterling	Maidie Andrews
Kerry Sterling	Graham Payn
Solange	Yvonne Perrill
Trudi	Winefride Jackson
Mrs. Cheriborne	Dee Mansell
Lady Greyshott	Helen Haines
Mr. Sheffield	Arthur Pusey
Ralph Sterling	Phil McGrath
Felix Remmers	Carl Jaffe
Aden Greyshott	Denne Martin
D'Arcy Greyshott	John Warwick
Miss Scobie	Mavis Nuccoi
Parson Scobie	Bella Emney
Mrs. Pelham	Gwen Paterson
Melita Pelham	Cynthia Lamb
Princess Larch	Jacqueline Jones
Sir Lewis Claybrook	Cyril Chamberlain
Ralph Pelham	Grant Tyler

Reopening of the Drury Lane theatre and production of a new show by Noel Coward is a double event of the first magnitude here and brings London back to its old theatrical form. Old Drury has been dark for more than seven years while the secret operations of ENSA were in progress.

Even now, the exterior still has the shabby look of a long-neglected mansion. And inside the cream and gold and red plush has not been touched by a single daub of new paint.

Coward's new show is mainly notable for the introduction of Mary Martin as star. She held her audience from the moment of her first entrance, and sailed through with flying colors. Story is set on the island of Samoa in the Pacific. The missionaries and the volcanoes are an odd prelude to a boy-meet-girl story whose decor, music and spectacle, in the grand Old Drury manner, abolish the facts and grip with make-believe.

Miss Martin is a scarlet lady whose love affairs and reputation as a professional singer annoy the starchy old family whose birthday celebrations she interrupts. An unhappy affair with the son of the house forces her to leave him and return to her singing. Result is that her choice between love and a career proves the key to the whole story.

But Coward is far too skillful to be baffled by so old a theatrical cliche and handles it with easy resource and charm. He fills the stage with exquisite groups of dancers, singers and dramatic vignettes, he dashes in with a cheeky little tune strewn with the old naughtiness, he rises on a melody that somebody can sing and gives superb opportunities to Miss Martin and Graham Payn, he gives abundant scope in songs, dancing, and acting.

Among the many numbers, "This Is a Changing World" and "Pretty Little Bridesmaids" are the most artful tunes. The score is rich in tunefulness.

What the show seems to lack is the musical strength of a comedy. But Coward has called it a romance, and it is musical and romantic. In his emphasis on these elements, he has shown a shrewd sense of what the public wants. There is a most fitful shortage of both at the moment on the London stage. When he adds spectacle to this, he judges equally well of the resources of Drury Lane.

An immense cast performs admirably. Some fine choreography by Gladys Calthrop's decor are high points in the general artistry. Also Mantovani's orchestra deserves mention.

It is a general criticism that Coward has given nothing new to the theatre except a Pacific Island and an entrancing star, but actually he has composed a brilliant picture in the high romantic manner. It looks as though Old Drury has found the show it wants for these artful times. Eber.

Cesar

Paris, Dec. 15.

Max Maurey production of play in two acts (in scenes) by Marcel Pagnol. Stars Henri Vilbert and Orane Demazis. Directed by Christian Gerard. Sets by Desbaos and Bouchaud, at Theatre des Varietes, Paris. Cesar ..... Henri Vilbert
Panisse ..... Jean Brochard
Fanny ..... Orane Demazis
Honorine ..... Marguerite Chabert
M. Brun ..... Henri Poupon
The Doctor ..... Nicolas Amato
The Priest ..... Carol
The Stoker ..... Gerard
Marius ..... Alain Cuny
Aglae ..... Agnes
Escartefigue ..... Orane Demazis
Cesarini ..... Raymond Pellegrin
Marius ..... Albert
Fernand ..... Ardisson
Pascal ..... Jean Rigaux
A Passerby ..... Pignol

For producer Max Maurey, not yet sufficiently recovered from illness to attend full rehearsals, this is money in the bank. The play was written long ago, and has been already brought to the screen by Marcel Pagnol himself as producer-director. The smash screen version acting as excellent advance publicity for the play.

Pagnol had given Maurey and Albert a stage production contract before the death of Raimu, who popularized the character of Cesar on stage and screen in "Marius" and on the screen in "Cesar." Pagnol was very reluctant to permit the stage production with a substitute for Raimu. This has been settled by casting Henri Vilbert as Cesar. He has the same stature and bulk as Raimu and gives an exemplary performance.

The play has everything that makes for success. It is well produced, beautifully acted by a very compact cast and has both some Gerard Mornaja scenes and also plenty of that kind of comedy typical of Pagnol's native town of Marseilles where people distort the truth for the fun of telling white lies. The play is a sequel to "Marius," in which Pierre Fresnay, as the son of Raimu, a pub owner in Marseilles, ran off to sea leaving behind him a desolate Orane Demazis, who is really Cesar's sister, and is unwittingly the cause of bringing his mother and his real father together again.

Cesar's son is of perfectly film cut, which explains the 10 scenes, some devoted to light comedy and others to heartbreak, that should be best Pagnol. It is different from the Robert Blum stage adaptation produced in Germany in 1934.

Orane Demazis, who on stage and screen has always impersonated the character of Fanny, still does so in the play. She gives a magnificent performance. Vibert, in the part which would have been Raimu's, shows considerable versatility in switching without effort from comedy to deeply moving drama. Raymond Pellegrin acquits himself well as the 20-year-old boy. Albert, as Marius, the boy's father, has a comparatively minor part, and is well known for his appearances in Southern revues. Balance of cast is strong. Mezi.

Schickesal Mit Musik

("Fate With Music")

Vienna, Dec. 6.

Karl Farkas-Robert Stolz musical comedy in six scenes. With Hertha Mayen, Fred Jaeger, Attila Hortauer, Beppi Roberts, Hans Fostner, Senta Wengraf; book and lyrics by Karl Farkas; music by Robert Stolz, with composer conducting; dances by Farkas; sets, Alfred Kunz; choreography, Grete Wiesenthal. At Apollo theatre, Vienna.

Original title of this was "Murder with Music." It was changed for the premiere in a Vienna where reference to the Horst Wessel song is too fresh a memory to be funny. But the piece is about murder, showing little if any promise beyond some pleasant Stolz tunes for a promised Broadway production. Vienna was stirred up mostly by the return of Robert Stolz and Karl Farkas after long exile than by the pretentious mediocrity of their opus. The composer, nearest thing to a Johann Strauss the century has produced, has delivered himself of undistinguished tunes. His pit work also is strong. But Farkas, who is all over the place as director, author and leading comic, has no more than a few moments of nostalgia to recall his old days as one end of Clumbaum and Farkas, Austrian Europe or justify a labored and over-weighted evening.

Cream consisting the appalling paucity of bright, young people on the European stage, the casting job for "Murder" is beyond comprehension. Leading woman Hertha Mayen, European Joan Crawford, has little but exotic charm and stirred corpse. Fred Jaeger recently webcore to the plastic pro-Nazi film work under Goebbels, seems incongruous in the role of the struggling composer. Attila Hortauer, another pro-Nazi film work under Goebbels, seems incongruous in the role of the struggling composer with an overwritten part. Story set in a Paris hotel starts with a writer, threatened by marital revenge and literary failure, wanting to kill himself. Farkas appears as a comedy waiter who is talked out of suicide but refuses to shoot the unhappy scribe. Then a mysterious magnate commits suicide next door which the scribe must confess the murder of "Bobby Lynn" in return for $10,000 to settle his obligations. "Lynn" turns out to be beautiful femme he has just fallen for in a bar. Last act deals rather frantically with a film-within-a-film "dream ballet" in which the writer is tortured by the thought of being tricked into helping frame the woman he loves. But it develops into one of those low comedy bedroom-drunk scenes with the whole cast popping in and out of doors and closets, and the leading woman stripping to her underwear. Kaufman and Hart can sometimes make something of such a routine. But it's far beyond Farkas. Happy ending is unbelievable.

"Murder" is about as elaborate a musical job as postwar Vienna has attempted. It proves the stage here is not ready yet for anything requiring as much mechanical and directorial skill. Despite long rehearsal time and postponed preem, stage mechanics were bad opening night. To the American eye it was all too bad, even for Vienna.

Stolz, who can't do wrong in this part of the world, probably can salvage a couple of hits from his score. The rest may well be silence. Hofe.

Between Ourselves

London, Dec. 17.

Claude Soman's presentation of new revue in two parts (26 scenes); book, lyrics and production by Claude Soman; music by Norman Hackforth. Features George Benson, Beryl Measor, Zoe Gail, Betty Ann Davies, Pamela Shepherd, Ronald Clive, Bill Fraser, Eric Micklewood, Peggy Willoughby, Gordon Little, Walter Eaton, Paul Howard, Jean Freeman, Hilary Allen. Directed by Hedley Briggs. At the Playhouse, London, Dec. 16, '46.

Claude Soman's new revue from the frisky pen of Eric Maschwitz got a flying start from the headlines when the London Hippodrome banned a political song, then let it go with a few corrections. But the song, "Left, Right and Centre," is debunking cabinet ministers, is no great shakes anyway, and it is left to a few new faces and, in the end, to Beryl and Ann Davies, from the last Maschwitz revue, to put punch into the show.

Maschwitz has written too punchily, but it is a friendly and intimate show rising to a raucous belly-laugh now and then, and it's good to look at.

Red-headed Zoe Gail has one of her best numbers in "From Plaid to Worse," reproving the jazzing-up of Scottish ballads, in the first half, and there is a merciless skit on the British habit of holiday camps which could be a full-bustler with less repetition.

Second half winds up with "In the Lake District," guying the ballet and making geese of the swans, is uproariously witty. It is by Alan Melville, top revue writer in town, whose "Sweetest and Lowest" revue at the Ambassadors goes into its 4th year.

George Benson, one of the senior comics of the show, has some of the happiest material, particularly an Old Boy's speech at school, and Betty Ann Davies continues an established artistry in wild burlesque and genuine pathos.

Bill Fraser, one of the most accomplished of the younger comics, is remarkable also as a revue star and it's hard to know what this show would do without him. Beryl Measor, the wife of a Bea Lillie or a Leslie Henson, but its pace, charm and general bonhomie can be thanks chiefly to Hedley Briggs, back from the Navy, is first rate. Eber.

Romeo Et Jeannette

Paris, Dec. 10.

Andre Barsacq production of 3 scenes, in four acts by Jean Arnouilh. Direction and sets by Andre Barsacq. With Maria Casares, At Atelier theatre, Paris.

Jullio	Maria Casares
Jeannette	Suzanne Flon
Romeo	Jean Vilar
Lucienne	Michel Bouvette
The Father	Robert Vattier
The Fiancee	Paul Laurent

This looks very inauspicious, despite Arnouilh's reputation (he penned "Antigone") and Maria Casares' acting struggles to save a play from a story that's not too credible and slow tempo made worse by Andre Barsacq's direction. They explain why Jean Clevrier, who accepted the male lead of Frederic, quit on the second day, being replaced by Jean Vilar after the theatre had been dark four days. Title comes from the double suicide ending, similar to Romeo and Juliet.

First act, the best, shows Suzanne Flon bringing her fiance, a respectable lawyer's clerk Jean Vilar, and his mother, Odette Talazac, to the cozy home of her very Bohemian family. Father is Robert Vattier, her father, who takes life as a joke; her brother, Michel Bouvette, who is a grudging atheist the world because his wife deserted him, and her young sister, Maria Casares, temperamental youngster of loose morals. Cazares gal is the current mistress of a squire whose gifts practically permit her to support her careless father and brother.

When Miss Flon, who apparently seldom sees her family, brings in her fiance they are horrified both very

(Continued on page 44)

Arthur Hopkins writes
About Revivals
in next week's 41st Anniversary Edition
of
VARIETY

Inside Stuff—Legit

Louis J. Singer is reported to have been coupled with J. J. Leventhal in their abortive proposal to supply $50,000 additional coin needed before "Beggar's Holiday" could open at the Broadway, N. Y. last week. Their plan was claimed to be anything but altruistic, with the result that the musical's presenters, Perry Watkins and John R. Shepperd, Jr., turned down the loan because of the attendant conditions demanded. Understood that Leventhal and Singer wanted their coin back out of the first money earned by "Holiday," a 25% and 12½% of the profits. In addition, it is alleged that Singer sought a mortgage on Sheppard's home in Westchester, but later withdrew that demand. Sheppard raised the needed cash at the last minute, it being loaned to him by several physicians.

"Holiday," which opened Thursday (26), got mixed notices but drew virtual capacity on Saturday (28) night. It represents an investment of more than $300,000.

Will Morrissey relates an incident during a recent visit to Dallas, when he called on a prospective backer for "Texas," a local musical due soon. Latter was reading a Billy Rose "Pitching Horseshoes" article reprinted in Variety and said: "Well you picked a fine day. This yarn states that anybody who puts $250,000 into a musical show should get his head examined." The actor-impresario was unabashed. He replied that "Texas" didn't need that much coin.

New show is slated to play auditoriums. Morrissey, too, has plans for a musical to be produced in Mexico City.

"Texas" is being done by Morrissey and Percy Oakes, an agent. Claim is that around $100,000 of Dallas backing has been pledged, and another $50,000 to complete the budget is in sight. Principals are being chosen in New York, with the ensemble recruited in Dallas.

Claim for a week and a half salary by the colored cast of "Lysistrata," a recent fast Broadway flop, is slated to be settled by arbitration. The claim is on technical grounds, based on Equity's standard contracts, which stipulate that there must be two weeks played or paid for from the date of opening. Show was over-rehearsed, players receiving full pay for one week. It opened and closed the last half of the following week; full pay applying, too. Management contends that because the cast received two weeks' salary it complied with the minimum requirement. Amount involved is approximately $7,000.

Dorothy Kirsten stepped into the part of Cho Cho San in the Met's "Madame Butterfly" Saturday (28) night when Licia Albanese became indisposed. It was Miss Kirsten's first time in that assignment at the Met. Evidently needing moral support she asked Hiza Koyke, Japanese prima donna, to be with her during the performance. Miss Koyke, who has done concerts with Fortune Gallo's San Carlo Opera Co., as was Miss Kirsten. Miss Kirsten, former stenographer, is a protege of Grace Moore. She made her operatic debut with the Gallo troupe during an engagement at the Center, N. Y., several seasons ago.

Opening night mishaps continue to plague producers on Broadway this season. There were two at last Wednesday's preem of "Wonderful Journey" at the Coronet, N. Y. In the second-act radio broadcast of the fight, amplification went bad, so that broadcast wasn't heard, marring a big scene in the play. A piece of wire holding a plane lid for an important "ghost" moment broke before the scene, to spoil that.

Mishaps follow closely on the two, at recent preem of "Christopher Blake" at Music Box, when a piece of scenery fell, and another accident happened backstage.

As part of a routine check the U. S. Department of Immigration has started an investigation to see whether producer George White is legally in the U. S. He's currently serving a one-year term at a California road camp on a hit-and-run auto charge.

Theatrical reference books list White's birthplace as Toronto, Canada. A representative of the Immigration Department said although he probably is in the U. S. legally, such investigations are routine procedure whenever any individual runs into the toils of the law.

Norman Krasna's new comedy being readied by Rodgers and Hammerstein, in association with Joshua Logan, is now called "John Loves Mary." It started originally as "William Loves Mary," but out of deference to Cornelia Otis Skinner, whose radio program is similarly named, the play was temporarily called "Jack Be Nimble," after a comic strip character. Miss Skinner is currently starred in the revival of "Lady Windermere's Fan." Reported she has a picture for the radio show.

Tailor shop on the campus of Notre Dame at South Bend, Ind., was conducted by one Toplitzky, accounting for the title of the musical, "Toplitzky of Notre Dame," which opened at the Century, N. Y., last Thursday (26). In the show, however, the fellow runs a tavern in New York, supposed to be patronized by the Fighting Irish when in the big town. There is, of course, no such place.

Moss Hart, who will "rest on his laurels for several months" following the production of his latest, "Christopher Blake," will next write a play for his wife, Kitty Carlisle. The playwright revealed this during an interview which Jinx Falkenburg held with him and Miss Carlisle on "Hi Jinx" over WNBC (26).

Cast of "Christopher Blake" (Music Box, N. Y.) is in receipt of letter from the directors of the Actors Fund, saying that for the first time in the Fund's 65-year history, a cast had subscribed 100% to the kitty. Not only a 2-a-day, chipped in with their $2 for a $204 total.

Extensive Tour For Jim Elliott Prod.

Plans for "Accidentally Yours," comedy by Pauline Williams which producer James Elliott will preem in Sacramento March 14 with Billie Burke and Grant Mitchell starred, call for extensive touring before reaching New York. Show will play Coast two months, and Chicago for the summer, before hitting Broadway next fall. Lee Shubert, who has a piece of the show, has offered Elliott a Chi house.

Herbert J. Freezer, textile manufacturer who has backed Elliott's productions, is associated in this one. Al H. Rosen will be business manager and also have a piece of the show.

Helen Menken Surgery

Helen Menken, dramatic actress operated on for a mastoid condition in the fall, is slated for further surgery to clear up a painful aftermath. The secondary operation will not be serious.

Star is expected to resume on radio, and possibly reappear on the stage, in the spring.

Logan Illness Forces 'Rainbow' to Use Sub

Philadelphia, Dec. 30.

Ella Logan, featured in "Finian's Rainbow," Lee Sabinson musical try-out at the Erlanger for the past three weeks, was hospitalized by laryngitis on Friday (27) after having had grave difficulties with her voice all week. Connie Baxter, member of the ensemble, took over with only one full rehearsal and little preparation Friday night.

Role is difficult one, calling for plenty of acting as well as seven or eight singing numbers. Miss Baxter made only one major slip, and got a big audience reception.

Management announced Saturday afternoon that Miss Logan would resume role for show's fourth and final week at the Erlanger.

PITT PLAYHOUSE PREEM

Pittsburgh, Dec. 30.

Pittsburgh Playhouse will try out a new play next month for the first time in several years.

Script is by Dana Jonathan and is now called "The Lady of Leley Square."

Scenic Designers, Stagehands Due For Jurisdictional Showdown

Scenic designers are steaming over a recent order of the stagehands union barring them from the stage, and a showdown over jurisdictional rights is soon due. Designers say they cannot complete their assignments properly when restricted to the other side of the footlights. Arguments between designers and deckhands have cropped up at tryouts, and in one recent instance rehearsals were subjected to interference.

Designers contend that the stance of the stagehands is arbitrary in forbidding anyone but those in the crew from touching any scenic effect, lights or props. They say the ban is an expression of unnecessary zeal by the stagehands but the latter claim that designers or assistants in attempting to aid the crew by handling any of the production commit a violation of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees rules. Designers usually attend to the lighting of new shows and contend it is not logical for them to call out instructions from the front of the house, nor are they able to obtain efficient results. Recently a leading designer refused to leave the stage, so rehearsals stopped until he walked off, crew refusing to operate the scenery.

Designers are unionized, so it's a jurisdictional crap.

"I Remember Bobby"
by
Howard Lindsay
* * *
a curious sidelight on the parade of boys in "Life With Father"
* * *
an editorial feature
of the
41st Anniversary Number
of
VARIETY
Out Next Week

Wing's Victory Players To Continue on Under New Community Label

The American Theatre Wing's Victory Players—groups of Equity actors who put on sketches gratis during wartime to aid bond drives, Red Cross campaigns, etc.—are continuing as the Community Players, headed by Eugenie Chapel. Latter was one of the Victory actresses.

Continuance of work came about through requests of various agencies that used the actors or sketches. This time however, actors and writers on the project are being paid a nominal fee, with agencies involved also paying transportation and other expenses. Wing is bearing the administration costs. Wing is having sketches prepared on subjects pertaining to health, social and mental hygiene, tolerance, etc. for presentation before proper groups, clubs and institutions.

Wing is asking minimum booking of 25 to 50 dates for its various Community Players troupes, depending on type of sketch prepared and agency involved. It's also making arrangements to give such agencies rights to the sketch for a year, in case the agency wants to distribute it to amateur groups, in church or club or community theatres outside the Wing's radius. First agencies to use the new Wing service are the National Conference of Christians and Jews, NYU-Bellevue Medical Center and N. Y. Tuberculosis & Health Assn.

'MICE' REVIVED

Los Angeles, Dec. 30.

Troupers' Club will revive "Of Mice and Men," for six days, Jan. 10-15, inclusive.

Topping the cast will be Robert Coogan, Clarence Muse and Nick Demos.

CROUSE & CO. PLUGGING PRO CHILDREN'S SCHOOL

Russel Crouse, "Life With Father" co-author, is currently heading up a strong show biz campaign for the refurbishing and overhauling of the Professional Children's School in New York. Playwright wrote a story for the N. Y. Times in connection with the PCS campaign and, with Howard Lindsay, Oscar Serlin and Mrs. Clarence Day, donated an entire classroom to the school. Room will be called "Life With Father Room" because, of 87 children who have played in the show, over its seven-year run, 70 have been pupils of PCS.

Idea for package donations to the school, such as an entire room, is being promoted, with plenty of showfolk responding. There are a total of 12 classrooms, and the cost of furnishing each, complete with teacher for 20 students, is $989. Other rooms already donated are "Alexander Woollcott Room," by Ruth Gordon and Garson Kanin; "Antoinette Perry Room," by Brock Pemberton and Mrs. Perry's two daughters; and rooms by Irving Berlin, Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein, Katharine Cornell and Guthrie McClintic, and Howard Cullman. Contributors get a bronze plaque in their respective rooms.

Goal for the campaign is $200,000, to include a gymnasium and a well-equipped physics laboratory and library. There will also be a Jean Greer Robinson Room, named after one of the school's founders and president of the board for 24 years.

British Ballet Mystery Seen Unlikely for N.Y.

Likelihood of New York seeing "Bullet in the Ballet," musical based on a murder mystery, is now considered slim with failure of the show in the British provinces. Show had been mentioned for Broadway, with Vera Zorina and Anton Dolin in the leads.

Dance background whodunit, authored by Caryl Brahms and S. J. Simon, opened in Edinburgh Oct. 1 with Irina Baronova and Leonide Massine in the leads. Show played Manchester, Blackpool and elsewhere, closing in Liverpool Dec. 14. Show was intended next for London, but poor reception in tryout prevented its getting a London house. Hence the fold. Miss Baronova, Ballet Russe ballerina last season on Broadway in "Follow The Girls," returned to the U. S. last week (23).

Massine, who originally went to Europe with the idea of building an international ballet company headquartered in London, is staying over to stage three new ballets for Sadlers Wells Ballet at Covent Garden and to dance with the group. Report is that the Sadlers group was concerned about rivalry from a new dance organization and offered Massine the spot, hoping he'd change his mind on his own ballet company plans.

Kiel Aud, St. Louis, Into Black 1st Time

St. Louis, Dec. 30.

The Henry W. Kiel municipal auditorium will end its current fiscal year next April 1 in the black for the first time in its history. Barry B. Boyer, manager, announced that bookings for the next four months assure a profit.

During the current year Boyer said that $25,000 more was turned into the city's general revenue fund than during any similar period. The building cost $6,000,000.

Cincy Just Cool To Legit Shows

By JOHN WILDBERG

Cleveland used to be a good show town, they tell me, but that was a long time ago. In recent years it could hardly be compared to Broadway as far as interest in the theatre by the local inhabitants was concerned. But the situation began to improve three or four seasons ago when young Milton Krantz took over the management of the Hanna. He has built up a subscription list that guarantees any show an advance of $7,000 before the ticket sale opens officially, and this subscription list is growing all the time. By working hard, booking the best shows he possibly can, and most important, by having a real interest in the theatre as such, Krantz has in my opinion made Cleveland into a topnotch theatrical town once more.

The Cleveland Playhouse is an interesting place. This nationally known theatre has a physical plant that might well be the envy of any Broadway showman, and artistically it does as well as Broadway and occasionally better. Saw the opening of "A Sound of Hunting" and liked the production better than the one seen in New York; Frederick McConnell and his partners and staff have wisely perceived that a town of Cleveland's size with only one legitimate theatre makes no sense, and their version of recent Broadway successes (also caught "The Late George Apley") are packing the two auditoriums nightly.

From Cleveland to Cincinnati—hold everything! As far as your reporter goes, Cincinnati can revert to the Indians. To make matters worse, I was brought up in Cincinnati. You can't blame the town's decay on Ed Radcliffe or Groverman Blake, two conscientious fact finders who seem to be worried as I am about the state of the theatre in Cincinnati. The playgoers just don't seem to care—maybe they're all music-minded, for you can't say that Cincinnati hasn't any culture of a sort. Mayor Jim Stewart is crazy about the theatre and is completely unaware of why the local citizens don't do their share. Went so far as honestly proposing, because of sentimental and family reasons, to devote time and money to doing

(Continued on page 44)

'Beggar's Holiday,' 'Toplitzky' Get Spotty Notices But Big Business

Brock Pemberton
who used to be a newspaperman himself wonders from where
Those Newcomer Producers
(legit, that is) will come in future
* * *
An Editorial Feature
in
VARIETY
41st Anniversary Number
Out Next Week

Two new musicals arrived on Broadway last week, and three are trying out, a brace of the latter being definitely booked on Broadway, but the third may expire before coming to town, according to observers. Neither musical on last week's lopsided premiere card got better than divided opinion but both drew excellent business on Saturday (28). It's possible that one, or both, may possibly be stayers.

Spectacle of two high-cost musicals opening on the same night was unprecedented on Broadway, the opposed shows being "Beggar's Holiday" and "Toplitzky of Notre Dame." Former proved the best at the box-office, with takings of $25,500 in half a week. Its take of $8,500 on Saturday was heartening to the management, which had been beset with troubles. "Toplitzky" got considerably less in its first time but the Saturday takings amounted to $7,500.

That there is plenty of patronage for click musicals was clearly proven during Christmas week. "Oklahoma!" which had dropped under $20,000 for the first time since opening nearly four years ago, bounced back towards capacity, with the gross approximating $28,500. The betterment for "Carousel" was even higher in point of gross, that tune show going from $12,000 for a count approaching $36,000. It's pointed towards the two-year mark.

January is due to get five musicals, including a return six-week date of "Bloomer Girl" at the City Center and the revival of "Sweethearts." New musicals due in are "Finian's Rainbow," "Street Scene" and "In Any New Orleans." Long-staying "Read Mill" which jumped back to around $32,000 will move to the Shubert next Monday (6) replacing "Park Avenue" a big time disappointment.

There are no other musicals in sight this side of spring. Brokers discount Saturday's rash of business for the latest musicals by saying that the holiday crowds demanded tune shows and passed up the straight shows.

Kurnitz to Dramatize Train's 'Mr. Tutt' Into A Play for Max Gordon

Harry Kurnitz, scenarist and playwright, on leave from Universal-International, will dramatize the "Mr. Tutt" stories by the late Arthur Train. Kurnitz, east for that express purpose, closed with agent Harold Ober, representing Train's estate, for a play version of the veteran Saturevepost series. Although his deal embraces some 200 short stories, Kurnitz's idea is to utilize the character only, and fictionalize the rest.

Max Gordon will produce and Martin Gabel direct. Walter Huston, who has long expressed interest in the character, may create him on the stage. Jerry Wald, Warner Bros. producer, for a long time flirted with the film rights, but nothing materialized. Kurnitz has the pix rights also. He returns to Hollywood Jan. 4.

Balk Auto Theft

Car belonging to Steve Alexander, assistant stage manager of Eugene O'Neill's "The Iceman Cometh" at the Beck theatre, N. Y., was thefted of Christmas gifts and a brief case last week near the theatre's stage entrance. Script of O'Neill's "The Moon of the Misbegotten," which Alexander was taking home for perusal, was in the brief case. Youthful thief was caught. "Moon" is the second drama by O'Neill to be presented this season by the Theatre Guild, and is due in rehearsal in about two weeks. James Dunn being slated for the lead, others including James M. Kerrigan, Earl Larrimore and Mary Welch. It was at O'Neill's suggestion that Eddie Dowling staged his "Iceman," but no director has been announced for "Moon."

Thief, who gave his name as James Woods, was held under $5,000 for grand jury action.

RICE WHIPPING 'SCENE' INTO SHAPE IN PHILLY

Elmer Rice is currently occupied in whipping the musical version of his "Street Scene" into shape, show trying out in Philadelphia prior to its Broadway opening slated for the Adelphi Jan. 9. Last season his click, "Dream Street," was somewhat hampered by the illness of his wife, Betty Field, starred in the play, and the couple are expected to go away for a rest after the musical opens. Rice recently warned producers to take it easy.

"Scene" is being produced by Dwight Deere Wiman in association with the Playwrights Co., of which Rice is a member.

Authors League council, incidentally, will probably name Rice's successor as president this week. Illness and pressure of other business forced his resignation as its prexy recently.

Berlin Trying to Cast Music Box Show on Coast

Irving Berlin leaves for the Coast Jan. 5 for two or three weeks as house-guest with Joe Schenck. If he stays longer, Mrs. Berlin and the family may come west for a fortnight or so in Palm Springs.

Prime purpose of Berlin's trip is to try and set a cast for his Music Box theatre, with an eye to a '47 "Music Box Revue" which has been on the agenda for the last two or three years.

Kober-Basso's New Play

His Warner Bros. writing stint over, Arthur Kober is in New York polishing the play he and Hamilton Basso have been working on. It's titled "Friends and Fellow Citizens," a dramatic-comedy.

Basso, who does book reviews for The New Yorker, among other things, is taking time out for a New Orleans hegira on behalf of a Holiday mag piece.

41st Anniversary Number
OF
VARIETY
OUT NEXT WEEK
JANUARY 8

Plays on Broadway

Beggar's Holiday

Perry Watkins and John R. Sheppard, Jr., production of musical comedy based on John Gay's "Beggar's Opera", book and lyrics, John LaTouche, music, Duke Ellington; stars Alfred Drake; features Zero Mostel, Bernice Parks, Avon Long, Jet MacDonald, Mildred Smith, Marie Bryant; staged by Nicholas Ray, settings, Oliver Smith; costumes, Walter Florell; dances by Valerie Bettis. Opened at Broadway, N. Y., Dec. 26, '46; $1.80 top.

MacHeath....Alfred Drake
The Cocoa Girl....Marie Bryant
Jenny....Bernice Parks
Dolly Trull....Lavina Nielsen
A Drunk....Lewis Charles
Bartender....Herbert Ross
Careless Love....Avon Long
Polly Peachum....Jet MacDonald
Black Marketeer....Gordon Nelson
Mrs. Peachum....Dorothy Johnson
Hamilton Peachum....Zero Mostel
Chief Lockit....Rollin Smith
Lucy Lockit....Mildred Smith
Blenkinsap....Pan Theodore
The Girl....Marjorie Belle
The Boy....Paul Godkin

For crowded entertainment, "Beggar's Holiday" may well take the season's honors. A joint venture by two newcomers to the Broadway producing scene, this modern-day version of the John Gay 18th century classic, "The Beggar's Opera," has an enterprising score, a colorful production and a cast of black-and-white performers who, in the main, know their way around a stage. But it isn't enough. The book is loosely written, the direction static. "Holiday" isn't apt to achieve more than a moderate run at best, and it's unlikely to get back its production costs.

"Holiday" too frequently becomes submerged amid a welter of narrative that helps dissipate the warm welcome one is likely to give to the Duke Ellington music and the John LaTouche lyrics. The Ellington music is unusual and sprightly; there are at least two numbers that should catch more than ordinary interest, while practically all the others demand attention. One major fault is that, outside of Alfred Drake, there's hardly a voice capable of carrying the tunes.

Very little is recognizable from the original in the LaTouche book transition to its present-day gangster setting. "Holiday" abounds with characters of seamy quality, and not the least of these is Drake, as the gang leader with a penchant to handle a song, a dame or a haul with an equal abandon.

"Holiday" does one thing for which it is to be commended; it has failed to "stereotype" its colored characters. It is laudable that a police chief, for instance, is a Negro; a Negro girl loves a white man with all the dignity of a white woman. And elsewhere the colored players sift through the performance with a casualness that strongly emphasizes that here is a show in which no social distinction exists between black and white. That this situation doesn't always come off in the playing is no fault of the performers; it's just a question of the libretto failing to hold up.

Ellington has written two particularly fine tunes in "Wrong Side of the Railroad Tracks" and "Tooth and Claw," and LaTouche's lyrics are invariably intelligent. However, "Lullaby for Junior," sung by Bernice Parks, as madam of a brothel, is much more dirty and obvious than clever.

With Drake there is Avon Long to share top honors, though the book and specialties don't permit him enough of a chance. Once or twice it appears as if he is about to spring into the casual style of song and dance that distinguished him as Sportin' Life in "Porgy and Bess," but he's invariably cut short fast. Miss Parks, from the niteries, replaced Libby Holman in the part a week before the show opened on Broadway, and she's certainly a looker who is not the popular version of what one pays for in these inflated times.

"Holiday" almost becomes burlesque in its wide distortions of the original Gay opera, and it's here that Zero Mostel, the show's principal comedian, achieves a considerable measure of laughs. Mostel, as Hamilton Peacham, the crooked political boss, is affecting many of the mannerisms that distinguish his nightclub routines, but some of this is much too broad and assumes a low-comedy stature. Jet MacDonald plays the ingenue, a blonde looker who wears her costumes beautifully but lacks the voice. Others who acquit themselves well in lesser roles are Mildred Smith, Rollin Smith and Marie Bryant.

Oliver Smith has designed some of the most exquisite settings of the season, his backdrops being particularly notable, and the Walter Florell costumes, plus the dance-staging by Valerie Bettis, are right out of the top drawer.

"Holiday" costs in the neighborhood of $300,000, and it's a pity that too little of that cost is reflected in the overall production. Kahn.

Wildberg Hits the Road

The John Wildbergs hit for Oklahoma City with "Anna Lucasta," and stay with it until the show opens in San Francisco Jan. 21 and in Los Angeles Feb. 17.

Burlesque

Jean Dalrymple production of comedy in three acts (four scenes) by George Manker Watters and Arthur Hopkins. Stars Bert Lahr; with Jean Parker; features Jerri Blanchard Bobby Barry and Kay Buckley. Staged by Hopkins; settings, Robert Rowe Paddock; dances, Billy Holbrook; costumes, Grace Houston. Opened at Belasco, N. Y., Dec. 25, '46, $4.80 top.

Bonny....Jean Parker
Sammy....Robert Weil
Skid....Bert Lahr
Lefty....Ross Hertz
A Fireman....Norman Morgan
Mazie....Kay Buckley
Gussie....Jerri Blanchard
Sylvia Marco....Joyce Mathews
Bozo....Bobby Barry
Harvey Howell....Charles G. Martin
Jerry Evans....Harold Bostwick
A Bell Boy....Norman Morgan
Stage Carpenter....Michael Keene
Ecdysiast....Irene Aflarie
Tenor....Santo Sendi
Orchestra Leader....Milton Merill
Chorus: Joan Andre, Carolyn Joyce, Millicent Roy, Bonnie Rogers, Gene Gilmour, Dawn Jennings, Ruth Maitland, Jeri Archer, Eleanor Prentiss.

This "Burlesque" revival is diverting enough to register moderately well, for it has a laugh-winning comedian in Bert Lahr, while filmite Jean Parker takes care of the sentimental end. Those parts were enacted by Hal Skelly and Barbara Stanwyck when "Burlesque" was a Broadway click nearly 20 years ago.

Here is a nostalgic play, calling the burlesque type of low comedy, girl-and-tune show that rotated in and out of its main stem spot, then slipped into stock showings and was ultimately banned in the metropolis. It was the latter type of burley, using gals who over-stepped limit in stripping, that brought about the current ukase.

"Burlesque" isn't that type of show but a play about burley actors who were real troupers, touring as far as Kansas City, season after season. Opening scene is backstage in the dressing room of Skid, first comic in this particular troupe, and little Bonny, his redhead wife, show's ingenue. They've been wed for some years, and although Skid likes his liquor more than she does, Bonny is nuts about her man, a funster with baggy pants, red schnoz and long flat shoes.

Her only real worry about the comic is his propensity to take pratt falls to get laughs. Bonny is ambitious about her Skid, and when an offer comes for a new Shubert musical on Broadway, she fixes it so he can join pronto. Bonny sticks with the troupe but later, upon hearing that Skid is carrying on with a dame fired from their show, she flirts with a western rancher.

That takes the play into the second act, with Bonny visiting New York. When Skid comes to visit her, he is stinko, but that's the spot when Lahr goes into his stride. One of his pals plays piano while Skid sings snatches of pop songs, of which there are a dozen used during the latter part of the performance. Among the numbers, publishers of which are duly credited in the program, is "Peggy O'Neal," used by Skid and Bonny for a bit of song and dance. When Skid offs to Buffalo when the western party comes to visit, he's high but brokenhearted. That's an effective curtain.

Third act is much the topper. It's there that a burlesque show is simulated, with a small orchestra entering the pit for that part of the performance. A chorus comes on, too, going through a number in lackadaisical manner, then a tenor gives "Sheik of Araby," leading to a modified strip (she's billed as an "ecdysist"). Lahr as a sloppy cop argues with her, and it's there that some of the business he used in burlesque is inserted. Comic was with Blutch Copper's Columbia Wheel show before he entered vaude, from which he stepped into musical comedy, and, of course, Hollywood subsequently. Burlesque as depicted here was not in the original presentation.

Also, when "Burlesque" goes burlesque, there's a song and bit with nightclubber Jerri Blanchard, who looks positively Amazonian, with Bobby Barry, doing second comic. Finale has Lahr and Miss Parker in a song and dance with patter, which is to the effect that Skid and Bonny are to team forever after. Anyone who ever saw burlesque should be amused by the show, and that goes for a generation unfamiliar with that type of entertainment.

If "Burlesque" gets over it will be because of Lahr. He dominates it, working in atmosphere that is natural to his formative years in show business. Kay Buckley, as the soubret; Ross Hertz, as the company manager; Miss Parker and Miss Blanchard are valuable in support.

There are some show business laughs. One comes when Skid is warned that he might get gated for drinking too much during his supposed appearance in a Winter Garden musical, the response being: "Oh, Lee Shubert likes me; when I saw him yesterday he almost smiled." Ibee.

The Original—1927

Arthur Hopkins production of comedy by George Manker Watters and Hopkins. Staged by Hopkins; settings, Cleon Throckmorton; dances by Mary Jennings; songs by Albert Von Tilzer, Peter de Rose, Jo Trent. Opened at Plymouth, N. Y., Sept. 1, '27; $4.40 top.

Bonny....Barbara Stanwyck
Jimmy....Paul Porter
Skid....Hal Skelly
Lefty....Charles D. Brown
Fireman....Jack Shea
Mazie....Eileen Wilson
Gussie....Pauline Dee
Sylvia Marco....Ruth Holden
Bozo....Mitty DeVere
Harvey Howell....Ralph Theadore
Jerry Evans....Oscar Levant
Walter....Wilkie Dodsworth
Stage Carpenter....Joseph Burton
Scotty....Jack B. Shea
Jack....Wilkie Dodsworth

Wonderful Journey

Theron Bamberger (in association with Richard Skinner) production of comedy in two acts (three scenes) by Harry Segall. Features Sidney Blackmer, Philip Loeb and Donald Murphy. Staged by Frank Emmons Brown; settings, Raymond Sovey; costumes, Bianca Stroock. Opened at Coronet, N. Y., Dec. 25, '46; $4.20 top.

1st Escort....Phil Stein
2nd Escort....Michael Lewin
Joe Pendleton....Donald Murphy
Messenger 7013....Wallace Acton
Mr. Jordan....Sidney Blackmer
Ames....Richard Temple
Tony Abbott....Hal Conklin
Julia Farnsworth....Fay Baker
Bette Logan....Frances Waller
A Workman....Carmen Costi
Max Levene....Philip Loeb
Susie....Ann Sullivan
Lieut. Williams....Barry Kelley
Plainclothes-man....Phil Stein
Radio Announcer....Robert Caldwell
Lefty....Richard Taber
Trainer....Michael Lewin
Handler....Stephen Elliott
Doctor....Robert Caldwell

"Wonderful Journey" suffers from that worst of all occupational diseases indigenous to fantasies: it doesn't quite come off. Nevertheless, it's generously enough larded with laughs—with more thanks to comic Phil Loeb than author Harry Segall—to place it in that purgatory of plays which achieve limited runs but never return their greenbacked spangles to the angels.

Play has had a pretty "wonderful journey" of its own—having been adapted into a highly successful picture by Columbia some five years before it hit the Broadway boards last week. Film was "Here Comes Mr. Jordan," which was screenplayed by Sidney Buchman and Seton Miller from Segall's playscript, originally titled "Heaven Can Wait." Meantime, 20th-Fox made a film labeled "Heaven Can Wait" in 1943—which has nothing to do with this case except to explain the switch to the current title.

Because of the film, the play was never done on Broadway, although it was staged in stock in Pasadena and Indianapolis. And last summer, Bamberger presented it at his Bucks County (Pa.) Playhouse with pretty much the same cast now being seen in New York. Jed Harris bought the play outright for $12,500, after holding the original option on it, and reaps such royalties as there are. There are naturally no screen rights involved without manifold complications.

Story lines of the play and picture are closely parallel. It's the tale of the pug snatched from earth before his time by an overly-zealous heavenly messenger. To right the error, a celestial officer lets the fighter choose in whose earthly body he'd like his soul to dwell. Choice lies among a number of people about to be killed, and the pug first takes that of a malevolent playboy-tycoon, then another prizefighter.

Difficulty is that Segall is never able to get the audience across the footlights and into the fantasy. Result is a detachment that makes the whole deal hard to swallow and makes one wonder how the pug's friends can be such dopes as not to recognize him in his new body despite the fact he acts and talks exactly as he did when he was Joe Pendleton. Perhaps the fact that the films mechanically can handle the medium of fantasy so much better—and have done so in so many pictures (starting with "Jordan")—mitigates against this from the start and causes it to lack freshness and sparkle.

Frank Brown's direction is little help, being paced unevenly and failing to get over the long, initial expository material quickly enough. Sidney Blackmer brings to the part of the heavenly officer the quiet dignity and slightly-confused omniscience that is required. Donald Murphy as the pug, however, works just a bit too hard, while Wallace Acton as the over-eager messenger is pleasantly funny. Frances Waller, as the gal who loves Joe's soul through two different carcasses, makes an almost meaninglessly-written part even more so. She is entirely unbelievable.

On the other hand, for whatever measure of success the play achieves, Bamberger and Segall should bow both low and often to Loeb. Comic here adds just another exclamation point to his well-established reputation. He brings to the show the second-act laughs and punch which provide it with a considerable measure of entertainment. As the fighter's manager, not so completely confused by the bodily transformations as to miss taking financial advantage of it, he gets yaks from a twist of the hand or the muttering of the most mundane phrase.

Rest of the cast are mere fillerinners of the excellent settings by Raymond Sovey. Herb.

Toplitzky of Notre Dame

William Cahn production of musical comedy in two acts (five scenes). Book and lyrics by George Marion, Jr.; music, Sammy Fain; additional dialog and lyrics, Jack Barnett. Features J. Edward Bromberg, Betty Jane Watson and Gus Van; staged by Jose Ruben; dances by Robert Sidney; settings, Edward Gilbert; costumes, Kenn Barr. Opened at Century, N. Y., Dec. 26, '46; $4.80 top.

Army Angel....Phyllis Lynne
Recording Angel....Candace Montgomery
Lionel....Harry Fleer
Angelo....Warde Donovan
Mrs. Smith....Doris Patston
Betty....Marion Colby
Delo....Estelle Sloan
McCormack....Gus Van
Roger....Walter Long
Toplitzky....J. Edward Bromberg
A Girl....Betty Jane Watson
Mailman....Robert Bay
Leary....Frank Marlowe
Patti....Phyllis Lynne

"Toplitzky of Notre Dame" is an intriguing title, but as a musical comedy that doesn't go. There are possibilities here which go undeveloped, with the result that the performance is only mildly humorous. There were not enough real laughs opening night.

Book trouble is the bane of "Toplitzky," in spades. The score is fairly good but not exceptional. The tipoff is that a couple of hoofers cop top applause honors.

Story has a football background; the chatter about the Notre Dame and Army teams is interminable. It may be okay for pigskin bugs for a time, but it's even too much for them, particularly now that the season is over. The finale has a Rambler back kick a field goal from his own end zone, a mere matter of 105 yards, thereby permitting Notre Dame to nose out Army. The fellow is supposed to have come from "Heaven," and the feat is intended to send the customers out laughing. Instead they've been mousetrapped for $9.60.

Opening scene is heaven, with some athletic angels plus some winged attractive dames deciding to send one Angelo to earth, there to join the Notre Dame eleven and there ensure victory of the South Benders over the West Pointers. He turns up in the tavern of Notre Dame booster Toplitzky, in the shadow of St. Peter's Cathedral, and it's no trick for him to make the Irish team. How he does it isn't explained, though—maybe an angel on a scholarship requires no explanation. Toplitzky although hot for Notre Dame never saw the team in action.

The dialectic saloon owner is rearing one Bobby, a girl whom he believed was a boy and for whom the football-playing angel falls. So Angelo is adopted by Toplitzky. Fresh from Ireland comes McCormack, who has a nephew named Leary, a strong lad working on a Jersey farm. He is taken from the plough for Notre Dame, too. But Leary wants to go to the City College of New York, which cues into the show's comic ditty, "I Want to Go to City College." When Angelo falls for Bobby, and the boss angels make him mortal, it's n.g. for Notre Dame. But a couple of characters with wings reappear when the Ramblers are behind 6 to 7, and the final whistle about due. They suggest the kick, so the celestial boot cops for coach Frank Leahy's boys (he is mentioned; so is Blanchard of West Point).

J. Edward Bromberg, in his first musical appearance, is Toplitzky. Gus Van (Van and Schenck, one time click vaude duo) is McCormack. These vets do most of the talking, and they certainly do plenty of it. They reprise one of the better numbers, "Let Us Gather at the Goal Line," and Van has a solo, "McInerney's Farm," but he has plenty more effective ditties in his own routine.

Warde Donovan is Angelo and does well with "Love Is a Random Thing," same number which scores for Betty Jane Watson, who is the attractive Bobby. Duo also does well enough with "You Are My Downfall." "A Slight Case of Ecstasy" has Walter Long and Estelle Sloan together. They are the dancers and score in specialties. Most of the ensemble stepping is of the tap variety. Costumes are not outstanding because of rather drab coloring.

It all seems like a plot against both Notre Dame and Army. Ibee.

Temper the Wind

Barnard Straus & Roland Haas production of drama in three acts (five scenes) by Edward Mabley and Leonard Mins. Staged by Reginald Denham; settings, Raymond Sovey; costumes, Anna Hill Johnstone. Opened at Playhouse, N. Y., Dec. 27, '46; $4.80 top.

Sophie von Gutzkow....Blanche Yurka
Trudi....Charlotte London
Elisabeth Jaeger....Vilma Kurer
Hugo Benckendorff....Reinhold Schunzel
Theodore Bruce....Walter Greaza
Cpl. Tom Hutchinson....George Mathews
Erich Jaeger....Tonio Selwart
Lt. Col. Richard Woodruff....Thomas Beck
Heinrich Lindau....Martin Brandt
Capt. Karel Palivec....Herbert Berghof
Sgt. Edward Green....Paul Tripp
Lt. James Harris....Albert Patterson
Lt. Frank Daniels....Michael Sivy

"Temper the Wind" has an all-important, contemporary theme that unfortunately isn't matched by its presentation. The subject matter—the problem of regenerating Germany without building it into a possible future menace again—is sincerely set forth in a way to command respect. But neither in writing nor acting is the problem made really dramatic. Its Broadway chances are doubtful.

It is a pity that the play disappoints, because the question involved is so vital to everyone, and because the theatre is so eminently a place for such discussion. But the authors here have tried to cover too much ground, bringing in every possible factor, making for a diffuse talky play. The play has too many set speeches and too much that is irrelevant and confusing.

The action takes place in a small manufacturing town in Bavaria, whose chief support is the Benckendorff plant. Opportunist Hugo Benckendorff wants to get his plant running at full capacity to rehabilitate himself and family. An American business man wants it going, because of its value to his international cartel combine. An American colonel, investigating the plant for the Allied Military Government, doesn't like the fact that the plant ran hell-bent for the Nazis, manufacturing war parts, or, more important, that it is still staffed by Nazis in key spots.

The colonel's refusal to o.k. the plant's resumption under those circumstances—though the owner pressures him because the colonel was once in love with Benckendorff's daughter and was a close friend to Benckendorff's son, who was hanged by the Nazis for democratic beliefs—precipitates a riot, the arrest of the owner, the ousting of the American business man from town, and the suggestion that the colonel himself might get his marching orders.

Where all this might be tremendously dramatic, it is more often merely melodramatic. Figures and situations are often stock instead of real. The play's best act is the first, the business going sadly to pot in the second, and not coming back too much in the third.

The acting is mixed. Thomas Beck is effective as the idealistic colonel, and Blanche Yurka is imposing as the Prussian-minded, outspoken Benckendorff matron. Herbert Berghof projects a Czech captain sensitively. Reinhold Schunzel's performance as the German manufacturer is a little stilted, and Walter Greaza's part as the American businessman rather superficial. Tonio Selwart carries some conviction as a Nazi zealot, and Vilma Kurer wins sympathy as the maladjusted Benckendorff daughter.

Reginald Denham's direction is satisfactory, and Raymond Sovey's sets, especially the one of the Benckendorff living room, are effective. Bron.

Lovely Me

David Lowe production of comedy in three acts (four scenes) by Jacqueline Susann and Beatrice Cole. Features Luba Malina, Mischa Auer, Millard Mitchell and Reynolds Evans. Staged by Jessie Royce Landis; settings, Donald Oenslager, costumes, Eleanor Goldsmith; songs, Arthur Siegel and Jeff Bailey. Opened at Adelphi, N. Y., Dec. 25, '46, $4.20 top.

Irving....Arthur Siegel
Auntie....Barbara Bulgakov
Peggy Smith....June Dayton
Matilda....Joyce Allen
Sonny....Paul Marlin
Natasha Smith....Luba Malina
Mr. Forrest....Houston Richards
Thomas van Stokes....Reynolds Evans
Stanislaus Stanislavsky....Mischa Auer
Mike Shane....Millard Mitchell

Vinton Freedley toured "The Temporary Mrs. Smith" on the road for about six weeks, closed it twice for repairs, then gave it up to David Lowe. As "Lovely Me" the Jacqueline Susann-Beatrice Cole piece finally came to Broadway Christmas night. But all the doctoring has done little for the patient; it's anything but a welcome Yule gift.

This comedy focuses upon the career of a much-married ex-film dame who is a would-be nitery chanteuse but, meanwhile, has difficulties keeping her swank hotel apartment overlooking Central Park. Into her living room (done in posh but none-too-imaginative style by Donald Oenslager) are crowded a composer eternally working at an unfinished symphony, an aunt who has no business at all except to be supported by the mater familias, a precocious "Junior Miss" type of daughter (ingratiatingly played by June Dayton), the latter's girlfriend, a couple of ex-husbands, a husband-to-be, and the effervescent Luba Malina. All this might have added up to either sophisticated Noel Coward or hilarious "You Can't Take It With You." Instead, it becomes a cross between slapstick and juvenile ambition to act grown up through the use of language that no longer shocks even grandma.

Miss Malina storms, rages, cavorts, and acts cute and coy alternately through the four scenes, during which she must cop another husband, this time with money enough to keep her from being evicted and help send her daughter to college. To liven the proceedings, she sings a couple of numbers, "Life Can Be Beautiful" in the first act and "Lovely Me" in the third. Musically, neither song is worth the trouble. The lyrics would tickle the listeners in a sophisticated nightclub. But in the play's context, they were meaningless; the second one particularly obstructing rather than helping the development of what little plot there was.

Miss Malina, however, does the best she can. Mischa Auer and Millard Mitchell were directed in sheer Mack Sennett manner. Reynolds Evans milks his part. And the whole thing is rather a mistake. Cars.

Chi Bounces Back After Christmas; 'Norway' 40G, 'Apple' 15G, 'Harvey' 20G

Chicago, Dec. 30.

Despite some of the biz swinging over to two new ones here last week, all shows came in for lush gains. Week started off pretty bad and ticket sellers weren't busy until Xmas night, when the climb began.

"Flag Is Born" arrived at the Studebaker last Thursday (26) and received the green light from crix. Erlanger opened with "Apple of His Eye" last Monday (23) and took until end of the week to show any profit.

"Song of Norway," at Shubert, tops anything in town and from present appearances looks as though it will be with us for the summer.

Estimates for Last Week

"Apple of His Eye," Erlanger (1,334; $3.60). Opened Monday (23) for $15,000 after pre-Xmas dip.

"A Flag Is Born," Studebaker (1,246; $4.20). Opened Thursday (26) and brought in pretty good $9,500 for four performances.

"Harvey," Harris (21st wk) (1,000; $4.20). Lush improvement over last week with $20,000.

"Pygmalion," Selwyn (4th wk) (1,000; $4.20). Closed for two days, then did $16,500 for six performances.

"Song of Norway," Shubert (4th wk) (2,100; $4.80). This one way up to $40,000.

"State of the Union," Blackstone (34th wk) (1,358; $4.20). Coming in for its share of biz with good $16,000.

'Anna' 14G, Phila., 'Rainbow' 25G, 'Bloomer' 32G

Philadelphia, Dec. 30.

Business, on the whole, was disappointing in Philly's legit houses last week with week's first half offsetting weekend gains. "Bloomer Girl" was the main exception. Return engagement of this musical climbed to a sturdy $32,000 in its second of three weeks at the Forrest.

Also on the right side of the ledger was "Finian's Rainbow," which turned in a solid $25,000 last week—it's third at the Erlanger. This musical tryout has gained steadily since its opening and although overquoted last week, will achieve a soundly profitable four weeks run here. Sickness of Ella Logan which hospitalized star, nearly caused management a panic but didn't hurt biz.

"Anna Lucasta" started lightly at the Locust but built and finally got nearly $14,000 on the week. Negro drama is figured for six weeks here but may be satisfied with four or five. Notices were enthusiastic. Same goes for those of "Dream Girl" which was starting a three weeks' stay at the Walnut. Elmer Rice play, however, only managed to get $8,500 on the week which was well under expectations. Also figured to pick up this week.

Most disastrous biz, however, was that turned in by musical "Street Scene" in second of three sessions at the Shubert. Stymied by tepid notices and not given much favorable word-of-mouth, this one got around $5,000 again.

No openings this week, with two set for next Monday—"Eagle Has Two Heads" at the Forrest for two weeks and "Sweethearts" revival at the Shubert for similar period.

'Oklahoma!' Does $35,000 In Return Visit to Pitt.

Pittsburgh, Dec. 30.

Even "Oklahoma!" couldn't break the traditional holiday matinee jinx here, and less than half a house on Xmas afternoon, together with an under-capacity Xmas Eve, cost returning musical the house record for season last week. Show did around $35,000, which is still terrific at $4.20 (including tax) top, and better than opening stanza first time around two years ago.

It'll do much better, however, this week and the next, since house is practically sold out for all remaining performances except the New Year's matinee. "Born Yesterday" follows the musical Jan. 13 for two weeks, and Tallulah Bankhead's "Eagle Rampant" has been scheduled for Jan. 27.

'YANKEE' 20G, BALTO

Baltimore, Dec. 30.

"The Magnificent Yankee," second of five plays promised under Guild-American Theatre Society subscription, reached out for a glossy $20,000 at Ford's here last week, making up in a big way on weekend what it lost in pre-holiday slowup earlier.

House is currently dark. "Dream Girl" set to follow next week.

L. A. RAIN DAMPENS B.O.; 'UNION' 11½G ON RETURN

Los Angeles, Dec. 30.

Combination of rain and holiday spending drop-off nicked boxoffices here during past week, although advances looked likely for the first frame of 1947. Biltmore opened last Thursday with a return of "State of the Union" but was held to $11,500. El Patio was pretty poor with $2,400 for the four stanzas of "Macbeth."

Ken Murray's "Blackouts of 1946-47" (it's currently in a changeover state) did smash holiday trafficking with $17,400 due to extra matinees. Three new productions came to the boards, "She Dood It in Dixie," at the Belasco; "Shared Wife," at the Musart, and "Hamlet" at the Philharmonic Auditorium. Former shows were rapped by the press but have that burley-type following that turns out well. "Hamlet" has one week at nifty advance rates.

Current Road Shows

(Period Covering Dec. 30-Jan. 11)

"A Flag Is Born"—Studebaker, Chi. (30-4).

"A Young Man's Fancy"—Copley, Bost. (6-11).

"Anna Lucasta"—Locust, Philly (30-11).

"Anna Lucasta"—Music Hall, K. C. (30-4); Aud., Okla. City (6); Mem. Hall, Joplin (7); Cons. Hall, Tulsa (8-9); Arcadia, Wichita (10-11).

"Apple of His Eye"—Erlanger, Chi. (30-11).

"Best of Spirits"—Aud., Hartford (3-4); Plymouth, Bost. (6-11).

"Big Two"—Plymouth, Bost. (30-4).

"Blackouts of 1946"—El Capitan, Hollywood (30-11).

Blackstone — Shubert-Lafayette, Det. (30-4); Town Hall, Toledo (5-8); Park, Youngstown (9-11).

"Bloomer Girl"—Forrest, Philly (30-4).

"Blossom Time"—Cass, Det. (30-4); Opera House, Bost. (6-11).

"Born Yesterday"—Wilbur, Bost. (30-11).

"Call Me Mister"—Shubert, Bost. (30-11).

"Come On Up"—American, St. Louis (30-5); Aud., Des Moines (7); Omaha, Omaha (8); Music Hall, K. C. (9-11).

"Countess Julia"—Playhouse, Wil. (9-11).

"Dear Friend"—Lyric, Bridgeport (3-4); Opera House, Newark (6-11).

"Dear Ruth"—Erie, Schenectady (30-1); Aud., Roch. (2-4); Drake, Oil City (6); Shea's, Bradford (7); Virginia, Wheeling (8); Aud., Charleston (10); Aud., Danville (11).

"Dream Girl" — Walnut, Philly (30-11).

"Eagle Rampant"—Forrest, Philly (6-11).

"Finian's Rainbow" — Erlanger, Philly (30-4).

"Gentle Ghost" — Geary, Frisco (6-11).

"Hamlet"—Curran, Frisco (6-11).

"Harvey"—Harris, Chi. (30-11).

"In Gay New Orleans"—Colonial, Bost. (30-11).

"Little A"—Opera House, Newark (30-4); Ford's, Balto. (6-11).

"Lute Song"—Curran, Frisco (30-4); Biltmore, L. A. (6-11).

"Magnificent Yankee" — Hanna, Cleve. (30-4); Cass, Det. (6-11).

"Oklahoma!"—Nixon, Pitt. (30-11).

"Pygmalion"—Selwyn, Chi. (30-11).

"Rope"—Town Hall, Toledo (30-4); Shubert-Lafayette, Det. (6-11).

"Sign of the Archer"—Shubert, N. Haven (9-11).

"Song of Norway"—Shubert, Chi. (30-11).

"Springtime for Henry"—English, Indpls. (30-4); American, St. Louis (6-11).

"State of the Union"—Biltmore, L. A. (30-4); Aud., Stockton (6); Aud., Sacramento (7-8); Aud., San Jose (9); Aud., Oakland (10-11).

"State of the Union"—Blackstone, Chi. (30-11).

"Story of Mary Suratt"—Geary, Frisco (30-4).

"Street Scene"—Shubert, Philly (30-4).

"Student Prince"—Cox, Cincy (30-4); Hanna, Cleve. (6-11).

"Sweethearts"—Opera House, Bost. (30-4); Shubert, Philly (6-11).

"The Glass Menagerie"—Lyceum, Mpls. (30-2); Aud., St. Paul (3-4); Temple, Saginaw (6); Palace, Flint (7); Michigan, Ann Arbor (8); Michigan, Jackson (9); Keith's, Gr. Rapids (10-11).

"The Glass Menagerie"—Virginia, Wheeling (5); Hippodrome, Marietta (6); Weller, Zanesville (7); Victory, Dayton (8); Aud., Lexington (9); Aud., Louisville (10-11).

"Up in Central Park" — Nat'l, Wash. (30-11).

"Voice of the Turtle"—Aud., Montgomery (6); Temple, Birmingham (7-8); Aud., Nashville (10); Coliseum, Evansville (11).

"Voice of the Turtle"—His Majesty's, Mont'l. (30-4); Royal Alex., Toronto (6-11).

"My Favorite Story"

Variety's annual symposium of the year's best laughs as recounted by

Franklin P. Adams

Libby Holman

Paul Whiteman

in

VARIETY'S

41st Anniversary Number

'Sweethearts' 16G, 'Orleans' 10G in 5, 'Big Two' 14G, Hub

Boston, Dec. 30.

Three openers here last week, two of them not faring well at all at the hands of the crix, the other getting by on personal appeal of Bobby Clark. Two lukewarmers were "The Big Two," off to a two-frame session at the Plymouth, and "In Gay New Orleans," off for the same at the Colonial. Latter was plastered harder than any show to bow in here in years and hard to see how it'll survive the road. "Big Two" figured a little too hokey for comfort. "Sweethearts," at the Opera House as of Christmas eve, was well-liked.

Estimates for Last Week

"Born Yesterday," Wilbur (1,200; $3.60). Thirteenth week at okay level of estimated $12,000, remarkable both for season and length of run. Current week final.

"Call Me Mister," Shubert (1,590; $4.80). Remained sock on fourth week with capacity $35,500 estimated. May remain through January.

"In Gay New Orleans," Colonial (1,500; $4.20). This one opened Christmas night and got socked, but hard, down the line. Didn't open to too big a house as Christmas night is traditionally bad here, and will be lucky to get an estimated $10,000 on five performances—peanuts for a show reputed to cost $300,000.

"Sweethearts," Opera House (2,900; $4.20). Bobby Clark popular here and Herbert melodies brought them in despite poor week. Resulting estimated $16,000 on six performances all right, but should jump current week.

"The Big Two," Plymouth (1,200; $3.60). Film star name draw failed to keep this in the running after it got hit by most of the critics. Seven performances, however, got an estimated $14,000, and it should pick up a little on second and final week now current.

'Central Park' Green 30G In First of 3 D.C. Weeks

Washington, Dec. 30.

"Up in Central Park" racked up a nice $30,000 last week for the first semester of its three-week stay at the National theatre. Business was off the first couple of nights but picked up, strongly hypoed by press reviews. "Park" is sold out for New Year's Eve at a $6 top, highest the National has ever charged.

Elisabeth Bergner moves in Jan. 13 for a one-week stand in a double bill, Strindberg's "Countess Juliet" and Chekhov's "The Proposal."

'Lute' 11G in 4, Frisco

San Francisco, Dec. 30.

"Lute Song," closed for past week, reopened Christmas day, and chalked up a four-day gross of a fair $11,000. "Story of Mary Surratt" starring Dorothy Gish, opened at the Curran tonight (Mon.).

"Topical Revue" concluded its second week at the 1,550-seat Geary with a sad $5,500.

Ralph T. Kettering

Chi showman and boulevardier reprises

"Things I Like to Remember"

* * *

an editorial feature

of the

41st Anniversary Number

of

VARIETY

Out Next Week

B'way B.O. Surprise Upsurge Last Wk.; 'Holiday' 25½G, 4; 'Burlesque' 13½, 1st 5; New Entrants in Doubt; 'Park' Off

Advent of Christmas was accompanied by an upsurge of patronage on Broadway for some of the favorites which had sagged, but not all of them. Betterment over the pre-holiday week was amazing in several instances. Grosses should be sturdy during the present (New Year's) week, but managers look for more steady patronage starting the second week of the new year.

Attendance to the six new shows that arrived mostly in bunches last week is hardly conclusive because the premieres didn't start until Wednesday (25) and the grosses included the generally strong first nights. Critical opinion was divided in every instance, but three out of the six shows were covered by second stringers. Out of the sextette "Beggar's Holiday" (musical) and "Burlesque" (revival) appear to be best but a clearer indicator of all was not forthcoming. Only a couple of shows played an extra matinee and Xmas night attendance was off as usual. Two revivals, "Show Boat" and "Playboy of the Western World," close this week. Unexpected closing this week will be "Park Avenue."

Estimates for Last Week

Keys: C (Comedy), D (Drama), CD (Comedy-Drama), R (Revue), M (Musical), O (Operetta).

"Annie Get Your Gun," Imperial (33d week) (M-1,427; $6.60). No musical opposition to last season's smash has yet appeared; this one will probably sell out until summer; $45,500.

"Another Part of the Forest," Fulton (6th week) (D-968; $4.80). Except for first two nights last week business was virtual capacity and the sturdy gross was around $21,000.

"Beggar's Holiday," Broadway (1st week) (M-1,900; $4.80). Opened Christmas night; some favorable notices by first stringers but generally divided opinion; got strong $25,500 in first four times.

"Born Yesterday," Lyceum (48th week) (C-993; $4.80). Remains at capacity; a few top shelf tickets unsold previous week but the gross was close to $21,000 again.

"Call Me Mister," National (37th week) (R-1,104; $6). Among the musicals virtually not affected and last week's takings close to $33,000.

"Carousel," Majestic (89th week) (M-1,667; $6). Bounced away up after several weeks of skidding and the gross was rated around $38,000.

"Christopher Blake," Music Box (4th week) (D-979; $4.80). With parties petering out, staying chances should be indicated soon; bit under $23,000.

"Happy Birthday," Broadhurst (9th week) (CD-1,160; $4.80). One of the fall standouts that went back to capacity after only slight dip; $30,500.

"Harvey," 48th St. (113th week) (C-920; $4.20). Played an extra matinee and sold out clean from Wednesday on; in nine times approximately $20,000.

"Icetime," Center (28th week) (R-2,994; $2.40). Played two performances some days last week; in 11 performances takings were quoted around $54,000.

"Joan of Lorraine," Alvin (6th week) (D-1,331; $4.80). With the limit of standees this smash draw was quoted getting $32,700; not an empty seat since opening.

"Life With Father," Bijou (369th week) (C-613; $3.60). Picked up somewhat as expected last week, when the run leader coasted to around $8,500.

"Love Goes to Press," Biltmore (C-920; $4.20). Presented by Warren P. Munsell and Herman Bernstein; written by Martha Gellhorn and Virginia Cowles; only debut of week; opens Wednesday (1).

"Lovely Me," Adelphi (1st week) (C-1,434; $4.80). Drew second or third string reviewers; among the incomers in the uncertain class; under $4,000 in first four times.

"Made in Heaven," Miller (10th week) (C-940; $4.20). Should improve from now on; strong on lower floor since opening; somewhat up; approximately $10,000.

"O Mistress Mine," Empire (40th week) (CD-1,082; $4.80). Claimed to have come back to capacity and last week's takings were around $24,000.

"Oklahoma!" St. James (201st week) (M-1,509; $4.80). Run musical which has slipped came back, and takings were estimated having bettered $28,500.

"Park Avenue," Shubert (C-1,382; $6). Final and 9th week; around $22,500; not enough for this musical; "The Red Mill" moves here from 46th St.

"Present Laughter," Plymouth (9th week) (C-1,063; $4.80). Little improvement but very good gross, better than $19,500.

"State of the Union," Hudson (59th week) (CD-1,057; $4.80). Longrun click had been but slightly affected and last week's quoted gross approached $25,000.

"Toplitzky of Notre Dame," Century (1st week) (M-1,712; $4.80). Drew second stringers, having opposed "Beggar's Holiday"; several favorable notices but rating not definite; around $15,500 in first four times; big Saturday.

"The Fatal Weakness," Royale (6th week) (CD-1,025; $4.80). One of the list's name draws; but slipped to $15,500 last week.

"The Iceman Cometh," Beck (12th week) (D-1,213; $5.40). Holiday night was off and takings on week approximated $22,000; drama is on six performance weekly basis.

"The Voice of the Turtle," Morosco (143d week) (C-939; $3.60). Picked up after dropping considerably and gross approximated $ 0,000.

"Temper the Wind," Playhouse (1st week) (D-865; $4.80). Opened Friday (27) with opinion distinctly divided; clearer indication may be had this week.

"Years Ago," Mansfield (4th week) (C-1,001; $4.80). One of the plays that started out with flock of theatre parties; excellent business so far; rated over $22,000.

"Wonderful Journey," Coronet (1st week) (C-1,095; $4.20). Three plays opened Christmas night and this one attracted first stringers; couple of good notices but the others negative; around $6,000 in first five times.

REVIVALS

"Burlesque," Belasco (1st week) (C-1,077; $4.80). Another new attraction that bowed in Christmas evening; second stringers favorable; quoted $13,600 in first five times promising.

"Henry VIII," "What Every Woman Knows," "John Gabriel Borkman," and "Androcles and the Lion," International (8th week) (1,172; $4.20). Latter play and "Henry" played last week when only seven performances were given; around $17,000 quoted.

"Playboy of the Western World," Booth (CD-712; $4.80). Final and 11th week; will not tour; "The Big Two" follows next week.

"Lady Windermere's Fan," Cort (11th week) (C-1,064; $4.20). Picked up as expected and with takings around $21,000 should play into spring.

"Cyrano de Bergerac," Barrymore (12th week) (CD-1,096; $4.80). Until pre-holiday dip this revival very profitable; jumped to over $22,500.

"Show Boat," Ziegfeld (M-1,628; $6). Final and 52d week; accomplished year's run but production cost not recaptured; no new attraction booked in.

"The Red Mill," 46th Street (61st week) (M-1,319; $4.80). Came back in big way and takings went to nearly $32,000; extra matinee helped.

'Carmen' Grosses 33G In K.C. Despite Picketing

Kansas City, Dec. 30.

"Carmen Jones" road company, playing a five-day stand here opening Christmas Day, ran into controversy over seating of colored patrons in the Music Hall. Show was picketed daily. Negro newspaper, The Call, in front page stories asked its readers to boycott the show.

Picketing made no dent in the show's gross, one of the best figures ever rung up here in a five-day stand, it being $33,000.

'Blossom' 33G, Detroit; Blackstone $15,000

Detroit, Dec. 30.

The operetta "Blossom Time" moved into the Cass to share in the holiday boom when it drew an estimated $33,000 for nine performances at a $3 top.

At the Shubert-Lafayette, Blackstone and his magic show did fair business with a $15,000 for nine performances at a $2.40 top.

'Little A' 4G in 4, N. H.

New Haven, Dec. 30.

Preem of "Little A" at Shubert last weekend (26-28) drew enthusiastic press and word-of-mouth but couldn't battle the holiday period slump. At $3 (tax incl.) top, approximate gross of $4,000 was light.

Current week is a full stanza of "Eagle Rampant" (30-4).

'Prince' 12G in 5, Indpls.

Indianapolis, Dec. 30.

"Student Prince," opening Christmas night after a week's layoff in town, grossed a fine $12,000 in five performances at the English at a $3 top, through Dec. 28.

Advance is heavy for Edward Everett Horton in "Springtime for Henry" starting tonight (30).

Plays Abroad

Continued from page 40

Romeo Et Jeannette

respectable, no one is there to meet them. First to arrive is the father and brother whose casual ways jar with the visitors. It is worse still when her younger sister arrives and tells them off in an attempt to drive them away. Despite Vilar's love for his fiancee, he falls at first sight for the younger sister. Second act, the evening of the same day, is a long love seance between them. He decides to run away with the young sister and does so after notifying his fiancee, who takes it hard. Next act, later in the night, shows Vilar and the Cazares girl stopping at a deserted bungalow in the woods on their way to the station where they are to catch a train in th morning. Joined there by the brother, he ridicules their affair. All three return home when the postman tells them that the jilted fiancee attempted suicide.

Vilar makes up with his fiancee, she apparently having forgiven his infatuation for her sister. Latter is getting married to her squire. She comes in and revives Vilar's interest. Miss Cazares instead of returning to her own wedding party goes to the beach while the engaged couple goes to the station. Payoff is when father and brother describe what they see from the window. The younger daughter is making for the sea, and will be overtaken by the tide. Vilar is seen getting out of the car, leaving his fiancee and joining the wild girl in a double suicide.

At no time is Vilar given a chance to play a he-man's role, and he can't be blamed. Maria Cazares, as the temperamental girl, is just fair. Michel Bouquet, as the brother, overacts at times. Suzanne Flon is weak and Odette Talazac, as her future mother-in-law, has a minor part. Best acting is done by Robert Vattier, the Bohemian father, who brings plenty of comedy relief to the first act.

A thorough rewriting is needed if a screen adaptation is made. Maxi.

Les Nuits de la Colere
(The Nights of Anger)

Paris, Dec. 18.

Leon Volterra production of tragedy in two acts by Armand Salacrou. Stars Jean-Louis Barrault and Madeleine Renaud. Set by Labisse. At Theatre Marigny, Paris.

Pierrette.......Madeleine Renaud
Louise.......Marie-Helene Daste
Bernard.......Jean Desailly
Rivoire.......Beauchamp
Pisancon.......Gabriel Cattand
Dede.......Pierre Renoir
Lecoq.......Regis Outin
Jean.......Jean-Louis Barrault

This very fine production of Salacrou's play by Leon Volterra, ably aided by his wife Simone Volterra, who manages the Marigny while he devotes most of his activity to his Theatre de Paris, approaches the theme of the underground during German occupation from a new angle. Like many current plays, it revives on the stage characters after they have died their natural death.

The two act cut is purely arbitrary, and the various scenes are all in flashback, taking place on one set that permits suitable alterations in full view of the audience. The story differs from the usual approach because instead of showing only one side of the case when during occupation a patriot was betrayed by an old friend, it evidences how many people, who meant only to avoid the difficulties of the moment and did not want to take sides openly because they were terrorized, ended by becoming traitors.

Story shows Jean-Louis Barrault and his wife Marie-Helene Daste visiting happily with Barrault's lifelong friend Jean Desailly, a Chartres businessman, whose wife is Madeleine Renaud. Later on, about the time of the Normandy landing, Barrault, who is a member of the Underground, arranges with some friends to blow up a German train and is wounded in the attack.

His pals escape but the Germans are on his track and he seeks shelter in the house of Desailly who thinks Barrault has had a motor accident. He feels very much worried when he hears through a militiaman that there is danger in sheltering the man. Egged on by his wife, who is terrorized, they want to get rid of Barrault, and end by arranging to have him arrested without, they hope, causing his death. Barrault is jailed, tortured, blinded, and about to die. His friends avenge him by shooting Desailly and the militiaman, getting killed themselves in doing so.

Barrault does the patriot in a realistic way. Desailly gives a very good impression of the man who is torn between his desire to help his friend but keep himself and his family out of trouble. Madeleine Renaud as the egoistic woman who cares for nothing but the protection of her home brands the bourgeoisie with a characterization that is a class indictment. Cattand, as the shady militiaman, plays his part in a suitably greasy manner. Marie Helene Daste has only a minor part. Balance of cast, as the underground, are all good, including Pierre Renoir who though used to starring parts plays what is practically a bit.

No credit is given for direction, which is the cooperative work of Simone Volterra, Jean-Louis Barrault and playwright Salacrou. Despite the undue length of some of the dialog, the unusual approach is likely to get the play a fair run. All the more because it is not to be run straight, but will still occasionally give way to several performances of "Hamlet" and "Fausses Confidences," used as rep by the Renaud-Barrault company. Latter is creating considerable interest in the Marigny as strong opposition to the Comedie Francaise.

The fact that underground themes have been used freely since the war and now appear dated makes doubtful a screen adaptation of the otherwise likely screen material. The vivid stage portrayal of the way patriots have been betrayed by friends who didn't want to be involved in their activities is still fresh enough in the minds of Europeans to make the play likely for adaptation in countries which have been occupied by the Germans.

Maxi.

Drake's Drum

London, Dec. 19.

Envoy Productions, Ltd., presentation (in association with Arts Council) of new historical drama in three acts by Henry Marshall. Directed by Robert Atkins. At Embassy, London, Dec. 18, '46.

Sir Roger Warrington.......John Croft
Lord Burleigh.......Horace Sequeira
Sir Hugh Croft.......Henry Oscar
Queen Elizabeth.......Marjorie Hawtrey
Donna Pascuala.......Irene Worth
Geoffrey Trent.......Hector Ross
Don Mendoza.......Philip Leaver
Nora Grogan.......Shelagh Carty
Nat Sparkes.......Charles Lloyd Pack
Con Antonio.......Roy Dingwall
Dickon.......Thomas Gallagher

Colorful Elizabethan drama reminiscent of the old Lyceum days that calls for its expanse of stage or that of old Drury. Confined within a small space, it doesn't attempt overmuch of spectacle but deals with the exploits of Sir Francis Drake and his fellow Sea Hawks and the Spanish plans to thwart them and overrun England.

Marjorie Hawtrey makes a stately and impressive Queen Bess who is constantly fished out of her bed while avisiting in the country to be warned of the threat of the Spanish Armada and hear complaints against her sailors triumphantly pillaging Spain's ships and ports. Counterplots, of fifth column genre, provide main theme, culminating in an attempt on the Queen's life and some gentlemanly swordplay.

Henry Oscar handles the traitor's role with his usual smooth villainy, and Irene Worth is easy to look at as the half-Spanish maid of honor torn between two loyalties. Hector Ross makes a manly lover, and Robbert Atkins' production is wholly commendable.

Good seasonal fare which should do well for its limited run.

Clem.

Le Burlador
(The Deceiver)

Paris, Dec. 18.

Mary Morgan and Mrs. R. Belin production of three-act play by Suzanne Lilar. Directed by Louis Ducreux. Stars Mary Morgan and Maurice Escande. Sets and costumes by Raymond Faure. Music by Jacques Ibert. At Theatre Saint Georges, Paris.

Duchess Isabelle.......Mary Morgan
Don Juan Tenorio.......Maurice Escande
Spanish Ambassador.......Georges Raoul
King of Naples.......Marcel Montet
Duke Octavio.......Roger Rudel
Dona Jacinta.......Jeanne Perez
Rosaline.......Francette Vernillat
Dona Mariana.......Denise Cardi
Dona Francesca.......Jeanne Provost
Dona Mercedes.......Michele Calvi
Ana D'Uloa.......Jacqueline Brasseur
Captain of the Guard.......Jean Lorrain
Ripio.......Robert Durran
Gardener.......Pierre Regy

Playwright Suzanne Lilar, who is the wife of the Belgian Minister for Justice, is already known here as having written an article in the mag "Le Nef" attacking Jean Paul Sartre's existentialist school of philosophy. This is her stage initialler and attracted considerable attention. A fair run is anticipated, partly due to the beautiful production of this Don Juan story in costumes of the Elizabethan period.

The play starts slowly, showing Isabelle leaving her palace bedroom with Don Juan on a patio balcony dimly lit by candlelight, and the first act dialog is rather conventional. The second act, which takes place at the Spanish court, is more lively and shows Don Juan's ability to ensnare all women. The real sock is in the third act, in Isabelle's bedroom, when the two women in the case forget their mutual hatred after a fierce word battle, to try and save their common love from his fate.

Both Escande and Mary Morgan, as Don Juan and his middle-aged mistress, give an excellent performance. Jacqueline Brasseur, who does the teen-aged seduced Ana D'Uloa, shows considerable promise as the infuriated woman whose love survives frustration, earmarking her for a real career. Denise Cardi, who also falls for Don Juan, is a looker. Youthful Jacqueline Brasseur who does the eight-year-old sister of Isabelle, has a second-act scene with Don Juan in which she displays the poise of a veteran actress. Balance of cast gives excellent support.

Besides the costumes, Raymond Faure designed equally tasteful sets. After two acts of costume display, the play becomes a real triangle tragedy in a situation which, even if not used for a complete adaptation, can provide fine stage or screen material in a modernized version.

Maxi.

The Gleam

London, Dec. 17.

H. M. Tennent, Ltd., presentation of new play in three acts by Warren Chetham Strode. Directed by Jack Minster. At Globe, London, Dec. 4, '46.

Mrs. Ruth Cartwright.......Elspeth March
Sam Cartwright.......Wyndham Goldie
Monica Cartwright.......Honor Blackman
Hilda.......Frances Waring
Joe Field.......Arthur Hambling
Fred Holt.......Harry Ross
Dora Holt.......Audrey Teesdale
Tim Cartwright.......Hugh Kelly
Dr. Alan Boyd.......John Robinson
Geoffrey Webb.......Tom Macaulay
Mrs. Logan.......Peggy Fame

Warren Chetham Strode, whose "Guinea Pig" is one of the big hits at the Criterion theatre, takes another crack at our changing social conditions. His first dealt with England's public schools. Now he paints a picture of what will happen to our tonsils and our doctors when the National Health Bill is in full operation.

It is a grim prospect, with the most intimate details of the patient's inside and private life exposed to the gaze of giggling typists with card indexes and bottles of medicine.

But Strode, who takes the matter seriously, sees a greater doctor's dilemma than Bernard Shaw's. His Dr. Boyd loses interest in his customers; they are merely ciphers in a national code. When an urgent operation has to be performed by a London specialist the local council, represented by the tough left-winger, Fred Holt, forbids it. The patient can die before he will break the rules and let down Socialism.

This is the central situation in a talky play which tries to be impartial but in fact is an indictment of the Health scheme. It delivers many well-timed cracks at all restrictions on personal liberty, has many witty lines and is conspicuously well acted with Elspeth March as a worried mother and pronounced individualist, John Robinson as a nationalized doctor, Hugh Kelly as his medico son, and Wyndham Goldie as a bewildered factory owner. There is a good portrait of a visiting farmer from Kenya (Tom Macaulay) who represents the decent life for a free Englishman from the centre of the battle, and thinks old England is definitely going to the dogs.

Play had a warm reception though it was considerably mauled by the critics. But outside the West End there is no doubting the keenest possible interest in Strode's theme, for it involves not merely the aches and pains of common humanity, but the question of freedom. It is to the credit of the author that he has taken a human story and produced an intelligent discussion of high political interest. If the play overcomes the present pre-Christmas slump, its prospects should be good. Ebet.

Moss Harts Robbed

New York duplex apartment of Moss Hart and his bride, Kitty Carlisle, was ransacked last week while they were at their country home in Bucks County, Pa. Amount of loot, estimated around $25,000, included two of Miss Carlisle's fur coats, all of his suits and prized silver articles.

It's the second time the playwright's New York apartment has been thefted. Loss was partly covered by insurance.

Shutter Hot Springs House

Hot Springs, Ark., Dec. 30.

Resulting from a recent inspection of the Auditorium theatre by civic authorities, the city council has passed a resolution ordering the house to shutter permanently as unsafe for public use.

Theatre in the past, had housed many legit roadshows. More recently it had become an arena for boxing and wrestling. Second and third balconies previously had been condemned.

THEATRICAL FABRICS
for COSTUMES
DRAPERIES
STAGE CURTAINS
"The House of Service"
MAHARAM FABRIC CORPORATION
Maharam supplies every Fabric need for leading Broadway productions and Hollywood studios.
CHICAGO 6 E. Lake St.
LOS ANGELES 1113 So. L. A. St.

Plays Out of Town

In Gay New Orleans

Boston, Dec. 25.

Forbes Randolph production of operetta in two acts. Book, lyrics and direction by Randolph; music, Carl Frederickson; dances, Felicia Sorel; settings, Watson Barratt; costumes, Mary Grant. Opened at Colonial, Boston, Dec. 25, '46; $4.20 top.

Peppi.......Pat Meaney
Suzanne.......Maria Gambarelli
Stage Door Johnnies.......Glenn Martin, Keny McCord, Bernard Sloane, Al Stewart
Agatha.......Bertha Powell
Lucinda Bonnet.......Monica Coryeo
George Monteux.......John Cherry
Annette.......Jeanne Grant
Queenie.......Betty O'Rear
Dora.......Katherine Barlow
Clara.......Ruth Shor
Maurice.......Richard Oneto
Maestro.......Marek Windheim
La Duchesse.......Helen Raymond
Robert Randall.......Gilbert Russell
Blackamoors.......R. Davis Williams, Richard Williams
Spanish Singer.......Clifford Jackson
Proprietor.......Keny McCord
Charles Blauvelt.......Glenn Martin
George.......Charles Colman
Mary Lou.......Lavinia White
Michelle.......Janie Janvier
Julie Le Blanc.......Penny Carroll

It's hard to figure out which is the more remarkable aspect of this stupendous Christmas turkey, the fact that it was possible to round up the reputed 300,000 leavos of cabbage necessary to put it on or the fact it was possible to round up such a horde of undistinguished performers. Either aspect is sufficient to dismay the theatre-wisest, but the saddest thing of all is the contemplation—during the proceedings—of the awful fate of those 300,000 beautiful hunks of cabbage.

Show has no quality worthy of encouragement save its costumes, scenery and, in a lesser degree, its music. First is work of Mary Grant and is handsome, fanciful and obviously expensive. Second is work of Watson Barratt and is all of the abovementioned, and exceedingly ingenious to boot. Third is work of Carl Frederickson, and while sentimental, reminiscent and overly lush, is distinctly melodious though seldom if ever catchy enough to hit. The rest is—or should be—silence.

Story, containing maddest assortment of dramatic cliches ever assembled outside the Coxsaxie, Miss., high school strawberry festival play, appears to have to do with a singer, one Lucinda Bonnet, who wants to sing in the New Orleans Opera Co., circa 1829.

In view of the fact she can't even sing a naive operetta tune, she has difficulty convincing the audience she ought to get the chance aside from the fact that a prodigious duchess, who sweeps on and off at regular intervals emitting coarse laughter, is more or less intent on frustrating the plans. Just why, however, is a secret that will undoubtedly be buried with the book very shortly, although it has something to do with the duchess' infatuation with a musical maestro who has a regrettable penchant for twitting the would-be opera singer on the brisket.

Meantime, the singer marries a fine old southern gentleman whose stage deportment creates the illusion he gets about on a pogo stick. After a duel between the southern gentleman and the maestro, which, for all the skill of the duellers, might just as well be fought by holding the rapiers wrong-side-to, the opera singer departs for Vienna in a huff. Unfortunately the huff is not big enough to keep her in Vienna for good, as she returns to achieve a sensation from the quite large company on stage at the time.

Into this there is somehow involved a series of episodes of Negro slaves—the only episodes with any merit at all, incidentally—but when the slaves retire from the stage they merely bow to the whites and vice versa. There is otherwise no connection between the two groups. In addition there are numberless ballets, all dull and all divorced from the main action, if such there is.

Featured are Maria Gambarelli, Marek Windheim, Gilbert Russell, Monica Coryeo and Helen Raymond, but none of these performers appears capable of overcoming the hazards presented by Forbes Randolph's book and lyrics. Elie.

Little A

New Haven, Dec. 26.

Sam Nasser production of drama in three acts by Hugh White. Features Otto Kruger, Jessie Royce Landis, Wallis Clark. Staged by Melville Burke; setting, Watson Barratt. Opened at Shubert, New Haven, Dec. 26, '46; $3 top.

Aaron Storm.......Otto Kruger
Lucinda Storm.......Jessie Royce Landis
Mary Howard.......Ottilie Kruger
Phoebe Painter.......Frances Bavier
Clyde Painter.......Harry Mehaffey
Dr. Duncan Brown.......Wallis Clark
Donald Storm.......Robert Willey

This product of last summer's strawhat circuit still has a bit of hayseed under its collar, but this should be satisfactorily removed in the pre-Broadway threshing process. An acid interpretation of marital unhappiness has dripped from author Hugh White's typewriter in the case of "Little A." It's a script that's punctuated with frustration, bitterness and hatred, but despite these negative elements, story is absorbing and maintains an almost constant flow of tenseness throughout the entire play. Studded with stellar acting, drama should meet with better than moderate success on both stage and screen.

Launching itself in the more or less familiar vein of the henpecked spouse who eventually switches from a milquetoast to a superman by declaring himself just prior to the final curtain, "Little A" gets away from the stereotyped with a punch climax that carries considerable weight.

Story is laid in a small California town where Aaron Storm is head of the community's principal industry, a post he has inherited from his late father. He's a spineless character, primarily because of his upbringing, to whom the cognomen "Little A" has been applied in contrast to his forceful, aggressive pere, "Big A." The younger A has been duped into a marriage with a household servant with whom his father had been unduly familiar. Unaware that the resultant offspring is not his own, but gradually suspecting this situation as the boy grows older, the couple's 19th anniversary brings confirmation of Little A's suspicions. Balance of play is devoted to his reactions to this knowledge, and a final curtain brings on a surprise shooting.

Otto Kruger's picture of the jellyfish character is developed to a high polish. In movement, voice and facial expression he gives a sincere portrayal of the role. It's an arduous chore which he carries through in standout fashion. Jessie Royce Landis does exceedingly well by the part of Lucinda, his whip-cracking wife, who has achieved her girlhood ambition "to live in the big house on the hill." Kruger and Miss Landis make a fine team in the leads.

Supporting cast is equally well chosen. Wallis Clark is effective as a medico-crony, his work adding considerably to the overall quality of the production. Harry Mehaffey and Frances Bavier make an authentic pair of family friends, former as Little A's business manager and latter as longtime companion of Lucinda. Ottilie Kruger, daughter of Otto, plays a youthful orphan who has been taken into the household. It is through her that Little A attempts to express a stifled love of music by sending her to a conservatory for training. She gives a sensitive performance, her scenes with Kruger being tender expositions. Robert Willey plays the illegitimate son capably and rounds out a good cast.

Writing is an intelligent contribution to current season's script library. Dialog oscillates between venom and tenderness, also scoring well via in-between emotions. Story unfolds interestingly and logically. Good script has been given first-rate staging, at a pace that maintains a high level. Timing, a vital issue in several instances, is given expert treatment. Single setting of a living room is in good taste. Bone.

Cincy Cool

Continued from page 41

a season of stock in Cincinnati, but just couldn't raise any enthusiasm in that quarter. Even Saturday night was bad! Have a few private opinions about how to make Cincinnati a considerably better theatre town, but unless the people realize that producers are going to start giving them the go-by until support comes a little easier, why bother with the town. Am not just moaning and groaning for my play; on good authority I have it that no other producer has fared any too well there recently.

The English Theatre in Indianapolis really looked as though it had been brought over piece by piece from the Bard's country. Ably presided over by Vincent Burke, a canny Hoosier who has studied his audiences and can tell you almost to a split penny what you'll do on the week, he is the kind of house manager who fills you with confidence in the engagement because of his careful study and analysis of the local situation.

Tried an experiment with "Lucasta" and played Indianapolis for a week, instead of the usual half week, and found the going exceptionally good. Took about two days to really get going, but went clean from there on in.

Shows in Rehearsal

"Washington Square"—Oscar Serlin.

"It Takes Two"—George Abbott and Richard Aldrich.

"John Loves Mary"—("William and Mary," "Jack Be Nimble"—Rodgers and Hammerstein, 2d.

"All My Sons"—Harold Clurman, Elia Kazan, Walter Fried.

"Dear Ruth" (road)—Hyman and Hart.

Literati

Authors League Reports Out

A severe jolt to the chances of the American Authors Authority plan being adopted as the organizational policeman for protecting writer's copyrights was delivered last week in the interim report of the Authors League of America's committee set up to investigate the control of licensing and secondary rights. Committee's report, although commending James M. Cain for reviving interest in improving the economic status of authors, attacked his AAA plan for its compulsory membership features, assignment of copyright and other provisions of doubtful legality.

Advocating a system similar to that of the minimum basic agreement of the Dramatists Guild, the report declared that the objections to the AAA plan could be overcome only by finding a solution of the licensing and subsidiary rights problem within the League itself.

Report stated that "the charter of the League permits the establishment within its own structure of a licensing system which among other virtues would preclude the possibility of any editorial control of writers' work, or dictatorship by individuals, confining itself exclusively to clearly specified business limitations." Proposed system, now in only rough sketch form, "would state specifically the terms and conditions under which rights are acquirable, time limitations under which rights revert to authors, etc., and be utterly free of susceptibility to political and economic pressures."

Simultaneously with release of the committee's interim report, the Authors League announced the resignation of Elmer Rice as prexy because of poor health. In his farewell statement, Rice attacked the growth of factionalism within the League which, he said, weakened the organization in its objective to improve the condition of writers. Meanwhile, a meeting of the presidents of the Screen Writers, Radio Writers, Dramatists and Authors Guilds, four constituent bodies of the Authors League, was scheduled to take place within a few weeks for further study of the plan proposed by the Authors League committee.

The American Writers Assn., which was formed as a temporary body to fight the alleged totalitarian features of the AAA plan, is now in process of organizing into a permanent setup. According to Edna Lonigan, new exec secretary for the AWA, replacing Suzanne LaFollette, the threat represented to the freedom of authors by the ideas and forces behind the AAA proposal must be combated on a permanent basis.

Meanwhile, the Committee for Action, rank and file group within the Authors Guild pressing for adoption of the plan, has scheduled a meeting for early January to discuss further steps in their campaign. Major immediate objective of the Committee for Action, according to its spokesmen, is to promote a wide, democratic discussion in the various guilds on the AAA proposal.

Philly's Pen & Pencil Burns

The historic Pen and Pencil Club, oldest newspapermen's organization in the nation and during its 54-year-old history the scene of visits by the great of the world of the theatre and art, was wrecked Christmas morning in a spectacular two-alarm blaze.

Flames which roared through the former mansion at 1523 Locust st., in the heart of the downtown theatrical district, destroyed irreplaceable paintings and autographed portraits of scores of celebrities who made the club their unofficial headquarters in Philadelphia. Clubs interior was wrecked, fire loss being estimated at $40,000.

From the days of the old Keith's circuit until as recently as last November, when Mae West appeared as guest of honor at a party in tribute to Federal Judge Harry Kalodner, former reporter on the Philly Record, the club had been visited by leading men and women in many fields. Among the autographed portraits destroyed by the flames were those of Victor Herbert, President Taft, Will Rogers, Irvin S. Cobb, George M. Cohan, Heywood Broun, Ed Wynn, William Jennings Bryan, Thurston the Magician and dozens of others.

The club was founded in 1892 and moved to its present location, formerly "Biff" Beifel's "1523" nitery, less than two years ago. When the club marked its 50th anniversary in December, 1942, congratulatory messages were received from all parts of the world, including telegrams from Franklin D. Roosevelt and Gen. MacArthur.

Pitt Ad Rates Upped

Pittsburgh newspaper advertising rates for pix, legit, niteries and musical events will be up between 5% and 15% with start of new year. Two evening sheets, the Press and Sun-Telegraph, raised theirs a month ago but morning Post-Gazette's increase goes into effect Jan. 1.

Local dailies have one classification for films and another that lumps together legit theatres, cafes and concerts, etc. Press rate for filmers went from $7 to $7.70 Dec. 1 and for all others from $8 to $8.40. Sun-Tele jumped from $6 to $6.70 and $7 to $7.70. Post-Gazette is getting from $7 to $7.70 for filmers and $8 to $8.40 on other classifications. Sunday rates on Press and Sun-Tele (Post-Gazette only publishes six days) went up, too—$7 to $7.70 and $7.70 and $8 to $9.10 in Press.

'Scabs' Issue Raised in Philly

Charges and denials that "scabs" were being used in the news room of the Philadelphia Record highlighted last week's development in the American Newspaper Guild strike against the Record and Camden Courier-Post newspapers.

Guild officials charged Record management had imported out-of-town newspaper workers to help get out the paper. The Record management vigorously denied this charge, claiming that only the executives who are not members of the Guild have been getting out the paper since the strike began November 7.

Tending to substantiate the management denial were comments by visitors to the newsroom to the effect that only executives and management officials were observed at work in the news room. Guildsmen maintained that the names of the out-of-town "scabs" were known to the Guild. Meanwhile, negotiations between Guild and management remained at a standstill.

Deglin, Wood Combine

Ted Deglin, press rep for the Madison Square Garden before entering the service, together with Henry F. Wood, former exec editor for Fox Feature Syndicate, have formed an advertising and publicity agency to be known as Deglin-Wood, Inc. Deglin while in the Army attained the rank of colonel, while Wood served as a major.

Boston Post's Price Hike

Boston Post, the recalcitrant Hub daily that has refused for years to go along with other Hub sheets and lift price to three cents, succumbs as of Jan. 1 and hikes it. In a special front-page editorial, the paper said that it was "proud to earn the honorable distinction of being the last (to raise its price to 3c)." According to the Post, it is—until Jan. 1—the only big daily (375,000 circ.) now selling for two cents.

Evidently explaining its lack of war news coverage (it had no war correspondents and always put war news inside if there was a local fire or murder), the editorial said "Although cold logic of self-interest, and insatiable public demand for dependable war news might have argued otherwise, the Post once more chose to serve through to the end of the war before readjusting to business as usual."

Since the death of publisher Richard Grozier some months ago, paper has been masterminded by an attorney for the widow. Other Hub papers are reported burning because the Post wouldn't go to 5c, as they are rumored planning to do in near future. They've burned for years because Post wouldn't go to 3c. But the paper's been a strange outfit, refusing until a month or so ago to cut its white paper margins, thus saving thousands of tons of paper as well as thousands of dollars yearly. They figured it wouldn't be nice.

Can. Liberty to Radio Ops

Official announcement Thursday (26) that Jack K. Cooke and Roy H. Thomson, Canadian indie radio toppers, had formed a partnership "for the purpose of acquiring publications" and had bought out the Liberty Magazine of Canada for $400,000, caused a stir in Canadian publishing circles.

Move, rumors of which were heard in recent months, is significant in the fact that this may be the start on the part of indie ops to branch out into the publishing field, where there isn't the danger of being continuously subject to government control as in the case of their radio stations.

Magazine was bought by Cooke and Thomson from U. S. Liberty. Cooke will be prexy and publisher and Thomson board chairman.

Announcement said that, starting with Jan. 4 issue, mag will be entirely Canadian-owned and operated by arrangement with Liberty U.S.A. Canadian version will have access to any or all material in the erstwhile parent mag.

It was stated that articles by "leading Canadian men of letters will be supplemented by the best American material. This union will make Liberty of Canada a truly Canadian magazine with an international outlook."

Cooke heads station CREY in Toronto and was also some time ago connected with CJAD in Montreal. Thomson operates stations in Timmins, Kirkland Lake, Peterborough, North Bay and Kingston, and daily newspapers in Galt, Kirkland, Sarnia, Welland, Timmins and Woodstock, Ont.

N. Y. H-T Ups Price

Under pressure of ballooning newsprint and labor costs, the N. Y. Herald Tribune upped its price for the daily edition to 5c, and for the Sunday edition to 15c, effective Monday (30). Other N. Y. morning newspapers are planning to maintain the status quo, with the Times remaining at 3c and the tabloids sticking at 2c.

Herald Trib's move in the morning paper field was preceded by a general increase of all afternoon papers to 5c during the war years.

CHATTER

King Features syndicating Damon Runyon's pieces.

March issue of This Month to carry article on VARIETY by Jules Archer.

Irving Davis (N. Y.) ad agency issuing calendar for the year 2003—which will be same as 1947's.

Everybody's Digest launching a new series of articles under heading of "The Happiest Man I Know."

Bob Casey, vet author and war correspondent, married to Hazel MacDonald, on staff of Chi. Times.

John Wilstach sold novelette on wagon show days, "Circus Pirate," to Ziff Davis for Mammoth Adventure.

Hazel Flynn, onetime N. Y. Music Hall p.a., now editor and film critic of San Fernando Valley (Cal.) Times.

Edmund Wilson isn't bowing out completely from New Yorker book reviews, splitting them with Hamilton Basso, A. J. Liebling, E. B. White and others.

Tunesmith Kay Swift working on a novel about postwar parapalegics (permanently paralyzed soldiers), in which she's interested herself at the Birmingham General hospital, Los Angeles.

George Sessions Perry's piece on "Backstage in (Fred) Allen's Alley" in the Jan. 4 Satevepost and Dan Parker's piece on Nick Kenny—"Corn Doctor"—in the same-dated Collier's are show biz items.

Arnold Gingrich writes friends that he has returned to Switzerland after a long tour that took him through the Balkans. Rumored that he's writing a book on his impressions of postwar conditions in Europe. Nothing in letters about trip to this country, and avoidance of any comment on Esquire.

Dictionary of U. S. slang by VARIETY's Copenhagen mugg, Victor Skaarup, in collaboration with Kris Winther and which has sold in several editions in Denmark and other Norse countries, is the subject of a Time mag piece this week. A Jap dictionary of U.S. slang also part of the same story.

"Books Are Sold in Bookstores" observes
Bennett Cerf
in a hep appraisal of extraneous exploitation methods
* * *
an editorial feature
of the forthcoming
41st Anniversary Number
of
VARIETY

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Remember, Me., Dec. 30.

If there's one thing on which we are all agreed it's that 1947 promises to be better than 1946, since it couldn't possibly be worse. To my public, scattered all over the world, and thus likely to confound A-bombers, I feel quite sure that our best wishes for a happy New Year will not go haywire.

The only one not likely to be taken in by this display of conviviality is Lynne Wiley of Sioux City.

"As a present for 1947," she writes, "can you do something about my copy of VARIETY? It invariably arrives with the right hand corner of Page 1 torn off and, by an odd coincidence, the left hand corner of Page 2 is torn off too. Each week I look forward to being let in on a stickful of inside stuff that has worked out to Page 1, only to have the darn thing torn out as too much for my excited eyes. Can you give me the inside of why I'm kept on the outside?"

Inside of 'Inside Stuff'

This is done on purpose. There's a blue-gag gremlin on the paper and we can't find out who he is. In fact, like the underground movement in Europe, the paper suspects the gagster changes from week to week. Abel changes the copy readers, but it does no good, because even editors have to go out to a nitery to get a cup of cawfee and when VARIETYS come back, sure enough the blue gag is there down in the left hand corner of Page 2. Not in the right hand corner of Page 1, strangely, but the left hand corner of Page 2. So all of us loyal muggs proceed to tear off the lower left hand corner of Page 2, and being bunglers by nature we louse up the right hand corner of Page 1 too.

Personally, I don't think the gags are very blue, but VARIETY is not a family paper and so has practically monastic standards of what constitutes clean comedy. Rabelais would never approve of us. Why, we couldn't even get into the Hecate County Country club set. We may be vulgar but never dirty.

We only wish we could catch that staff saboteur and tell him so. Perhaps the way to do this would be to print this on Page 2.

Ever Try It on a Yacht?

Running into much larger numbers are those who claim that once they open their copy of VARIETY they are lost men and women. In fact there's an old story relating to the recently departed Bill Fields which covers this point nicely.

Some producers were asking each other whether Bill could play Hamlet. "Yes," said one, "if you let him juggle a copy of VARIETY."

Indeed, there's a well-founded legend in legit that Fields moved up from the lower order of vaude to the Ziegfeld Follies simply because he could show Ziegfeld how to put a VARIETY back together after once having read the grosses of the week.

Ziegfeld was so grateful he said, "Mr. Dukenfield, you may call me Zieggy."

Bill replied he would gladly do this provided Zieggy dumped that Dukenfield stuff and called him Bill. Thus arose the billing on W. C. Fields and it's a known fact that whenever the pair got into a stage of calling each other names and sending insulting telegrams, Fields would win his point by holding out to Wednesday when the helpless Zieggy would give in and beg Fields to put his copy of VARIETY back together again.

As it was something all the king's horses couldn't do for Humpty Dumpty, you may be sure that Ziegfeld's gratitude held them together till death did them part. Indeed, in Hollywood, Bill Fields held picture producers in his spell by the way he could take a loused-up copy of VARIETY and flip it back into perfect order, always telling them the hand was quicker than the eye.

He was even known to ad lib while reading a copy of VARIETY. He would straighten out its English in a way that amazed even those who had written it.

The fact that these tricks cost him $200,000 in liquor bills and forced him, in his latter years, to consume two quarts of hard stuff a day in order to keep up his skill is proof of how far a man will go to hold on to a talent which is unique.

Paper-Opener Upstairs

With Bill gone, joining in the last year alone such distinguished company as Jimmy Walker, Damon Runyon, Miles Mander, Mae Busch, Raimu, Trem Carr, Frank Vincent, Vincent Youmans, Jerome Kern, Channing Pollock and Laurette Taylor, those left behind will simply have to struggle as best they can getting their jacks back in their boxes.

After all, we've had the benefit of his genius for many years and there must be many on the stairway to heaven which need it more. I feel quite certain that even Sime will be grateful to have a helping hand.

For us, the living, remember this: When you break that band and VARIETY springs out in all directions, it isn't given to us of the lower order to re-assemble what God hath put asunder. Only an angel second class could do that, and Bill Fields, in the field of magic, was strictly first class. He can hardly lose more than one rating for leaning so heavily on double Martinis when asked to do one of his old tricks.

I find too that they have moved over in radio from Bob Hope, Red Skelton, Cisco Kid, Lone Ranger and such standard brands to Henry Morgan. What this does to the bedtime hour on the west Coast is terrible. Morgan is not piped into Los Angeles till 9:30 p.m. on Wednesdays and 9 o'clock is the curfew hour in that town.

As the parents seem to enjoy the program as much as the children, it's going to be pretty difficult to split up this combination. Writers of material for rival programs point out that much of what Morgan does is 1930 radio, but it never occurs to them that if this is true, maybe that's where radio took a wrong turn, for, obviously, people like Morgan and as he said last week, "Kids got rights just like people." When he asked the kids in Washington if they were lost and they answered "No, we came to Washington to get something done," what's wrong with the cop's reply "You're lost"?

Isn't it possible that back there in 1930 radio took the wrong road and has been lost ever since, and Morgan is the pied piper leading them back? When as editor recently in one of his programs Morgan planned an attack on black markets, but found that put him up against brotherly love and since he loves his brother and his brother made his money in the black market he found that was out.

Editorial Switch

So he decided to thump for "Down with high prices." But when he looked at the 40 pages of display advertising he changed the editorial to "Down With Russia."

I don't think there's anything particularly second rate in this, any more than I do in his burlesque of an average daytime serial about an average American burglar and his family. The burglar returns home to find his wife exhausted from the Christmas shoplifting rush. They have two boys, Jimmy and Billy, and are giving Jimmy a billy, and Billy a jimmy, and for a bedtime story the burglar tells them about Santa Claus, "the greatest housebreaker in history who always beats the rap."

Well, Morgan too, seems to be still beating the rap. He says if his mother doesn't like the program he doesn't give her tickets to the broadcast. He doesn't give them to her anyway, because she lives in Hollywood and he works out of New York, but he gives people a lot of fun even if his gags are contrary to the teachings of Westbrook Pegler. He can certainly do nice parodies, though in going from Walter Winchell to Harry Truman you can hardly call that a gamut.

As for the few who belong in the category of "You can't please any of the people any of the time," there's no hope for them in or out of radio. But for the millions to whom Crossley, Hooper and the sponsors listen, one of Morgan's morals applies: "You can't get too much of a good thing." But there's nothing like trying.

OBITUARIES

W. C. FIELDS

W. C. Fields, 66, comedian whose colorful career ran the gamut of amusement park juggler to vaude headliner, musicomedy and screen star, died at Pasadena, Cal., Dec. 25.

Born in Philadelphia as Claude William Dukenfield, he ran away from home when 11 years old. Little is known about him after that until he, still in his youth, got a job as a juggler in an amusement park at $5 a week. Through amazing years he had perfected his juggling stint and with a natural gift for pantocomedy eventually landed in vaudeville.

From accounts it was an uphill climb for the comic until he was "discovered" by the late Flo Ziegfeld, who packed him for his "Follies." After that he was with Ziegfeld for the next 10 years and eventually developed what has been termed the greatest comedy juggling act of all times. He had successively appeared in other Broadway musicals and in 1926 went to Hollywood and films.

Among films in which he was either starred or featured were "Poppy" (which he had also done as a musical on Broadway), "Man on the Flying Trapeze," "David Copperfield," "Little Chicadee," in which he co-starred with Mae West and many others.

Other details on page 2.

CARRIE JACOBS-BOND

Carrie Jacobs-Bond, 84, composer of many of America's classic sentimental ballads, died of a heart attack in Hollywood, Dec. 28. She had been living in semi-retirement for more than 10 years although her last song, "The Flying Flag," was published in 1940.

More than 50 years ago she wrote such hits as "I Love You Truly" and "Just A-Wearyin' for You." Turned down by song publishers at first, Mrs. Bond arranged a series of concerts, playing her own compositions on the piano. In 1910, she achieved fame with the penning of "The End of a Perfect Day," one of America's all-time hits which sold more than 5,000,000 copies, with the sales still continuing.

Survived by two granddaughters and a half-brother.

BRIAN HOOKER

Brian Hooker, 66, playwright, author and composer, died in New London, Conn., Dec. 28. Hooker was responsible for the most popular British version of Edmond Rostand's "Cyrano de Bergerac," played many times by Walter Hampden and currently revived by Jose Ferrer.

Hooker left the teaching profession in 1909 to turn novelist and mystery story writer. Later, he collaborated with the late Dr. Horatio Parker on a $10,000 prize winning opera, "Mona," which was produced by the Metropolitan Opera Co.

Survived by widow and three daughters.

JOHN COLTON

John Colton, 60, playwright who had authored many Broadway hits, died in Gainsville, Texas, Dec. 26. He had gone there from N. Y. a month ago to recuperate from a long illness.

Among his best remembered plays were "Rain," "Shanghai Gesture" and "The Widow and the Virgin." He had been working on another play, "Foreign Fancy Woman," at time of death.

MARIAN GILLESPIE

Marian Gillespie, 57, composer and radio director, died in New York, Dec. 27.

Miss Gillespie was the composer of "When You Look in the Heart of a Rose," which was popular in the early 1920s and had been an early member of ASCAP. She also had written the book and lyrics for several revues, among them "The Greenwich Villagers," "Band Box Follies" and "Bare Facts of 1927."

She had also written scripts for radio, played in radio plays and formerly conducted an educational program on WNYC. Other songs she composed include "The Lyrics of You," "Japanese Garden," "Bring Back the Golden Days," "Ashes of Dreams" and "Assurance."

CHESTER S. OGONOWESKI

Chester S. Ogonowski, 55, founder-editor of the Polish Weekly News, of Schenectady, and conductor of Polish-Slavic programs on WGY for several years, died in Albany, Dec. 23.

A native of Buffalo, he had been active in local and state Polish circles for years. He also was a member of the Citizens' Committee of the Schenectady USO. In 1942, he inaugurated the round-table program on WSNY and continued it until his illness 18 months ago.

His widow, two daughters and three brothers survive.

EDWARD KULL

Edward Kull, 60, pioneer film cameraman, died Dec. 22 in his home in Hollywood after a long illness.

Starting as a lenser with the Selig Co. in 1907, Kull moved to Universal in 1915 and became one of the top cameramen of that period. He became a director on that lot but returned to his lensing after three years and later became affiliated with Cecil B. DeMille. In later years he was identified with independent production.

Surviving are his widow and his son, Jake, also a cameraman.

JOSEPH WARD

Joseph Ward, 69, retired actor, died at Englewood, N. J., Dec. 26. Since his retirement in 1939, he had been a guest of the Actors Fund Home there.

He had been in burlesque for a number of years and later appeared in vaude and some legitimate productions. A member of the vaude team of Ward & Renair, later he did an act with his wife, Mayme Scanlon, who survives him. Latter is also a guest of the Actors Fund Home.

MARK BYRON, JR.

Mark Byron, Jr., 65, concert manager and former newspaperman, died in New York last week from a heart ailment. Before branching into concert management he had been advertising manager of the Cincinnati Post and also had been in the real estate dept. of the N. Y. Times.

As concert manager, he had arranged tours for the late John McCormack, Boris Romanoff and others.

Surviving are his widow and two sons.

GEORGE F. CORNEBY

George F. Corneby, manager of the Times theatre in Manila and Universal Pictures' Philippines rep, died recently in Manila after a lingering illness.

Formerly manager of the Lyric theatre, Corneby was also one-time head of the RKO film exchange. A British subject, he had resided in the Philippines for about 15 years.

CHAMBLISS H. COLLIER

Chambliss Hayden Collier, 41, owner of the Globe theatre, Drew, Miss., died Dec. 27 in Memphis from injuries sustained in plane crash.

Collier was piloting the plane when it became stalled and cracked up as he was preparing to land at the Drew Airport.

Survived by widow, mother, and two children.

CARRIE LOWE

Carrie Lowe, 82, former actress, died in New York, Dec. 27.

For many years she appeared in stock companies, and later appeared on Broadway in "The Land of Promise," "Three of Us" and with the late William Hodge in "Old Rascal." Her last stage appearance was some years ago in "Farewell To Arms."

WILLIAM J. CLARK

William J. Clark, 54, 20th-Fox shorts and Movietone News sales manager, died in Lutheran Memorial hospital, Newark, N. J., Dec. 21, after a brief illness. A brother of the late John Clark, former sales manager for 20th-Fox, Clark had been in the film industry since 1927 when he began his career as salesman for Paramount. He had been with 20th-Fox for the last 12 years, most of time as shorts sales manager.

Before going with 20th-Fox, he had been managing director for Paramount in Australia-New Zealand following the late John W. Hicks into that position. Hicks later moved up to become Paramount foreign sales chief. Prior to Clark was general manager for Paramount in India, Burma and Ceylon.

Survived by a daughter, sister and brother.

DIXIE TIGHE

Dixie Tighe, 41, correspondent for the N. Y. Post, died in Tokyo, Dec. 30, of a brain hemorrhage complicated by pneumonia.

Miss Tighe, who at one time was a nitery columnist and appeared on the lecture circuits, spent most of her life in the newspaper business. She worked on papers in Philadelphia, Washington, Palm Beach and joined the N. Y. Post in 1936 as ships news reporter and cafe columnist.

FRANCIS J. SALABERT

Francis J. Salabert, prominent French publisher and president of SACEM; French performing rights society, died Dec. 27 in a plane crash at Shannon, Ireland. Details in Music section.

JOHN McMANUS

John McManus, 55, legit theatre manager, died of pneumonia in Chicago Dec. 23.

He was formerly manager of the Blackstone theatre, Chi.

VIRGINIA WALKER HAWKES

Virginia Walker Hawkes, 30, actress, and former wife of Howard Hawks, died, Dec. 22, in Hollywood.

Lou Page, 40, sound technician, with RKO for 20 years, died Dec. 23 in Hollywood following a long illness.

Warner I. Weil, attached to Gen. MacArthur's Civil Information & Education Section in Tokyo as producer of a motion picture "Japanese School of Tomorrow," which was to be made by Daiei studios in Kyoto, was killed Dec. 19 in Izumi in an airplane crash. He was from Buffalo.

Max Goldsmith, father of Ethel Smith, screen and radio swing organist, died Dec. 25; buried in Pittsburgh.

Wife of Fred Hart, with Republic Pictures in Pittsburgh, died last week in that city following an operation.

George Clarke, 60, vet British vaude comic, died Dec. 21 in London, after operation.

Cantor Recalls

Continued from page 2

if these stocks are so good, what do the presidents of these companies want me in on it? They don't know me, they don't give a damn about me, what the hell do they want me for a partner?" Try and explain that away.

Easy to Work With, But

In one of the early "Follies" he did his well known pool table scene. Another big comic sat under the table and shared some of the laughs with Fields. However, one night when Fields was about to do a routine with the pool balls he heard a tremendous laugh and couldn't understand what was happening. Looking under the table he soon found out. The comic was mugging in a place that hurt the scene. Bill warned the funny man and promised that if he did it again he'd let him have it with the thick end of the pool cue. Sure enough the next performance the guy did, and Fields did, and the comic was seen catching flies got a lump on his head way out to here. In the dressing room following the scene, the fly-catching comic yelled, "You killed me! You killed me!" Fields said, "Let's keep it in. My banging you on the head is as big a laugh as we've got."

W. C. Fields was unquestionably one of the greatest pantomimists the world has ever known. His laughter, his philosophy will be missed. In our generation there will never be another like him. In the last few years he suffered a great deal. I like to think that maybe God was a little sad on Christmas Day so He sent for Bill Fields to make Him laugh.

John Barton

In Loving Memory of

A Dear Friend—

We Miss You

LUCILLE BONNIE

and BUSTER WEST

New '46 Pic Stars

(Continued from page 1)

King of Siam," made him a new name to conjure with in Hollywood. And Miss Cummins, a beauteous damsel from Britain, after a false start in title role of same company's "Forever Amber," finally got her break in "The Late George Apley" and "Moss Rose." England, during the year, sent more top stars of British screen to Hollywood than in any season of the past.

Musical Break

Parks—Hit like a house afire as Jolson, after having dubbed around at Columbia for several years. During that time he appeared in number of B's and a fair-to-middlin' western in Technicolor, "The Renegades." He wasn't considered any great shakes, having been cast mainly in heavy roles, until the Jolson yarn came along and he finally was set for title role. Following the first press preview of this picture, he was made, his star future assured.

Lancaster—Hellinger borrowed him from Hal Wallis for the part of Swede in "The Killers." From the stage, he clicked instantly, having that quality in his personality which in seasons past lifted Gable and Bogart to star prominence. Wallis, taking advantage of the success he scored in "The Killers," cast him to star in "Desert Fury." He followed more and Gene Fowler, both of whom also liked the cup that cheers, though Fields could carry his load best. Once they played Santa Claus with each other on the lawn of his house and sent the screwiest telegrams to friends on Broadway, all for laughs. When on the set in Hollywood the "tea wagon" would be rolled to him for he insisted he couldn't be at his best unless having quaffed a half dozen drinks.

Tribute to Fields

Continued from page 2

Fields started in the "Follies" of 1915 at $200 weekly, just as a juggler, and when he left that show was getting $1,500, a figure which was more than doubled in subsequent appearances on Broadway. He was engaged for "Watch Your Step," Irving Berlin's first musical, produced by the late C. B. Dillingham in 1914, the Castle's heading the star names. Jesse Buck, who was scouting for Ziegfeld, saw the opening in Syracuse and, in the morning when Irene Castle said: "We've got to get rid of that juggler," Buck scooped him. Fields had come from Australia and exclaimed: "Can you imagine me coming 12,000 miles to get fired out of a show."

He was in a sanitarium at Pasadena about a year before he died. When asked why he stayed in the place his alibi was that he couldn't find an apartment in Hollywood but the fact that he was hospitalized didn't stop him from drinking almost what he pleased. Not long ago a former vaudevillian whom he never met visited Fields with the idea of making a touch. Asked later whether he gave the caller any coin, the comic replied: "No I couldn't; I changed all my money into currency."

H. Allen Smith's Closeup

H. Allen Smith, in his nutty tome, "Lost In the Horse Latitudes," lists Fields as a "tank car." In the chapter headed "Notes on a Swan Hunter," he tells of the time the Quiz Kids visited the comedian's home. One of the juniors timidly asked Fields for a glass of water, then quickly replying: "Water? . . . Oh, I've heard of the stuff. . . . it fell on the property here one night . . . ran right off. No, I regret to say I cannot gratify your desires . . . Now, I could fix you up with a nice scotch and soda." Disclaiming that he was a drinking man, Fields said once that sometimes he'd wait until 12 o'clock noon before taking a drink "... it's time for lunch. Always drink my lunch. Immediately after lunch I have a martini . . . Please get the idea that I'm overfond of liquor. I only drink the stuff when I have the desire to drink it. Nobody has ever seen me stagger. After all, I have my cane." Smith's observations are in the clipped style of speech that was Fields' and rather reportorially written.

One actor put it this way about the passing of Fields: "He has left for the forever land to join the cast of the big show where all good troupers go, and the billing now reads:

'Playing at the Eternity theatre, in the Garden of Paradise'."

that with top spot in "Deadlock," currently before the cameras.

Harrison — Probably the best-known star of British screen in this country, among those who had been made trans-Atlantic hop to Hollywood. He was known particularly for his light comedy, such as his work in "Blithe Spirit." 20th-Fox, after having failed to hit upon a Hollywood actor to take over the male title role in "Anna and the King of Siam," imported him from England. At once he was taken up by American audiences. For his second Hollywood appearance, he is co-starred with Gene Tierney in "The Ghost and Mrs. Muir."

Ill Wind Dep't

Cummins—Here was a child of misfortune, but she hurdled what would have spelled the death-knell of many another actress. 20th-Fox, after removing her from Amber role, rest her temporarily in "Bob, Son of Bob." Next lifted her out of that finally for Ronald Colman's daughter in "Apley." She acquitted herself so well in this that the studio thereupon cast her in the star femme role in "Moss Rose."

Coming up the hard way through one role after another, is Robert Mitchum, who progressively is getting better with each appearance and his stock with the public is rising even more rapidly. Mitchum today stands as one of the toppers in the event of new stars with every studio in the business adding for his services, which belong to RKO.

Guy Madison, under contract to David O. Selznick, clicked solidly with Ingrid Bergman in RKO's "Till the End of Time." He evinced a ruggedness and strength which pleased both studios and public, with the result that RKO borrowed him again to star opposite Shirley Temple in "Honeymoon." He definitely is on his way upward.

Beautiful Looks

Joan Caulfield registered strongly in both "Monsieur Beaucaire" and "Blue Skies," at Paramount, and will have easy sailing henceforth. An unknown until she was cast opposite Bing Crosby in the comedy costumer pic, she immediately caught on and she stepped into the Irving Berlin picture opposite Crosby.

An actress who had appeared for several years on the screen without particularly distinguishing herself until "The Jolson Story" is Evelyn Keyes, who played the femme lead in that Columbia picture. Came her appearance in this and Hollywood took new stock of her, discovering she was both attractive and able.

Catherine McLeod, who had done nothing under contract at Metro, was chosen by Frank Borzage for his femme star in "I've Always Loved You," and she pleased him to the extent he cast her again in a star role, in "Gallant Man."

British Belles

British contingent of new actresses is headed by Lilli Palmer, Rex Harrison's wife, Ann Todd and Phyllis Calvert, apart from the Cummins lass. Miss Palmer did all right by herself with the public opposite Cary Cooper in United States Pictures' "Cloak and Dagger," revealing interesting probabilities, and her popularity has been further augmented by release in this country of several British pictures in which she starred.

Miss Todd, whom American audiences recall as star of British-made "The Seventh Veil," was brought over from England by Selznick to star opposite Gregory Peck in "The Paradine Case." Miss Calvert also was imported, by Universal-International, for star role in "Time Out of Mind." Both are well established in England, and after these two pictures, it is expected they will be here, too.

Another interesting newcomer from foreign shores is Viveca Lindfors, from Sweden, who stars in Warners "Night Unto Night," and is to get terrific buildup by that studio.

Others to rise during year just past to prominent position in Hollywood include Audrey Totter, who after scoring in "A Sailor Takes a Wife" drew femme lead opposite Robert Montgomery in "Lady in the Lake"; Jane Powell, 16-year-old singer who starred in Metro's "Holiday in Mexico"; Richard Hart, brought to Hollywood by Metro and cast opposite Greer Garson in "A Woman of My Own" when Robert Montgomery ankled spot; Dorothy Patrick, who chalked up trio of star appearances during year, all at Metro, "Till the Clouds Roll By," "Boy's Ranch" and "The Mighty McGurk."

Broadway

Joe Pincus to Florida for three weeks vacation.

Annual benefit for the Actors Fund at Auditorie Jan. 26.

Jack Garrity, Jr., in from Coast on visit to parents.

Anne Nichols trained for Coast last Wednesday (25).

Helen Hayes to head actors committee in the 1947 March of Dimes.

Bill Wells, who is wed to Ruth Morris, hospitalized for cardiac observation.

Attorney L. Arnold Weissberger farewell-partied for Cecil Beaton Saturday night.

John Wesley's latest drama, "Carrol and Club," to be produced by William Herz, Jr.

Alan Anderson will stage his father's "Valley Forge" for the Veterans Memorial Stage, Inc.

Harry Delmar talking to Martha Raye on the Coast for a lead in "Holiday For Girls."

Dele Aylesworth and the Mrs. in Mexico City for a week, thence to Acapulco for vacation.

Sonny Werblin, MCA head in N. Y., New Year's-partied the staff at his home, Friday (27).

Louis Sobol's best Xmas present was in spades—both his mother and wife, Lee, came out of the hosp.

Joe Williams, World-Telegram sports columnist, hospitalized for high blood pressure treatments.

Alan Gordon, head of Curtis Brown agency, out of the hospital last week after an attack of virus pneumonia.

Sam Berns, former Film Daily staffer, in town for a visit until Jan. 11. Now in import-export biz on the Coast.

John Yorke to be general manager, John Paul Nugent manager, and Wolfe Kaufman pa. on Cheryl Crawford's "Brigadoon."

Michael Arlen was all set to go to the Riviera this winter but the death of his mother-in-law, which necessitates estate legalistics.

Germaine Sabion, sister of Jean, due in the U. S. around the end of February. She authored the song of the French resistance, "Chanson de Partisan."

Rex O'Malley replaced Cecil Beaton in "Lady Windermere's Fan," latter returning to England to design sets for Alexander Korda's film, "Salome."

Monte Proser escorting Louis Sobol, Earl Wilson and Abel Green, his three newspapermen-actors to Hollywood for that one-day acting stint in "Copacabana" (SAM Coslow-UA).

Hildegarde plans her own New Year's eve party for intimates in a private room of the Plaza after the chanteuse does her stint for the cash customers downstairs in the Persian room.

Songsmith-producer Arthur Schwartz takes his family back to Hollywood Jan. 2, arriving just in time to give S. J. Perelman and Fred Patrick, editor of Holiday, a bon voyage party.

Ex-Col. Marvin Young, formerly in Army Special Services, to the Coast as western representative for the Shubert. He's also partnered with John Shubert son of J. J. in a legit and radio producing firm.

W. G. Gehring, central sales manager of Century-Sonotone, presented the Millard Fillimore Hospital, Buffalo, for ulcer treatment, while in that city on business. Expected to remain there for one week.

The Jake (WB) Wilks taking a house on the Coast until April, but the eastern story-play head will only stay west a couple of weeks, returning the end of January, when Jack L. Warner returns from Europe.

Miami Beach

By Larry Solloway

Phil Leeds a click at the Jewel Box.

Feola Galli added to Park Avenue Club show.

Ted Lewis and the missus at the Roney Plaza.

Paddock sticking to all-nite dance policy sans sets.

Josephine Delmar renewed for season at Club 22.

Brook Club will open for short season on Jan. 15.

Guy Palmerton, Shubert stage manager, in for a rest.

Earl Wilson and his B. W. at the Lord Tarleton for a short stay.

Joe Candullo orch may follow George Paxton at Beachcomber.

Chito D'Izar, the Gibsons, Tito & Lucha in new lineup at Club Bali.

Jan Bart set for New Orleans Roosevelt hotel after Mocamba stint.

Beth Challis goes into Clover Club's Vagabond room in mid-month.

Lou Vogle, mimic, into new Rose Room at Blackstone hotel with B. S. Pully to follow.

Myron Cohen, dialectopper, packed for return engagement at Kitty Davis' in February.

Billy DeWolfe in for a personal appearance tour and vacash at the Lord Tarleton hotel.

Leon & Eddie's Palm Beach branch a click with a dine-dance public. Ernie Holst band featured.

Sam Branson in town to talk over Milton Berle situash with Copa ops Murray Weinger and Ben Slutsky.

Clash of rival syndicates brought ban on all possible gambling on the Beach, with some sneak bookmaking going on.

Benny Gaines celeb partied Harvey Stone, Frances Faye and Billy DeWolfe Sunday (29th) at his Blackamoor Room.

Hollywood Beach Hotel doubling club toppers into swank bar-lounge for weekend dates at top dough. Bill Kent is booking.

J. Edgar Hoover in town and a regular at Joe's Stone Crabs, south Beach eating spot which attracts the toppers in town nightly.

Spotlight Club, Hallandale, reopened this week with show featuring Peter Higgins and Andy Rice, Jr., with Michael Selker's orch.

Beachcomber racket-up has best grosses in town with Jackie Miles-Gypsy Rose Lee combo, Martha Raye and Willie Howard follow Jan. 9.

Jackie Miles revealed secret (three months) marriage to Lee Dennis. Will spend delayed honeymoon here after closing at Beachcomber.

Damon Runyon Memorial fund benefit sponsored by Walter Winchell and Junior Chamber of Commerce was a turnaway affair with the Lord Tarleton grounds the scene. Participating were Jimmy Stone, Jan Murray, Jackie Miles, Billy DeWolfe, and other top acts around town.

Newly appointed police chief of Miami clamping down on gambling, though Broward county is in full swing with Colonial Inn open and Fremans and Borrahh Minevitch Harmonica Rascals heading up show). Green Acres and several smaller spots hearing their chance rooms for all comers.

Gabber Blows Top

(Continued from page 1)

calls complaining, many saying Fike had become profane in his running verbal attack. Both newspapers also received a flurry of telephone complaints and printed rebuttal columns, one (The Press-Scimitar) detailing a portion of the Fike chatter at the mike thus:

'Are You Listening?'

"Here I am at the mike with nobody to hear me but the engineer... Crump, are you listening — you? ...As for the political gang, oh, well, I won't go into that. They seem to be for just about the same thing we're for...OK, I'll try to keep it clean. I'll stay within the FCC... If I can save five lives it's worth it. So you will never hear from me again. I am saying everything I want to say. There are four phones ringing right now. OK, listeners, let's see who's listening... You're probably out there, eh? You're a veteran? Well, this is a guy babbling his heart out. God bless you. We're getting away with something we shouldn't get away with again. I'm tired of seeing the veterans kicked around. I'm just a big guy; they'll have a helluva time kicking me off at 7...I have a lot of trouble before this day is over. After I get kicked off, will you back me up? I assured myself of five jobs before I started this... Every veteran in this city is behind me. Hey, if you cut me off everybody will wonder why...If I get so I can't say anything but cuss words, OK then."

McDonald, already ill with flu, fired Fike almost immediately after hearing the reports, then went back to bed with a rising temperature. Fike said, just before leaving town to return to Texas, "I wanted to get fired. I was fed up with the way the veterans are being pushed around, especially in the matter of housing. I didn't mean to use any profanity, but I don't regret one word I said."

Station officials, including McDonald, said Fike had always been known previously as "a quiet, conscientious announcer" prior to this outburst. He was with KEYS at Corpus Christi before working in San Antonio.

WHHM was opened early last summer, and is owned by Herbert Hieff, Memphis automobile man.

Oldsmobile

Continued from page 1

of putting the Oldsmobile tag in front of the people via radio, though certainly no manufacturer need push his product. Levy didn't even own the copyright—it belongs to Harms, Inc.—but he set up the deal and wired a long list of performers, from Frank Sinatra on down, promising new cars at regular rates for a plug. And the song's publishers still knew nothing about it all. Finally, they found out, and the song was restricted. Later, the restriction was lifted, probably after Harms execs saw the light—plus a vision of a couple new Olds that wouldn't cost them a grand over.

Now, everybody's on the bandwagon—or, rather, the Oldsmobile melody trail.

VARIETY

London

Bobby Barnett to Monte Carlo for three weeks.

Judy Shirley off to Austria and Italy to star in pantomime "Cinderella" for the troops.

J. Arthur Rank accepted post of proxy of the Music, Arts and Drama Section of his Pinewood Studios.

At Chelsea Arts Ball, revived New Year's Eve at Albert Hall for first time since war, men dressed as women to be refused admission.

Sophie Tucker's book, "Some of These Days," will be published in London by Hammond, Hammond, Ltd., early next year. First issue will be about 10,000 copies.

Anne Francine, now appearing at the Shepherd's Bush Pavilion, flew over here specially to audition for Jack Hylton, who wants to star her in straight play in London.

Arthur Bliss and J. B. Priestley have collaborated on a new opera. Former has done the score to latter's libretto, Derry-Sari, Budapest cabaret singer, to play lead.

Bandleader Harry Roy is suing John Mills, owner of Mimo's club and Les Ambassadeurs, for breach of contract. Case is expected to get hearing imminently in February.

Peter Ustinov off to Norway, where one of his plays is to be produced at the National Theatre, Oslo. Will also visit Copenhagen to arrange about staging some of his plays there.

Derek Farr and Glynis Johns, stars in Fortune theatre's "Fools Rush In," are being replaced by Nigel Patrick (in first West End appearance since discharge from the forces) and Brenda Bruce.

Llewellyn ("Lew") Johns, for many years head of vaudeville booking for Sir Oswald Stoll, has visited America several times to hunt for acts, is retiring. Has been with the firm since 1904, for many years a director of Stoll circuit, which he is giving up.

Vienna

"Octava" Music Co. has taken over offices of the Josef Weinberger Music Publishing Co.

City administration considering the Herrach palace in the Herrengasse for the Burgtheater.

Geraldine Katt, Austrian filmstar before 1938, signed contract with Lowenfilm Co. for production of a series of films.

Paramount's "The Great Victor Herbert" ballyed here as the "Lehar of America," doing SRO biz at the Gartenbau Kino.

Chic Young's cartoon "Blondie" appearing regularly in a Vienna afternoon paper, first time for a U. S. cartoon strip here.

"Nook" Polka, by American composers Scharau and Robert H. Holmes, played here by pianist Heinz Sandauer on radio recently.

Official organ of the Book and Publishers Association complained leeway granted the three political parties that print and sell books without government license.

Mystery what the 60 registered Austrian film producing companies are doing, since Vienna newspapers demanding that the Government withdraw all unnecessary licensing.

Geza von Cziffra Film Co. signed Helene Thimig (Max Reinhardt's widow) to play leading part in "Masterliche Antlitz" ("Immortal Face"), story of the painter Feuerbach.

Pittsburgh

By Hal Cohen

Local dance team of Sinclair and Dobbs booked into Terrace Room.

Herman Beiersdorfs have found living quarters at the Adolphus hotel in Dallas.

Booker Eddie Mackins has been elected proxy of the M-G-M Pep club for 1947.

Mrs. J. H. Lenhart was the local winner in "Magnificent Doll" identification contest.

Lou Abrams has changed the name of the Villa Madrid to the Club La Mardi.

Accordionist Beverly Stull has gone west for engagements and is now in Indio, Calif.

Variety Post of American Legion will install its new commander, Joe Misrach, on Jan. 6.

Lew Leftons are vacationing in Arizona and Rep salesmen may settle out there permanently.

Tony Verdi, who managed Mercur Music Bar couple of years ago, has rejoined spot's original staff.

WJAS announcer auditions for Newscaster Beckley Smith's standin was won by Murray Minster.

Evelyn McKelevey, ex-organist at Club Belvedere, has checked in at Duquesne's Twin Bars for a run.

Oscar Malanga, composer-arranger, came on from N. Y. to spend Xmas with his wife, Singer Kay Vernon.

Nathan Katz, counsel for AMPTO, has been named president of the United Jewish Fund campaign here this year.

Film Lew moved practically en masse to DuBois, Pa., for party celebrating A. P. Way's golden anni in show biz.

Kay and Ken Rockefeller, former Carnegie Tech drama students, now touring Europe in USO company of "The Patsy."

Don Taylor, Metro contract player, had to cut short his holiday vacation with the family in nearby Freeport, Pa., last week in hurry-up call from Coast to report at studio immediately for role in "Song of the Thin Man" with William Powell and Myrna Loy. It'll be his first picture since "Winged Victory."

Chicago

Nate Platt back at the Chicago after short illness at home.

Victor Borge adopting two children from Evanston Cradle.

LeRoy Dister, of Balaban & Katz, seriously hurt in auto accident.

Sidney Franklin, Metro director, hospitalized here with severe cold.

Barbara Hale and Bill Williams spending Christmas in Rockford, Ill., with her family.

After Gertrude Lawrence closes here in "Skyscraper" next stop is Mexico City to open new theatre there.

Variety Club Ball set for Jan. 20 at the Aragon Ballroom, with "Variety Girl" getting free Hollywood screen test.

Lt. Tom Bryant, former manager of summer theatre in Marengo, Ill., in from Germany on leave to visit wife, Barbara Winslow of "Harvey" cast.

Manila

M. Gould now United Artists general manager in Philippines.

Boulevard theatre a new addition to the city's first-run houses.

William Winter, American radio commentator, here on a lecture spree.

Capitol theatre, last of Manila's pre-war first run houses, reopened after months of reconstruction.

RKO held special screening of "Notorious" aloft in one of Philippine Air Lines' transport planes.

KFZM, government-operated station, conducting 15-minute tri-weekly safety program tagged "Talks on Traffic."

Dr. Gabriel Manalac, chairman of the National Council of Education, elected chairman of the Philippine Board of Review for Motion Pictures.

Berle's 400G

(Continued from page 1)

Zanzibar, N. Y., on a deal similar to that given Berle at the Carnival.

Blue is similarly educated to super-salaries for topliners. Olsen and Johnson, who follow Berle at the Carnival, are slated for $10,000 on 20-week guarantee.

And on a nitery can shell out $400,000 to a single performer in a year, many picture players may decide they're not above cafe dates. The Zanzibar is reported to have offered dates along Berle lines to Eleanor Powell, Gracie Fields and Mae West.

The Berle stand has also caused bonifaces to be less fearful of showing their books. Previously, there were few operators who would open their ledgers to a performer, especially when times were good. Now they'll take headliners in on what amounts to virtually a partnership basis.

Berle's engagement, incidentally, recalls one agency's mistake. A little over a year ago Berle was virtually set to switch from the William Morris office to Music Corp. of America in order to be serviced by Marty Goodman, who had just gone over to MCA from the Morris office. But one detail remained to be ironed out.

Berle was in need of some ready cash, as his funds were tied up in annuities. He needed $25,000 to put over another annuity. He approached MCA for the loan. Toppers there hedged, However, Abe Lastfogel, the Morris general manager, gave it over without hesitation. Berle consequently remained with the Morris office.

2/3 Baseball

Continued from page 1

league races dims slightly and then swing into the last 27 contests.

Although no sponsors have yet inked any contracts to bankroll baseball, it's considered likely that Ford and Shell Oil will co-sponsor the Brooklyn Dodgers' contests, to be televised by WCBS-TV (CBS, N. Y.). Combination which has already signed to co-sponsor with White Owl radio broadcasts of the Yankee games over WINS, N. Y. indie, has evidenced considerable interest in the sports and will probably come in on the Yankee telecasts, to be picked up by WABD (DuMont, N. Y.). Giant games, slated for televising by WNBT (NBC, N. Y.), are still going a-begging but NBC execs are confident a sponsor will come through before the season officially tees off in April.

Hollywood

Lena Horne in town after a stage tour.

Lucille Ball to Yosemite on vacation.

Bert Stockwell laid up with grippe.

Jay Garnett holidaying in Paso Robles.

Jan Kiepura became an American citizen.

Wallace Beery to Mexico City on vacations.

William Hornbeck to Florida for a month.

Pete Dailey to New Orleans for two weeks.

Adele Smith Sherrell divorced Lew Sherrell.

Cass Daley spending the holidays in Palm Springs.

Desi Arnaz and Lucille Ball on siesta at Yosemite.

Dickie Jones out of the Army to resume film chores.

Dale Evans entertaining the old folks from Dallas.

Allen Wilson back at his desk after a siege of flu.

Alan Mowbray and Cesar Romero to Mexico City.

Sam Katzman to Palm Springs to see the old year out.

Diana Grainger in from Mexico City for the holidays.

Humphrey Bogart tuning up his yacht for the race to Honolulu.

Gloria Swanson suing William M. Davie for $13,400 back alimony.

Margaret Wycherly in from New York to start work at 20th-Fox.

Arthur Lubin spending the holidays on his ranch at Victorville.

Andrew Stone lost 10 pounds, due to food shortages, while in England.

Jimmy Dorsey and Lillia Burns celebrated their fifth wedding anniversary.

Fred Hebert returned to work for the first time since his accident on Friday the 13th.

Jose Moscoso Arteaga, Minister of Foreign Relations for Ecuador, luncheoned at Warners.

John Joseph returned to his Universal-International desk after two weeks in Palm Springs.

Harold Hanson succeeded Arnold Stoltz as director of publicity and advertising for PRC.

Joe Depew recuperating from burns sustained when he rescued his daughter from a Christmas fire.

Washington, D. C.

By Florence S. Lowe

Induction of new officers of local Variety Tent skedded for Jan. 6.

Jackie Heller, at Delmonicos, and Jerry Wayne, Club Carousel, lead nitery bills for holiday week.

Winners of WTOP-CBS "Top Talent" show will compete Tuesday nights at Club Caire for fling at nitery dates.

Screening of "Henry V" for meeting of Modern Language Assn. group of college profs, marks a first in higher education.

Bob Knight, known locally as maestro of WOL-Mutual's "Behind the Band" airer, booked into Club 2400 for unlimited engagement starting Jan. 4.

Oscar Doob and Dan Terrell in from N. Y. for Carter Barron's annual Christmas party to Loew's D. C. staff and Eastern Division managers.

WQQW, new local station which goes on the air Jan. 5, began a "work preview" week past Sunday (29), with short periods advertising the station, interspersed with music, etc.

Minneapolis

By Les Rees

Benny Fields into Hotel Radisson Flame Room.

Bill Mussman, Paramount salesman, in Chicago for a week.

Sammy and Walsh held over at Hotel Dyckman Robin Hood Room.

Irving Mills, 20th-Fox assistant district manager, flew to New York to spend holidays with children.

Hotel Nicollet Minnesota Terrace has Marcus and Pierre & Renee Charise.

"Anna Lucasta" laid off here during week before Christmas, reopening in St. Paul.

Harold Wise, Paramount salesman in Indianapolis, a visitor at local exchange where he formerly was booking manager.

Ben Washington and Saul Mallow, 20th-Fox salesmen, in Chicago and Cincinnati, respectively, for their New Year's celebrations.

Northwest Variety club raising fund among own members to dedicate room to Art Anderson, retiring chief barker, in their heart hospital which it will build and equip on the University of Minnesota campus.

TOPS FOR NINE GREAT YEARS . . .

30,000,000 DECCA RECORDS SOLD!
(2nd ONLY TO BING)

OVER $15,000,000.00 IN THEATRE GROSSES!

20 MOTION PICTURES

IN RADIO — SPONSORED BY CHESTERFIELD CIGARETTES, WRIGLEY CHEWING GUM, DOLE PINEAPPLE, ROMA WINES, NASH-KELVINATOR, PLUS GUEST SHOTS ON EVERY MAJOR SHOW.

Happy New Year Everybody—
Maxine Gatty
Lo Vern

ALL IN ALL — HAVE APPEARED PERSONALLY BEFORE 250,000,000 PEOPLE HERE AND ABROAD

The ANDREWS SISTERS

. . . AND STARTING THEIR

10TH

Currently —
in their 12th appearance
PARAMOUNT THEATRE
New York

and — starting production January 27th in
"ROAD TO RIO"
starring
BING CROSBY · BOB HOPE · DOROTHY LAMOUR

Personal Management
LOU LEVY • RKO BLDG. • Radio City, New York

Booked Through
HARRY A. ROMM • 38 East 57th St. • New York

41st ANNIVERSARY NUMBER

VARIETY

Published Weekly at 154 West 46th Street, New York 19, N. Y., by Variety, Inc. Annual subscription, $10. Single copies, 25 cents.
Entered as second-class matter December 22, 1905, at the Post Office at New York, N. Y., under the act of March 3, 1879.
COPYRIGHT, 1947 BY VARIETY, INC. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.

VOL. 165. NO. 5 NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 8, 1947 PRICE 25 CENTS

We're taking time to say

Thank you Hollywood!

for 15 years of Magnificent Co-operation stars, writers, studios, directors, producers, newspapers, magazines, trade papers, technicians

"For the superb talents of your finest artists and technicians, the Lux Radio Theatre extends to you, Hollywood, its sincere thanks. Year after year, your co-operation has made it possible for us to bring dazzling entertainment to our millions of listeners ... with the result that this outstanding show is consistently rated the top dramatic program on the air." Thank you and congratulations on your brilliant performance.

Lux Radio Theatre

WILLIAM KEIGHLEY, Producer
LOUIS SILVERS, Musical Director

HOLLYWOOD, CALIFORNIA

MONDAYS, 9 P.M., NEW YORK TIME • WCBS AND COAST-TO-COAST COLUMBIA NETWORK

SCREEN | RADIO | MUSIC | STAGE

VARIETY

VOL. 165 No. 5 NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 8, 1947 292 PAGES

BING, BERGMAN, 'BELLS' '46 BOFFS

Scents, Sweatshop Size, Buncombe Keep Baltimore Sage From Theatre

By H. L. MENCKEN

I eschew the theatre.

My main reason is that the seats in the sweat-shop theatres of today are too narrow for my figure, and I object to being pinched and compressed for hours on end. My chief subsidiary reason is that the new perfumes advertised so lasciviously in Vogue and the New Yorker are too heady for a man of my years and learning, and fill me with wayward thoughts. To be sure, the women who radiate them are nearly always good cures for such notions, but it is embarrassing to have to turn and look at them every time I begin to feel myself slipping.

H. L. Mencken

How much I lose by keeping away I do not know precisely, just as I do not know how much I lose by refraining from golf, gin rummy, the radio and other such deceive-

(Continued on page 73)

Difference a Year Makes

Difference in nitery spending, as seen by a maitre in one of the clubs that charged $20 for New Year's eve: Last year when the custodian of the rope told a customer the minimum tariff at a ringside location was $20, the answer was "So what!"

This year it was "For what!"

Telecasters Map Self-Policing

Strongly advocating the formulation of a code of standards for television broadcasting, J. R. Poppele, president of the Television Broadcasters Assn., in his annual report Tuesday (7), proposed the setting up of a committee to study and design a guide for video broadcasters. Poppele said that "if we do not keep our house in order, self-appointed outsiders may want to move in."

"This danger can be best avoided," he said, "by taking immediate action to assume, honestly and sincerely, the responsibilities which television programming thrusts upon us. We should and must adopt a code or guide which each and every broadcaster should pledge to fulfill." The TBA prexy averred, however, that it was not the organization's intention to stifle healthy experimentation through over-zealousness, adding "good taste . . . has to be governed by public pressure."

Poppele said that the social responsibility that goes with television is greater than in any other medium because it reaches "intimately into every home and affects every individual therein, whether he be a youngster in knee-pants or an oldster with more discriminating tastes." He said that, although video broadcasters should experiment until they find a sound basis for a perma-

(Continued on page 73)

Bogart Spieling Palestine Play

Humphrey Bogart will plane to Chicago next week to take over the narrator's role in "A Flag Is Born," it's reported. Actor just signed a 13-year contract with Warners, longest in film history, but will take time out to do the Jewish pageant play, currently touring.

Bogart will replace author Louis Bromfield, who has been with the show since it hit Chi. Narrator's part, which has been done cuffo since "Flag" opened, has been held by Quentin Reynolds, Ruth Chatterton and radiotie Alexander Scourby. Lead in the road company is being handled by Jacob Ben Ami, who follows Paul Muni and Luther Adler in that spot.

"Flag" heads back east shortly, being scheduled for a February opening in Philadelphia.

BEA BETWEEN NITERY AND RADIO BOOKINGS

Beatrice Lillie may open either at the Wedgwood Room of the Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y., or the Brook Club, Miami Beach. English comedienne arrived on the Queen Elizabeth Wednesday (1) with several other deals in mind, but all of them in the talking stage. Her first of several radio appearances was on the Camel show Saturday (4), which she'll follow with a guester on the Bob Hope program from Hollywood Jan. 14, a platter with Bing Crosby and a shot on "Duffy's Tavern" too.

With Miss Lillie was Dorothy Dickson, former American dancer, who's making her first return here in 15 years.

Olivier-Leigh's 'Hamlet' Because of 'Henry' Click

London.

Due to the success of "Henry V," Two Cities Films, subsidiary of the J. Arthur Rank setup, has closed a deal with Laurence Olivier to produce and appear in "Hamlet" to be made in Technicolor. Two Cities is also dickering with David O. Selznick for Vivien Leigh to co-star with Olivier, providing she is well enough after a three-month recuperation period.

Film is expected to take 14 to 16 weeks to complete. Following it, Olivier and Miss Leigh leave for Australia for a year's tour there and in New Zealand with the stars' own legit company. Originally, all deals were off because of Miss Leigh's health but mounting pressure because of wide acclaim handed "Henry" caused Olivier to make the switch.

METRO, PAR TOP DISTRIBS' TAKE

By HERB GOLDEN

It was Bing, Bergman, "Bells" and Metro in a walk for top money honors in a top money year as filmdom closed its books last week on 1946, Crosby and Miss Bergman placed themselves indisputably among the boxoffice personality giants of all time, while "Bells of St. Mary's" (RKO), with its tremendous $8,000,000 in domestic gross, lacked even a close runner-up in the picture sweepstakes. Metro, meanwhile, waltzed off with No. 1 spot as rental-garnerer among the Big 8.

Above all, however, the year was Miss Bergman's. Appearing in four films that drew aggregate rentals in the U. S. and Canada of $21,750,000, she thus accounted for more than 10% of the income of all 60 of the top money-grabbing pictures of the year.

While there's never been any doubt among men who know the b.o. best of the historic proportions of 1946, what a tremendous year for the film industry it really was can most easily be grasped from Variety's compilations, published herewith, of the coin garnered by

(Continued on page 8)

FILMERS YEN STAGE CHORES

Hollywood.

Van Johnson, Mickey Rooney and Marilyn Maxwell are attempting to get Metro's permission to head for Broadway legit work.

Johnson would like to do a musical, as would Miss Maxwell, while Rooney's stage appetite was whetted by his recent personal appearance tour.

THINGS I LIKE TO REMEMBER

By RALPH T. KETTERING

Chicago.

The time I stole Bill Pinkerton's watch, gave it to George Cohan, who had it inscribed, returned it to the world's greatest detective, who dared not squawk, but showed it proudly to everyone as his newest gift from a pal.

R. T. Kettering

The time I stole a child actress named Gladys Smith, and her mother loudly belabored Al Woods because Zena Keefe was playing the little mother in "The Fatal Wedding" at my Bijou theatre, while Gladys' great ambition was to play that part on Halstead Street.

Later she changed her name to Mary Pickford.

Those days as a boy usher at the old Powers theatre, when Nat Goodwin would give me a big silver dollar each evening for finding him in some loop saloon in time for curtain.

Those same days, when I used to go to Wagner & Maudel's tobacco store to get a package for the beautiful Lillian Russell, who opened it, plucked out a big fat cigar and smoked it, to my utter amazement.

Those same days, when "Diamond Jim" Brady came on to see her show, bought two seats, one for himself, the other for a five-pound box of candy.

Those days, when Walter Winchell and Joe Laurie, Jr., haunted the outside office of the Frank Q. Doyle agency looking for the last half of next week.

When Capt. Ralph Emerson, whose showboat, "The Cotton Blossom," provided an inspiration for Edna Ferber, lived at the Clarendon hotel, with river actors, pitchmen and gamblers.

The day Watt Rothacker sent me out to White City to get a job managing the vaudeville theatre, on the

(Continued on page 58)

Early Deadline

This edition of Variety went to press ahead of the normal Tuesday deadline.

Production problems, binding, etc., and the size of this 41st Anniversary Number make it necessary to omit certain standard departments this week.

'20s Had Its 'Abie,' '30s Its 'Road'; B.O. Wows of '40s Are 'Father,' 'Okla.!'

The Winnahs!

Ten leaders in the longrun legit stakes, for the modern era in New York, are:

	Performances
"Tobacco Road"	3,182
"Life With Father"	2,995
"Abie's Irish Rose"	2,327
"Oklahoma!"	1,617
"Arsenic and Old Lace"	1,444
"Hellzapoppin"	1,404
"Angel Street"	1,295
"Lightnin'"	1,291
"Voice of the Turtle"	1,133
"Pins and Needles"	1,108

Europe Expects Big 1947 Tourism

Manifold ramifiections for show biz are foreseen in predictions in shipping circles that 300,000 U. S. citizens will visit Europe during 1947, in a tremendous renaissance of the pre-war travel boom. According to a State Department report, Americans will be spending $1,500,000,000 annually for foreign touring within the next few years—and a whopping sum like that, it is agreed, is bound to be felt by U. S. show biz in lightened expenditures for amusement at home.

Demand for American acts in far-off boites, films for ships and planes, bands for hotels and aboard boats and a myriad of other manifestations of the pitch that practically every

(Continued on page 73)

By ARTHUR BRONSON

The shades of Denman Thompson, Harriet Beecher Stowe and Lottie Blair Parker must smile a bit tolerantly at all this talk about the long runs of plays like "Tobacco Road," "Abie's Irish Rose," "Life With Father" and "Oklahoma!"

Their plays — those wonderful melodramas of the last century like Thompson's "The Old Homestead," Miss Stowe's "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and Miss Parker's "Way Down East"—ran on and on. Thompson played in his "Homestead" for 20 years after its presentation in 1896. "Tom" troupes roamed the country for years after its dramatization in 1852. "East" was played in stock innumerable times after its 1898 premiere.

But, at the same time, those serenely celestial shades must stir a little enviously when they hear of the boxoffice grosses of the modern long-termers. "Abie's Irish Rose," the wonder of the twenties (1922-27), grossed about $2,500,000 from its New York run and about $17,500,000 more from the myriad troupes that played the road, to reach the colossal total of $20,000,000.

"Tobacco Road," the phenomenon

(Continued on page 73)

CBS 'Award' Nix Burns Film Crix

Some members of the New York Film Critics Circle were burned last week at CBS because the net, purportedly, turned down an offer to broadcast the Circle's ceremony of annual award presentations. According to CBS execs, however, the "offer" of the show and its trimmings had been exaggerated beyond the actual facts in the case.

The CBS people say that the Circle did not come with a ripe proposal for a show, but offered on a "maybe" basis a number of names which it might have been unable to produce for actual airing.

Additional gripe is that CBS, which carries a number of shows depending on top Hollywood talent and story material, refused to broadcast the show on the grounds of "why should we give time to plugging a rival industry?" One CBS exec, asked about that, simply smiled and asked, "Well, why?"

'UNCLE DON,' GRANDAD OF KID SHOWS, QUITS

"Uncle Don," known by that moniker to millions of muppets who have virtually grown up on his kid radio shows on WOR, N. Y., is folding his afternoon air strip late in February or early in March.

Don Carney is the oldest of the current radio "uncles" specializing in children's shows, and took over on WOR about 23 years ago after the format had been started by "The Man In the Moon" over WOR and WAAT (Newark, N. J.).

With Govt., Little 3 and Most Exhibs Unsatisfied, the New Anti-Trust Decree May Never Go Into Effect

By IRA WIT

The new anti-trust decree which changed very little in the original court decision may, actually, never go into effect at all, industry legalities believe. Its terms have left unsatisfied at least three of the cohorts —the Government,' the Little Three and large bodies of exhibs—and all of these have indicated intention to appeal. There's little doubt, moreover, that the Big Five will counter with their own appeal and that all parties (possibly excepting the Government) will ask for a stay of enforcement until the Supreme Court ru'es.

Statutory court, on its own, has granted a 60-day stay plus 30 additional days provided there's an appeal. Legalites think it highly likely that the U. S. Supreme Court would grant a further stay, pending its decision, since parties would suffer real damages if the decree is carried out and later declared invalid. Importance of the case, involving as it does a leading national industry, makes a blanket stay all the more likely.

High court is almost up-to-date in its calendar and should the parties push printing of record, appeal could

(Continued on page 33)

D. of J. Didn't Say No So 'Duel' to Roadshow Despite Decree Provisos

"Duel in the Sun" definitely will be roadshown, despite terms of the court decree handed down in New York last week, according to an authoritative spokesman for David O. Selznick.. Decree doesn't mention roadshows at all, but very explicitly prohibits fixing minimum admission prices, prime point in setting roadsh'ow engagements, with resultant interpretation generally accepted that such a policy is prohibited.

Selznick Releasing Organization was not a party to the anti-trust suit which brought on the decree and thus could not be held in contempt of court for violating it. The Dept. of Justice, nevertheless, could institute a separate suit to force compliance. However, that possibility has been ruled out, Selznick spokesman said, as result of talks the company has had with the D. of J.

There remained the possibility of

(Continued on page 33)

ZUKORS' AND GUS SUNS' GOLDEN ANNIVERSARIES

Two vet showmen will celebrate their 50th wedding anniversaries within a few days of each other next week.

Adolph Zukor, founder of Paramount Pictures and chairman of the board, and Mrs. Zukor celebrate their golden wedding anniversary Saturday (11) at the Savoy-Plaza hotel, N. Y. Mr. and Mrs. Gus Sun—he's the vet vaude circuit booker—will celebrate their 50th anni the following Thursday (16) at the Springfield (O.) Country Club.

VARIETY
Trade Mark Registered
FOUNDED BY SIME SILVERMAN
Published Weekly by VARIETY, Inc
Sid Silverman, President
154 West 46th St., New York 19, N. Y.

SUBSCRIPTION
Annual $10 Foreign $11
Single Copies 35 Cents

Vol. 165 No. 5

INDEX

Bills	264
Foreign	179
Legit	265
Music	216
Obits	290
Pictures	4
Radio	107
Vaude	243

DAILY VARIETY
(Published in Hollywood by Daily Variety, Ltd.)
$10 a Year—$12 Foreign

Helen Walker Severely Hurt in Auto Spill

Hollywood.

Helen Walker is recovering at Redlands hospital from a traffic accident in which her car turned over six times injuring the actress severely and killing a soldier riding with her, as well as injuring two hitchhikers. Miss Walker, x-rayed, was found to have suffered fractures of pelvis, clavicle and four toes. Redlands police stated the car, registered to director Bruce Humberstone, was traveling "in excess of 80 miles an hour" at the time it overturned on highway between Palm Springs and Hollywood. Actress is scheduled to work on "Heaven Only Knows," which will be shot around her for time being.

Cohn Would Lend Out Vidor But NG's Work On Columbia Home Lot

Hollywood.

Charles Vidor is understood to be available for any and all loanout deals from Columbia.

Harry Cohn, although winning contract suit and thereby retaining Vidor's services, is understood to be firmly against ever letting the director handle a film on the home lot again, although he would farm him out to any other studio "with no questions asked."

MISS MARTIN SLATED AS 1ST FCC FEMME

Washington.

Miss Marion Martin, recently fired from her post as asst. national chairman of the Republican Party and head of the GOP women's division, is pretty certain of getting President Truman's appointment to the single vacancy on the Federal Communications Commission.

Miss Martin, who is from Maine, is strongly endorsed by the Congressional delegation from her state, led by Sen. Wallace White, Jr., new majority leader in the Upper House and designated to head the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee which must deal with radio legislation. Miss Martin's appointment would bring to the commission not only the first woman member but also complete Republican control.

238th WEEK!
KEN MURRAY'S
"BLACKOUTS OF 1947"
El Capitan Theatre, Hollywood, Cal.
"I think you should dispense with changing years. Just call it 'Blackouts of 194-EVER'!"
BING CROSBY.

A&C's 469G Tops '44-'45 Salaries

Washington.

A supplemental list of big salary earners during 1944 and in fiscal year ending in 1945, made public this week by the Treasury, shows Bud Abbott and Lou Costello among top earners of the period with $469,170

The supplemental list follows:

Columbia

Samuel Bischoff	$75,250
Charles Boyer	169,000
Irving Briskin	70,291
Charles Coburn	88,333
Harry Cohn	278,000
Jack Cohn	140,666
Irene Dunne	245,000
Al Hall	124,291
Rita Hayworth	146,666
Zoltan Korda	77,500
Abraham Montague	78,000
Paul Muni	137,083
Rosalind Russell	100,000
Abraham Schneider	68,000
Virginia Van Upp	118,833
Charles Vidor	397,500

United Artists

Gradwell Sears	138,537

Universal Film Exchanges

William A. Scully	92,750

Universal Pictures

Joseph R. Seidelman	76,850
Abbott and Costello	469,170
Nate Blumberg	264,674
J. Cheever Cowdin	254,624
Brian Duffy	93,750
Deanna Durbin	240,728
Felix Jackson	114,375
Charles Laughton	140,666
Jack Oakie	150,000
Merle Oberon	170,000
Charles D. Prutzman	134,192
George Sanders	87,500
Franchot Tone	150,000
Walter Wanger	301,127
Cliff Work	103,342

DIETRICH'S FRENCHIE

Marlene Dietrich left for Paris Friday (3) on the Queen Elizabeth to make a French film after finishing "Martin Rogmenac." Picture, as yet untitled, will be produced by Alcina. Star will return in four months.

'47 Workshop

The Era of Wonderful Nonsense II is over. The past year was and henceforth will go down as The Awakening. The Nonsense of pre-Wall Street Lays an Egg was almost as nothing compared to the post-Pearl Harbor period, until the GOP landslide in November.

Show business saw all that manifested, perhaps, as no other industry. The furriers, the jewelers, the smart specialty shops, the resorts saw it in a large measure—sure!—as the blacketeers peeled it off in folding money (never by check), proving that GI adage, "We never had it good like this."

But show business, a natural lure for a free-spending, war-time-enriched public, saw Nonsense Era II at its peak. It's all been said before—defense workers in shirtsleeves in front pews at the top hits; gambling in Saratoga and Florida as if it was with cigar coupons; profligate tipping and no regard for nitery tabs—all that is now familiar. What's more, a good deal of it being dispensed loosely in the form of largesse and pourboire, it's no gag that many a waiter is now on his second apartment house, and quite a few maitres can retire to Lake Como without worrying whether their Escoffier sheepskin is in jeopardy.

Anyway, this is 1947. It's a case of buckle-down Winsocki, or else. Values must achieve stature and durability if they're to endure. And in all branches of show business.

Plays with dinner intermissions, or Mr. and Mrs. breakfast shows, must fundamentally be worthwhile, whether Eugene O'Neill cometh or the Fitzgeralds goeth. And that goeth also for critics with ideas about 8 p.m. curtains in order to make deadlines. There's more concern right now about UN, CIO and GOP than CC (Critics' Circle).

Whether biographical films and whodunits on the screen and radio give way to psychological whodunits, or cafes give the stews an even break, or television bows in, or whether it may be—the important thing is boxoffice value. The return to showmanship will be the answer to whether $5,000,000 productions can get it back at the boxoffice; whether Rank will grab a commercially successful share of the American (and world) screen; whether the influx of French canteurs will bother the Milwaukee chantoosey—or even Menasha Skulnik.

Main thing, henceforth, must be showmanship. That alone will get show business to "Heaven in '47."

The honeymoon's over.

Abel

L. A. to N. Y.

Phil Baker
Curtis Bernhardt
Janet Blair
Frank Capra
Ed. Gardner
Leanne Gorden
Dudley Nichols
James R. Grainger
Nunnally Johnson
Jesse Lasky
Milton Lewis
Laurie Melchoir
Sam Moore
Michael O'Shea
Sabu
Lou Smith
Milton Sperling
Virginia Welles
Alan Wheedon
Ralph Wheelwright

N. Y. to L. A.

Maurice Bergman
Milton Berle
Jack F. Dailey
Armand Deutsch
George B. Evans
Matty Fox
Betty Garrett
Sam Goldwyn
Abel Green
Hal Horne
Harry Kurnitz
Milton Lazarus
Bea Lillie
William Lundigan
Joyce Matthews
Allan Meltzer
Alita de Meto
Ivor Novello
Monte Proser
Quentin Reynolds
Arthur Schwartz
Bill Scully
Joe Seidelman
George A. Smith
Louis Sobol
Earl Wilson
Louis Sobel

N. Y. to Europe

Cecil Beaton
Bertha Belmore
Rod Cameron
E. T. Cone
Madeleine Carroll
John Corfield
Marlene Dietrich
Lawrence Evans
Margot Grahame
Dame Myra Hess
Arthur Kelly
Sir Alexander Korda
Michael Powell
Paul Sherriff
Paul Soskin

15 NEW THEATRES

Washington.

Fifteen theatres were included in the less than $22,000,000 of non-housing construction authorized during the week ending Dec. 26 by the Civilian Production Administration.

The Christmas week made it the second lowest total of any week of the CPA veterans housing program.

The By-Liners In This Issue

(Regular Staffers and Correspondents Omitted)

Julian T. Abeles	20
Joey Adams	243
Tallulah Bankhead	266
Maurice A. Bergman	54
Ernest Betts	181
Claude Binyon	7
Betram Bloch	50
Irving Brecher	109
Carl Brisson	7
John Byram	269
Kay Campbell	63
Eddie Cantor	7
Blaine Carrigon	110
Carroll Carroll	108
Bennett Cerf	19
Charles B. Coehran	266
Alfred Cohn	59
Reg Connelly	216
Louis G. Cowan	109
Maurice Cowan	184
Bing Crosby	69
Christopher Cross	116
Paul Denis	170
Maxime de Belx	180
Charles R. Denny	111
Howard Dietz	39
W. A. S. Douglas	19
Wally Downey	216
Philip Dunning	268
Jimmy Durante	20
Happy Felton	118
Benjamin Fielding	39
George Freedley	266
Stephen Fry	114
Sir Benjamin J. Fuller	182
James J. Geller	43
Robert Gessner	69
Nathan D. Golden	17
Eric Gorrick	172
Lester Gottlieb	108
Douglas L. Grahame	179
Nate Gross	244
Mose Gumble	216
Arnold Hartley	112
Robert Heller	112
Art Henley	111
C. E. Hopper	113
Arthur Hopkins	265
Josef Israels II	179
George Jessel	44
Edward Johnson	269
Eric Johnston	17
Ray Joseph	182
Arthur Judson	270
Hal Kanter	110
Charles O'Brien Kennedy	20
Ralph T. Kettering	3
Dr. Frank Kingdon	115
Edgar S. Kobak	109
Harry Kremin	51
Kay Kyser	59
Lawrence Langner	265
Abe Lastfogel	40
Joe Laurie, Jr	20
Anton M. Leader	111
Leonard L. Levinson	20
Lloyd Lewis	218
Howard Lindsay	265
Alan Lipscott	111
Dick Mack	113
H. L. Mencken	3
Edwin Claude Mills	50
Garry Moore	40
Paul Moss	266
J. C. Nugent	18
Arch Oboler	117
Barney Oldfield	74
John G. Paine	116
Dr. John G. Peatman	219
Brock Pemberton	267
H. I. Phillips	34
Theodore Pratt	171
Harry Reggensberg	183
Quentin Reynolds	107
Norman B. Rydge	181
Adrian Samish	116
Laurence Schwab	268
Al and Sherwood Schwartz	110
Arthur Schwartz	218
Frank Scully	113
Joseph H. Seidelman	184
Matt Shelvey	245
Sidney Skolsky	18
H. Allen Smith	18
Bernard Sobel	58
Louis Sobol	19
Jos. R. Springer	74
Ashton Stevens	51
Albert Stillman	58
Frank Sullivan	51
Senator Glen H. Taylor	69
Niles Trammell	114
Sophie Tucker	245
Ernest Turnbull	180
Harry M. Warner	6
Richard Watts, Jr	267
Joseph Wechsberg	43
Jacob Wilk	69
John Wilstach	74
Thyra Samter Winslow	114
Harry Wismer	119
Maurice Zolotow	34

U.S. Theatres Plan To 'Adopt' 15,000 Greek Orphans; $120 a Year

Heading an "Orphans of Greece" appeal for the Greek War Relief Assn. as co-chairmen are Si Fabian, of Fabian Theatres; Ned Depinet, exec veepe of RKO, and Jack Cohn, veepee of Columbia, all of whom accepted the posts last week.

As part of the Greek War Relief's 1947 drive for $12,000,000, Fabian said, "We are calling upon personnel of the motion picture industry to adopt a Greek child for a year. No solicitation of theatre patrons is planned." Aid for orphaned children will be administered entirely through a Greek War Relief Assn., whose campaign headquarters are located in the Paramount Bldg., N.Y.

With a goal aimed at securing support for at least 15,000 orphans, Fabian said the plan is based on care. Foster homes will be sought for children, and the Assn. estimates the annual rehabilitation cost for one child to be $120, of which $80 will come from the Assn. and the balance from the Greek Government.

Margot 'Ambers' and Lams

Margot Grahame became the first featured player to finish her assignment in "Forever Amber," and left for England Friday (3) to begin work on J. Arthur Rank's "It Always Rains on Sunday." Miss Grahame played Bess Columbine in "Amber," which she said is only a day behind its March 1 finishing schedule.

English star will remain in England six weeks on her first homeward trip in over a year. She will return March 1 to begin work for Hal Roach studios where she has a two pictures per year contract, in conjunction with Walter Wanger and Alexander Korda.

Top-Drawer Industry Leaders Accent Staggering Production Costs But Fear No B. O. Dip

Film Fans May be Shopping But if Present Super-Quality Is Maintained (As Seems to Be General Intent) Business Will Hold Up--New Audiences Being Found But We Have Yet to Hit That 110,000,000 Weekly Paid Admissions of 1930

SKYROCKETING production costs are the No. 1 headache of the U. S. film industry today. With picturemaking budgets continuing to mount—and no means in sight of bringing them down—the problem is plainly giving industry toppers qualms about the future. On the other hand, they are pretty much agreed that b.o. returns will remain on a high level if general conditions do not too unfavorably affect the nation's and the world's economy.

Those are salient conclusions drawn from a roundup by VARIETY of opinions on the present and future by leading motion picture executives. The matter of production costs is one on which there's virtual unanimity. On some other of the queries, as might be expected, there's less focalization of viewpoint.

Samuel Goldwyn and David O. Selznick—traditional disagreers—find themselves on opposite sides of the fence regarding Goldwyn's recent statement that make serious and meaningful pictures are called for. Selznick declares: "I definitely do not think that the public wants its problems reflected on the screen." DOS feels pretty much the same way about what people abroad like, and is in disagreement on the point with William Goetz, Universal-International production chief, who points out: "Serious problem films seem to be better liked in the European markets."

"Any good picture which is bright, fresh, new and entertaining and which does not concern a subject which for topical reasons is timed wrongly, will appeal." That's RKO topper N. Peter Rathvon talking and it succinctly sums up the opinions of all the other trade leaders on the question: "What type of films do you think will sell well?"

On the matter of cycles, Hal Wallis feels that a "danger lies in concentration on any one style of production." He sees a resurgence in the future of historical biographies, and musical productions and adds: "Within the next five years I believe the great pictures of World War II will be produced."

Major Albert Warner, Rathvon, Selznick and others who commented on a query concerning the effect of the change from Democratic to Republican control in Congress and many states, all agree that it will have little bearing on the industry. "I believe both the Democratic leaders and the Republican leaders recognize the value of the American motion picture industry in our foreign relations," Rathvon stated.

"Boom period in motion picture attendance has been reached and is passing" is the opinion of Nicholas M. Schenck and is concurred in by his colleagues. Darryl F. Zanuck, on the b.o. question, makes this interesting observation; "We are, like Mahomet's coffin, suspended in midair, while the receipts on some pictures are going up and those on others are coming down."

Nate Blumberg, Universal prexy, calls the production cost situation "alarming." He sees the solution in increased rentals, as do most of the other execs. Wallis thinks budgets are now near their peak, but as Zanuck points out: "We can't retrench in the scope of our production efforts. We can't cheapen our pictures or weaken our entertainment values."

Most of those queried said that income is now commensurate with the higher costs, but are concerned because, as Goetz points out: "The margin between costs and returns is getting narrower every day."

Full answers to VARIETY's querying are presented herewith:

Good Entertainment Will Always Find Big Audiences—Nate Blumberg

Nate Blumberg, president of Universal Pictures, tees off:

It is not news for me to say that our business will be just as good as our pictures.

The history of the motion picture business clearly shows that trends follow our ingenuity, and our ingenuity is the backbone of the business.

N. J. Blumberg

It is not possible to make too many predictions as to what will happen in the motion picture business. The one I always like to make is that good entertainment will always find big audiences.

The big problem is to consistently make entertaining pictures.

In my opinion it is wrong to talk in terms of trends or cycles because that inevitably leads to the stereotype.

I think it is much better to think in terms of our experience and realize that the basic formulae of diversified programs is as near to a general answer as one can find.

It is true that our business naturally reflects the national economy. But it is also true that we suffer less when the economy is impaired than do other businesses.

The cost of picture making seems alarming, and it is to be hoped that we can soon reach some type of stabilization.

In view of cost it is quite evident that producers will have to receive more money for their films.

Exhibitors definitely have a responsibility in helping producers develop new personalities by joining with them in giving appreciable support to pictures sponsoring new personalities.

It is to be hoped that the world markets will continue to expand so that the loss of revenue we suffered during the war may somewhat be regained.

If this develops, then of course our position will be much improved as far as the increasing overhead is concerned. Universal feels itself in a very fortunate position due to its affiliation with the J. Arthur Rank organization. We believe our position is greatly improved in the world market. Certainly our position at home becomes more favorable with the product we are receiving from the J. Arthur Rank studios.

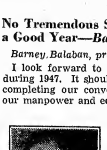
I think one of the most significant developments in the next few years will be the prestige and revenue which will accrue to our British cousins in the making and distribution of top product.

More and more we note that exhibitors are developing a keener appreciation of the British product. I am confident that in the near future all theatres in America will gladly welcome the opportunity of playing the product from abroad.

No Tremendous Swing Either Way; It Should Be a Good Year—Barney Balaban Paramount Prexy

Barney Balaban, president of Paramount Pictures, declares:

I look forward to no tremendous swing in any direction during 1947. It should be a good year. As a nation, we are completing our conversion to peacetime operation. Slowly our manpower and equipment are being improved. There is no new problem on the horizon ahead with which we have not had some experience in the past. If our national income stays up and our national economy achieves full production and distribution, we can look ahead with hope and confidence.



Barney Balaban

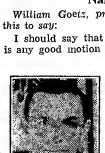
Production-wise, the motion pictures that will be made by Paramount are those which have broad public appeal. This does not mean we shall always follow established dramatic patterns. The Last Weekend" was far off the beaten path but it attracted a large public. No postwar condition has altered the basic need of people of all countries and all classes for good entertainment. At the same time the rising cost of production presents problems which must be reflected more strongly than ever by new merchandising methods which look toward larger audiences for each motion picture.

During 1947, we all shall maintain our interest in the obligation of our medium to the people it serves. As we learn to serve our audiences better, and their communities, we shall prosper and increase our stature as well as that of our industry in all parts of the world.

Margin Between Costs and Sales Getting Narrower—Bill Goetz

William Goetz, president of Universal-International, has this to say:

I should say that the "type of films that will sell well" is any good motion picture, regardless of its so-called type. Of course, type alone will not sell any more than any type made with showmanship will bar an audience from the boxoffice.



Bill Goetz

The discrepancies between domestic and foreign markets seem to be narrowing. Our experience to date in the marketing of J. Arthur Rank productions is indicating that good entertainment can sell anywhere, regardless of its point of origin. Certainly, most of the top American hits are equally successful abroad. At the moment, rather serious problem films seem to be better liked in the European markets than at home, and undoubtedly certain of our highly colloquial American films might not do equally as well abroad.

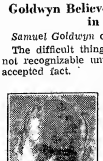
To me the boxoffice outlook seems to indicate that receipts will hold at their high levels. There is no indication of any domestic deflationary trend and certainly the foreign markets will continue to rise as conditions abroad improve. The inflationary trend, I think, will keep the boxoffice dollar at a high level regardless of whatever downward trend there might be in business generally.

Your questions about costs and sales returns can be answered simultaneously. Costs continue to increase at an alarming rate—it is all up. Our sales departments of all companies are doing wonderful jobs in expanding markets and increasing grosses, but if costs do not soon level off we are going to be in dangerous waters, because the margin between costs and returns is getting narrower every day.

Goldwyn Believes Something Big Is Happening in Film-Going Habits

Samuel Goldwyn opines:

The difficult thing about a trend is that it is frequently not recognizable until its meaning is an accomplished and accepted fact.



Sam Goldwyn

Something important is happening to the habit of picture-going. Maybe it is just ending as a habit. Maybe people are not going to pictures without thought of whether they are good or bad. People are shopping. "Another picture" isn't enough any more. It has to have something more—an idea, an appeal, a new personality, something personal, exciting, stimulating. Hollywood has to give them something to take home with them, something to talk about, something to remember.

Habits, changing as they do, may bring families to our theatres once a week instead of twice. That's the way habits are.

Picture-going can and should be an event as well as a habit. It should be something that captures the imagination, that you look forward to, that you anticipate.

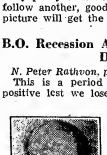
One of the promises of the future is that motion picture audiences will arrive at our theatres on time to see the beginning of a picture, just as they do to see a play. The habit of "dropping in" is certain to die for everything but the most ordinary pictures.

A factor that will contribute enormously to encouraging the production of better pictures is longer runs. When the exhibition policy of motion picture theatres is geared to big pictures, not routine, run-of-the-mill production, the arbitrary policy of having one picture, good, bad or indifferent, follow another, good, bad or indifferent, will end. A good picture will get the playing time it deserves.

B.O. Recession Always Lags Behind General Biz Decline—Rathvon

N. Peter Rathvon, president of RKO Radio Pictures, thinks:

This is a period when we must beware of being too positive lest we lose flexibility and the ability to change course which is necessary in view of the current uncertainties that are greater than at any time since I have been associated with the industry.



N. Peter Rathvon

On the matter of types of films that will sell well, I don't think that one can ever generalize on that subject. Any good picture which is bright, fresh, new and entertaining and which does not concern a subject which for topical reasons is timed wrongly, will appeal. It makes no difference whether such a picture is a comedy, musical, drama, suspense or mystery story, except as there are too many of one nature at a time. This answer also is an answer to the subject as to whether there are any cycles that might be wearing themselves out. However, that gets into the subject of the freshness and newness and because there have been fewer of the wholesome stories recently, I believe that their possibilities are enhanced today. Nevertheless, I do not think that the possibilities on pictures of any particular type will ever become exhausted. That is illustrated by the continuous success of Westerns over the years. It is the individual picture, not the type, that counts.

Distribution of American films in territories cut off during the war has been renewed in most territories. Because of state monopolies it was necessary for the American companies to join forces for distribution in such territories. Production has increased and quality improved in England and in other countries. Not only has the industry become more international in distribution but in production also. Development of the 16m field augurs well for greater distribution in areas which have not the necessary 35m equipment. Development in that field will be one of the definite trends over the next few years in the more remote foreign territories. There also will be continued experiments in devising the best method of adopting English language pictures for foreign territories.

On boxoffice outlook I can express no opinion except that it is dependent on general business conditions, but if there should be a recession the box office would lag behind general industry in feeling it. However, I have no worthwhile opinion on the general business outlook.

Except as it may influence the general business conditions, a subject about which I cannot prophesy, the results of elections will have no particular special effect on the motion picture industry. I believe both the Democratic leaders and the Republican leaders recognize the value of the American motion picture industry in our foreign relations.

Nobody a few years ago would have dared to predict that costs would be as high as they are today. While current attendance is supporting the high costs of production of the period when current releases were produced a year or so ago, the current costs will require increased returns when pictures now in production are released next year if results are to be maintained. Moreover, one cannot predict that costs will not increase further. To date the trend has been upward steadily and rapidly for many years. The danger in the situation lies in the great difficulty of reducing costs under our rigid contract system if revenues drop.

They're 'Shopping'—Nick Schenck

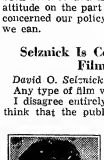
Nicholas M. Schenck, Metro president, states:

Not being Nostradamus—our own short subjects can be referred to—I have no faith in prophecies and do not make them. But I do not hesitate to say that I believe that the peak of the boom period in motion picture attendance has been reached and is passing to a more cautious "shopping" attitude on the part of the public. As far as the company is concerned our policy is to produce the best possible pictures we can.

Selznick Is Committed Entirely to Escapist Film Entertainment

David O. Selznick observes:

Any type of film will sell well that provides entertainment. I disagree entirely with Goldwyn, and I definitely do not think that the public wants its problems reflected on the screen. I think it is sick of war, and sick of postwar problems, and goes to the theatres to get away from them.



D. O. Selznick

Ditto on foreign. In fact, I think that pictures that deal with American postwar problems will do poor business abroad—and present costs, plus competition of locally-made films, makes the foreign field one that will have to be catered to, even more than in the past.

Cycles occur and recur, but an outstanding picture in any field will always do well. But usually, the man who starts the cycle again does best.

Boxoffice outlook is difficult to predict. Of course, it depends upon general business and employment conditions, strike conditions, et cetera. But I am operating on the theory that if a picture is big enough and good enough it will do big business even in depressions, since during depressions people shop for entertainment and flock to the ones they would most want to see. I do think at present costs there is going to be a big shakeup of a lot of people who don't have first-class pictures to offer, and who only thrive during extraordinary conditions.

(Continued on next page)

(Continued from preceding page)

As a Republican of many years standing, I can only hope that my feeling that the country needed a change desperately will prove to have been correct. I think we always need changes, and that the whole American system is dependent upon no one group of people being in office too long.

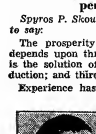
Costs are fantastic to the point of being frightening. The percentage of increase is different with different studios; but I can only tell you that a picture which would have made me $2,000,000 two years ago, or for a million seven or eight years ago, would cost me around $3,000,000.

Sales returns are fortunately commensurate with costs; but unfortunately, are not commensurate with what returns will be, on most pictures, if we have a serious depression.

Labor, Costs and Foreign Will Determine Prosperity of Pix Biz—Skouras

Spyros P. Skouras, president of 20th Century-Fox, has this to say:

The prosperity of the motion picture industry in 1947 depends upon three propositions: first and most important, is the solution of our labor problems; second, cost of production; and third, foreign business.



Spyros Skouras

Experience has shown that the rise and decline of the boxoffice parallels general business conditions. Unless the labor problems throughout the country are solved, and the hazards of strikes, slowdowns and work stoppages are ended; and the employer can receive full value for wages paid, we will be facing a declining income.

The key to our prosperity is full production. Anything that will curtail or halt production endangers the security of our business and all of us who are dependent upon it for existence.

Costs have risen until they are at meteoric levels and ordinary common sense indicates that these costs provide a perilous obstacle to the prosperous continuance of our business. It is imperative therefore that the industry concentrate its best business efforts towards increasing its foreign business in order to be able to absorb these extraordinary cost responsibilities.

Encourage Foreign Films

In line with this, we should do everything to encourage foreign producers and the importation and exhibition of the films of other nations, which are playable here.

In doing so we will be only furthering the democratic principles and ideals for which we fought in the last war and help to bring about an even closer relationship between all the peoples of the world and ourselves.

The foreign market resists the rigidly native American drama. Also, experience has shown that pictures which distort the truth regardless of the motive behind their development have proved unacceptable in the domestic market as well as overseas. When they are truthful and sincere, they are acclaimed everywhere.

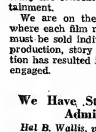
We have seen an unusual surge in our business in the past three years. The war has brought about a change in standards, individual thinking and public thinking. One of the great evolutions which have taken place, affecting our industry fundamentally, has been the increasing public sensitivity as regards entertainment.

In consequence, there has been a great change reflected in production. There are fewer but better pictures. Studios today are concentrating in producing only worthwhile entertainment.

We are on the threshold of a new era in our industry where each film must stand upon its own merits. Every film must be sold individually on the strength of its own quality, production, story and cast. This importance in film production has resulted in added prestige and added benefits for all engaged.

We Have Still to Top 110,000,000 Weekly Admissions of '30—Hal Wallis

Hal B. Wallis, v.p. in charge of production, Hal Wallis Productions, Inc., details:



Hal B. Wallis

On the question of what types of films will sell well, I think the danger here lies in concentration on any one style of production. All types of stories, if prepared with thought, are salable to the moviegoing public. The pitfall to avoid is an epidemic of similar types. A program of films consisting entirely of escapist fare is as shortsighted as a line-up exclusively devoted to war themes.

As for discrepancies between domestic and foreign markets, there are none, according to what I was able to observe on my trip to England and the Continent last spring. People abroad are hungry for film entertainment and share with American audiences a keen interest in new personalities. It is this desire for new faces that has prompted my continued search for talent and the signing of such people as Lizabeth Scott, Burt Lancaster, Kirk Douglas and Wendell Corey. I feel that musicals will be particularly in demand abroad, as good music transcends language limitations. To that end, I am planning a biography of Tschaikowsky which will feature at least six of the great composer's works.

On the matter of cycles, I look for a resurgence of interest in historical biographies and, as I have said, in musical productions. Also, within the next five year I believe the great pictures of World War II will be produced. It took almost eight years after the last Armistice for "What Price Glory" and "The Big Parade."

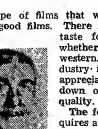
I am optimistic that boxoffice returns, stimulated by more careful picture making, will maintain wartime gains. We have still to top the record weekly attendance of 110,000,000 paid admissions established in 1930. Europe and Asia, I believe, will offer greater revenue than before the war.

Costs should not soar too far beyond present levels. Increased efficiency in production is essential.

I feel great optimism about the future. Regardless of temporary lulls, I look for continued boom business. This maintenance of revenue can only be accomplished, however, by close cooperation between the producer and the exhibitor. The picture-maker cannot relax on past laurels or records. He must constantly apply increased care and efficiency to his product. The exhibitor, on the other hand, will have to get out and hustle to keep the customers coming. Exploitation and showmanship, sadly neglected during the last war years, must be revived if we are to maintain our gains.

Production Costs the No. 1 Concern for Entire Industry—Major Warner

Major Albert Warner, vice-president of Warner Bros., states:



Major Albert Warner

The type of films that will sell well, now or at any time, is good films. There never is any change in public taste for high grade entertainment, whether musical, drama, biography or western. It is significant that the industry in general is showing greater appreciation of this fact by cutting down on quantity so as to increase quality.

The foreign situation is one that requires a lot of missionary work to convince all nations that they have much to gain from a more receptive attitude toward American films — especially since it is being demonstrated all the time that our product and stars are the most popular throughout the world. One unfortunate factor in the situation is that other countries cannot yet turn out pictures that are as popular here as our films are abroad. Then there are the political factors, which have nothing to do with quality of entertainment and which are even harder to contend with.

"Cycles" have practically ceased to exist in our business. They are more or less a coincidence, since all companies strive for a diversified schedule of pictures each year.

Unless the industrial economy of the country and the world as a whole is seriously impaired by new strife, the outlook for motion picture business continues very good both here and abroad. In times of such widespread unrest, no one can predict future conditions with any degree of certainty, however. Unforeseen day-to-day happenings can change the picture completely, unless we all do our part to keep the prosperity boat on an even keel.

The film industry, as an industry, does not take sides politically. The screen performs its functions of entertainment and public service just as conscientiously under one administration as under another.

Production costs have reached the point where they are the industry's No. 1 concern. They have doubled in the space of a few years and more than tripled since 1939. Only the wartime prosperity has made it possible to absorb these skyrocketing costs, and that kind of prosperity is over now.

There is no way to meet rising costs except by increased rentals. That's plain arithmetic. It means exhibitors must either draw more customers or charge higher admissions. Ultimately the saturation points in both attendance and price increases will be reached. Then we'll all be caught high and dry unless we start now to check costs at the source—stories, salaries, materials.

Yates Sees Foreign Production as Greatest Challenge to U. S.

Herbert J. Yates, president of Republic Pictures, has this to say:

From all the evidence at hand, and from extensive discussions with leaders, I believe that 1947 is going to present a challenge such as film-makers have never faced before.

We have to face the fact that Hollywood no longer holds the undisputed position of film capital. Great competitive motion picture producing organizations have sprung up in England, India, Mexico, South America, Spain, France, Italy and Egypt. Moreover, they are booming with all the dynamic vigor of a new movement. The foreign movie-makers will have fresh viewpoints which will appeal to the public taste which is becoming more and more international-minded.

Herbert J. Yates

Regarding type of films that will sell well, I have always been a firm advocate of the entertainment value of wholesome action and adventure pictures, and Republic has pursued t his policy to excellent advantage. Now, more than ever, I believe the public will clamor for this type of film. Eleven million men in the armed forces have been seeing action in the far corners of the earth, and they have developed an interest in action and excitement. The days of the effete drawing room drama, with superellious conversation and false motivations, have ended.

There also has been certain discrepancies between domestic and foreign markets in that certain types of films which our domestic audiences enjoy and demand would not be appreciated or understood by foreign audiences. But the development of radio and television on an international scale, the extensive international entertainment tours inaugurated during the war and continued now, plus numerous other factors, all will serve to create a common denominator of international interests.

Among the cycles that have run themselves thin are the psychological murder drama and spectacle musicals without stories. The psychological drama has to be extremely well done, and it has to be startling. The novelty wore off quickly, and cheap imitations dealt the death blow.

Silly Musicals

Spectacle musicals may come dangerously close to insulting the public intelligence. We have been through a long, grueling war, and the public is more serious, less frivolous. The public has acquired depth, and golden bathtubs filled with champagne are no longer exciting to a world that has started to think.

This movement toward realism became apparent in the field of literature some time ago, with the popularity of such down-to-earth writers as Hemingway, Cain and others. The picture industry has been late in following the trend.

The foreign market will reflect our own domestic market. Industrial strife here in America affects every country with whom we do business; this was demonstrated in the recent coal strike.

The GOP landslide will undoubtedly affect the picture business. Motion pictures certainly shouldn't be in politics, and speaking in this connection I will have to voice my personal sentiments. But I candidly believe that with the Republicans in control of Congress, certain detrimental laws and regulations will be cast out—regulations that were created as wartime emergencies and then falsely applied to our peacetime economy.

Proposes a U. S. Pic Congress

It is going to be a difficult proposition to set up a ratio of sales returns commensurate with costs of production. In order for the structure of this motion picture industry to remain sound, production costs and the boxoffice intake will have to be balanced so that the producer and the exhibitor will share equitably in the public's ticket buying dollar.

To iron out all the inevitable difficulties in this transitional period I would suggest that the industry create an American Motion Picture Congress, composed of key men in both production and distribution ranks. The men selected should represent both the independent distributors and the circuits, as well as independent and association producers. They should be men who have made a careful study of their business so that they can bring intelligent ideas into any discussion, and above all, they should be empowered to present honest facts both as to figures and policy.

Producers and distributors must be honest with each other, more so than ever before, and such a Congress would serve to implement that faith.

Our whole salvation lies in presenting a united front between producers and exhibitors, and above all things, to be frank and honest with each other.

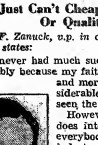
We Just Can't Cheapen Our Films in Cost Or Quality—Zanuck

Darryl F. Zanuck, v.p. in charge of production, 20th Century-Fox, states:

I have never had much success in gazing into the crystal ball, possibly because my faith in prophecy isn't very strong and more probably because in my considerable years in the industry I have seen the prophets too often confounded.

However, that question about costs does interest me, as it should interest everybody who has the future of the industry at heart.

Repeatedly I have pointed out how historically the costs of production have soared of late, with the end not yet in sight. With the restiveness of labor, and the unwillingness of its leaders to set a policy of patience for the sake of stability, it would be folly speculate about future costs. So today we are, like Mahomet's coffin, suspended in midair, while the receipts on some pictures are going up and those on others are coming down.



Darryl F. Zanuck

I can only interpret this as a sign of coming crisis. Yet I can't, for the life of me, see how we are going to bring the costs down; how we can trim sail. If the economic situation crashes, economic laws will take care of it for us.

On the other hand, we can't retrench in the scope of our production efforts. We can't cheapen our pictures or weaken our entertainment values. Audiences will not stand for it. Regardless of the economic situation, producers will have to spend on a picture whatever its inherent production values call for. On this point I am sure all Hollywood is resolved. Today a picture that hardly more than a year ago cost around $1,000,000 to film costs $2,000,000. And forevermore we are committed by public responsibility to continue to make pictures that look like at least $2,000,000. And since we are also making pictures like "Forever Amber" and "Captain From Castile," which cost not far from $5,000,000 apiece, I am sure we will have to go on making more pictures of that type.

The solution, if things get tough, will have to be through showmanship in exhibition, extended playing time and other devisements for expanding the drawing possibilities of our pictures. Scrutiny of the past, to my mind, is more enriching than any searching of the future, and I think the past shows us that regardless of conditions, if we can provide the entertainment at a cost not too exorbitant, the public will reimburse us.

AMBITION RUNS ITS COURSE

Harry M. Warner likes to tell this as his favorite story:

Thirty years ago, or 10 years before they launched talking pictures, the Warner brothers—Harry, Col. Jack L., Major Albert and the late Sam—were struggling to establish their small company as an important factor in the motion picture industry. In those days, raising capital for film ventures was difficult, and they sometimes had to pay as high as 40% interest.

The boys' father, the late Benjamin Warner, meditating on whether the struggle for expansion was worth all the tribulation, asked Harry what was his ambition. Mindful that branching out required money, Harry replied that his goal was "to owe a million dollars."

In a very few years, the enterprising Warner organization had achieved its $1,000,000 indebtedness, whereupon old Ben Warner said to the eldest son and guiding spirit of the family fortunes:

"Well, Harry, you got what you wanted. You owe $1,000,000. So what is your ambition now?"

By this time, Harry was aware that the size of a company's importance often was measured by the amount of debt it had, so he answered:

"To owe 10 million dollars."

It didn't take many years for the Warners to pile up the new debt total, and again the father asked his son:

"Now you owe 10 million—what's next?"

Reflecting on the fact that several Warner competitors were bigger and had a larger debt, Harry declared he would not be satisfied until his company owed a 100 million dollars.

In due course, there was $112,000,000 in red ink on the Warner Bros. books, and once again Papa Warner consulted with Harry.

"All right, son," said the father, by now apprehensive and pleading, "so you finally owe more than 100 million dollars. And now what's your ambition?"

This time Harry replied without hesitation:

"To pay it all back!"

That was about 16 years ago. Today the story has an even bigger punchline. The Warners have paid it all back.

The Sunny Side

On a visit to my uncle in Copenhagen a few years before the war, the old gentleman invited me on a sunny Sunday to go with him to the cemetery, and there he showed me the burial lot he had chosen for himself. The headstone was in place and the carving was complete except for a space to be filled in with the date of death.

For 10 years every Sunday, my uncle had gone there. He would sit for hours contentedly. When I suggested it was a strange thing to be doing, he replied, "Not at all; here is where I am to sleep for eternity. I like it, it is pleasant and peaceful."

Every Sunday, too, there came to a neighboring cemetery lot two spinsters, who apparently felt the same as my uncle. But one day they said that they envied my uncle his lot, and were wondering if he might not consider trading it for theirs.

Uncle was disturbed and asked me what to do. I said, "Why not invite them to your home some Sunday and discuss it over a bottle of port?"

This he did. The ladies said they favored his lot because it was on the sunny side of a small rise in the land, and they would enjoy their eternal rest better if they knew they were to sleep in the sun.

A few years later I returned to Copenhagen. They were all gone—my uncle and the two spinsters and they were sleeping there in the cemetery where they had spent so many pleasant Sunday afternoons—my uncle, gentleman even in death, on the shaded side.

—Carl Brisson.

Idea Man

By CLAUDE BINYON

Hollywood.

I started going crazy a few minutes after our story editor called me about this man. "I don't claim he can write a script," said the story editor, "but he's up to his ears in ideas. Will you talk to him?"

Claude Binyon

"Certainly," I said. That's how easy it is to ruin your life. Just a word.

Almost too quickly my office door was opened, and there he stood. He had sandy, cropped hair and disarming blue eyes. He was short, and smiled widely as he offered a hand.

"Murphy," he said. That seemed fair enough. I shook his hand and offered him a chair. "Thanks for seeing me," he said. "I met your story editor last night through my sister that used to live in Pittsburgh's girl friend."

My eyes must have widened, because Murphy shook his head and smiled reassuringly. "Not what you think," he said. "This girl and I were together because she had the use of a fellow who was out of town's car."

There was nothing to do but say, "Oh." Murphy leaned back, completely at ease. "I always wanted to be a writer," he said. "My uncle that drank himself to death's third wife used to borrow a fellow that lived next door's typewriter. Then when she'd go out I'd sneak in to write poems with a kid that wanted to be a burglar's pass key."

There was a pause while I tried to digest this. "The story editor said you had some ideas for pictures," I said finally. Murphy smiled his wide smile again. "All you want," he said. "Of course they're not all put together like pictures you see in a theatre's stories. What I mean is they need a little work from a fellow like you that's been in this racket a long time's brain."

I lit a cigarette shakily. "For instance?" I asked.

"Well," said Murphy, "do you remember that murder picture with Barbara Stanwyck's middle?"

"Barbara Stanwyck's middle?" I said dully.

"The part where she finally arranged to have her husband bumped off with her boy friend."

"You mean arranged with her boy friend," I said hopefully.

"That's what I said. Now I figure we can take that and add on that other murder picture with Betty Grable's end. Then all we need is a beginning."

"How about that one with Jane Russell's front?" I asked.

"Nobody'd believe it," said Murphy. "But here's another idea I got from reading about that rich woman that divorced her husband's maid." Murphy chuckled. "By the way, that was pretty juicy, wasn't it?"

"It must have been," I conceded.

"Here's what I figured," said Murphy. "Instead of it being about the rich woman that divorced her husband's maid, we could have a story about a rich fellow who lost his memory when he got hit over the head's wife. When she comes home from out of town she finds out her husband thinks he's married to the fellow in the next apartment's cook."

"I don't know," I said uneasily. "I'm afraid we couldn't get by with it."

"You mean that fellow who took over when Hays left's office?"

"I don't know what I mean," I answered truthfully. "I have a very bad headache and I'm going down the hall to borrow some of that writer who just got fired from Columbia for bawling out Harry Cohn's aspirin."

Murphy was all sympathy. "See you after lunch," he said. "I got a date with the guy that draws Elsie The Cow's secretary."

When I came back to my office Murphy was gone, but his spirit permeated the room like a man who drinks corn whisky's breath. I sat down at my typewriter nervously, feeling akin to the fellow who just got married's bride. Could I fight this thing? I started typing my script:

FADE IN:

A-1 EXT. MARY'S MOTHER IN CHICAGO'S HOUSE—(DAY)

About to enter the house, a man pauses to pat the child's dog that lives next door's head.

MAN

You remind me of a lady who sells false teeth in Ohio's dog.

DOG

(Smiling)

I'm not, sir. I'm the little girl who is sweet to her daddy's bitch.

Tearfully I pushed my typewriter from me. Obviously Murphy had driven me crazy. My telephone rang.

"This is the story editor," came the voice. "What do you think of Murphy?"

"I think," I said bitterly, "that Murphy should be sent to that people who were removed from its island where they dropped those scientists from New Mexico's bomb."

THE PICTURES ON MY WALL

Jolson, Ziegfeld, Will Rogers, Jimmy Walker, Bert Williams, et Al., Come to Life

By EDDIE CANTOR

Hollywood.

Every one of us in Show Business, fortunate enough to own a home, has one room filled with pictures. Photographs of friends with whom we played, with whom we've worked, guys that bring back a lot of pleasant memories. I have such a room in my home in Beverly Hills. The house Fanny Brice decorated. (She does these things as a hobby, and heaven help you if you should move a chair out of place. As a matter of fact, I can't remember when I have been able to sit down in my own house because I'm worried about what Fanny will say.)

Eddie Cantor

Well, back to the pictures. Do you want me to point out a few and reminisce a bit? The one on the left is Al Jolson, hero of "The Jolson Story." I recall that very severe winter of 1925-26 when we both played in Chicago—Al, in a Shubert show, and this pop-eyed comic under the Ziegfeld banner. Al and I both lived in the same apartment hotel on the north side. Both of us were doing a smash business. (I mention this because it has something to do with the story.) Came the day when I got a terrible attack of pleurisy. It made playing on the stage almost impossible. However, I was afraid to quit. I could visualize the story in VARIETY: JOLSON RUNS CANTOR OUT OF TOWN.

I suffered this way for several weeks and finally, one Saturday night, told Al that I was quitting the next day. I could go on no longer. Jolson suggested that I go back to New York and up to the mountains for a rest. He even bought me a new windbreaker. We closed "Kid Boots" and imagine my surprise when I got back to New York to pick up the paper and read: Cantor closes show because of illness on Sunday—Jolson closes his show on Monday. I didn't learn until months later that Jolson was sicker than I was, but was afraid of the story VARIETY might print: CANTOR RUNS JOLY OUT OF TOWN.

* * * *

A little farther to the left, right next to Max Baer, there is a picture of that great international favorite, Maurice Chevalier. In the early '30s he was one of the most popular males in all the world. Freeman Gosden and Charlie Correll (Amos 'n' Andy) and their wives came over one evening to visit. When I mentioned Chevalier to the women they did a little pre-Sinatra swooning. Being an obliging guy, I phoned Chevalier and asked him to come over to the house. The women were in ecstasy. Later that night we went out to an ice cream emporium in Hollywood. When the waitresses spied Chevalier, their eyes widened, they bumped into each other, dropped dishes and acted perfectly natural. Imagine then, the look on the faces of Mrs. Gosden, Mrs. Correll, Ida and all the waitresses when Chevalier, a half of a coffee ring in his hand, started dunking—but dunking way up to his wrist watch!

* * * *

While we're in the neighborhood, here's a photograph of Max Baer in fighting togs. What a physique! Broad shoulders, thin waist—nothing like Jessel. Two days after he was knocked out by Joe Louis I asked him, "Max, did you see the fight pictures?" I love his comeback. "What t'hell do I want to see the pictures? I was there the night Louis wrote the script!"

Mrs. Cohen and Will Rogers

A little farther down we have the wisest and most beloved performer I have known in my lifetime—Will Rogers. I can recall playing a benefit performance with Will one Thanksgiving week in Pittsburgh. For more than 20 minutes he spoke of what he had been reading in the newspapers and his comments were gems of wisdom. After the performance I met a certain Mrs. Cohen, who asked me the question, "Haddie Cahtor, you vill tell me. Vill Rogers is Jewish?"

"No," I told her, "he's not." She insisted that he was. "But, lady, look—I work with him, I live with him, I know he's not. What makes you so sure he is?"

Mrs. Cohen told me. "He's got to be Jewish, he's such a sweet man!"

* * * *

I love this photograph of Ziegfeld seated at his desk. He has a pen in his hand and probably was sending a telegram at the time the photograph was taken. He loved to send wires on any and every occasion. And even when there was no occasion. He would watch the performance from the back of the New Amsterdam theatre and if he had something to say, instead of sending his manager back to say it, he'd go out and send one of the performers a wire. I recall with a smile the 12-page telegram he sent me to Boston one day, with the last line reading, "Will write you in detail tomorrow!"

* * * *

And next to the Great Glorifier, is Samuel Goldwyn, probably the greatest independent producer of our time. At least 50% of the stories emanating from Hollywood concern the fabulous Sam. Some of these are made up, but if the truth were known you cannot possibly start to print all the things he says that are laughable. I was a witness to this one. When we were contemplating transferring "Whoopee" from the stage to the screen, Goldwyn, in his most persuasive manner, was trying to convince Ziegfeld. "Ziggie, let me tell you, in Hollywood we can give you the things which you cannot get anyplace else. For instance, in that big Indian scene I would get you the real things—regular Indians, direct from the reservoir!" And there was the occasion when the late Larry Hart was supposed to bring in a song for Anna Sten. Goldwyn called him at his home and discovered that he was in bed. Sam thought he was feigning illness. "Larry, whatsamatter with you?" Larry said, "Sam, I'm sick. I'm in bed."

"Well, get out of bed," Sam yelled, "don't be such a nymphomaniac!"

Bert Williams and the Freight Elevator

Right in the center I have a fine likeness of Bert Williams. It's hard to think about Bert Williams without smiling. What a pantomimist he was! What timing! What subtleties! And yet he knew every trick of hokum that was possible to know. I never look upon the picture of dear old Bert without remembering that he made me cry a little. It was New Year's Eve, 1918, in Chicago. He was permitted to live at the same hotel at which we stopped, but because of his color, had to use the freight elevator. We walked home from the theatre and were going to have a midnight bite in my room. I had some sandwiches and a bottle of wine prepared for the occasion. As we got close to the hotel, Bert said, without any rancor, "Son, I'll see you in the freight elevator." I patted his hand. "Y'know, Eddie," he said, still without bitterness in his voice, "going up the freight elevator wouldn't be so bad if I still didn't hear the applause ringing in my ears."

* * * *

Well, look who's here—Sophie Tucker! Sophie takes me back to Knoxville, Tenn. I had a sore throat and went to a specialist. After the spraying and the painting and all the other junk that goes with a visit to a throat man, the doctor said, "Mr. Cantor, do you know Sophie Tucker?"

"Why, sure, she's a good friend of mine," I told him. He became very serious.

"She was in here last week for a treatment and that poor girl's voice can't last six months. She doesn't know how to use it. She puts too much of a strain on her vocal chords and she won't be able to work in her profession in less than a half a year."

Are you still reading? This was September, 1912! At this writing I have learned that the doctor has been dead for more than 20 years and Sophie is singing 20 songs nightly at the Chez Paree in Chicago. I wish that girl would take care of herself!

* * * *

To the right of Sophie is a strange combination—Elsa Maxwell and Georgie Jessel. And I have a little anecdote for that team. Elsa, who is probably the best known person in connection with parties and social events, was on my radio program several years ago. I confided to her that I wanted to give a party for my company which consisted of about 50 people. She said that she could get me the Gold Room at the Waldorf for $1,000. "Too much," I said. Then she thought perhaps she could arrange the Harlequin Room at Pierre's for $750. I said that I would let her know. In talking to Jessel that night I asked his advice (for a change). I told him that I could get the Gold Room at the Waldorf for a thousand or the Harlequin at the Pierre for $750.

Georgie said, "Save your money. For $200 I can get you in the Men's Room at the Astor!"

Jennie Grossinger Goes to Saipan

Barney Ross, one of the fightingest champions of all times, adorns a prominent place on my wall and a warm spot in my heart. Truly a great guy. When he returned from his heroic venture in the Pacific, he spent a couple of days with me in Palm Springs. You had to drag the story of his night-long fight with the Japs, out of him. "Barney, please tell me," I begged him, "what were you thinking about when you were surrounded by these Japs who kept firing at you?"

He told me in all seriousness, "Eddie, I said to myself this can't be the end. Just once more I'd like to eat that chopped liver at Grossinger's!"

* * * *

Here's a fine photograph of another fighting champion who left us but a while ago. The immaculate, well mannered, warm hearted Jimmy Walker. I have told this story before, and I want to tell it again and again. It illustrates more than any other line the sharp mind of our late, beloved friend. It happened on my broadcast day at Mitchell Field in New York several years ago. Jimmy went along to have dinner with me and watch the broadcast. He asked me to come along with him and visit an old friend in the Catholic chapel, a short walk from the theatre where we were to broadcast. The priest was most entertaining and we spent a very pleasant 15 minutes. Then someone invited us to walk over to the Protestant chapel, which we did. And then, having paid the third visit to the Jewish synagogue, as we walked out Jimmy affectionately put his arm around my shoulder and uttered these memorable words,

"Eddie, we've just played God across the b. rd."

Must I Do it Again?

His name was Morris. He and his wife were taken by the Nazis from a territory in middle Europe known as Galicia and this poor Galitze was taken to a concentration camp near Berlin as a slave laborer and after a couple of years of misery, suddenly through the grapevine, he found out that the RAF and our own boys were starting to bomb Germany and one night about 10 o'clock he said to his wife: "Kitty, I feel the Allies are going to win the war and get us out of this and I am so without fear I am going down to the main street in Berlin, go into a big saloon, and I will order a drink of schnapps."

"Morris," said his wife, "don't do that. They'll take a look at your kisser and they'll kill you."

He said, "No, I'm not afraid."

Lo and behold, the little fellow walked down the main street of Berlin, Unter den Linden, walked into the big barroom at the Hotel Adlon and said to the big Nazi bartender: "Give me a drink." The bartender looked at him and said: "You little something I'll hit you over the head with this bottle." And as the bartender reached to hit him over the head with the bottle, suddenly out of the sky came Allied planes and they bombed Berlin to pieces. One bomb dropped on the Adlon right into the bar. It knocked everything helter-skelter. The bartender was under the wreckage of the bar but the little Galitz was still standing and he said to the bartender: "Well, do I get the schnapps or should I do it again?"

George Jessel.

Top Grossers Also Demonstrate Potency of Bigtime Sales Force

There's considerably more than meets the eye in the tabulations, presented herewith, of the industry's 60 top-grossing films of 1946. Figures, in keeping with the idiom of the trade in discussing film strength, show rentals received by the distributor. And so, almost as much as the statistics reveal the b.o. drawing power of the films themselves, they reflect the policies and strength of the sales organizations behind them.

It thus becomes clear why Metro has almost one-third of the films in the over-$4,000,000 category. Company has consistently fought for percentage dates right down the line as against flat rentals and pioneered in sliding scale deals, so that it gets a larger share of the boxoffice dollar than most other companies. It is freely admitted among sales execs that on a mediocre b.o. picture, Metro can extract probably $1,000,000 more in rentals than some of the lesser companies.

Exhibs accept Metro's terms because those terms have been established over a number of years. When they were set, M-G was in a unique position in the industry as a producer of a very steady run of high quality pix. Exhibs, in need of the product, were forced to accept the terms because they couldn't get the films they needed anywhere else.

Goldwyn's Mulvey a la Metro

Metro, in order to force acceptance of its terms, stayed out of some towns for a year or longer. The result of that tough—but acknowledgedly fair—policy is being reaped today, as it is made so clear in the tables presented herewith.

Paramount, which has come through in the past five years of so with a heavy barrage of strong films, has thus also placed itself in the position of being able to ask and get good terms, with the results likewise evident in the "60 Top-Grossers" table. All companies, as a matter of fact, are now emulating Metro's practices in trying to get more percentage dates and sliding scale deals.

With very strong b.o. fare, getting highest terms is no trick and Metro's results aren't much better than any other company's. It's in the class below the very top that it really counts. The $3,750,000 that M-G got in rentals for "Ziegfeld Follies" is a prime example, sales execs for the company admitting the pic's limited b.o. pull.

Columbia and Universal

It's because distribs like Columbia and Universal haven't been able to establish such preferred terms that they don't have films in "The Golden Circle"—those 19 pix that have earned more than $4,000,000. Lesser companies are forced to accept too many flat rental deals. Difference is seen in the $2,750,000 "Dark Mirror" got, as against $2,500,000 for "The Killers," although the latter was undoubtedly a bigger b.o. draw. With "Dark Mirror," an International picture, U was able to start breaking heavily into the percentage column, and with improved results. Since the merger with International, U, of course, will seek to still further bolster its terms.

Columbia's "Bandit of Sherwood Forest," with an acknowledgely exceptional b.o. potential, is in exactly the same class as "The Killers." Sales heads think M-G could have probably added another million dollars to the $3,000,000 Col got—and that's no reflection on Col distrib chief Abe Montague or his sales organization, since it is obvious that it hasn't had the product over the years to force preferred deals.

60 Top Grossers of 1946

Following are domestic rentals earned by all pictures which grossed more than $2,250,000 in 1946. List includes some pictures released at the tail-end of 1945 and excludes late 1946 releases (such as "Jolson Story" and "Razor's Edge") which haven't played sufficient dates to give adequate opportunity for estimating what total gross will be at the end of each company's standard amortization period.

1.	Bells of St. Mary's	RKO	$8,000,000
2.	Leave Her to Heaven	20th	5,750,000
3.	Blue Skies	Par	5,000,000
4.	Road to Utopia	Par	5,000,000
5.	Spellbound	UA	5,000,000
6.	Green Years	M-G	4,750,000
7.	Adventure	M-G	4,500,000
8.	Easy to Wed	M-G	4,500,000
9.	Notorious	RKO	4,500,000
10.	Two Years Before the Mast	Par	4,400,000
11.	Lost Weekend	Par	4,300,000
12.	Harvey Girls	M-G	4,250,000
13.	Saratoga Trunk	WB	4,250,000
14.	Holiday in Mexico	M-G	4,000,000
15.	Kid From Brooklyn	RKO	4,000,000
16.	Margie	20th	4,000,000
17.	Night and Day	WB	4,000,000
18.	Postman Always Rings Twice	M-G	4,000,000
19.	Smoky	20th	4,000,000
20.	Gilda	Col	3,750,000
21.	Two Sisters From Boston	M-G	3,750,000
22.	Ziegfeld Follies	M-G	3,750,000
23.	To Each His Own	Par	3,600,000
24.	Anna and King of Siam	20th	3,500,000
25.	Kitty	Par	3,500,000
26.	Monsieur Beaucaire	Par	3,500,000
27.	The Virginian	Par	3,350,000
28.	Strange Love Martha Ivers	Par	3,250,000
29.	They Were Expendable	M-G	3,250,000
30.	Tomorrow Is Forever	RKO	3,250,000
31.	Undercurrent	M-G	3,250,000
32.	Stork Club	Par	3,200,000
33.	Bandit of Sherwood Forest	Col	3,000,000
34.	Big Sleep	WB	3,000,000
35.	Centennial Summer	20th	3,000,000
36.	Do You Love Me?	20th	3,000,000
37.	Dragonwyck	20th	3,000,000
38.	My Reputation	WB	3,000,000
39.	San Antonio	WB	3,000,000
40.	Sentimental Journey	20th	3,000,000
41.	Stolen Life	WB	3,000,000
42.	Three Little Girls In Blue	20th	3,000,000
43.	Without Reservations	RKO	3,000,000
44.	OSS	Par	2,800,000
45.	Blue Dahlia	Par	2,750,000
46.	Dark Mirror	U	2,750,000
47.	My Darling Clementine	20th	2,750,000
48.	Spiral Staircase	RKO	2,750,000
49.	Bad Bascomb	M-G	2,500,000
50.	Cloak and Dagger	WB	2,500,000
51.	Killers	U	2,500,000
52.	Sailor Takes a Wife	M-G	2,500,000
53.	Scarlet Street	U	2,500,000
54.	Two Guys From Milwaukee	WB	2,500,000
55.	Deception	WB	2,300,000
56.	Caesar and Cleopatra	UA	2,250,000
57.	Canyon Passage	U	2,250,000
58.	Make Mine Music	RKO	2,250,000
59.	The Stranger	RKO	2,250,000
60.	What Next, Cpl. Hargrove	M-G	2,250,000

Money Toppers

Continued from page 3

the 60 top-grossers during the 12-month period. Films are those which got the heaviest portion of their income during 1946 or at least played a sufficient number of dates to provide experience for estimating their potential.

Most significant fact revealed in the figures are that 19 pictures made "The Golden Circle"—that creme-de-la-creme of picturedom, the $4,000,000 or over class. The 19 compares with only 25 films having reached that category in the entire history of picturedom preceding 1946.

The 60 top films—all that earned $2,250,000 or more domestically—returned an aggregate income to their distributors of $208,450,000. The foreign market usually can be counted on to add about 40% to a picture's revenue.

Metro retained its Big 8 leadership with $47,250,000 in rentals received from the top 60 films. It had 13 pix in that class. Paramount wasn't far behind, however, with 12 films turning in total rentals of $44,650,000.

In "The Golden Circle" category of $4,000,000 or over, Metro also led with six of the 19 pictures, while Par followed with four. Then came RKO and 20th-Fox with three each, Warner Bros. with two and United Artists with one.

"Bells" was followed in the money picture classification by 20th-Fox's "Leave Her to Heaven," which amassed a tremendous $5,750,000. That was followed by three $5,000,000 films—"Blue Skies" (Par), "Road to Utopia" (Par) and "Spellbound" "Selznick-UA).

Crosby did a bit better than Miss Bergman on average rental per picture. He appeared in three with a total gross of $18,000,000, which would be an average of $6,000,000, against an average of $5,437,000 for each of the femme star's four.

Surprising — and probably a healthy sign for the industry—is the wide range of players with star billing who must have accounted for at least a bit of the tremendous grosses piled up during the year. Aside from Crosby and Miss Bergman, there were at least 30 other stars in the 60 top pix. Most of them were in one or two films.

Gene Tierney and Alan Ladd

In the case of well-established stars, Gene Tierney moved forward with two b.o. powerhouses to her credit—"Leave Her to Heaven" ($5,750,000) and "Dragonwyck" ($3,000,000). Even more important, however, was her appearance at the year's end in "The Razor's Edge," which wasn't counted in the gross compilations because of the lateness of its release, but which on the basis of Christmas day openings and the engagement at the Roxy, N. Y., was outstripping "Heaven."

Alan Ladd likewise again proved himself an exhib's good luck charm, with three pix to his credit that garnered a total just short of $10,000,000 in rentals. They were "Two Years Before the Mast" ($4,400,000), "OSS" ($2,800,000) and "Blue Dahlia" ($2,750,000).

Other b.o. stalwarts included Clark Gable, Greer Garson, Judy Garland, Cary Grant, Bob Hope, Danny Kaye, Ray Milland, Gary Cooper, Olivia DeHavilland, Claudette Colbert, Barbara Stanwyck, the Humphrey Bogart-Lauren Bacall team, and Bette Davis.

Also Directors, Producers, Writers

Almost as diverse as names of the players are directors, producers and screenwriters responsible for the year's 60 big pictures. Directors seem closest to fitting into the pattern of repeat winners, with Mitchell Leisen responsible for "Kitty" and "Each His Own," Curtis Bernhardt for "My Reputation" and "Stolen Life," Irving Pichel for "OSS" and "Tomorrow Is Forever," Hal Walker for "Stork Club" and "Road to Utopia," John Ford for "They Were Expendable" and "Clementine," Robert Siodmak for "Spiral Staircase," "Dark Miror" and "Killers," Fritz Lang for "Scarlet Street" and "Cloak and Dagger," and David Butler for "Two Guys from Milwaukee" and "San Antonio"

Among producers of repeat winners were Arthur Freed with "Ziegfeld Follies" and "Harvey Girls"; Charles Brackett with "Lost Weekend" and "Each His Own"; Paul Jones with "Virginian" and "Utopia," and Henry Blanke with "Deception" and "My Reputation." Screenwriters are even more infrequent repeaters on the list, Brackett being one of them, with the same two pix he produced, and Norman Panama and Melvin Frank duplicating with "Utopia" and "Beaucaire."

Top-Grossers by Companies

Here's how many pictures each company had among those top 60 of 1946 (all over $2,250,000) and how much each received or will receive in domestic rentals from them:

		No. of Pix In Top 60	Total Rentals
1.	Metro	13	$47,250,000
2.	Paramount	12	44,650,000
3.	20th-Fox	10	35,000,000
4.	RKO	8	30,000,000
5.	Warner Bros	9	27,550,000
6.	Universal	4	10,000,000
7.	United Artists	2	7,250,000
8.	Columbia	2	6,750,000
	Total	60	$208,450,000

Jane Russell, The Bard and GBS Also Among Unusual Grossers

In addition to those films which made VARIETY'S 60-top-pictures-of-the-year list, published herewith, there was an unusual number of flicks released during 1946 which made no great dent in terms of total income garnered, but were interesting b.o.-wise for one reason or another. Perhaps the leaders in this category were "The Outlaw" and "Henry V," both distributed by United Artists.

"Outlaw" probably gathered as much newspaper space during the year as any picture in film history, what with producer Howard Hughes' various battles with the Motion Picture Assn., a flock of lawsuits and sundry censorship throughout the country. "How would you like to tussle with Russell?" key-line in a much-disputed ad featuring a large scale picture of star Jane Russell reclining in a haystack, became almost a national byword. And even the sedate Reader's Digest, in its January issue, tells the tale of the guy on the quiz show who replied to a question, "What are California's twin peaks?" with "Jane Russell."

All that and a five-year ad campaign between the time the film was made and its release early in 1946 resulted in a terrific b.o. swell. It virtually never failed to set a house record in any opening (and right now is getting sensational grosses in London)—but the openings haven't been numerous enough. With pressure from churches and local civic and moral-minding groups, UA is experiencing difficulty in getting sufficient dates for the film.

Result is that the picture now has returned to UA's till about $1,750,000. From the way it draws, however, UA figures it would be good for about $6,000,000 if it were played off in the usual manner through the circuits and with the usual number of indie contracts.

"Henry V" is a standout since it's the first time Shakespeare has ever proved a film b.o. power in the U. S. Not a little responsible for the great return the picture is getting is UA's carefully worked out policy of roadshowing it on the same basis as a legiter and even tying up with the Theatre Guild. UA has rented all houses on a four-walls basis, giving it a return of about 51% of the b.o. gross. Result is $700,000 in the bank with only 10 engagements.

Rank's $5,000,000 'Cleo'

"Caesar & Cleopatra," J. Arthur Rank's $5,000,000 Technicolor production of the George Bernard Shaw play, was another interesting UA release. It just managed to get on the 60-best list with $2,250,000 in rentals. It got a heavy ad campaign and, with Vivien Leigh starred, invariably teed-off to nice biz, only to slump miserably within a few days or a week as word-of-mouth got around that the pic didn't live up to its advance billing as far as average American audience tastes go.

Universal's "Seventh Veil" proved unusual inasmuch as it seemed to be the first British-made to really crack open the American market, the first foreign production to honestly break into the consciousness of the average U. S. filmgoer, doing so without the extravagant publicity campaign of "Caesar" or the studied handling of "Henry." It went into release in the manner of the standard American feature and came out with around $2,000,000—and a reputation for James Mason, its star, which promises to put him in the upper strata of b.o. draws.

Two of the minor companies succeeded in their efforts to break into the big time during the year, as a result of the majors' cutting down quantity of production and the accompanying product shortage. Outstanding in this respect were Monogram's "Suspense" and PRC's "Wife of Monte Cristo," both of which got respectably-long Broadway runs. Mono likewise found playing time on Broadway and in many houses throughout the country for an exploitation picture, "Black Market Babies," which rolled up a sizable income for this type product.

Top-Grossing Stars of 1946

Following are the stars whose names predominated on the nation's marquees, with the number of pictures in which they starred during the year (from among the 60 top-grossers), aggregate rentals their films earned—or will earn—and the average per picture. These figures obviously do not reject a star's b.o. power, per se, since they make no allowance for draw of co-stars or for story, director, production values and the other ingredients which make a film a top-grosser.

		No. of Pictures	Aggregate Rentals	Average Per Pic.
1.	Bing Crosby	3	$18,000,000	$6,000,000
2.	Ingrid Bergman	4	21,750,000	5,437,500
3.	Fred Astaire	1	5,000,000	5,000,000
4.	Dorothy Lamour	1	5,000,000	5,000,000
5.	Gregory Peck	1	5,000,000	5,000,000
6.	Clark Gable	1	4,500,000	4,500,000
7.	Greer Garson	1	4,500,000	4,500,000
8.	Van Johnson	1	4,500,000	4,500,000
9.	Gene Tierney	2	8,750,000	4,375,000
10.	Joan Caulfield	2	8,500,000	4,250,000
11.	Jeanne Crain	3	12,750,000	4,250,000
12.	Judy Garland	1	4,250,000	4,250,000
13.	Cary Grant	2	8,500,000	4,250,000
14.	Bob Hope	2	8,500,000	4,250,000
15.	John Garfield	1	4,000,000	4,000,000
16.	Danny Kaye	1	4,000,000	4,000,000
17.	Fred MacMurray	1	4,000,000	4,000,000
18.	Lana Turner	1	4,000,000	4,000,000
19.	Ray Milland	2	7,850,000	3,925,000
20.	Cornel Wilde	3	11,750,000	3,917,000
21.	Paulette Goddard	1	3,500,000	3,500,000
22.	Gary Cooper	2	6,750,000	3,375,000
23.	Alan Ladd	3	9,950,000	3,317,000
24.	Olivia DeHavilland	2	6,350,000	3,175,000
25.	Claudette Colbert	2	6,250,000	3,125,000
26.	Barbara Stanwyck	2	6,250,000	3,125,000
27.	Lauren Bacall	1	3,000,000	3,000,000
28.	Humphrey Bogart	1	3,000,000	3,000,000
29.	Maureen O'Hara	2	6,000,000	3,000,000
30.	Linda Darnell	2	5,750,000	2,875,000
31.	Bette Davis	2	5,300,000	2,650,000
32.	Edward G. Robinson	2	4,750,000	2,375,000

all the BIGGEST best sellers are made by 20th Century-Fox.....

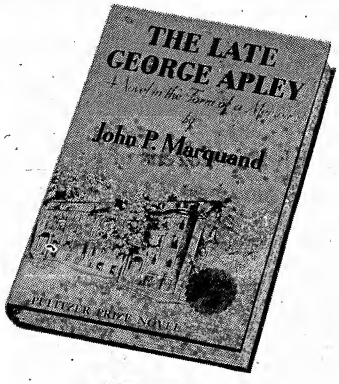
THE WORLD'S CHAMPION BOXOFFICE GROSSER!

Now setting new all-time highs in hundreds of dates after breaking all records in the history of show business at the Roxy!

20th CENTURY-FOX



Pulitzer Prize winner!
Long-run stage success!
Saturday Evening Post serial!
10 year best-seller!

Published in the Ladies' Home Journal!
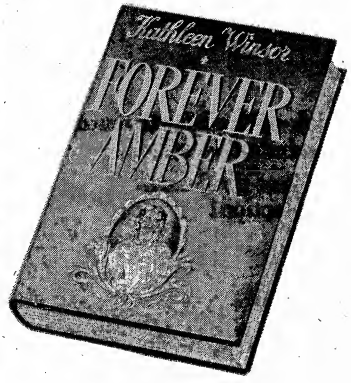
Best-seller from coast-to-coast!



Greatest of best-sellers!
Destined to be the greatest of boxoffice attractions!

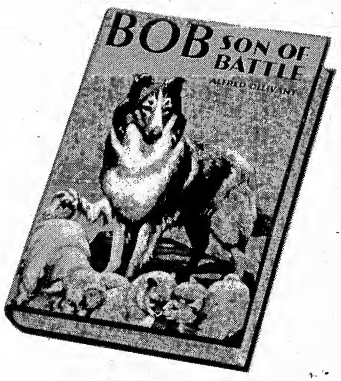
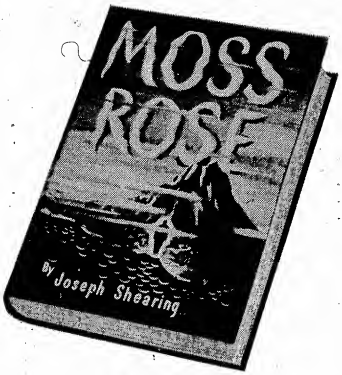
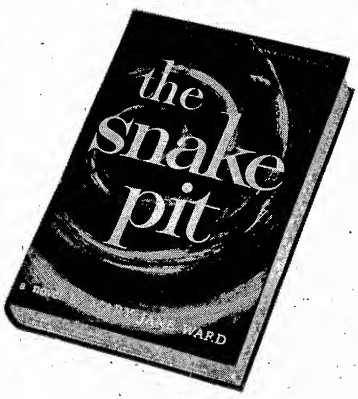
20th CENTURY-FOX



Published in dozens of editions!
An all-time best-seller!

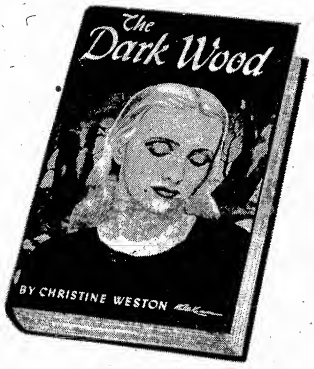


The greatest story by one of today's most popular authors!



A Book-of-the-Month feature in Reader's Digest!
A Book-of-the Month Club selection!

20th CENTURY-FOX



Literary Guild selection!
Serialized in the Ladies' Home Journal!
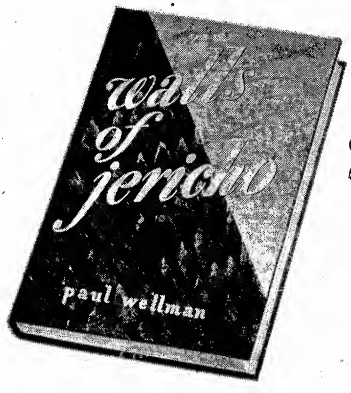
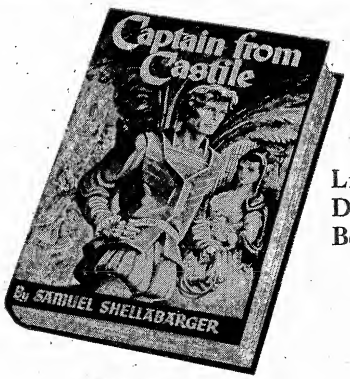
A top best-seller now!

A sensation! One of the most talked about novels in years!
Now in 3rd gigantic printing!
Climbing to the top!

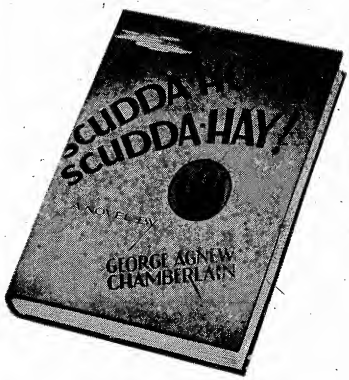


Chosen by the Literary Guild as its February selection!

20th CENTURY-FOX



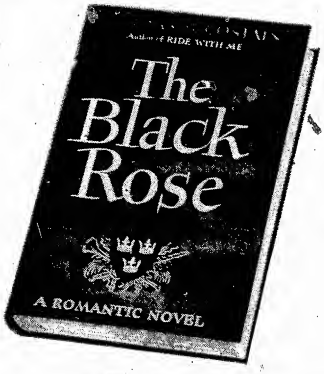
Literary Guild selection!
Dollar Book Club selection!
Best-seller sensation!



Book-of-the-Month in Readers' Digest!
Serialized in Country Gentleman!

Book-of-the-Month Club selection!
Right now high on the best-seller lists!

20th CENTURY-FOX



A Literary Guild selection!
A solid year on ALL best-seller lists!

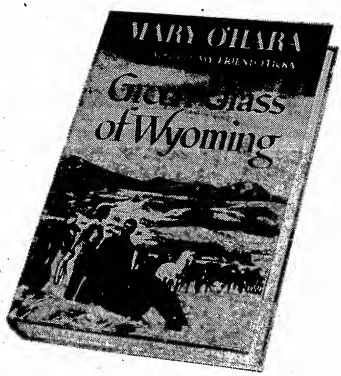
Dial Press best-seller!
Garden City best-seller!
Dollar Book Club best-seller!
Literary Guild Dividend selection!
Serialized in hundreds of newspapers!
Published in Liberty Magazine!



By the author of "My Friend Flicka"! "Thunderhead"! "Son of Flicka"!
Destined for the same boxoffice greatness!

20th CENTURY-FOX

THE BIGGEST FIGURE IN THE INDUSTRY!

THE BIGGEST FIGURE IN MUSICALS!

THE BIGGEST FIGURE IN ORIGINAL STORIES!

THE BIGGEST FIGURE IN BOXOFFICE HITS!

20th CENTURY-FOX

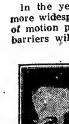
U. S. Films, A World Target Today, None-the-Less Welcome Competition

1947 Bound to See New Demands For Barriers of Pix From One Country To Another

By ERIC JOHNSTON
(President, Motion Picture Assn.)

Washington.

In the year ahead, we are certain to witness new and more widespread demands for barriers against the free flow of motion pictures from one country to another. The new barriers will take various forms. One may ask for an increase in quota restrictions; another may ask certain films be banned because they are alien to ideological views of the country they seek to enter; still a third proposed barrier may be in the form of increased import duties for revenue purposes only—or, perhaps, in anticipation of protecting a not-yet-born but prospective "home industry."



Eric Johnston

Whatever their form, singly or in combination, or whatever their purpose, it is quite obvious the target of them all at the moment is the American film because it alone reaches around the world and because, as of today, it enjoys a majority of playing time on the world's screens.

The American film industry, on the other hand, has no barriers to propose. It welcomes foreign productions. It is one of the few large industries in the world which believes in free trade for its product. It invites competition.

In this position, it is naturally vulnerable to the charge that it invites competition because it has no reason to fear competition in any form.

But the charge—emphatically—is not true. Informed producers—indeed, informed men and women walk of the motion picture industry—know that bigness is no armor-of-proof against well aimed arrows in any field which must, in finality, depend upon public favor for its support. There is only one earthly deity in the motion picture world—and that's the motion picture-going public.

That public cares very little who makes pictures as long as it likes them. In our industry, we invite competition because it is the stimulus to stepped-up effort; monopoly could make us moribund. Keen competition inspires us to rise a cut above our previous efforts.

We want a free screen—a screen as free as the press, the radio, the book; a screen free to explore and portray every aspect of human activity within the realm of good taste. We want a screen which will serve at once as a medium of delightful entertainment and as a rich instrument of enlightenment and information. We think that kind of screen—if universally accepted—would go a long way toward construction of an enduring world peace; we think it would go a long way toward lifting living standards through satisfaction of man's innate urge to be informed—to know. And once man knows what is possible of attainment, man usually endeavors to fulfill his new-found wants.

A free screen means a screen free from governmental censorship; it means a screen which governs itself, which guides itself by the dictates of good taste and thereafter suffers no confining shackles against realistic portrayal of all that life contains.

But the sacred right of freedom of expression for the screen everywhere is violated whenever and wherever the distribution of films is hedged in or circumscribed by insurmountable tariff barriers, exorbitant customs levies, unreasonable quota restrictions or any one of innumerable other devices which might be applied.

A free screen and free distribution of films, in my opinion, are almost inseparable.

But what are we going to do about it? It is not enough to preach, to plead or to exhort. It is not enough for us simply to deny the charge that because we are big we don't mind competition. It is not enough to say "this too will pass away, and after all, nobody can out-Hollywood Hollywood."

Too Much at Stake

There's too much at stake for us to sit on our hands or let our minds meander pleasantly away from a very real threat to the future of the world screen—to the film industry everywhere. The potential wrought for every producing company to share—is too big to permit it to be threatened; the responsibility of the American screen industry to the world industry and to the very institution of the film itself is too huge to be neglected. With our bigness, that responsibility is inescapably ours. We must accept the role of leadership.

In accepting that role, we must recognize whatever weaknesses we may have, honestly and completely, turn a friendly ear to constructive criticism, exercise every patience with thoughtless, heedless, pointless and picayune needling.

Sincere and honest criticism never hurt anything or anybody, certainly no one engaged in creative pursuit. The artist uses the ashes of the fire of criticism to scour his tools and begins to carve anew.

And this is "open season" on Hollywood.

Along with the innuendo that Hollywood is interested only in freedom for itself to sell abroad, come accusations from home and abroad that Hollywood has grown smug and slothful in its attitude. Hollywood is said to be thoroughly content to send inferior pictures to other countries, confident that it has no threatening competition. It is supposed to be in dire danger of losing markets because its films have not kept pace with the times. We are told that world audiences have been through bitter years and are thinking along serious lines. Such are the stories we get, such is the criticism we hear.

Let's concede that our American industry has made mistakes. Let's concede that, in some instances, we have overloaded the foreign market. Let's concede that we have sent some pictures abroad that never should have gone.

What we are saying is that there are many respects in which we need to improve. Of course, we do. What industry doesn't? Like all successful industries, we must constantly strive to turn out a better product if we are to continue to deserve the support of the world public.

World Market Events Emphasize Nationalistic Barriers to Yank Films

By NATHAN D. GOLDEN
(Consultant for Motion Pictures, Office of International Trade, U. S. Department of Commerce)

Two years ago, in the 39th Anniversary Number of VARIETY, I posed the question: "Will American distributors get an opportunity in a free world market to distribute their product?" An examination of this question at this time is appropriate and timely. Events which have transpired in world markets indicate that American film distributors will not have the good fortune of releasing their films freely without first having to meet nationalistic barriers imposed to help foster national industry.

During the last two years of world reconstruction one finds a tightening of legislation designed specifically to foster domestic motion picture industries. Not one can rightfully find fault with such a program, providing that in the process of such aid it is not aimed at foreign competitors or intended to eventually force foreign product from the screens of the country. Many foreign countries have instituted varied legislation which will cut down the showing of our American films within their borders, and an examination of some of these barriers which have come about in the last two years are now in order.

In Albania, not too important as a market, a State Film Monopoly has been established and no American films other than "pirated" films have been distributed since World War II started. In Argentina, a projected bill has been prepared for presentation in the Chamber of Deputies calling for a quota which will permit importing companies to bring in but 20% of the quantity of films brought in at present. Another provision of this proposed legislation will force all importing companies to produce films in Argentina or they may secure import rights for additional films beyond the quantity established under this proposed quota bill.

In Brazil a decree law of Jan. 24, 1946, contains certain nationalistic articles covering distribution and exhibition of motion pictures which are as follows: (1) A national short (or feature film) must be included in every theatre program. (2) A different Brazilian feature film must be shown in each theatre every four months. If no national feature film is available, the theatre is automatically exempted from this provision. (3) A censorship tax is imposed on each imported copy of a film where domestic produced copies are exempt. (4) Newsreel importers must purchase each year for export domestically produced newsreels the amount of 10% of the total footage of imported newsreels.

In British Malaya, effective March 17, 1946, a British film quota was established. This legislation represents a 10% British films screen quota applying to Singapore and the Malayan Union. In Bulgaria, a government monopoly created by legislation in October, 1946, forces all American companies to turn over their films to the monopoly for distribution under penalty of a fine and prison sentence for failure to comply. In Czechoslovakia, too, American films are distributed by the State Film Monopoly recently instituted in September, 1946. Under this agreement, the American film distributor representative in Czechoslovakia has the final say on bookings, and dollar remittances are made in New York for our share of rentals.

France and England

In France, on July 1, 1946, all restrictions on imports of feature films ended. In its place, however, a screen quota providing for the showing of French films for four weeks out of 13 in all theatres was put into effect. If it is shown during a two-year period that French films enjoy a greater average of playing time (five weeks), provisions of this agreement automatically reduce the reserved playing time to three weeks in 13, and if this five-week average is maintained in each quarter the entire screen quota will be abolished effective Jan. 1, following the expiration of such two-year period.

The Quota law of Great Britain is operative until March 31, 1948. This law has restrictive quotas which apply to distributors and exhibitors, providing both short and feature films, minimum requirements on labor costs of production for quota pictures, as well as provisions against blind and blockbooking. It also contains a monetary quota, a system of multiple-use credits based on labor costs of production which has assisted film distributors to meet their quota requirements under reduced production facilities resulting in loss of studio stages taken over by the government during the war. On Oct. 8, 1946, the British Board of Trade instructed three large theatre circuits to reserve screen time for six feature films from British independent producers for the next year. The result of this instruction will materially affect and curtail American play dates in these three circuits.

After lengthy negotiations between representatives of the principal producing countries and the Greek Ministry of National Economy, the latter issued a decision on June 22, 1946, establishing revised regulations for the importation of motion pictures and the payment of royalties during 1946-47 theatrical season, ending May 31, 1947. These regulations provided for the classification of feature motion pictures under two categories, (a) those imported on a consignment basis, and (b) those imported on an outright royalty basis. This regulation removed the restriction on the number of feature films (180), imported on a consignment basis for exhibition in Greece for an entire season. Today both importation and exhibition of feature films on consignment are completely free.

Films brought in on a royalty basis during 1946-47 have been increased from 60 to 80 features. Additional licenses may be issued to importers who can produce evidence that the pictures allotted to them have already been booked for exhibition during the current season. Film importers are required, under penalty of forfeiting their rights to exhibit and remit funds abroad, to deposit with the Bank of Greece

The full amount of the minimum guarantee in royalty payments must be deposited when the picture is released, not on importation, and the producers' share of the boxoffice receipts will be applied against this amount and remitted on application.

In June, 1946, a decision was reached by the Italian government, retroactive to Jan. 1, 1946, that foreign films would be subject to no import control during the calendar year 1946. Provided reciprocity of treatment is accorded Italian films by the exporting countries, the only official restriction (under an unofficial trade agreement between the Italian distributor (and exhibitor association, that 60 days' screen time per year is to be reserved for the showing of Italian films) on the distributors of foreign films in Italy is the requirement that all such films be sold against unremittable lire and deposited in a non-transferable account in an Italian bank authorized to handle foreign exchange. The revenues of the foreign countries can be used for certain specified motion picture activities within Italy, or for other purposes approved by the Ministry of Foreign Trade. Foreign companies which export Italian films are allowed free use of foreign exchange derived therefrom up to the amount of the expenses incurred in connection with the local production of the Italian films exported.

In September, 1946, the long controversy in the Netherlands between American motion picture distributors and the Bioscoop Bond, a film trade association, was ended. The agreement reached provides for membership in the Bond of the Motion Picture Export Assn. and, if so desired, the various major American companies, and an increase in the number of picture theatres in the Netherlands and nondiscriminatory treatment of American film companies in connection with the erection and ownership of Dutch theatres. For the year 1946-47 the board is recommending to the Netherlands government that approximately 60% in foreign exchange in dollars be reserved for the importation of American films from the total amount available for payment of all foreign films.

Spain's Elaborate Barriers

There are no major film trade barriers in Rumania except those relating to the transfer of earnings out of the country. Filmul Popular, while functioning as a private enterprise, might, because of its political support, become the foundation for a government monopoly. The MPEA is establishing distribution in Rumania.

Spain has probably the most elaborate set of barriers against foreign motion pictures than any country in Europe. Import licenses are required which are only issued to producers; the greater the cost of a Spanish film, the greater the number of rights granted to permit the Spanish producer to recoup his production costs by the sale of the rights to distributors of foreign films. A foreign film can be imported only if a "compensation contract" has been made for the exportation of the Spanish film from which the rights are derived. In practice, the Spanish producer enters into a fictitious form of contract to export the Spanish film at some stipulated price in foreign exchange.

Import rights are issued only to producers of Spanish films; they are not directly available to a third party. After the Spanish producer has an import validated, he makes an arrangement with a foreign producer, or his agent, on whatever terms agreed upon between them, whereby the Spanish producer transfers to the importer the "right of importation" by appropriate notification to the government. The amount to be paid to the Spanish producer for the right to import a foreign film varies from 175,000 to 225,000 paper pesetas, depending upon its category. (One paper peseta equals $0.091 U. S. currency.)

In addition, high import duties are required for feature film imports, which run from $3,000 to nearly $10,000. Also all dubbing must be done in Spain, for which a tax amounting to 20,000 paper pesetas per film and, or nearly $2,000. All in all, to bring into Spain a feature film of the first category for distribution American film distributors are obliged to spend more than $35,000.

Yugoslavia, too, has created a State Film Enterprise (monopoly) with exclusive right to import films from abroad and to export domestic films.

It is very evident from the above summary that American film distributors abroad have many hurdles to overcome. Whether they will overcome these legislative barriers, time and intelligence alone will supply the answer. The one big factor in our favor is that American film companies have a large accumulation of product from which they can choose their finest quality pictures for distribution in foreign markets—quality films that foreign film patrons are eager to see and are clamoring for. The next major question is whether artificial film legislation, designed to promote nationalistic film industries, can prevent quality films from reaching the screens of foreign countries. Such barriers would result in the loss of customs duties and taxes to those countries. A free world of free markets where free and ideals may be exchanged through the medium of motion pictures is the surest approach to an everlasting world peace.

Advice to Jokesmiths

Twenty years ago I sold this joke to the old Life Magazine:

DINER: Hey, waiter, there's a hair in my soup!

WAITER: One moment, sir, while I refer to my comic magazines file for an appropriate rejoinder.

For this I received $5. Four years later I sold the following joke to College Humor:

WORLD'S SHORTEST MYSTERY STORY

A shot rang out. The great detective fell dead. The end.

For this I received $5. So I talked things over with my wife and decided to get a job on the side. This necessitated leaving the comfortable home of my wife's family, moving to Hollywood, getting a job in a motion picture studio and building a home with a swimming pool. The ordeal was so trying I have not been able to sell a joke since.

My advice to a young joke writer is to talk things over with his wife. If you don't have a wife, talk things over with some other joke writer's wife. She'll be open to any proposition.

—Claude Binyon.

Defeat for the Virus Sinatra

Or a Triple-Threat Parlay From the Voice to the Torso to the Groaner

By H. ALLEN SMITH

Recognizing the cruelty of one child toward another and the general unhappiness of juveniles, I have refrained, up to now, from writing much of anything about my own children. Today, however, they are all but grown, and they can punch pretty well and know the uses of insult and thus are prepared for social intercourse on an adult plane. Moreover, the Sinatra plague has abated somewhat and I feel that I can think back on it with a small degree of objectivity.

H. Allen Smith

Back around '43 the daffiness hit my house and all but ripped it asunder. My daughter and her little group of girl friends took down with the murrain and stayed semi-conscious for months. When Frankie's voice came over the radio other members of the family were not permitted to speak, whisper, or use the sign language; no one was allowed to move around, scratch himself, or belch. I made the error once of uttering a disparaging remark about Frankie. I didn't say he was horrifying; I simply remarked that I didn't think he was particularly good looking. Five girls, including my daughter, quit speaking to me for two weeks.

It was enervating to me as it was to millions of other parents throughout the land. Yet of all those who suffered under this miasma, I believe I am the only one who by chance found a way out. In the midst of the pestilence we moved to Hollywood and put my daughter in a school at Buddy DeSylva's home town, Azusa. She could spend weekends with us in Hollywood.

Sinatra was then engaged in making a movie and broadcasting from the Coast. One day, with Marc Connelly, I attended a broadcast rehearsal and after that we went to the program itself. It was a weird experience and I made a ghastly error. At the conclusion of things I fought my way through the screaming kids and found George Evans, and got him to have Frankie autograph a picture for my daughter. I mailed the photograph to Azusa.

I should have known better. That picture sent her temperature to a new high, aggravating the malady to a point where its chief symptoms were loss of appetite and chronic trance.

Something had to be done about it.

A Ladd to the Rescue

I was having my shoes shined on the Paramount lot one afternoon when George Brown came along with a couple of ladies and introduced them. I was interested in one of them more than the other, for she was Sue Carol, wife of Alan Ladd. I knew that Alan Ladd was the No. 2 man in the affection of my daughter and her friends. He had been top man before Frankie came along and he was still up close in second place. I explained this state of affairs to Mrs. Ladd and made a deal with her.

The following weekend Nancy came in from Azusa and on Saturday morning I took her on a tour of the studio. She met a number of picture stars and was reasonably impressed, and grateful to me, and we went home early in the afternoon. Then I told her that I had to make a business call on a producer and she could go along; that she would get to see a different phase of Hollywood life. She asked me the name of the producer and I couldn't think of anything to say except Sistrom.

We drove out to the damned land of Lost Feliz, up Rufus Blair's street, and stopped in front of a house. As we walked up the sidewalk I saw Sue Carol open the front door. I took a few steps ahead, winked at Mrs. Ladd, and said, "Mrs. Sistrom, this is Nancy."

"Mrs. Sistrom" welcomed us and led us into a nice living room where we stood talking for a minute or two.

Then into the room came this guy. He had on nothing but a pair of trunks and sneakers. Nancy turned around and looked at him and grabbed her face with her hands and started making noises in her throat as though she had swallowed 15c worth of bubble gum.

I led her over to a chair and eased her into it. She hadn't taken her eyes off Mr. Ladd. It turned out that he is a shy sort of person, that he was as embarrassed as Nancy, that he didn't know what to say, what to talk about. He got into a chair opposite Nancy, keeping his eyes averted from her, and finally said, "Let's have a drink." I asked Nancy what she would like and she gurgled unintelligibly and I ordered a coke for her. Mrs. Ladd went to get the drinks.

We sat there in silence for a while, then Mr. Ladd and I started talking about motion pictures. Occasionally he would steal a glance at the cataleptic creature opposite him, then quickly look away. Mrs. Ladd and the drinks arrived. Mr. Ladd picked a glass off the tray, stood up, walked over to Miss Smith, held it out, and said:

"Here you are, Nancy."

She took it with a trembling hand. She looked into his face and summoned her voice. She said:

"I've got friends back in New York who're just gonna DIE when they hear this!"

Mr. Ladd retreated to his chair. Mrs. Ladd went upstairs and got the baby and brought it down. Nancy asked if she might touch it. Permission granted. Considerable more in the way of talk and then we decided to go. As we moved toward the door Mr. Ladd ducked into the dining room, got a photograph of himself, and wrote something on it for Nancy.

I led her by the arm back to the street and driving home she sat with a blank, staring look in her eyes. I took her up to the apartment. All she had to say to me, repeated over and over as though addressing God, was, "Oh, thank you! Thank you! Thank you!"

Her mother had to take her shopping for some clothes but it was an hour or so before her knees were steady enough for routine walking. She just sat and quoted the thing he had said to her.

"'Here you are Nancy.' 'Here you are Nancy.' That's what he said. To me. Mother, he said, 'Here you are Nancy.' He used my name. 'Here you are Nancy.' Oh, you don't realize what it means! You can't understand what has happened to me! Back home we always said the one thing we always wanted to see most of all in this life was Alan Ladd stripped to the waist. And mother, there he was! In the flesh 'Here you are Nancy.' 'Here you are Nancy.'"

I thought of calling Dr. Harry Cagney and having him operate but after a while she seemed to improve. That evening she completely forgot to tune in Sinatra. She was gone, gone into another world. Her report card for the following month was a fright. Her letters contained nothing but Alan Ladd talk.

Something had to be done about it.

The next weekend she was in town I took her again to Paramount. I escorted her to Lucey's and told her this was the place where her father sinned. Between Lucey's and the studio we met Buddy DeSylva and I introduced her to him. When we left him she said, vacantly, "Who's he?"

Then we went on the set of "Going My Way." Bing was there, garbed in cassock and Roman collar, looking 25 years old. He was off on the sidelines talking to some Waves. When he saw me he excused himself and came over and I introduced him to my daughter. He talked to her for half an hour. He sang a couple of little songs for her—songs out of the picture he was making. He asked her about her school. He asked her what songs she liked best and he sang another one for her. Then Leo McCarey called him back to work and he all but kissed Nancy goodbye.

She was stumbling when I got her away from that sound stage. She had locomotor ataxia with chills.

Outside I found a bench and eased her onto it.

"Oh!" she sighed. "Oh! Ohhhhhhhhh! Those blue eyes! And that Voice! Oh, thank you, thank you, thank you! Oh, daddy, I love him!"

"What about Frankie?"

"Oh, pooh! Oh, Bing, Bing, Bing!"

"What about Alan Ladd?"

"Bing, Bing, Bing!" she repeated.

I had killed off Sinatra and in the process I had given her the Alan Ladd shakes. Now I had killed off Ladd and she had the Crosby trembles. But that was all right. Paw sorta goes for Crosby himself.

IT HAPPENS ONLY IN THE MOVIES

By SIDNEY SKOLSKY

Hollywood.

THERE ARE MANY things that happen only in the movies. The heroine always manages to choose the correct man, and there are no bitter divorces. The correct man is always the romantic hero, as against the solid, substantial guy who's been loyal to the heroine while she's been trying to decide about the unreliable, charming leading man. This hero always winds up with the girl, while good old substantial gets a pat on the check and a condescending, "You're awfully sweet and I like you a lot, but I don't really love you."

Next take the little matter of lighting a cigaret. It never takes more than two matches to light any cigaret in the movies, and it doesn't matter if the hero and heroine are standing on a mountain top with a high wind blowing, or if they are out in the pouring rain. For that matter, you never see a cigaret burn out in pictures. They always stay a nice length. Look closely and you'll find that Humphrey Bogart is always throwing away practically full-length cigarets. And you never saw Cary Grant smoking a butt. No, you only see butts in pictures when a director can't think of a more original method of showing the passing of time.

* * *

NOW LOOK AT the movies about the theatre. The movies have their own version of show business. Fred Astaire or Judy Garland or Dick Haymes or Betty Grable are always working in a fourth-rate joint, trying to get on the big time, trying to make good. An agent catches their act, watches them do a song or dance, and then mutters, "Sorry, kids, but you're not ready for the Palace." It doesn't make any difference that Astaire has just done a terrific dance routine and that Haymes has sung some songs that the audience loved. No—the paying patrons are supposed to believe that Astaire, Garland, Haymes and Grable are very bad.

Then take the audiences that are shown in the pictures. They are always in evening clothes, and they applaud harder and longer than any genuine audience that you have been part of. And, as if this wasn't enough, many members of the audience stand up to applaud, a few of them shouting "Bravo! Bravo!" The Broadway theatrical producers would certainly love it if their audiences behaved in this manner.

* * *

IN THE MOVIES the heroine is always bringing guests up to her brownstone front flat. A little apartment that is larger and classier than anything on Park Ave. Then the heroine, who is generally a poor but virtuous secretary, goes into her kitchen to prepare a snack, and the kitchen turns out to be a sparkling gem of a thing, full of light and air and goodies. And, of course, there's a great view of the entire city from the windows. Then John Hodiak wanders into this kitchen, finds Lana Turner cooking the meal herself and he is so delighted that he spends the next reel there making love to her while the others wait patiently for the food in the other room. Then John Hodiak walks back to join the crowd without any telltale lipstick on him. Heroes and heroines never get mussed up, and heroines always look as pretty getting out of bed in the morning as they do at the party the night before.

* * *

THERE IS THE hero who never pays a restaurant tab or a taxi fare, and the heroine who can go shopping all day and never have to be concerned about the bill. But these are all minor, compared to the tried and true standard movie yarn about the bold and brazen movie hero who enters West Point, Annapolis, Oxford, the Army, the Navy, or the Marines, and spends all but the last reel making himself universally hated.

This hero is insulting to the superintendent's daughter, the colonel's ward, the admiral's daughter, or the football coach's niece—but the girls love him because he's obnoxious.

It's only the sergeant who hates him. Our hero has been handed every penalty in the book. He's about to be kicked out of the Air Corps, or the Army, or the Navy, or the Marines, or not allowed to play in the "big game."

But then in the last reel Errol Flynn stops them at the pass, Van Johnson shoots down all the Zeros, Robert Cummings makes the touchdown and Fred MacMurray realizes the Marines are the thing and is not going to try to get out. The hero has changed overnight. He has learned his lesson. He becomes modest where he used to be a braggart, and he learns how to take orders from his sergeant or coach, and the girl, who loved him all along, is proved right. All the lousy deeds he has done for reels are forgotten. One good act and you are no longer a heel—in the movies. Oh, the movies are really wonderful.

"LAYING OFF"

By J. C. NUGENT

You know one time I laid off in Hollywood between pictures so long that boredom became a tragedy. One afternoon I went to sleep on the beach between two large, fat tatooed women. I was between pictures but neither of them would give me a job. So I jumped in the ocean and looked at the mountains beyond and tried to get some of their California enthusiasm. For there within a few miles was the hot summer of the springs, the snow on Mount Baldy, the desert, the ocean, the city and the great world of make-believe which is Hollywood.

J. C. Nugent

But somehow beauty makes you lonely when you are idle. There is nothing but ennui in waiting for a telephone that never rings, or in being up for a picture that is later called off.

The beautiful days come and go but such is the ingratitude of the actor that he sees no beauty anywhere. He has but one medium through which he can enjoy existence and that is work; work in the studios, work in radio, work on the stage, work in the stock companies or tents or anywhere so long as he is going through what he laughingly calls the practice of his art.

It is not for money and it is not for fame—it is just a cure for idleness. It is just to be busy. The yearning for it becomes a positive disease.

At this time I was suffering from it acutely. I would awake in the morning in my rather handsome hotel suite and look with melancholy eyes at the squares of that infernal sunshine streaming relentlessly through the windows. For relief I would jump into the shower to dress, grab a taxi and go to the Lakeside Golf Club. It also was a beautiful place with a big mountain on one side of it shaped like a Haig & Haig pinch-bottle. After playing a few holes during which I sometimes hit the ball, I would return to the cool and shady dining room which was banked by a provocative bar. There the pinch-bottle was in more immediate evidence. It gave me an idea. In fact it gave me several of them. So I killed quite a few days between it and the golf but still the agony of idleness was so acute that there was no pleasure anywhere.

Then, as always, relief came most unexpectedly. Positive and joyful relief. Suddenly out of a clear sky I had an attack of gout. My foot swelled up till it became the size of my head when I was working. It meant a trip to the hospital. I don't think I was ever so happy. At last I had something definite to take up my mind. To those who have not enjoyed the gout, I may say that it is akin to the pain of drilling a nerve in a tooth magnified by a million. The noise of a bird chirpping a mile away gives an added thrill of pain. I didn't care now whether I ever got another picture or not. My whole ambition was to keep from screaming with ecstacy and trying to keep the foot in a pan of hot water, mingled with epsom salts. It also made me a very kind-hearted person. I forgave everybody whoever forgot to send for me for a part. I explained to the doctor that I had seen everything and could he slip me something to end it all while I was still very happy, and willing to call it a day. He gave me a little capsule—I think it is called secanal—he left a box of them by my bedside.

They enabled me to take some very interesting journeys.

Flash Back: 45 Years

At their magic touch, I was suddenly in a living room of a hotel suite in the Navarre Hotel, 37th and 7th Avenue in New York City. There were several of us around a large library table. The proprietor of the suite had invited us there and I felt honored to be amongst the guests. His name was Henry Lee. He wore a clerical collar and spoke in the grand manner. I remembered him distinctly as saying to his audience: "I shall endeavor to give you an impersonation of great men past and present. If you do not like them, the fault is either theirs or yours." He never thought it could be his. Anyhow he was at the same table and with him was Young Jim Corbett, Maurice Barrymore, Otis Harlin, Dave Montgomery, Lew Fields, Paul Armstrong, Bert Coote, George Fuller Golden, who was referred to by the others as "the big chief."

I got a glimpse of myself in a mirror over the mantelpiece. I was surprised to see that I was an apple-faced boy of somewhere in the twenties and had much curly hair. Old Joseph Murphy of "Kerry Gow" fame was also there. Also Sam Bernard.

Mr. Golden announced that Mr. Keith had sent word that he would like to meet a committee of the Order which was then known by the euphonius name of The White Rats. A committee consisting of George Fuller Golden, Henry Lee and James J. Corbett was sent over to Mr. Keith's hotel to confer with him. I insisted that they write down a memorandum of what they were going to ask for. It was for a meeting of a joint committee of the Managers and Vaudevillians organizations to agree on an equitable basic form of contract. Also to eliminate the commissions, also to abolish the black list. The committee left and after some hours returned. They were laughing and joking about having kidded Mr. Keith. They had not settled anything. I was very angry and indignant. Filled with the fire of the young patriot who is going to save the world and possibly re-write it, I arose and denounced them with sound eloquence. At first they were all stunned at my impudence in declaring to them that they had missed a great opportunity. But finally, De Wolf Hopper took my part. I had threatened to leave. He stopped me and said: "You must not leave here—there is a greater future for you than that."

Somehow the scene changed again. There were several dim nights and days during which I learned from the nurse's talk that I had taken more secanals than had been prescribed. I remember I refused to take anything more in the way of sleep-soothers, that it was two or three days before California and its surroundings came slowly back to me and incidentally the gout was gone and may I knock wood in saying that it has never returned, but the memory of that night has often returned and what it led to. It finally led to a constitution which declared even back in 1900, that no consideration of religion, politics, creed or color could be considered as being within the jurisdiction of the Order. That an actors' order should concern itself only with the relations between employer and employee.

It is rather sad to realize how far present organizations have strayed from the principles of their founders, because Equity, AFRA, the Screen Actors' Guild and even the Authors' League all sprang from the outgrowth of that little meeting in the Navarre Hotel on that far night some 45 years ago.

Jesse James Still Packing Them In

By W. A. S. DOUGLAS

Chicago.

I rode through St. Joseph, Mo., a few weeks ago and found that a young man with an idea has been cleaning up on it all summer and is still doing nice business showing folks through an old framehouse where 64 years ago, one of the nation's most infamous outlaws, Jesse James, was murdered by a member of his gang—for the $10,000 reward set on Jesse's head.

W. A. S. Douglas

A short time ago, the house—maybe shack is a better descriptive word—was being rented for $8 a month. Then along came George Miller, the man with the idea. Mr. Miller is in the automobile business—as well as in the grisly momento business—and so many tourists used to ask him where Jesse James was murdered that he came to the conclusion it would be a good idea to find out. He located the shack, bought it, put in a caretaker-guide, did some advertising along Highway 71, where he had set up the house after hauling it out of a St. Joseph back street, and then sat back to enjoy the fruits of his endeavor. About 600 people per week have been taking a peek at the place at 25c a head and Miller says business will be much better this coming summer when he plans to put in a Jesse James service station, a Jesse James hot-dog stand and a Jesse James miniature golf course in the field back of the shack.

Indications of the treat in store for the student of banditry in the '80's are carried by road signs as you approach the place of entertainment; right alongside is this legend:

"Stop! This is Jesse James' Home! See the Bullet Hole!"

So you stop, pay your quarter and go on in. The scene of this great American murder is a square, sparsely furnished room. The plaster walls are covered with scrawled names from every state in the union. The famous bullet hole is about a foot and a half above the head of an average man for Jesse was standing on a chair straightening a picture when he was bumped off. The hole is encased in glass to prevent souvenir-hunters from picking out adjacent pieces of plaster; about everything is nailed down to prevent its being carried off by the Jesse James enthusiasts.

In November, 1881, the great train robber and bandit came to the conclusion that further residence in Kansas City was too dangerous. In a covered wagon he moved his wife, his two children, a boy and a girl, his furniture and himself to St. Joseph where he rented the framehouse in which he met his death. He was accompanied by Charles Ford, for three years a member of the James train-robbing gang. In St. Joseph Jesse called himself Thomas Howard, and Charles Ford was known as Charles Johnson.

"Howard," during his five months residence in St. Joseph, became a popular member of cigar-store society where he posed as a man of fair means awaiting a chance to take up some land in the west. Nobody knew he was the sought-after bandit except Ford, and Ford planned to kill his chief and collect the reward. For this purpose he brought into the James entourage his younger brother, Bob.

The Fords' opportunity for murder came on the morning of April 3, 1882, when Jesse James came in from a walk, took off his coat and threw the belt containing his pistols on a table and sat down in a rocking chair—which is part of the present exhibit. He noticed that a picture on the wall hung awry and stepped up into another chair to straighten it. This was the chance for which the Fords had waited weeks; they, at last, were between the great desperado and his guns; both drew their pistols but Bob Ford shot first. The bullet went through the back of Jesse James' neck, emerged through his forehead and was embedded in the wall. The bandit fell backward, instantaneously killed. The murderers rushed out to inform the law and to collect the $10,000. Mrs. James and her two children, sensing what had come to pass, huddled together in the little back bedroom; they did not move until the sheriff and his men arrived.

When and if you visit the scene of the crime you can buy the life of Jesse James in ballad form; the name of the balladier has been lost but the lament is still with us; it begins:

Jesse James had a wife,
She's a mourner all her life,
And her little children, too, were brave;
It was a dirty little coward
Who shot poor Mr. Howard
And laid Jesse James in his grave."

Ghost of (Lily) Langtry, Texas

Jesse James is a ghost who is still paying off at the box-office but Langtry, Texas, is a sports ghost-town which old time scribblers, wracking their brains for copy in the dull seasons seem to have forgotten; from here came the finale of the first "Battle of the Century"—that of Carpentier and Dempsey was the second—when Judge Roy Bean, "Old Vinegaroo," slipped something over on the governments of two nations, the United States and Mexico.

Whenever a writing person sets down words about Langtry the subject is always Old Vinegaroo and his unrequited love for beautiful Lily Langtry, internationally known actress and the favorite of old King Edward VII of England. Roy Bean, a two-gun cowhand, set himself up as chief jurist of the Pecos Valley and for a quarter of a century was known for what he said he was—and was: "The Law West of the Pecos." He pasted weekly magazine pictures of Lily all over his courtroom, which was also his saloon, and built a wooden theatre for her when she wrote—only once, and in reply to scores of fervent love-letters—that she would make an appearance in the town he had named after her. But she never did come and Old Vinegaroo died without laying eyes on the woman he adored.

In the winter of 1895 gangling "Ruby Robert" Fitzsimmons—aspirant to the heavyweight championship of the world and later its holder after defeating Jim Corbett—had been matched by promoter Dan Stuart to fight "The Irish Adonis," Peter Maher, the winner to fight "Gentleman Jim." Owing to a rash of blue laws all over the country the from-time-to-time scheduled bout had been jumping from state to state until Stuart arrived in El Paso shortly before Christmas with "Ruby Robert" and his pet lion in tow and announced that the fight would positively take place "in the vicinity." Old Fitz posed for photographs, drank deeply with the reporters, made an all-round good fellow of himself, set up training quarters in Juarez, just across the Rio Grande in Mexico, but paraded daily through El Paso arrayed in high silk hat, frock coat and accompanied by his lion.

"The Irish Adonis" came into town a few days later, twitched his handle-bar moustache angrily at reporters and photographers, refused to pose shaking hands with Bob or the lion and departed at once for his own training quarters in Las Cruces, New Mexico, just over the Texas line.

The world was waiting for the fight; wires hummed from London, Paris, Berlin, and particularly from Dublin where Irishmen were already calling the Adonis the next champion and backing their conclusions with all the money they could gather together. But the anti-sports groups and certain religious groups were working hard on Gov. Culberson of Texas—and they succeeded. The Texas Rangers were mobilized in El Paso and trod on the heels of promoter Stuart, Ruby Robert and the lion; in New Mexico a sheriff's posse stood lynx-eyed around Peter Maher's quarters and so irritated the saturnine Irishman that he offered to fight the posse bare-fisted, two at a time.

Mexico followed the lead of Texas and barred the battle; the governor of Chihuahua sent a regiment of cavalry to Juarez to halt any assembly for the business of fisticuffs. It looked like no fight, time was a-wasting and it was the first days of February before Dan Stuart received a solution in the form of a telegram from "Old Vinegaroo," dispensing justice and bourbon in equally large doses at Langtry, Texas.

Said the judge—in substance:

"There's a large sandbar in the middle of the Rio Grande Canyon near my place. According to my view of the law this is neutral territory. Hold your fight there and tell Mexico and the United States to go to—."

Desperate Dan Stuart took up Roy Bean's suggestion but the gate was a fearful disappointment; there had been too much delay and too much shilly-shallying and people hadn't too much faith in Old Vinegaroo's interpretation of the law. Four hundred fans made the trip out of El Paso to Langtry on a special train on Feb. 14, 1896. These paying customers descended into the canyon, Old Vinegaroo collecting his counsel's fees from the first 50 tickets. About 150 cowboys rode over from the ranches and saw the fight free from the heights above the Rio Grande.

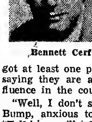
Inside of the first two minutes of the first "Battle of the Century" Bob Fitzsimmons kayoed Peter Maher.

BOOKS ARE SOLD IN BOOKSTORES!

Columnistic Puffs Fan Authors' Vanity But Leave Their Pocketbooks Becalmed

By BENNETT CERF

Anthony Bump, the debonair book publisher, and his partner, John Biddycumb, were locked in a private conference—angrily debating the proper odds on the Rose Bowl game—when Richardson, the head editor, who didn't believe in signs, barged into their room, and declared, "That fellow Marbury is here again. We'll have to make up our minds once and for all on his novel."



Bennett Cerf

"Oh dear," sighed Bump. "You know our spring list has too much junk on it already. What's the angle on this Marbury manuscript again?"

"It's one of those cafe society sagas," Richardson reminded him, "and boys, it is God-awful. The angle is that Marbury has been palsy-walsy with all the big columnists for years, and he swears they'll all go to town for him when the book is published. To make sure, he's got at least one paragraph about each of them in the book, saying they are absolutely wonderful, and the greatest influence in the country."

"Well, I don't suppose we can lose much on it," decided Bump, anxious to get back to the Rose Bowl discussion. "Tell him we'll take it if we can have 10% of the pic rights."

And so Marbury's little schnitzel, "The Tales of Callypigous Kate," was published in book form. The columnists crashed through nobly.

On his weekly broadcast, Mallory Modest exploded. "Swellodramatic! Stardustiefskish! Tolstoyriffic! Don't wait for the bookstores to open tomorrow; break into the windows!" (Several people who had tuned in late asked anxiously, "My God? Where's the earthquake? How many thousands were killed?")

Godfrey Garble gave "Callypigous Kate" a full-paragraph in boldface. Unfortunately, he got the names of the author and the book wrong, but his heart was in the right place. "As readers of this column knew last Wednesday," he concluded, "this book will not be on sale Dec. 25."

At a cocktail party for the critics, Randy Seagram devoted several minutes to Marbury's wife, and duly noted in his column, "Now I know where Marbury got his title. That boy has given us something to sink our teeth in."

Out-of-town byliners did their bit, too. A syndicated Hollywood gossip wrote: "Seven editions of Charlie Marbury's sensational bestseller, 'Callypigous Kate,' were sold out before publication date. Five studios are fighting for the film rights. One of them wants to test Marbury himself for the male lead. His agent is asking for two million down against 95% of the gross."

A fashion expert declared: "'Callypigous Kate' will revolutionize milady's silhouet next season. We understand the first edition of 800,000 copies was sold out in three hours." A drama newshawk informed his readers, "O'Neill, Shaw and Sherwood want to dramatize Charley Marbury's sensational new bestseller. The author, however, probably will decide to do it himself. The book is in its fourth million."

When "Callypigous Kate" had been mentioned at least twice in 114 different columns, Bump, the publisher, asked for a detailed report. It read as follows:

Advance sales: 2,319
Subsequent sales: 422
Returns: 14
Review copies: 407
Advertising placed: $3,744.50
Cocktail party: $2,900.00
Inquiries from Broadway producers: 0
Inquiries from Hollywood: 0

Bump shook his head sadly. "Maybe enough book-buyers don't read all those columns," he hazarded.

"And maybe," said his partner, "the public isn't quite as dumb as some of you boys think!"

A SALOON REPORTER'S ODE TO A MYSTIC SYMBOL

By LOUIS SOBOL

It's a dozen or more years since the Ha-Ha Club folded its tawdry wings and gave up the ghost. Most of us who were patroling the Broadway beat in those days felt that a friendly refuge vanished with the passing of this boistrous upstairs firetrap saloon. It was a place to sit around in after 3 in the morning—to sit and gab and flirt and grow melancholy or gay until the faint glimmer of dawn came creeping through the dirty back windows.

Louis Sobol

The show was never very elaborate at the Ha-Ha. There was a black-haired smoothie named Dan Healy, who tossed a wicked hoof (when he wasn't too tired) and a wickeder set of eulogistic adjectives; there was a thinnish, sad-faced glib-tongue named Jack White with a roguish sense of comedy values; there was a sawed-off, elfish-panned genius of travesty named Jerry Bergen; and there was the slim-legged, still pretty if not too youthful pixie—Lillian Fitzgerald.

There were, of course, others to embellish the show—some remained a few months—others a few weeks—still others a few days, and any number who lasted only a few hours. They all probably mattered in their own way, but to the columnist only the Messrs. Healy, White, Bergen and Miss Fitzgerald, the band and the waiters mattered. And even they didn't matter so much as the guests.

You could expect almost anything and anyone in the Ha-Ha Club. Your table neighbors were the President's son or a fugitive from a chain gang, a topflight public enemy or the No. 1 G-man. For an idea of the diversified patronage—get a load of some of these folks whom I encountered in the stuffy little upstairs saloon: Marlene Dietrich, Admiral Byrd, Al Jolson, Owney Madden, George Raft, Ernst Lubitsch, Mary Pickford, Lilyan Tashman, Harry Richman, Janet Gaynor, Ted Husing, Jimmy Durante, Sime Silverman, Walter Winchell, Russ Columbo, Abel Green, Bill Hearst, Jr., Gracie Allen, George Burns, Mark Hellinger, Sophie Tucker, Jack Dempsey, James Barton, Dudley Field Malone, Joe Friseo, Virginia Bruce, Norma Talmadge, Georgie Jessel, Heywood Broun, Sir Hubert Wilkins, Mack Sennett, Quentin Reynolds, Lillian Gish, Jack Pearl, Woolie Donahue and Swifty Morgan.

Because people we considered interesting foregathered at the Ha-Ha, some of the best stories that ever broke in this town came out of the club.

The routines of Healy, White, Bergen and Fitzgerald were by no means sedate or constructive. They were the gooflest patterings and banterings and carrying-ons that ever lifted the roof of a night spot. Banks closed, ruined investors jumped out of windows, neglected wives shot their husbands, a crazy man ran amok and took over control in Germany, the Japanese situation seemed threatening, the United States recognized the Soviet, Byrd went off on another of his vaguely important Antarctic cruises, eminent national figures were indicted for alleged income tax frauds, J. P. Morgan sat a midget on his knee, gang chiefs were either shot down or sent to the hoosegow, beer became legal, prohibition was swept out, NRA began to intrude into our daily lives, Dolfuss was fired upon, Tammany was defeated, the world became Mae West conscious—and a thousand and one events sizzled and buzzed around us—but came the early morning hours and we drifted into the Ha-Ha Club and all was right with the world again as Mister Bergen delivered a senatorial address in double talk, Mister White assumed the role of a tried and true successful songwriter, Mister Healy danced a few steps and poured out golden words in a fervent stream, introducing everybody present right down to the bus boy.

Miss Fitzgerald might be bitten in Lindy's—Mister Bergen drew a tattered American flag out of a hat, Mister White cut them to fit the kisser—these were the things that mattered at 3 o'clock or 4 o'clock or 5 o'clock in the morning and when dawn came sneaking through the creviees of the heavily curtained little window in the rear, you would slink out into the newborn daylight and wonder what it was all about.

Those Scofflaw 'Raids'

Occasionally there was the added thrill of a quiet raid. The Ha-Ha Club—let us face the cold truth bravely, chin-up—sold liquor brazenly and openly in defiance of the law. It was nice to stand up at the bar and drink the illicit booze while you wondered whether you should feel guilty or not for breaking the law. There would then enter on rare occasions two or three husky gentlemen who would confer with various gentlemen connected with the place. The word would go around. The Ha-Ha Club was being raided. This would call for considerable indignation from the patrons. But the Ha-Ha Club would go on as usual the following night. For that was the way in this town of ours and only a few clubs ever suffered any serious effects from raids.

It may appear to you that I am devoting a great deal of space to a defunct night club. I would feel very hurt if you did not understand that to me the Ha-Ha Club represented something far more important than a nightclub where a few clowns carried on and an orchestra played dance music until sunup. The Ha-Ha was during its comparatively brief reign one of the genuinely few meeting places of this much-too-large city. Here for want of something better, it was our clubhouse. We could go up there and brood in a corner or go gay on the floorside or wander into the back-room and steal an hour's nap. The world passed by in review here—so much of the world as we considered necessary to our scheme of things.

There were nights when we felt bitter at all mankind. We could go into the Ha-Ha and sneer at the patrons, the waiters and the performers—with no harm done. Sometimes the cream of human kindness gurgled through our sluggish veins. In the Ha-Ha Club we let out our beamings of good nature, our goodwill to men and love for all—let the checks fall where they might, to be signed or paid. Came time, too, when a fellow wanted to be alone—craved complete loneness. What better place than the Ha-Ha at 10:30 of an evening when not even all the waiters had arrived. For the Ha-Ha did not come into life until midnight.

You must not regard this as a belated obituary of an old dive. Actually this is a tear being shed for the passing of what was almost a symbol—although now that I settle back and think it over, I find much difficulty clearly defining just what it was the Ha-Ha Club symbolized.

Thar's Blackstone In Them Hills

(Early Ozark Legal Environment)

By JULIAN T. ABELES

(Special Copyright counsel to Loew's, 20th Century Fox Film and Universal Pictures)

In Little Rock. My first summer vacation from law school in the North. Mordecai, one of dad's colored drivers: "Say, Julian, I hears you been to law school. I'm in a terrible mess of trouble. About a year ago I bought a Sunday turnout from one of them walk-up-a-dight-and-save credit clothing outfits. They told me it would only cost $31.60, at a dollar a week. Well, they've collected a dollar for 53 straight weeks and I owes $42.83. So now they sues me and the case comes up before a J. P. tomorrow morning." I went to see my cousin, who was secretary to that illustrious U. S. Senator, Jeff Davis, whose every word was the code of the hills. He told me that regardless of what the plaintiff's attorney said, I should answer "Jeff Davis says 'taint so." The next morning plaintiff's attorney read page after page from Kirby's Arkansas Law Digest, the sum and substance of which was, that interest compounded at 25% on $31.60, plus sundry items of expense, less $53, left a balance of $42.83, for which plaintiff demanded judgment against Mordecai Isaiah Brown, plus costs, &c. The J. P. looked down at me, as I gulped out: "Jeff Davis says 'taint so." Plaintiff's attorney started bellowing that Kirby's Digest was the undisputed legal authority in the State. Thereupon he was fined $20 for contempt of court in disputing the word of Jeff Davis—and the case was dismissed with $4 costs to Mordecai.

He Lost His Hide Skinning a Yokel

A carnival came to town for two days. I was hired at $2 per to sell souvenirs, etc. Youth and ambition, I sold out. When I asked the big boy for my $4, he would only pay me four bits. When I summoned him before the J. P., he told how he had really paid me the $4, of which four bits was in currency and the balance in experience. "You see," he told the J. P., "I don't travel round with a regular hawkster. I would really have to pay him $2 a day and he would knock down about $2 a day more. Instead, when I comes to a town I hires a little yokel like that one, promises to pay him $2 a day, and only gives him four bits, and he's too dumb to knock down anything. But the boy can't complain, the $3.50 I charged him for the experience is the best $3.50 he will ever spend." The J. P. raised his eyebrows. "Well, son, what have you got to say to that; seems like you was paid your $4." I replied, "Yes, Your Honor, I was, and the $3.50 I spent for that experience was certainly worth it. I only knocked down $18 on this yeer, but just wait till the next carnival comes to town."

Clothes Don't Make a Man

The train to Heber Springs had one car, divided in three parts, white, colored and baggage. The farmers never had any baggage, so they were permitted two hogs in the baggage part without extra fare. One day the conductor was sick and I took over. At a signal I stopped the train. A farmer opened the baggage part, moved in two bedraggled looking kids, and took a seat in the white part. When I came to collect, he would only pay one fare, insisting that the two he put in the baggage part were hogs. When we arrived at Little Rock I had him pulled before the J. P., and told my story. When he persisted they were hogs, the J. P. wanted to know how I could be sure they were kids. I told him they had clothes on, whereupon the old farmer took a big chew of tobacco, got a head on the cuspidor, and between chaws burped: "Yup, I brought them up just like they was members of the family."

The Sheriff Deputizes a Twister

One day I went with the sheriff to bring in a moonshiner. When we approached his cabin he opened fire and yelped: "If you want me, your gonna have to take the cabin with me." We decided to return the next day with help. That night a twister took the cabin and it arrived down in the jail yard. Early next morning when I called at the jail to pick up the sheriff, the old moonshiner opened the cabin door, looked around in surprise, and gulped out: "You polecats never could a done it, if I wasn't such a sound sleeper."

Destry Rides Again in a Brooks' Uniform

Jackson was defending again. One of those Yankee outfits was suing an Arkansas company. Plaintiff had a battery of New York lawyers, approximately and witnesses, and cases of exhibits. For three weeks plaintiff put in its air-tight case, and Rhotan never said a word—just sat there, listless and bored, and from time to time looking towards the door. Was he waiting for a surprise witness for the defense? Then one afternoon in walked a character with a package under his arm. He put it on the counsel table in front of Rhotan and whispered in his ear. Everytime plaintiff's counsel tried to score a point, Rhotan would move the package up and down the table with a knowing look at the jury—to the utter disconcertion of his opponent. At last plaintiff's case was finished.

Rhotan rose and faced the jury, with the package in his hand. Slowly he took off the wrapping, and disolayed a Confederate uniform, as he spoke in a faltering voice, with tears rolling down his cheeks: "Men of the South, once before them Yankees came down here and our brave forefathers gave their life blood to send them back. Now I have my grandpappy's uniform that I found in an old trunk in the attic. See this Yankee bullet hole in the coat right over my grandpappy's heart. He gave his life then, as I am ready to give mine—now—to send them Yankees back across that Mason & Dixon line. Look up there and you'll see Robert E. Lee on his white charrver ready to lead us to battle against the Yankee horde. What say you soldiers of the Confederacy?"

The jury rose, as the foreman spoke, "We find for the defendant, and we further recommends that all them Yankees be tar-and-feathered and borne out of town on a rail."

Rhotan let the characer outside the courtroom. "You had me worried, what took you so long to get that uniform?" The character frowned. "What took me so long, you try and rake up a Confederate uniform. Had to get it from one of them state costume companies in New York, name of Brooks, and I did just what you said, fired a bullet right through the coat just where the heart would be."

Just then plaintiff's counsel walked out and turned to his assistant. "You know it's stranse that I should smell gun powder on that uniform, after all these years."

Durante in the Swim

Beverly Hills.

All of a sudden they tell me that I am a chartered member of the film colony. I'm in the swim. Which means this. Lou Clayton and Eddie Jackson talk me into buying a new house in the heart of Beverly Hills. So I ups to the guy that owns the joint and I buys it. Then they say I gotta have a swimming pool. After 50 years Durante has to have a swimming pool. For what, I asks them, I've been doing all right in a shower bath over at the Durante Club and before that I was doing my Saturday night splashing in our washtubs on Catherine Street.

So they keep twisting my arm until a hole is dug and filled with water and Durante has a swimming pool which I need about as much as I need a migraine headache. That Jackson and that Clayton tell me I am now in the swim and a member of the film colony.

So what happens. Instead of attending to my own business, all I do Saturday afternoons and all day Sunday is walk around the pool and if I see any guest standing still for a split second instead of thrashing around, I give him a knock on the head. Result is that on Mondays I'm so hoarse from shouting "Keep on movin'" that I can't rehearse my radio show.

But Jackson and Clayton keep on telling me that I'm happy. I'm a member of the film colony. I'm in. I'm also out 10 grand for the hole in my backyard that's filled with water and swimming guests. And believe me they swim. No stopping. That's Durante's orders. But I'm getting along alright.

I'm very happy. I like California. I like a lot of people I've met. We've got some grand people on that Metro lot, from Louis B. Mayer right down the line. Of course we have upsets, same here just the same as there are jerks in every city. Which reminds me of a story to show you what I mean.

I'm standing up at a snack bar the other night having my nightly glass of hot milk (honest) when one of the members of the group, must have been stewed, set loose under a rock—begins telling me what a powerful puncher he is. "Who did you ever fight," I ask this goon. "Well," he says, I battled Tony Canzoneri once." "And how did you come out?" I come back at him with this nostrils quivering. "First off," he says, "just as the bell rings, I come tearing out of my corner, let fly a hard overhand right for the head, step back a few paces, and dig both hands round the stomach, must back again, and let loose a terrific haymaker for the jaw." "And what did Canzoneri do?" I asks, astonishment written all over my face which is considerable, when the outlying districts of my nose are taken into consideration. "Why," says this guy, "THEN CANZONERI COMES OUT OF HIS CORNER." See what I mean?

—Jimmy Durante.

We Need an Experimental Theatre

By CHARLES O'BRIEN KENNEDY

Perhaps the most fascinating feature of experimentation is its unpredictableness as to result. It takes courage to throw one's lot into this arena of activity where the only weapons are brains and the prize is understanding. Consider the man in the laboratory peering through a glass, searching out a surer method for minimizing pain. He tries and fails and tries again, and then at last, perhaps, he succeeds. At all events he has contributed something toward human progress for, in the long run, employed intelligence never fails to turn the seemingly futile dreams of yesterday into the certainties of tomorrow.

In a convention-bound theatre continuous experiment is necessary to discover new mediums that will stir the risibilities and the deeper emotions. What an exciting life for those who engage in it and, to be pragmatical, what wonderful results have been reached! Although a financial failure, James A. Herne's experimental theatre in Boston served to revolutionize American playwriting, direction and acting, bringing a naturalism into our theatre that it had never known before.

For some years now the University of Washington in Seattle has sponsored The Penthouse theatre under the direction of Glenn Hughes. Here the plays are given in the middle of the room, encircled by the audience. A rare degree of naturalness is developed by the players, for they are never conscious of a proscenium arch or an auditorium. The venture has been highly profitable and time will decide its influence on our theatre as a whole. At any rate it may rouse the old gallies of tomorrow.

Another experiment which did major work in dispersing the cobwebs of the past was the Provincetown Players located in an old stable on McDougal street, New York. Here were brought to realization many visions of the theatre as it should be. The sorts and conditions of plays were produced—mostly American in authorship and theme. Many were successes, many were failures; but all were interesting.

The players were intelligent, educated, earnest people filled with the spirit of adventure, and their audience was of the highest order, including many Broadwayites who were beginning to doubt many of the accepted formulas. It is not extravagant to assert that many of the finest plays done on Broadway in recent years owe much to the influence of the Provincetown theatre. Certainly it helped many of the wiseacres to get rid of their inhibitions against highbrowism and to enjoy theatrical caviar as well as oatmeal.

It would seem that the time is ripe for another such theatre conducted by young, fresh minds whose enthusiasm is coupled with willingness to learn, together with older ones whose experience has not hardened into fixation.

Imagine an experimental theatre today with George Cram Cook, M. Eleanor Fitzgerald, Eugene O'Neill, Susan Glaspell, Edna St. Vincent Millay, Edna Kenton, Henry O'Neill, Thomas Mitchell, Margaret Wycherly, Harold McGee, Edgar Stehli, Charles Gilpin, Mary Morris, Ann Harding, Paul Robeson, Rose McClendon, Carlotta Monterey, Louis Wolheim, Abbie Mitchell, Jules Bledsoe, Frank Wilson, James Light, Theodore Dreiser, Sherwood Anderson, George Tobias, Luther Adler, Paul Green, Paidrie Colum, Robert Edmond Jones, Cleon Throckmorton, Mordecai Gorelick, Walter Abel, Helen Gahagan, Hutchins Hapgood, John Reed.

This is only a partial list of those who contributed their efforts to the Provincetown theatre. Here was a group of strong individuals with enough self-abnegation to fuse their efforts into collective results. Another such group is not impossible. People are being born every day and so are new ideas. All they need is a medium to set them free.

Powder Room

By LEONARD LOUIS LEVINSON

Hollywood.

Announcer: The scene is the Powder Room of the Shrine Auditorium, Los Angeles, on the night of the annual Academy Award banquet. At the moment, the ladies' lounge has only one occupant—a famous film star we'll call Claudia, who is using the public telephone.

Music: In, Up and Out.

Claudia: (Fading in)...Yes, I know I'm the hostess and it's wrong to run away from my seat...but I couldn't stand it a moment longer... I don't care what Myra and Rose think. When I invited them, I never dreamed that all three of us would be nominated for the same Academy Award... well, I never dreamed that they would... what's that... oh, I'm phoning from the powder room. No—to rehearse my speech ...Just in case I am the winner, you know. Now, be a dear, Roger, and the minute you find out who's won, phone me here—the number's Richmond 6131...what's going on now? ..Oh, Mr. Goldwyn's talking... Well, how long do you think it will be before you can find out?...In about five minutes?.. well, don't forget.

Sound: (Receiver click.)

Claudia: (To herself) Now, where was I? Oh, yes ..(reciting speech)... and so it is from the bottom of my heart of hearts that I thank all of you lovely people for this truly lovely tribute, not only for me, but for the entire cast of "Lovely Lady." I am just—

Sound: (Door opens and closes just before end of speech)

Myra: (Fading in) I am just seeing!

Claudia: Uh—why, Myra dear, what's wrong?

Myra: It was that autograph hound. Of all the clumsy—

Claudia: What did he do?

Myra: He looked at Hedy LaMarr, stepped on Gary Cooper's foot and spilled popcorn down my back. You'd think they'd stop selling that stuff in the lobby one night a year!

Claudia: (Cooing) How perfectly terrible!

Myra: I'd call it sabotage, if the word wasn't so corny.

Claudia: Oh, dear, and your favorite gown, too! It must be like losing an old friend.

Myra: (Coldly) Take it easy, Claudia, I just bought this dress

Claudia: So sorry—my mistake.

Myra: You wouldn't make so many mistakes, darling, if you'd only listen to your doctor and wear your glasses all the time...Oh, this dress! Where's the maid?

Claudia: She's out trying to get Rochester's autograph.

Myra: Tsk—tsk—does it show much?

Claudia: No, darling—on you it looks good.

Myra: Let me look in that mirror. (Pause.) Oh, you can hardly see it. Thank goodness it wasn't a Hershey bar... well, shall we go back in?

Claudia: Uh... in just a moment. What was happening when you left?

Myra: Mr. Goldwyn was talking.

Claudia: He was doing that when I left. Oh, this suspense is killing me!

Myra: Just think what the disappointment will do.

Claudia: You're wearing your sharp set of teeth tonight, aren't you, dear?

Myra: (Laughing it off) Did I tell you that Rose is sitting there, simply drooling at the Oscars?

Claudia: After her last picture! They should give her an Oscar with a straitjacket!

Myra: Now, Claudia, you've got to admit her characterization was perfect. Playing a nasty little cat is right up her alley.

Sound: (Door latch.)

Rose: (Off mike) Now remember, Billy, the moment they're ready to announce the winners, come right back and knock on the door. (Fading in) Oh, hello, darlings, whose reputation have you been shredding—as if I didn't know.

Claudia: Why, Rose, dear, Myra was just telling me how much she enjoyed your last picture.

Rose: Was I as bad as all that?

Myra: Oh no—why I think your acting is gradually improving.

Rose: Will you two sweet children excuse me while I hone my nails?

Myra: Do go ahead, darling, I think they're getting a little dull.

Myra: You seem so confident—name me one reason why you expect to win.

Rose: Well, I seem to remember an eight-minute scene in "Woman Against Woman" which I played entirely with my back to the audience.

Myra: I remember it, too. I thought then, "How clever of Rose to present her best angle to the camera."

Claudia: Oh, dear, I can't bear it. I'd go out for a breath of air now, only I know those fans and autograph hunters would tear me to pieces.

Myra: Oh, no, Claudia, they never bear a grudge very long.

Rose: I don't know, Myra—

Sound: (Knock on door.)

Rose: (Facing off) Well, they must be ready to announce the award.

Sound: (Door opens.)

Billy: (Off mike) Better hurry, dear, Mr. Goldwyn's stopped talking.

Rose: (Off mike) Thanks, Billy, we'll be right there.

Sound: (Door slams.)

Claudia: Oh, dear, I'm so excited. Suppose they ask me to sing. I didn't bring any music.

Rose: You brought your piano player, didn't you?

Myra: Is my makeup all right, girls?

Rose: Sure, Max Factor never did a better job. How's my dress in back?

Myra: Everything's rosy, Rosie.

Rose: (With a gulp) Well, here we go.

Myra: Come on.

Claudia: Just one second, girls. Let's all promise that no matter who wins, you two will be good losers.

Rose: Well, of all the—

Sound: (Telephone rings.)

Claudia: Oh, I'm sure that's Roger this time.

Sound (Telephone receiver off hook.)

Claudia: Roger, is that you? Did you find out? You did! Quick, tell me, who's the winner...Who?...Who? . Oh... (Tearfully) Thank you, Roger.

Sound: (Telephone receiver on hook.)

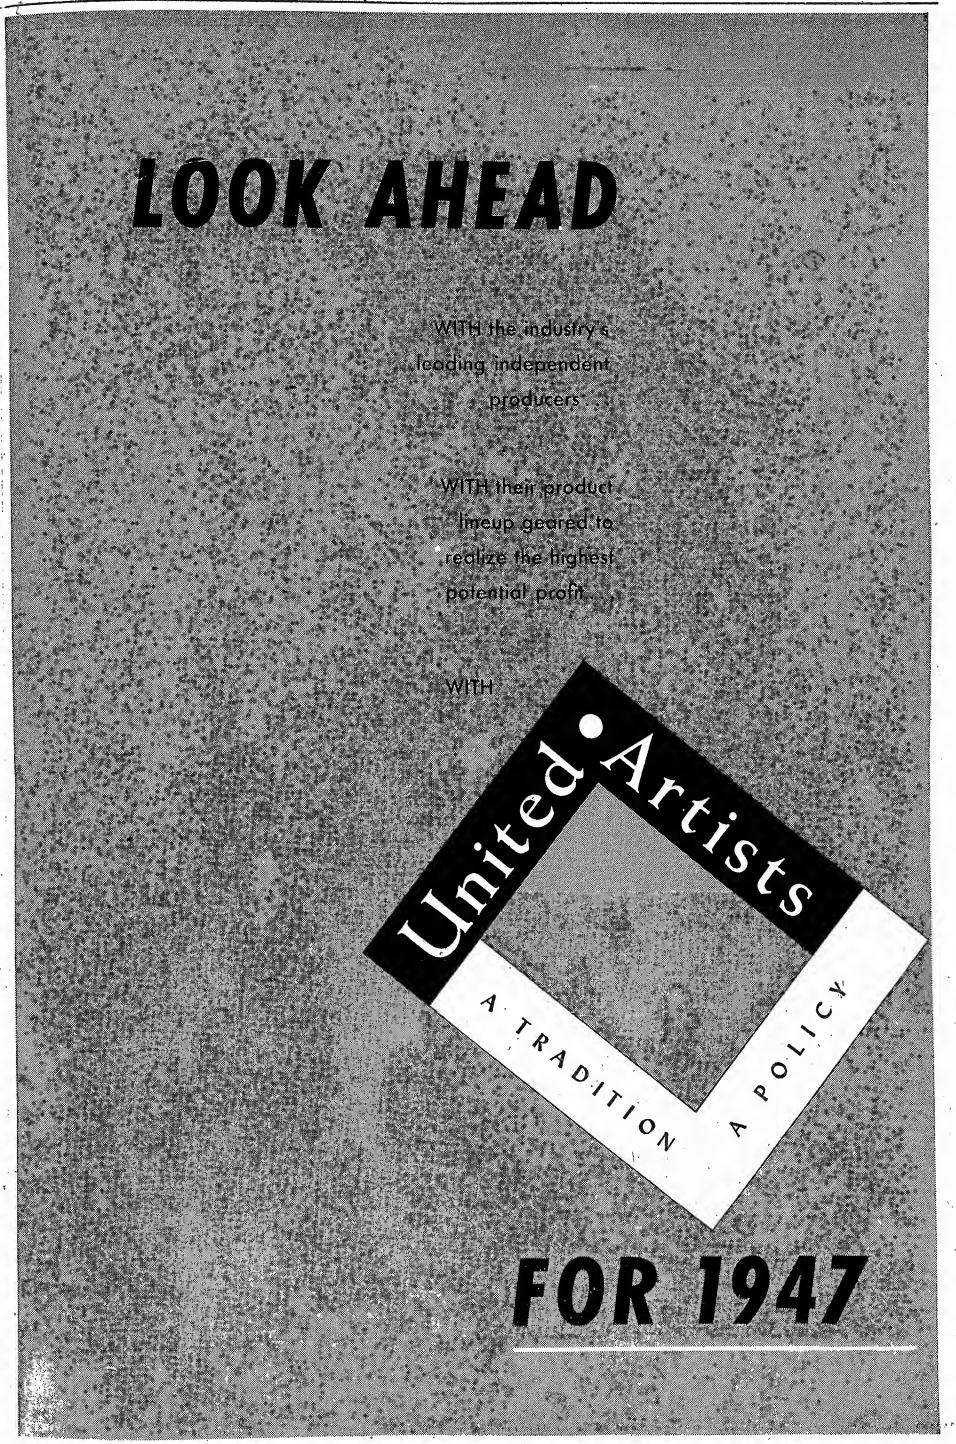
Myra: Who is it, Claudia?

Rose: Me?

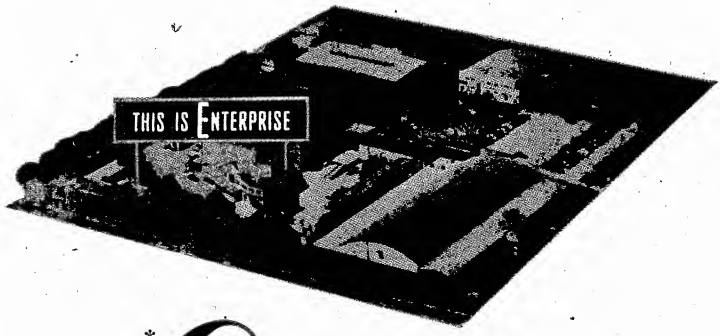
Myra: Me?

Claudia: None of us—this year's Academy Award for the best female star goes to—Lassie.

Orchestra: Music up full.



LOOK AHEAD
WITH the industry's leading independent producers
WITH their product lineup geared to realize the highest potential profit
WITH
United Artists
A TRADITION
A POLICY
FOR 1947



*Enterprise

*"An undertaking, especially one which involves activity, courage, energy • An important or daring project."

Webster

INGRID BERGMAN • CHARLES BOYER • JOHN GARFIELD • JOEL McCREA

GINGER ROGERS • NORMA SHEARER • BARBARA STANWYCK

RAMROD • ARCH OF TRIUMPH • THE OTHER LOVE

BURNING JOURNEY • SHE WALKS IN BEAUTY • WILD CALENDAR

DAVID LEWIS • LEWIS MILESTONE • HARRY SHERMAN

WOLFGANG REINHARDT • ANDRE DE TOTH • R. B. ROBERTS

ROBERT ROSSEN • ALFRED E. GREEN

It's SHOWMANSHIP to say

Hunt STROMBERG presents

Current:

HEDY LAMARR

"The Strange Woman"

co-starring

GEORGE SANDERS • LOUIS HAYWARD

Soon:

HEDY LAMARR

"DISHONORED LADY"

co-starring

DENNIS O'KEEFE • JOHN LODER

Filming:

"PERSONAL COLUMN"

co-starring

GEORGE SANDERS

LUCILLE BALL

CHARLES COBURN

RELEASED THROUGH UNITED ARTISTS

Current Release—
George Raft-Sylvia Sidney
MR. ACE
BENEDICT BOGEAUS
PRODUCTIONS
United Artists Releas
GENERAL SERVICE STUDIOS
HOME OF UNITED ARTISTS PRODUCERS
Forthcoming—
In Association With
*Casey Robinson
GREGORY PECK-JOAN BENNETT
"THE MACOMBER AFFAIR"*
ROBERT PRESTON

Seymour Nebenzal

producer of

currently in release

ROBERT CUMMINGS
in
THE CHASE
with
MICHELE MORGAN · STEVE COCHRAN
and
PETER LORRE
screenplay by Philip Yordan · directed by Arthur Ripley

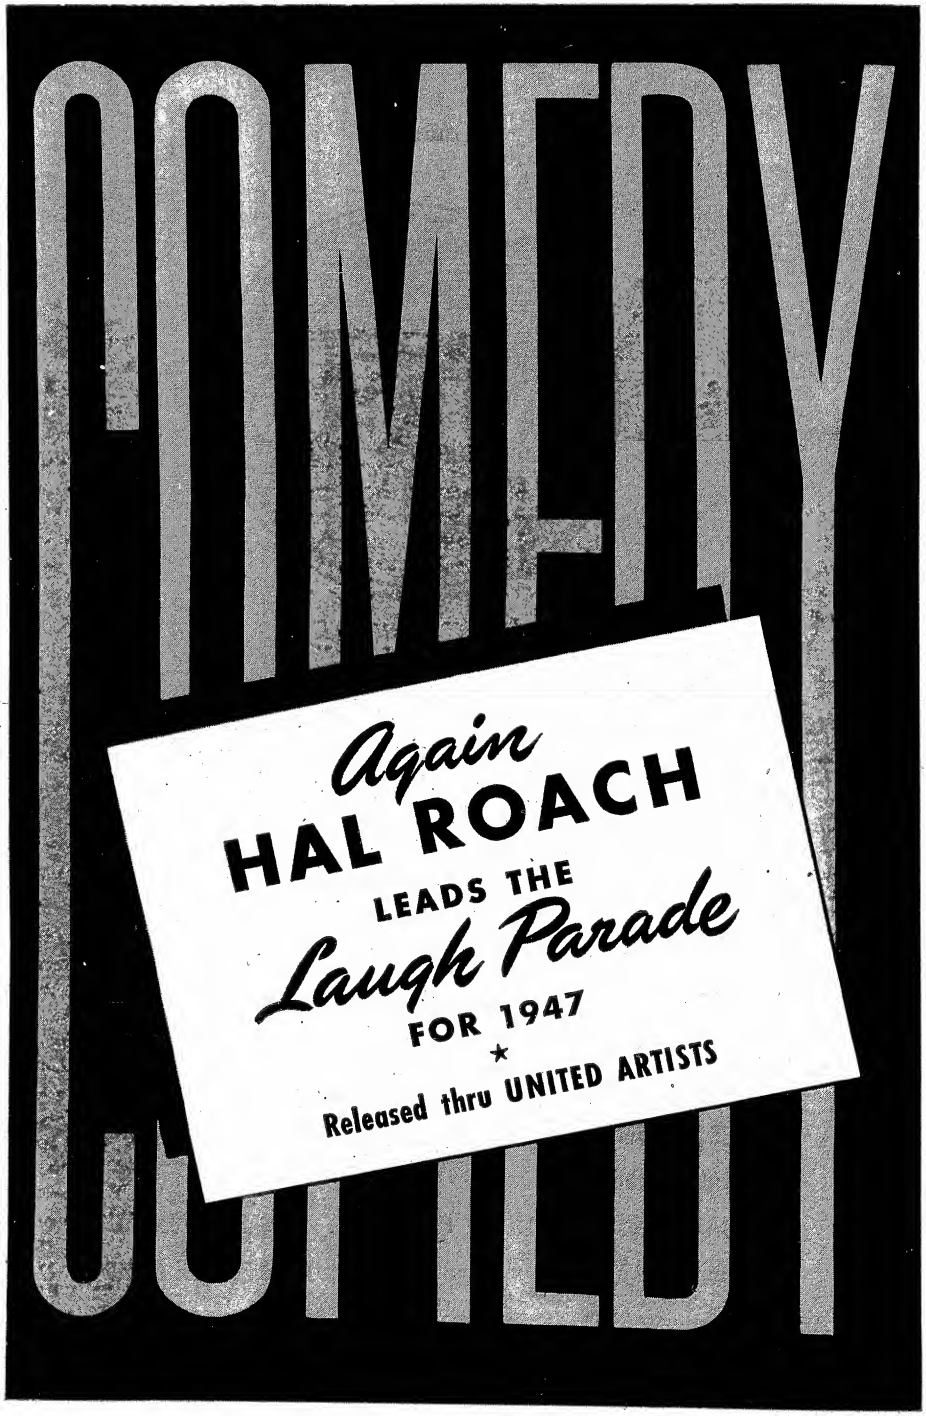
now shooting

"Heaven Only Knows"
ROBERT CUMMINGS
BRIAN DONLEVY
JORJA CURTRIGHT
HELEN WALKER

in preparation

"ATLANTIS"
starring
MARIE MONTEZ
and
JEAN PIERRE AUMONT

Nero Films are Released thru UA



COMEDY
Again
HAL ROACH
LEADS THE Laugh Parade
FOR 1947
★
Released thru UNITED ARTISTS

HARRY SHERMAN PICTURES, INC.

PRESENTS

"RAMROD"

FROM THE

SATURDAY EVENING POST STORY

BY

LUKE SHORT

STARRING

JOEL McCREA — VERONICA LAKE

DONALD CRISP — DON DE FORE

WITH

PRESTON FOSTER — ARLEEN WHELAN — CHARLIE RUGGLES

DIRECTED BY

ANDRE DE TOTH

PRODUCED BY

HARRY SHERMAN

FOR

ENTERPRISE PRODUCTIONS, INC.

GOLDEN PICTURES, Inc.

EDWARD A. GOLDEN ROBERT S. GOLDEN

IN PREPARATION:

"EDDIE AND THE ARCHANGEL MIKE"

BASED ON THE NOVEL BY

BARRY BENEFIELD

Thalia Productions, Inc.

presents

EDWARD G. ROBINSON

and

LON McCALLISTER

in

"THE RED HOUSE"

with

JUDITH ANDERSON • RORY CALHOUN • ALLENE ROBERTS • JULIE LONDON

Written for the Screen and Directed by

DELMER DAVES

From the Saturday Evening Post and Best-Seller
By George Agnew Chamberlain, Author of "Home in Indiana"

Produced by

SOL LESSER

JULES LEVEY

presents

"NEW ORLEANS"

A UNITED ARTISTS RELEASE FOR 1947

starring

ARTURO DE CORDOVA ☆ DOROTHY PATRICK

with MARJORIE LORD • IRENE RICH
JOHN ALEXANDER • RICHARD HAGEMAN
JACK LAMBERT • BERT CONWAY • JOAN BLAIR • JOHN CANADY

LOUIS ARMSTRONG and his band
and BILLIE HOLIDAY

WOODY HERMAN and his orchestra

Original New Orleans Ragtime Band
LOUIS ARMSTRONG • ZUTTY SINGLETON • BARNEY BIGARD • KID ORY
BUD SCOTT • RED CALLENDAR • CHARLIE BEAL and MEADE LUX LEWIS

Screen Play by Elliot Paul and Dick Irving Hyland • From an Original Story by Elliot Paul and Herbert J. Biberman

Associate Producer
HERBERT J. BIBERMAN

Produced by
JULES LEVEY

Directed by ARTHUR LUBIN

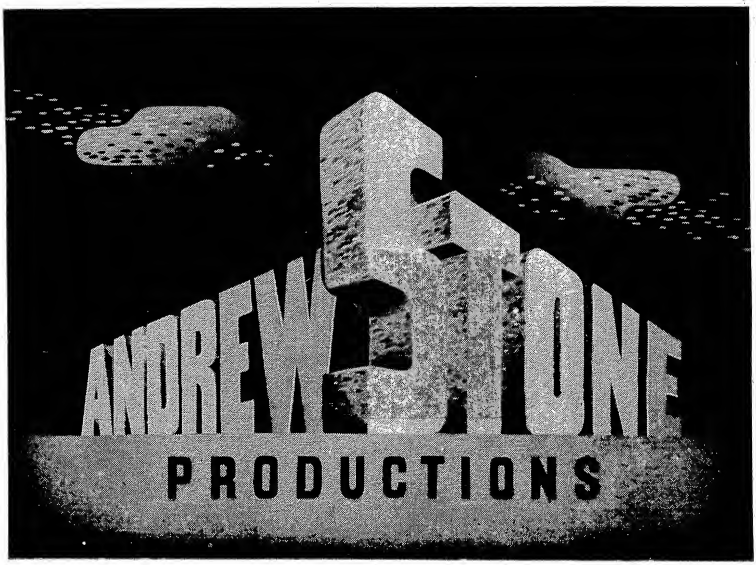
Edward Small
PRODUCTIONS, INC.

NOW through COLUMBIA PICTURES ..."THE RETURN OF MONTE CRISTO"

NOW through UNIVERSAL-INTERNATIONAL ..."TEMPTATION"

SOON through UNITED ARTISTS ..."THE LIFE OF RUDOLPH VALENTINO"



"CARNEGIE HALL"

THE GREATEST ENTERTAINMENT OF ALL THE YEARS

JUST COMPLETED BY

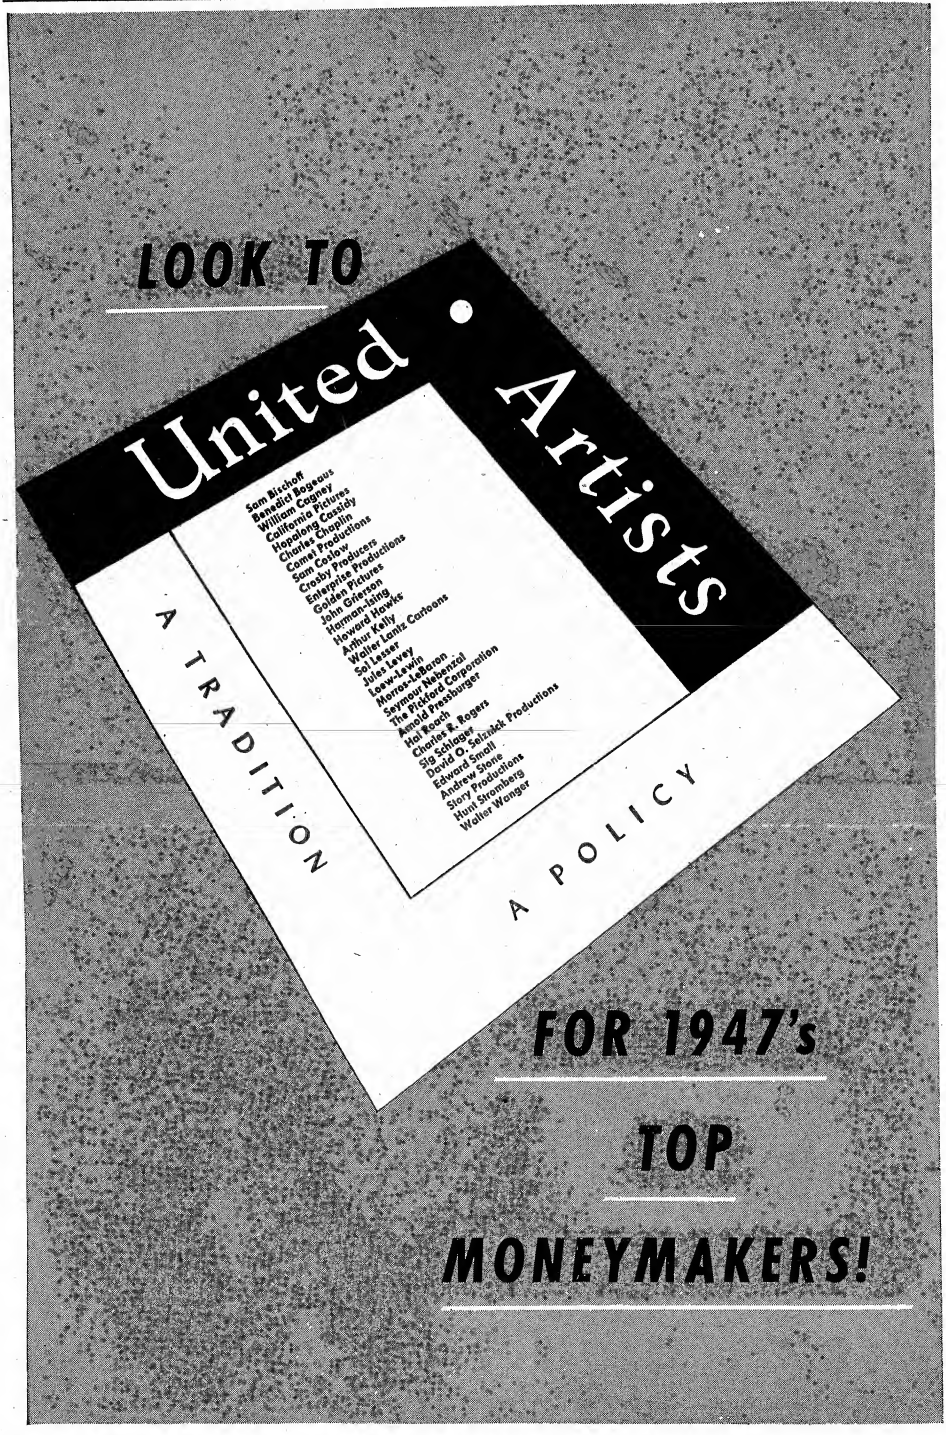
BORIS MORROS and WILLIAM LeBARON

★ ★ ★ ★

NOW IN PREPARATION

VICTOR HERBERT'S

"BABES IN TOYLAND"



LOOK TO
United • Artists
A TRADITION
A POLICY
Sam Bischoff
Benedict Bogeaus
William Cagney
California Pictures
Hopalong Cassidy
Charles Chaplin
Comet Productions
Sam Coslow
Crosby Productions
Enterprise Productions
Golden Pictures
John Grierson
Hunt Stromberg
Howard Hawks
Arthur Kelly
Walter Lantz Cartoons
Sol Lesser
Jules Levey
Loew-LeBaron
Monroe Greenthal
Seymour Nebenzal
The Pickford Corporation
Arnold Pressburger
Hal Roach
Charles R. Rogers
Selznick Productions
Sig Schlager
David O. Selznick
Edward Small
Andrew Stone
Story Productions
Hunt Stromberg
Walter Wanger
FOR 1947's
TOP
MONEYMAKERS!

Industry Studies Omitted Provisos

While industryites studied the new decree carefully to learn who were getting the judicial works and who weren't, second topmost consideration was what provisions had been omitted. What the court didn't do would have as much bearing on the inevitable appeal as what it did, trade circles knew. Government appeal, for instance, became inevitable when the three judges refused to include a cross-licensing ban.

Without theatre divorcement, D of J lawyers had told the court that only other proviso which would leave the Government satisfied with the decree would be an injunction restraining any of the Big Five from licensing product of other theatre-owning defendants in an affiliated theatre. Provision was meant to diminish the economic power of the Big Five and pave the way for successful indie competition in areas currently under the majors' control. Big Five fought the Government application bitterly, citing facts to prove that their theatres could not operate successfully on product of the parent company plus that of the Little Three and the minors.

Roadshows?

Omission of any exemption in price-fixing bans in favor of roadshows proved surprising to the trade. Government had withdrawn objections to an exception in favor of one roadshow yearly for each defendant and the court, during the hearings, had indicated no serious objection. Indie producers, unnamed in the suit, might skirt the restriction by handling roadshow distribution on their own, some legalites thought, since injunctive provisions only applied to defendants in the action. However, it was noted, there was nothing to prevent the Government from stepping in via a new proceeding against the claimed offender.

Also important was the court's refusal to outlaw exhib booking-buying combos. Several of the majors had filed briefs asking for clarification on the point and claiming that the restraining order should ban the defendants from dealing with such combines. Claim was made that if it was illegal for distribs to coordinate selling practices it was just as improper for exhibs to buy in combo. Court, apparently, felt that exhibs were not the monopolistic threat and that what was sauce for the goose wasn't for the gander.

One other omission occurred. Purposely, of course. Shorts, serials and newsreels were left out of the decree entirely. Sales regulatory provisos are careful to say features. That's one headache less for beleaguered sales forces.

'Duel' Roadshow

Continued from page 4

a triple damage suit by another distrib or exhib, he admitted, on basis of commercial injury sustained. However, he declared, that has been eliminated by a formula which has been worked out to cover it. He refused to divulge this plan as yet.

Explaining his assurance that there would be no Justice prosecution, Selznick rep said that admission price-fixing was not illegal per se, but had been ruled out because of the historical tieup of the defendants with price-fixing as an integral part of clearances. Since SRO doesn't own or operate theatres, has no bonds with other distribs and is historically free and clear of all illegal actions in any such regard, it was justifiably not bound to anti-price-fixing provisions of the decree.

Any possibility of a rapprochement between Selznick and United Artists, with which he split three weeks ago, was seen totally eliminated as a result of the decree's interpreted prohibition vs. roadshows. With UA a party to the anti-trust suit, distribution by Selznick through that company would rule out all possibility of his roadshowing "Duel."

Decree's Effect?

Continued from page 4

be heard before recess for the summer. Then, and lawyers on all sides agree on this, anything can happen with an upset one way or the other more likely than not. Matter of fact, canvass of many of the legal experts indicate that few think the decision sound—though at that point divergence in views begin.

Columbia's Copyright Angle

Recommendation will be made by (Schwartz) & Louis D. Frohlich, counsel for Columbia Pictures, to Harry Cohn, prexy, for a company appeal. Columbia will maintain before the nine judges that the decree is a pure and simple violation of existing copyright laws since it seeks to limit a person in the licensing of his copyright monopoly, Frohlich said. Columbia expects to bang away at this point because it feels that to be the chink in the decree's armor.

American Theatres Ass'n officials, obviously unhappy over the competitive bidding provisions, indicate that ATA, will file an appeal from the denial of its application for intervention. This would be a necessary step to secure to the theatre unit the right to be heard when the case comes up for argument.

Feeling that auction-bidding was back in full force was shared not only by ATA but other trade circles. Unofficial estimates place some 8,000 theatres in competitive areas subject to the bid method of selling. Since only one exhib in any area can force auction sales by submitting a bid for a film, it's more than probable, trade circles say, that almost all films in those areas will be sold by that method. There's always one disgruntled exhib, it's noted, who feels he has little to lose and much to gain by fishing in troubled waters.

Meanwhile, Paramount seemed hardest hit of the Big Five since an estimated 1,100 out of 1,500 of its theatres are partner-owned. Par, preparing for the evil day, has been purchasing its own stock in the market with the idea of buying off partners with common stock rather than cash. Other of the Big Five have pooh-poohed effect of partial divorcement in stockholder statements which point out that few important theatres are held that way.

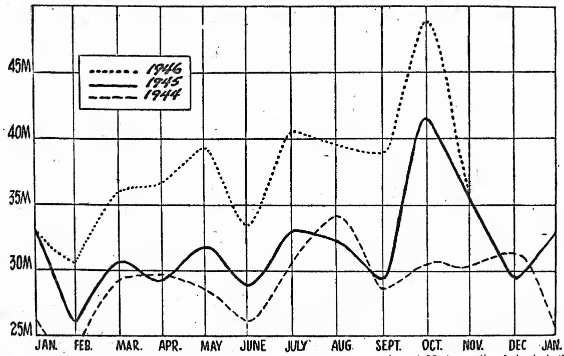
Nat'l Theatres' Study

Hollywood.

Charles P. Skouras and John Bertero have gone to New York to study the effect of the consent decree on circuit operations. But neither would comment until study had been made of court findings.

National Theatres division prexies expected to assemble in New York to huddle over decision with two NT Toppers.

Chart of 1944, 1945 and 1946 Amus. Taxes Reflects State of Show Biz



The amusement industry held a monthly $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 national gain during 1946 over the year before and lost that vital cushion in an almost vertical dip at the beginning of the fall. Telltale relationship between the years '46, '45 and '44 are charted by VARIETY through compilation of Federal amusement tax returns, generally considered the most accurate cardiograph of the industry's pulse. Moreover, the index is the best cross-sectional representation of film theatres throughout the country since exhibitors pay a fairly consistent 90% of all admission taxes.

While the 20% bite on films, the stage, niteries, circuses, sports and any other entertainment mounted to an absolute record of $48,597,428 in September, '46—ind[illegible] that the American public planked out the grand total of $243,000,000 to be amused during the month—October's take was $36,393,291, representing $1,700 less than that of October, 1945. In approximate figures, then, film patrons paid $220,000,000 in September of this year but a much slimmer $164,000,000 during the next 30 days.

Hardest hit, apparently, was the New York area with the Broadway district collections for October, $1,100,000 under the same month of '45. Some small part of this is accountable by the dizzy slump in nitery business which started tobogganing during the summer. But a drop as substantial as that of the mazda belt would necessarily draw its main skid from dipping film business.

Graph is valuable not only as an absolute barometer of amusement returns but also to chart the ebb and flow of patronage. Definite similarity in pattern is noticeable between 1945 and 1946, while 1944, at the height of the war, varies largely from its two successors. January through April show a fairly steady climb in patronage, and then a sharp dip through May when the outdoors first beckon.

September Ups Markedly

June registered an appreciable gain in returns followed by a gradual levelling off through July and August. Most sensational rise in both years was during September when, in each instance, b.o. takes mounted 35%. This gain is attributable to a number of factors, sales execs believe, most important of which is the hot weather windup and the public's return to the four-wall life. Added is the fact that film companies traditionally release some of their strongest product at the outset of the fall which acts as a booster to the normal rise.

Vertical October break in business which, in 1945, carried through November has sales toppers puzzled. Actually, they say, autumnal business until Thanksgiving should be the best of the year and fairly steady. Some trade circles believe that the parallel slumps may have arisen from general economic conditions. On this score, it's pointed out that the fall of '45 featured the slowdown of reconversion while that of '46 saw the Lewis blitz and other strikes hitting the nation's economy.

Through March, 1944, the tax rate was 10% on admissions and 5% on nitery checks. On April 1, 1944, the bite jumped to 20% on admissions and 30% on nitery tabs. On July 1, '44, the nitery nick dropped to 20%. Since the graph is used primarily to mark shifts in amusement business, the necessary arithmetic has been applied to keep the chart at a uniform 20% tax rate base. No compilation for the last two months of the year has been made because those figures are not yet available.

Salient Features of the New Federal Decree Regulating the Film Industry

PROVISIONS AGAINST THE EIGHT MAJORS:

1. Restraining the granting of a license in which minimum admission prices are fixed "either in writing or through a committee, or through arbitration" or in any other manner whatsoever.

2. From agreeing with each other or any other persons to maintain a system of clearance. Right to fix clearance is retained by defendants but not between theatres unless in substantial competition. Moreover, clearance must not be in excess of what is reasonably necessary to protect an exhibitor on a run granted. When a clearance provision is attacked as illegal, the burden is on the distributor to sustain its legality.

3. From continuing or making new franchises, formula deals or master agreements.

4. From block booking films. This ban goes into effect July 1, 1947. On any films not tradeshown, an exhibitor has the right to cancel 20%, right being exercisable within 10 days after an opportunity has been afforded to view the film.

5. Laying down the new system for selling films, effective July 1, 1947. The distributor must offer a license on each feature released in any competitive area to every theatre operator who desires to play the film on some run selected by the operator. However, run must be other than that of a theatre owned by the distributor.

Each license is to be granted solely on the merits and without discrimination in favor of affiliates, old customers or others.

When a run is desired, or is offered, upon terms excluding simultaneous playing by competing houses, distrib must follow this procedure. Distrib must notify all exhibs in area not less than 30 days in advance of date of bids, offering to license the films on one or more runs. The offer must state amount of flat rental as minimum for the license for specified playing time; time when pic will play; and availability and clearance, if any, which will be granted for each run.

Within 15 days of receiving this notice, any exhib in the competitive area may bid for the films, and his bid will state what run he desires and what he is willing to pay. Terms may be flat rental, percentage of gross, both, or any other form. Bid will also specify clearance exhib is willing to accept; time and days when exhib wants film; and any other offers exhib may care to make.

Distrib may reject all offers made, but in event of acceptance of any, license must be granted on run bid for to the highest responsible bidder, having a theatre of a size, location and equipment adequate to yield a reasonable return. Bid method need not be practiced in non-competitive areas or in competitive ones when no exhib makes an offer.

6. From arbitrarily refusing demand of exhib, who operates a theatre in competition with another theatre not owned by defendant, from granting run selected by exhib instead of licensing it to his competitor. Demand must be made by registered mail to company h.o.

PROVISIONS AGAINST THE BIG FIVE

7. From continuing pooling agreements between two or more exhibs normaly competitors. Ban extends to agreements restricting building of theatres and to leases of defendants' theatres to another defendant or to an operator in the same competitive area.

8. Partial divorcement clause: Requiring defendants who own more than 5% of a theatre but less than 95% to either buy out their partners, sell to them or dissolve through transfer to a third party. All relationships must be ended within two years. A defendant may buy out its partner provided it first secure judicial approval based on proof that such acquisition will not unduly restrain competition.

Each of Big Five must submit statement within six months detailing extent to which it has complied and manner proposes to comply. Similar reports are to be made quarterly, thereafter, until provisions have been fully carried out.

9. Restraining five majors from any theatre expansion except that provided in the previous paragraph.

10. Restraining the five from operating, booking or buying features for any of their theatres through any agent who is acting in a similar capacity for another.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

11. Decree is not to be construed in any way which would limit the defendants in their rights to play their own films in their own houses.

12. Film industry's arbitration system, currently administered by the American Arbitration Ass'n, is out. Existing awards and those made under pending proceedings will continue to be enforceable. Nix on system is not to preclude the parties or anyone else from setting up a reasonable system of arbitration.

13. Department of Justice may inspect companies' books and records for purpose of determining whether decree is being complied with. Information so obtained is to be confidential except when used in a legal proceeding.

14. Jurisdiction is retained to permit defendants or others to apply for modifications, constructions or directions.

15. Decree is stayed 60 days, and, if appealed, an additional 30 days to permit appellant to move before Supreme Court for further stay.

Pool Breakups Pocket Indies

With the decree clamping on a pooling ban, flock of hot court battles between indie circuit operators and Big Five members are predicted by industry legalites in which the three-judge statutory court will be asked to unscramble the omelet. Foreshadowing fast legal footwork is the fact that parties to pooling pacts, acting on the belief that such deals were legal, have put themselves in a position where one or the other is bound to be financially hurt by severing of the bonds. Further complicating the legal snarl are the supplementary pacts restricting theatre acquisitions in the agreed area unless first offered to the pool.

Such top chains as the Fabian, Randforce and Skouras in the New York State area have a number of deals with the RKO and Loew's circuits. Elsewhere through the country this practice is just as widespread. In some instances, while indie's house was allowed to deteriorate both in patronage, product and physical condition, newer affiliate theatre in which both parties shared profits, was built up as prime house in the town.

Tougher yet are those instances in which indie shut down his house entirely under agreement with affiliate. With town's patronage won over to affiliate theatre, simple breakup of pooling deal without financial compensation is going to mean a sizable hole in the indie's income.

My Hollywood Story

By MAURICE ZOLOTOW

Everybody has a Hollywood story. This is my Hollywood story, a grim unvarnished tale. It has nothing to do with the Cain plan, Darryl Zanuck, the strike of scenery painters, or the art of the motion picture. It recounts my dreary adventures for two weeks last April when I went to Los Angeles on my first visit, in search of material for a magazine profile on Fannie Brice and also for background data for a projected biography of Billy Rose to be phblished in the fall of 1947. Following the techuique of the great 18th century novelists, the tale is told by means of extracts from letters, in this case letters to the victim's wife.

* * *

The Chief, Saturday, April 6, 1946.

Dearest Charlotte:

I am now about an hour out of Chicago. The train is an opulent streamlined job. All the butter and sugar you want at meals. Myrtle met me in Chicago and we talked for two hours between trains. For lunch today I had an excellent creamed macaroni with ham au gratin, a lettuce and tomato salad, and vanilla custard for dessert. A few minutes after lunch, I had a disturbing sensation. A slight pain on the right side of my mouth. I hope it isn't a toothache. No, it couldn't be, considering that I have just had two months of dental work at Dr. Gruber's and spent over $200 and my mouth is reeking with inlays, fillings, and two golden caps. No it can't be that...

Love and kisses,
Maurice.

* * *

Las Vegas, Nevada.

(Postcard)

Darling:

The train is pausing at Las Vegas, the celebrated gambling town. The sun is very hot. The toothache becomes more and more unbearable. I think I shall bring suit against Dr. Gruber for malpractice. Regards to everyone.

Love,
Maurice.

* * *

Western Union, Hollywood, Calif., April 8.

Charlotte Zolotow, New York City:

Arrived safely. Two publicity boys met me at station and am getting right down to work. Shall have to see a dentist as soon as possible. Am going quietly mad.

Love,
Maurice.

* * *

Hollywood-Knickerbocker Hotel, April 9.

Dearest Love:

...so you can see the trip out here was not too boring, except for the pain boring into my upper right molar (I think I have pretty well identified the villain). It was a sunny morning when I arrived in Los Angeles, and Milt Samuel and Chet Brouwer, who are connected with the Young & Rubicam Agency, met me at the station and helped me carry my bags to Milt's car, and we drove to the hotel, where I have a nice sunny room. Sun, sun, sun—that's all you get around here. It was hot and I was sweating all over. We went to the Brown Derby on Vine Street for lunch and various notables, whose notability was highly dubious, at least to me, were pointed out. As we were leaving, I noticed a man and a woman at a nearby booth. They were drinking large glasses of some colorless fluid. I said to Milt, "I never saw people smacking their lips over water like that before." "That is not water," he said, "that is gin." "What a curious beverage to be drinking at this time of the day," I said, "and straight, too." "Oh." he said, looking at me in a penetrating way, "lots of folks around here drink gin—and STRAIGHT too." The way he said it was as if I had been casting an aspersion on somebody or something. I apologized. He said it was all right

Au revoir,
M.

* * *

Darling:

...so, after that, I drove out to the Universal "lot," where I had a nice interview with Mark Hellinger, who recalled many funny anecdotes about Billy Rose. Hellinger was drinking this colorless fluid. I'm not sure that it wasn't water but everytime he imbibed some he stiffened slightly and then shivered. Milt Samuel took me to the Farmer's Market for lunch. The pain in my mouth was now excruciating and I begged him to find me a dentist. He stopped the car and went into a booth and came out smiling. "I got you an appointment at 2.30," he grinned, "but I had to lie and tell the dentist you were a writer on the Fannie Brice program because he is a great admirer of Miss Brice." The dentist took five X-rays and finally told me that there were THREE teeth which were diseased. He was not sure which one specifically was causing the pain and he only had time to operate on one tooth as his anteroom was choked with patients and besides he was leaving for Palm Springs the following day for a week's vacation. He remarked that he enjoyed the jokes on the Fannie Brice program and I must be an awfully clever guy to think of such jokes. Finally he decided to remove an old gold crown on the upper jaw. He found a decayed cavity there. He hacked away eroded bits of tooth and then he put in a temporary filling which he said might last a week, or even two, if I walked carefully and didn't chew on that side. "It should hold you till you get back to New York," he said, "but if it doesn't here's the phone number of a dentist who's handling my patients while I'm in Palm Springs"

The pain was blazing fiercely as I took a taxi over to Warner Bros., where I was to meet Alex Gottlieb, the producer, and the fiance of Polly Rose. Billy's sister. Leo Guild, of Warners' publicity department, took me on a tour of the sets and I watched them setting up lights for a scene of "Life With Father." Russel Crouse was looking things over and we greeted each other heartily. Crouse showed me an empty space in his mouth, he just had a tooth extracted that morning. "Had quite a time finding me a dentist," he remarked proudly. The dentist, incidentally, had apparently picked the wrong tooth of my three possibilities, as my right jaw began throbbing violently again after I left Warners and went to...

Painfully,
Maurice.

* * *

Beverly Hills Hotel, Monday, April 15.

Dear Charlotte:

Checked out of the Holly-Knickerbocker Hotel, where they only allowed me to stay five days, and I decided to move here. My room wasn't ready so my luggage was left sitting in the lobby and I went off to interview Polly Rose, who was playing tennis at the hotel's tennis courts. It was hot, midsummer heat...When I got back to the hotel at 5.30, I found I'd been assigned to a room. In the dressing room closet I noticed a rate card tacked on a wall and to my horror I saw the rent was $14.50 a day and it wasn't on an expense account. I said nothing, just feeling crushed. The room was one of those fake "suites"—really a large single but furnished as if it was a double, and one part of it had French windows giving out on a small bit of pavement with two deckchairs, fenced in by a small paling fence. (I too, became like the fence—pale—as the whole thing took shape in my mind.) The "suite" was on the ground floor, convenient to all the autos pulling in and chauffeurs arguing with doormen. Fortunately, I was too busy concentrating on the pain from my three teeth to worry about the high rent. I then bathed and dressed. I have been wearing the same pair of shorts since Thursday. On Thursday I had given

(Continued on page 71)

J. L. Warner Returns 16th

Jack L. Warner is slated to return from his holiday trip to France and Switzerland Jan. 16. He'll stay at the homeoffice a week before heading back to the Coast.

Annual meet of Warners stockholders, meanwhile, has been set for Feb. 18 in Wilmington, Del. Members of the directorate whose terms expire in 1947 include Samuel Carlisle, Stanleigh P. Friedman, Charles B. Guggenheimer, Samuel Schneider and Morris Wolf.

Keenan Key Man In H'wood Labor Peace Proposals

Hollywood.

Huddles aimed at bringing labor peace to Hollywood are currently being staged in the east between Joseph Keenan and International prexies of the Carpenters, Painters and Electrical Workers. Keenan, who has offer of post as arbitration chief for Hollywood labor, has been working to get International heads together on an arbitration agreement ever since his return east last November.

Indications of a good chance for peace being effected within a short time is fact that James Skelton, business agent of the Carpenters' Hollywood local, was called to Indianapolis for huddles with William Hutcheson, International prexy of the Brotherhood of Carpenter Workers, last week. Believed sessions are result of Keenan's groundwork for peace.

Others figuring in eastern discussions are Richard Walsh, head of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, and L. P. Lindelof, Painters' chieftain. If the Carpenters' Union and the IA agree on the set erection award as made in the American Federation of Labor directive of Dec. 20, 1945, and okay arbitration plan for handling future jurisdictional disputes, a big step toward film labor peace will have been made.

Principal stumbling block still remaining would be disposition of outlaw officers of the Film Technicians' Union, which has ordered members to support the strike despite International orders to the contrary. IA has been firm in stand that it has right to designate officers who defy the International, and is not likely to back down from that position.

Stand of the Conference of Studio Unions that its members will not return to work unless arbitration machinery is set up and contracts are signed, could easily be met by studios if the Keenan peace moves in the east are fruitful. Possible block is CSU's declaration that all workers currently respecting picket lines must be reinstated by studios without discrimination. All other musicians come under this stand, making for not too easy a solution.

BUCHMAN SLATED FOR OWN RELEASE VIA UA

When Sidney Buchman's contract with Columbia end he will sign on as an indie producer with United Artists. Thus the four indie outfits who had originally planned to join forces with UA under the "Quality Pictures" banner will have gone over to that company.

Howard Hawks, Edward Small and Story Productions, the recently-created Hal Horne-Armand Deutsch group, already are set to release through UA distribution channels.

Katzman Sets Budget Of $4,000,000 for 1947

Hollywood.

Budget of $4,000,000 has been set by Sam Katzman for his Esskay Pictures unit releasing through Columbia for 1947.

Ten films will be made, comprised of six features and four serials.

Puppetoons Unshuttered

Hollywood.

George Pal resumed production of Puppetoons for Paramount release last week.

After shuttering for eight weeks, "Tubby the Tuba," "Date With Duke" and "Rhapsody" were resumed in production stages, while special sequence for "Variety Girl" went into work this week.

Those Revolving Hips

Production numbers in musical pictures are unfolding too many tossing torsos. It's no good. It's more than that. It means the stagers of dancers are coasting. It's also vulgar, reflecting credit on neither the dance director, picture director, producer nor studio.

As far as a dance director is concerned any broad with a nervous broadside is the easy way out for him. A good rhythm number takes thought, time and skill. There's another difference the dance directors are ignoring. That is when a girl dancer she stays a girl. When she's told to heave those haunches she becomes a broad, a dame.

What's pretty about revolving hips and walking bumps? And in picture after picture. The studio spends a fortune on a set, costumes and color—then the dance director parades a line of undulating dames before the camera. Maybe he's fooling somebody but not himself. He knows what he's doing. Another thing, taking the easy way can lead to trouble because these choristers are doing a cooch no matter the effort to disguise it. It's a throwback to the burlesque idea of a chorus number and is being 'way overdone. A simple time-step is almost a novelty.

Stagers of dances on the Coast come east to see the shows. They see Astaire. They know what's going on. What can be done. But good rhythm ,or ballet, or the combination of tap and ballet, means work, lots of work—and ideas. Nothing easy about that. Yet the dance director adds to his own prestige as well as that of his picture, its producer and studio when he whips an outstanding routine into shape. Your modern picture audience understands and appreciates the breaks, stops and syncopation of a rhythm number. It's too bad the studios don't insist on more of 'em. But that's the hard way.

Dance directors can remember this—a break in a dance routine breaks clean, cleaner than the inference in revolving hips and walking bumps. Standing still or moving a cooch is a cooch. The nation's screen is no place for it.

A Call for Helicopters In the Theatre

By H. I. PHILLIPS

VARIETY,
The Voice of Amusement,
Gents:

You invited me to do a piece for the Anniversary Number on the theatre but I have not seen a show in several years, due to the fact I always attend the openings.

Now and then I miss an opening and go to the theatre on other nights, but the audiences are just as bad, or almost so, and the only way to see and enjoy a play in New York is from individual helicopters, and wearing a new type of helmet which excludes most of the sound and shuts off the view of everybody except the actors.

As I was saying, I have not seen a single play but I have been in a position to review the queerest collection of hats, furs, hair arrangements, ears, makeups, necks, teeth, heads and torsos in existence, and to give a critical opinion on the manner of people who must have at some time been either pickets, professional strike-breakers or both.

During my entire time in the theatre the past few seasons nobody has either been standing in front of me or asking me to get up so they can do so. On a couple of occasions I saw a little of the play act and how's about giving serious customers a break by staging the last act first on alternate nights or something? During the 1945 season, I thought, as a critic, that there was some improvement in the way our best peepul barged into their seats too late to get the hang of the main event, but this year their barging technique suffered a marked drop, causing me to ask in wild exasperation, "Why do these theatre constables and if so, is it due to late eating, trouble getting taxicabs or a determination to annoy anybody who likes to see a play begin?"

I have talked with many cooks, maids and butlers, thinking that perhaps it was their fault that so many New Yorkers never get to the French pastry before 8:30 p. m., but the unanimous reaction was a horse-laugh and a cry of "We could get to the vitals to the theatre as early as the people who just eat plain food and take one slug of liquor with the pie, but they won't think of letting us start serving dinner until they know the theatre to which they are going to stage their disturbance is fairly full of people who see comfortably seated."

"My lady," said one Park avenue cook, "always phones to the theatre. She keeps a scout there. She won't let even the soup come on until she calls the scout and he tells her that the curtain is almost ready to go up."

One of the best butlers in Beekman Place declared, "I lost four jobs in two years through the fact I was instrumental in getting Mr. and Mrs. Thorntossle to a Broadway opening before 9:15. Now they leave the apartment before 9:30 over my dead body."

"I have a pretty good test for theatre time," he added. "If the master and the missus and their guests haven't even started to burp much I know theatre time is far away. When they begin slipping out of chairs, guffawing at blum jokes and closing one eye to get a good focus on the dessert I know the curtain must be within 15 minutes of going up. But I never permit them to start for the playhouse until they have become 100% boisterous, inconsiderate and somewhat stinko."

That, if you ask me, is what is the matter with the American theatre. I look for no improvement until the doors are closed at curtain time and until it is made perfectly proper for a serious theatre-goer to stand on his hindlegs and shout, "Aw, sit down ya big exhibitionist!" at any male, female or intermediate who regards the theatre as a place in which to behave as if he or she got his breeding under rockpiles, his or her manners out of rodeo routines, and his or her love for the theatre out of the bylaws of the International Association of Drama Wreckers.

If you run across anybody who has attended a theatrical performance in New York lately and really seen the show on the stage instead of the one in the audience let me know. I would like to know what the shows I have tried to attend are all about.

Yours with an indorsement of the free use of tomahawks at opening nights.

REX HARRISON, WIFE BACK TO ENG. IN JUNE

Hollywood.

Rex Harrison and wife Lilli Palmer have notified their studios, 20th-Fox and United States Picts., respectively, that they will leave for England June 1 under agreement in their contracts.

Pair will be gone for six months during which time they will co-star in the Alexander Korda production of "The Perfect Timperley." Both have two more films apiece here on their schedules prior to leaving.

Bill Holden's Remakes Of Old Wally Reid Pix

Hollywood.

William Holden may be spotted in old Wallace Reid starrers filmed by Paramount in early 1920s. Company is considering two properties, "Hell Diggers" and "World's Champion" made by Reid in 1921 for possible remakes. Executives have idea Holden is right for the hero in light adventure yarns such as made Reid a top box-office winner of his time.

Holden's contract held jointly by Paramount and Columbia.

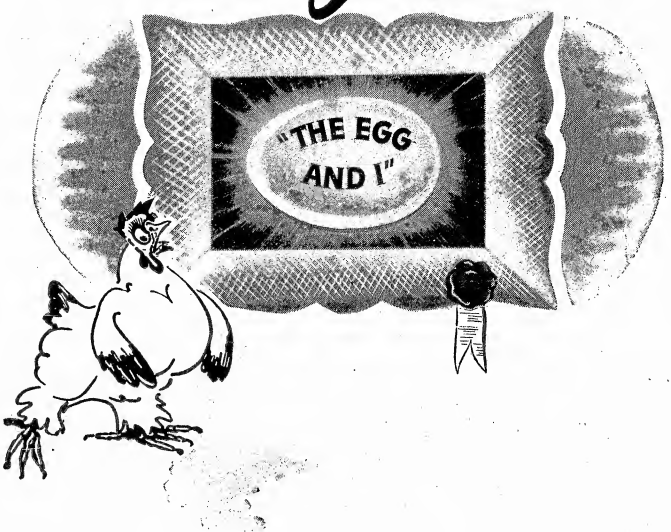
Raft, Bendix to 'Race'

Hollywood.

George Raft aid William Bendix were inked last week to costar in "Race Street" for RKO.

Story of attempted payoff of fourth estate race dopester will have Bendix in the heavy spot for his first appearance on the RKO lot.

U-I's Claim to fame



THE EC
EGG
AND
THE EC
THE
D I ★ THE EGG
CLAUDETTE
Colbert
She plays the part of "Betty"
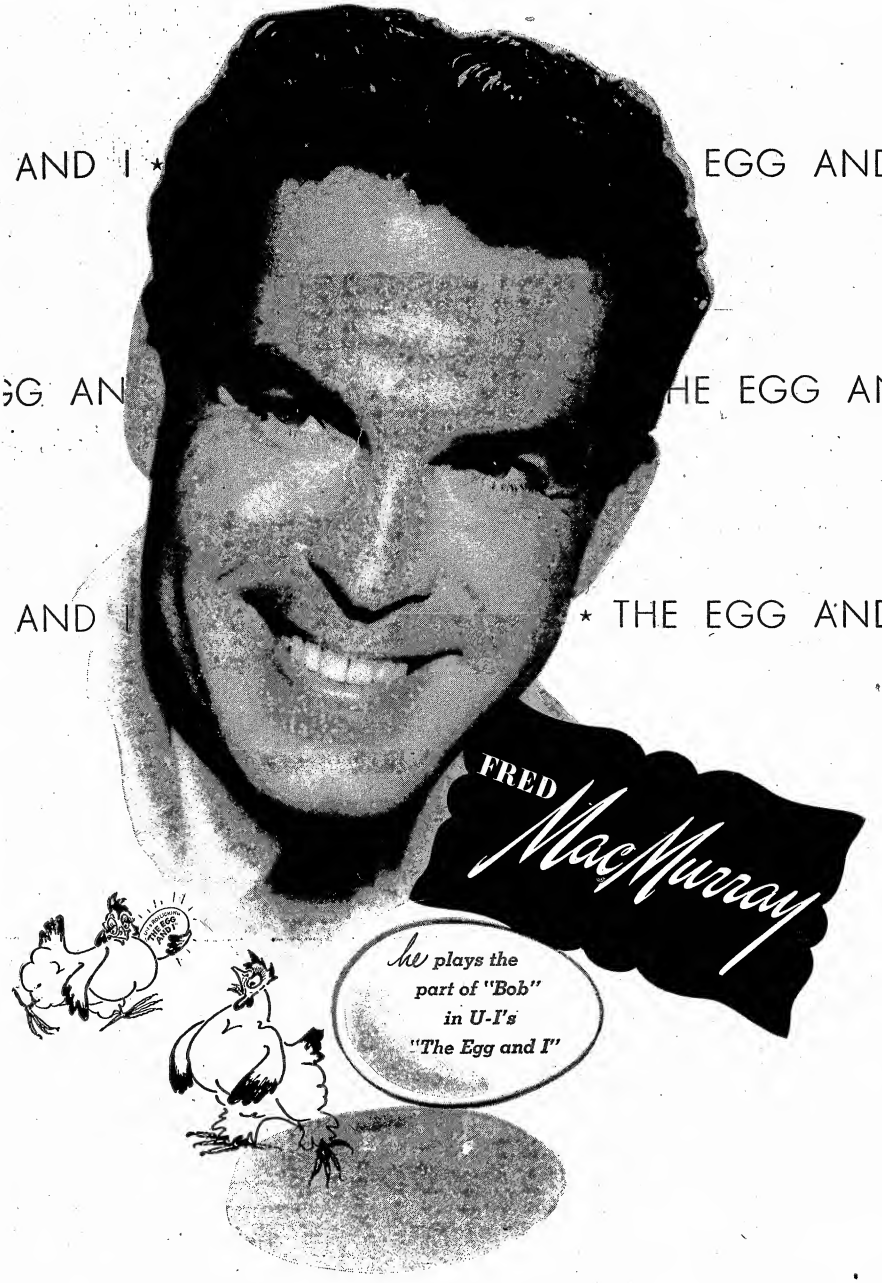
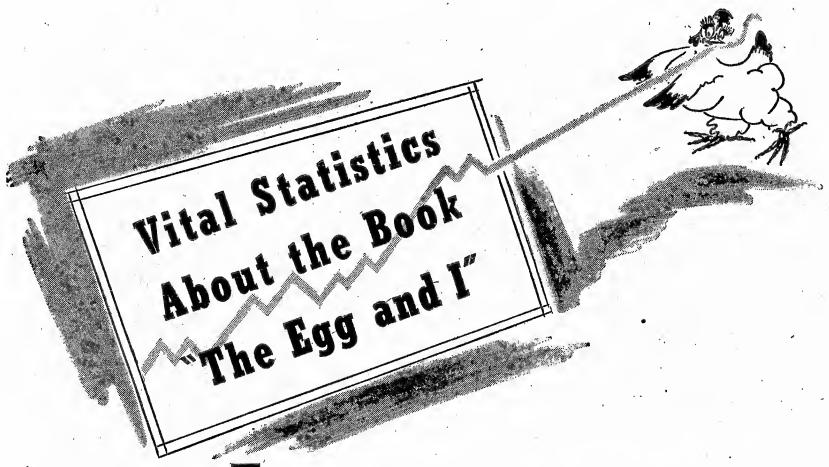
in U-I's
"The Egg and I"

AND I ★ EGG AND I

GG AN HE EGG AND

AND I ★ THE EGG AND I





THE EGG AND I was written by Betty McDonald. It's a simple story of Betty and Bob who get married and start life anew on a chicken farm, and learned about how to raise eggs the hard way.

The book was first published by J. P. Lippincott on October 3rd, 1945 and was immediately selected by the Book-of-the-Month Club.

In the twelve months following its publication, it has reached its twenty-first printing.

In these same twelve months, the total copies of books printed was in excess of 1,000,045.

On December 31st, 1945, it was in the top spot of the non-fiction best-seller list in both the New York Times and the New York Herald Tribune and remained in this spot without a break until November 3, 1946 when it dropped to second place.

One week later, November 10, 1946, it returned to the number one spot in the New York Herald Tribune and has remained there ever since.

UNIVERSAL INTERNATIONAL

Claudette COLBERT · Fred MacMURRAY

"The Egg and I"

From the Novel by BETTY MacDONALD

with MARJORIE MAIN · LOUISE ALLBRITTON · PERCY KILBRIDE · BILLY HOUSE · RICHARD LONG

Screenplay by Chester Erskine and Fred F. Finklehoffe · Directed by CHESTER ERSKINE · Produced by FRED F. FINKLEHOFFE

SPICE OF LIFE

By HOWARD DIETZ

In hailing the 41st Anniversary issue of VARIETY one thing at least can be said without fear of contradiction: nothing exactly like it will ever happen again. Anything else I may say will be pretty sure to bring flat denials from one quarter or another. Most of these demurrers will probably come from soreheads, because anything I would say about VARIETY would be in terms of praise, especially considering that I was writing it for VARIETY. And there must have been plenty of soreheads accumulated during 41 years of reporting show business.

Bernard Shaw said a long time ago that every man over 40 years of age is a scoundrel. He may or may not believe that that applies to papers. Anyway, I don't—either to papers or to people. Some of the most scoundrelly people and papers I have ever known have been much younger than 40. They started with original sin and went right on from there. And the papers died younger than the people.

Being over 40 myself, I have a fellow feeling for VARIETY. We have been friends for a long time. I can't remember its early years, not being as much of a gaffer as all that; but as soon as I made my first connection with show business I began to realize that the business had its Bible, with chronicles, epistles, psalms and revelations all complete, and that it was required reading for true believers. So I learned the language (with some trouble, because my mother tongue was English) and have been a faithful subscriber ever since.

I think that VARIETY in the course of its 41 years has been both useful and ornamental—in other words it has led a well-spent life. As to its usefulness there can be no dispute. It has been the weekly vade mecum (I'm keeping this clean) of the world of entertainment. It has tried to tell the truth, and to a surprising degree it has succeeded. It has a heart of gold. Sometimes it holds grudges, but seldom for long. These grudges have sometimes been provoked, always regrettable, and now and then amusing. I am thinking of one of them which seems still to be current, having something to do with an artistic gent and his beard. The artistic gent, beard and all, shall be nameless here (he would be anyway, when the blue pencil recognized him). On the whole, VARIETY has been a pretty good scout, as well as a good business man with a nose for news and advertisements—not always such a contradiction as it might seem.

Here Comes the Commercial

Part of its usefulness is that it has been practical and down to earth. That is why I think it would be a fine thing if every movie critic in the United States read the paper regularly. Somebody with a little spare cash might well enter subscriptions for them all en masse. It might make them realize what seems to be just a vague abstract notion with some of them—that show business is a business and that under our economic system a business has to keep reasonably out of the red or stop breathing. Quite a lot of the scribes, I am aware, do read VARIETY and profit accordingly in a practical way. I write as one who is all for social consciousness and exquisite artistry and the other luxuries that mean so much to certain of our daily and weekly commentators. So is VARIETY in favor of them. But VARIETY knows that what the public wants is, first and foremost, entertainment. If you give the public entertainment you can work in all the rest, and very often the much-panned studios do exactly that. Social consciousness can be just as socko as sexiness—if it's done right.

So I think that VARIETY's most useful qualities have been its honesty and its sanity. As to its being ornamental, I am most definitely not thinking of its makeup, which may be in its own way a joy forever but is certainly no thing of beauty. I am thinking of its vocabulary, the heads and subheads and boxes and stories in which ingenuity and imagination run rampant and have for these many years.

Reading VARIETY is fun. It has been since I saw my first copy. Also it is educational. I hate to think what show business would be without it. Sometimes I hate to think what show business is with it.

Three Up, Four Down in Big 7's $17,645,125 Stock Loss For '46

By MIKE WEAR

Picture company shares, like nearly all stocks that were caught in the drastic tumble in Wall Street last fall, wound up 1946 behind the eight-ball. Only a few film stocks were able to show net gains over the same time a year ago. Despite this, actual depreciation for seven major film company issues amounted to only $17,645,125 net. Three companies showed actual appreciation, while the other four showed losses on the year.

Columbia Pictures, Paramount and Warner Bros. showed an appreciation in value of $53,466,000, biggest gain being Par with $39,211,500. Depreciation in value was made by Loew's, 20th-Fox, Universal and RKO. Last-named showed the smallest loss, depreciation being only $3,031,500, while Loew's showed the greatest, $42,344,000.

Republic was not figured in the compilation because the common and preferred did not start being traded in on N. Y. Stock Exchange until just before the market began selling off. Consequently, both issues naturally were caught in the avalanche of selling in Wall Street last fall. Despite this, Republic common declined only about 10 points from the year's high to the closing price last Dec. 31, 1946. Actual depreciation from the peak was around $19,000,000.

Warner Bros., Paramount and Columbia common shares were split up during the war, but despite this all three showed actual gains in value. Conversion of RKO preferred swelled the number of that company's common shares slightly during 1946.

Film shares generally began selling off the last few days in May, actually preceding the big subsequent decline in other industrial stocks. However, the drastic dip in picture issues came when the whole market went into a nose-dive a few months later.

Following is the way film shares acted in 1946:

Company	Jan. 2, '46	Dec. 31, '46	Depreciation
Col. Pix...	28	20⅝	*$1,851,625
Loew's	34	25⅝	42,344,000
Paramount.	54½	32½	*39,211,500
RKO	16½	15½	3,031,500
20th-Fox ..	41⅛	38	8,389,000
Universal..	45¼	26½	17,346,625
Warners ..	32	17⅝	*12,402,875
Total depreciation....			17,645,125

* Appreciation.

Would Use Frozen Lira For Pic Prod. in Italy

Hollywood.

Players and film technicians are getting a pitch from the Bank of America to junket to Italy for the purpose of making films. Bank has several millions of Lira in that country which cannot be taken out. So reported trying to set up film operations there. Players who speak several languages are wanted. Plan calls for films to be made in Spanish, English, Italian and French.

Studios built by Mussolini are readying for production on lease by the bank.

Gerald Mayer on Coast

Hollywood.

Gerald M. Mayer, managing director of the international division of the Motion Picture Assn., is here for two weeks to confer with studio chiefs on problems relative to foreign distribution.

He stated he will accompany Eric Johnston on a visit to England in April to further some advances made during November trip.

Johnson's Eastern Huddle on Picture

Hollywood.

Nunnally Johnson is easting to huddle with Charles MacArthur on "The Senator Was Indiscreet," which Johnson will produce for Universal-International.

Johnson leaves N. Y. end of the week (11) to return to the Coast to start production on "Mr. Peabody and Mermaid."

10% Rise Seen In '47 Theatre Bldg., Sez D. C.

Washington.

New theatre construction in 1947 probably will be about 10% greater than in 1946, which was a very poor year, according to Department of Commerce estimates.

Exact figures on show biz building for 1946 are not yet available to the Commerce specialists, who also figure it will be another week before they get a proper breakdown of next year's estimates.

Commerce has figured overall that every type of new construction next year will amount to about $15,000,000,000 with another $6,000,000,000 to $7,000,000,000 devoted to repairs and renovations.

There appears no basis for the reports that there will be a theatre-construction boom in 1947, according to one Commerce official, although he said he preferred not to give a firm opinion until the new survey is fully complete. He pointed out that 10% above substandard does not spell boom in any language.

Madeleine Carroll And Husband Back to France

Madeleine Carroll and husband Henri Lavorel left for England Friday (3) on the Queen Elizabeth after a holiday in New York and Canada. They will return in the spring.

Lavorel, who came here on a French government assignment to study American methods of educational film-making, said that the preliminary groundwork had been laid and that work will begin shortly. While here he conferred with State Dept. exec William Tyler.

NINA FOX EAST FOR R-H

Hollywood.

Nina Fox heads east for femme lead in "John Loves Mary."

Actress is on loanout from Columbia lot to Rodgers and Hammerstein.

$350,000,000 Spent by Hollywood On 1946 Production of Pictures; Major Firms Top Indies by 3 to 1

Hollywood.

Hollywood production costs for 1946 soared near $350,000,000 mark, for combined studio output of 487 features, including product of both majors and indie companies. Reason overall costs did not more nearly parallel those of 1945, which were estimated at $400,000,000, was due to fact fewer films were made during the year, even though budgets had to be upped considerably for each picture, in line with general rising expenditures.

Majors topped production costs of indies by a 3-1 average, while in number of pictures made ratio was 2½-1. Major lot costs were $250,000,000 in round figures, while indies figured their costs to be nearly $100,000,000.

In point of numbers, majors, including features, westerns and serials, turned out 337 pictures. Indies were responsible for 150.

Columbia had the largest production schedule, with 56 films, including 12 westerns. This was followed by Republic, with 52, Universal with 41 and Monogram had 47.

PRC led indie group, with 50 features, while United Artists, with 21 companies, was runner-up with 43 films. UA, however, had combined expenditure of $42,200,000 for its 43 pictures, with PRC spending $3,320,000.

MG's Golden Touch

In breakdown by companies, among the majors, Metro heads production costs with nearly a $50,000,000 annual program for 32 features. Included in this budget, too, are nearly 50 short subjects, including cartoons.

20th-Fox follows, with 25 features costing $31,250,000, Universal closely trailing with its slate of 48 pictures amounting to $30,000,000.

Columbia's 56 films came to $29,000,000; Paramount, with annual program of 18 features, exclusive of Hal Wallis and Pine-Thomas productions, which will be listed among indie product, spent $28,000,000; and Warners carried year's budget of $25,000,000 for its 19 features. Estimate of both Paramount and Warners includes short subject program at each studio. Republic's costs approximated Warners, $25,000,000, for 52 pictures, both features, westerns and serials.

RKO's production costs for year, for 30 features, are figured at $21,000,000, and Monogram's costs were $9,000,000.

Indie Budgets Up

Indie production, which saw number of new companies, including Liberty, Robert Riskin Productions, Jesse L. Lasky-Walter MacEwen, Eagle-Lion and others, was distinguished by unusually high costs for year.

David O. Selznick, with his "Duel in the Sun," hit a high of approximately $5,000,000 for this picture, with Samuel Goldwyn shelling out $4,950,000 for two productions, one, "The Best Years of Our Lives," costing in excess of $3,000,000. Hal Wallis' four pictures turned out during 1946 cost $6,500,000 in round figures.

UA's 21 production companies, which spent $42,200,000 during year on 43 features, are headed by Benedict Bogeaus, who spent approximately $5,500,000 on four features. Enterprise put out $5,000,000 for three films, Hunt Stromberg $4,450,000 for four, Seymour Nebenzal $2,200,000 for two.

Others in UA group are California, with $1,800,000 for its first picture, and $1,500,000 spent already during year on "Vendetta," still far to go; Charles Rogers $2,300,000 for two, Hal Roach $2,000,000 for four, Andrew Stone and Sam Coslow each $1,800,000, Stone for two, Coslow for one; Federal (LeBaron-Morros) $1,750,000 for one film.

Howard Hawks $1,600,000 for one, Loew-Lewin $1,500,000 for one, and for same number, Charles Chaplin $1,400,000, Jules Levey $1,300,000, Sol Lesser $1,200,000, Harmon-Ising $1,300,000, Edward Golden $1,000,000, Bing Crosby $900,000, Arnold Pressburger $850,000, Comet $600,000, Hopalong Cassidy $500,000.

Other indies are Liberty, $3,000,000 for Frank Capra's "It's a Wonderful Life"; Pine-Thomas, $4,800,000 for six pictures for Paramount release; Eagle-Lion $2,300,000 for three pictures; Screen Guild for its six companies turning out 16 productions, $2,400,000. Jesse L. Lasky put $1,650,000 on his first picture for RKO release, Robert Riskin spent $1,500,000 for single picture, and Walt Disney's costs exceed $4,000,000.

Roy del Ruth spent $1,300,000 for his first indie, and Sol Wurtzel expended in neighborhood of $1,200,000 for six pictures for 20th-Fox release. Various other small production companies turned out 15 pictures at figure between $3,000,000 and $5,000,000.

AUTRY 50-50 WITH COL. ON 4 FILMS PER YEAR

Gene Autry's new Columbia deal will have him heading an indie production unit with a 50-50 profit split on four pictures a year. Pact, under which Col will supply all film-making facilities, takes effect April 1, and will have Gene Autry Productions releasing through Col for two years with openings for extension at the end of that period.

With Autry in the new company will be Armand Schaefer, who produced some of the cowboy crooner films at Republic and will be president of GAP, Mitchell Hamilburg, Autry's agent, who will be veepee of the outfit, and Martin Gang, his attorney, who will be secretary-treasurer. Autry will be chairman of the board. Films will be budgeted at between $300,000 and $350,000 each by Col, which will also build lot facilities on their Valley Ranch property.

Cowboy's Rep contract expires March 31, by which time he will have to fulfill a commitment to them for two more films. Film budgets at Col will be higher than at Rep, where cost was pegged at around $200,000. Pact will conclude a long period of negotiation during which Autry tried to sue out of his Rep contract, and was negotiating with several other companies.

GARBO WANTSA GO TO WORK

Hollywood.

Greta Garbo and Columbia producer Helen Deutsch huddle this week on proposed film for 1947. Producer has screen story in mind to outline to actress, although as yet unscripted.

If greenlighted by Garbo, Miss Deutsch will go ahead with production plans, otherwise it'll be junked.

BROADWAY—SHOWCASE OF THE WORLD

By BENJAMIN FIELDING

(Commissioner of Licenses, City of New York)

Expert studies now predict a staggering volume of tourist travel to New York during 1947. The expected over 88,000,000 visitors will spend over a billion dollars in Our Town, the tourist mecca of the world.

Yes, Our Town is the world headquarters for industry, trade and finance, the world's greatest retail shopping center. And Broadway is our showcase.

The statistical machines grind out that 10.5% of every visitor's dollar is spent on theatres. Add the hometowner's normal budget percentage and Broadway is in for boom days.

During the war-weary years, Broadway made millions of new friends from all parts of the country. Travel became a way of life for the average American—8,000,000 service men and women went to the far corners of the globe. And around the byways of the world popped the tumbling question, "Well, how didja like Broadway?"

A galaxy of adjectives can pour out in a magic torrent—spectacular opera, brilliant theatre, magnificent music and thrilling films!

At no time in the history of this department have we approved more new sites for picture theatres in the five boroughs. Licensed ticket agencies are developing substantial out-of-town customer accounts. More and more attention is being given to the necessity of opening additional legitimate playhouses for stage attractions, particularly in view of the recent expansion of radio program facilities. To add to customer convenience, the need for municipally-operated parking lot areas near Broadway is being explored.

The operation of amusement arcades in the Broadway area is under continual observation to assure proper supervision and high standards. The whole field of theatrical advertising from the standpoint of truthful pictorial representation of attractions is under inquiry. Special types of wholesome entertainment for children is getting attention and development.

Yes, we are justly proud of our New York and our Broadway, and its high standard of entertainment values. But Broadway must become increasingly aware of its responsibility as New York's showcase.

On the fringe of our great amusement industry, there unfortunately stands a small group of operators, the men in headlong and irresponsible pursuit of the "fast dollar." These parasites, master of the quick and glib phrase, scornful of decency or any standards of truth in advertising, create bad will and reflect discredit on Our Town and Broadway.

Broadway and New York are big business—established on the firm basis of value received for value given. Broadway is always generous, contributing fantastic sums and talent to every worthy charitable enterprise. The point is, it should always be careful to be made attractive and inviting. Too frequently has it let down.

My Secret Life With The Great Nose-Piece

(Or, 'Aw, Geez! How Yuh Been?')

By GARRY MOORE

Hollywood.

I am certain that those of our readers who are interested in esoteric information and trivial minutiae will have heard of a gentleman named Jimmy Durante. But for those whose knowledge is limited to only the larger names in showbusiness I should like to explain that Jimmy Durante is a talented kid who works under the kind protection of my superior name every Friday night over CBS on the Durante-Moore Show. (The only reason Durante gets top billing is that our announcer has an impediment in his speech that will not allow him to begin any sentence with the letter "M.") (This impediment, by the way, is only a recent misfortune. It first manifested itself three years ago when the announcer inadvertantly mentioned my name first and almost immediately came down with a bad case of "bludgeon de entrepeneur"—or as we say in our set, "Lou Clayton's ball-bat.")

Garry Moore

In any event, the stroke of midnight this Dec. 31 marked the fifth New Year's Eve that I have spent shaking noses with Durante. It's been nothing but laughs since the first time we shook hands and Durante said "Let's get down to the mucleous of this thing."

It's no secret that I have derived many benefits from this association. For one thing Durante is the first guy I've ever worked with who makes me look tall and pug-nosed. (Between us, I think he married me for the large backlog of nose jokes that I'd originally written about myself....well, no matter—I bow to a superior weapon!)

But greatest of all his gifts to me, perhaps, is the knack for getting by without remembering people's names. I have always been bad at it, anyway, and it used to cause me untold mental anguish. I even tried making notes on my cuff when I met people. For instance, let's say I'd be introduced to Jug McSpaden, the longest hitter in golf. On my cuff I'd make a note, "Jug—long hitter." From then on it was simple. The next time I met him I'd just glance at this note and say "Hello, Mr. Cuff—still hitting the jug?"

Durante, however, has never bothered with such complicated systems. He knows he's not going to remember so he doesn't even try. Whenever he sees anybody who even remotely looks like he might speak, Durante beats him to the punch by throwing both arms around the party's neck and saying "Aw, geez! How yuh been?" This system not only gets him by, it also gets him quite a bit of nice free necking.

I never realized how deeply implanted this habit was with him until one day when we were on our way by car to Santa Barbara to work a hospital show. For some strange reason we stopped and had lunch at a lion farm. While standing in front of the elephant enclosure, the Schnoz began ruminating about his days with the animals in Billy Rose's "Jumbo." At this juncture a man came out of the trainer's office and greeted Jimmy with loud shouts. Jim dropped his sandwich, threw his arms around the man's neck and yelled "Aw geez! How yuh been?"....Well, the man turned out to be the trainer of Rosie the Elephant in "Jumbo." And when Jim enquired as to Rosie's whereabouts the man pointed to a nearby mammoth and said, "That's her." So with the instant reaction of true reflex, the Schnoz dashed to the elephant, threw his arms around her and said, "Aw geez! How yuh been?"

I have always said since then that I've known lots of guys who run into old people they used to work with, but Durante's the only man I know who runs into old elephants.

In any event, since the Schnoz and I were mated some five years ago I have stopped worrying about names. But I wouldn't want to close these brief recollections without thanking the editors of this paper for their kindness to our team. Believe me, we'll always be grateful to this great publication, the Weekly—er, what's that name again now? Oh, well—"Aw, geez! How yuh been?"

LEST WE FORGET

By ABE LASTFOGEL

(President, USO-CAMP Shows)

Today, as you read this, 350 professional entertainers are touring the United States under USO-Camp Shows' banner to entertain disabled men in Army and Navy hospitals and in institutions under the supervision of the Veterans Administration.

Their work is little known and they follow a rugged road, unheralded. But the job they are doing is so important that General Omar Bradley, Veterans Administrator, has expressed his deep gratification that our service has been extended to hospitalized men and women under his supervision.

Camp Shows, however, is a wartime agency and is scheduled to pass from the scene at the end of 1947. But the war will not be finished then—nor entertainment's job done—for the men who must remain in our hospitals — many, unhappily, for years to come. (Over 200,000 are under treatment now and more are being admitted every day.)

The entertainment world is proud of its contribution to victory—of the flexibility and resiliency that its organization and its men and women showed as various phases of the effort imposed new obligations upon us all—called for new approaches to old jobs. The military recognized, even in pre-war days, that wholesome entertainment was an essential part of preparation and training.

Our industry provided the initiative, the inspiration and the leadership required to meet the armed forces' needs then and to keep pace with them as they changed throughout every phase of the war and its aftermath. It made its talents, its know-how, its vast experience and its thousand and one gifts available through one agency, Camp Shows—an agency so wholly our own that every branch of the entertainment world makes up its directorates. Through them was made available everything that we had to offer, whether that offering were personal service, a royalty-free script or some needed skill.

All of us feel that it was a privilege to undertake this work of entertaining servicemen and guide it through its many phases. We are proud that under Camp Shows' banner 350 top stars of stage and screen and 5,000 actors and entertainers went overseas to provide momentary respite for our men in combat and did their job so well that General Eisenhower noted that "USO-Camp Shows have brought American cheer and laughter close to every fighting front." Who can evaluate the "lift" it gave a fatigued man to exchange greetings with a girl from home—or perhaps a star who had been but a face on a flashing screen before?

They are gratified, too, that 2,000 others have worked through the difficult months since V-E and V-J Days, easing the transition of our armed forces from combat to occupation duties.

Much of our work for the armed forces is passed; the rest of it is passing.

The continued entertainment of disabled men in our hospitals soon will be our major challenge, because, as General Bradley says in speaking of that subject, "A job half-done is no job at all!" And we certainly shall not have discharged our responsibility to them as long as entertainment can aid the rehabilitation of any considerable number.

A Tremendous Job

Camp Shows has moved into this job so smoothly and so effortlessly that its magnitude can easily be lost sight of. But, just as an indication of what it means, let me tell you that it requires 22 companies ceaselessly on the move throughout the length and breadth of the country to make sure that each of 187 hospitals—however remote or difficult to reach—has a "live" show at least once every two weeks.

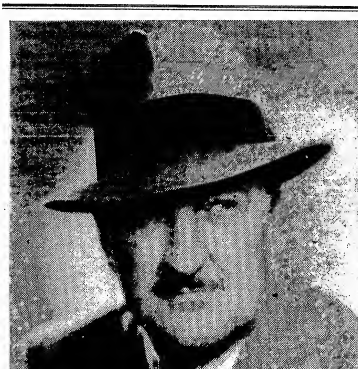
The entertainment industry pays tribute and expresses its deepest appreciation to the six member agencies of the USO: the Young Men's Christian Associations, National Catholic Community Service, The Salvation Army, Young Women's Christian Associations, National Jewish Welfare Board, National Travelers Aid Association, which gave our work their full support, spiritually and financially. We invite their continued active interest.

Fortunately, five years of experience have indicated the pattern, the techniques and the approaches required for a continuing operation under new auspices. Camp Shows started to service Army and Navy Hospitals in March 1944, and added facilities under the Veterans Administration in March 1946. This background enables us now both to lay down a program of action and draw up an estimate of costs early enough to insure no interruption of this work.

For most of us, the victory is won and life stretches out ahead. But not for the ill and the maimed in our hospitals. For them it's a long road back—dreary months made harder by occasional fears that they're forgotten, now that the parades are ended.

Entertainers and the entertainment industry fortunately can ease that road. They can provide what it takes to assure them that they're remembered, and, though they cannot come to us for it, we can take it to them.

That's something I'm sure we all want to do.



WILLIAM A. SEITER

William A. Seiter has just completed direction of a Deanna Durbin starrer, "I'll Be Yours," for Universal-International Pictures, where he is under contract.

Par News' 20th Anni OK Anthology

Paramount News, celebrating its 20th anni, has rounded up clips of some of the top news events of the last two decades, strung them together with a highly-interesting and penetrating commentary and wrapped the package neatly together into a 25-minute two-reeler. Novel documentary was released nationally last Saturday (4) and exhibs lucky enough to book it should be able to bolster their b.o. takings considerably with a little intelligent ballyhoo.

With some of the most world-shaking events in history occuring between 1927 and the present post-World War II era, the 20th anni short couldn't help but be interesting. Withal, it presents a well-earned pat on the back to the entire newsreel industry, mirrored in a sequence showing the late President Roosevelt citing the reels for their work on both the home and fighting fronts during the war.

Teeing off with the roaring '20s and the flapper-Coolidge era, the short segues neatly into the stock market crash and the resultant soup lines and corner apple stands, all designed for absorbing, albeit sometimes bitter nostalgia. Comes then the Roosevelt inaugural, his New Deal policies and then the first faint rumblings of war, climaxed by Pearl Harbor and D-Day. Interspersed are clips of the fascinating news events, such as the Hindenburg blimp disaster, the Lindbergh kidnaping case, etc.

Film winds up with a dramatic pledge of Par News for the future: "In this we seek to serve. That the Eyes and Ears of the World shall bring the truth. To let the people see...to let the people know." And the reels, with their visual reporting advantages designed for truth, seem well equipped to carry out this pledge. Stal.

Film Reviews

Miniature Reviews

"Ladies' Man" (Songs) (Par). Eddie Bracken holding up lightweight musical okay for general situations.

"Martin Roumagnac" (French). Marlene Dietrich - Jean Gabin, romantic drama, surefire with French audiences.

Ladies' Man

(SONGS)

Paramount release of Daniel Dare production. Stars Eddie Bracken, Cass Daley, Virginia Welles; features Spike Jones' City Slickers, Johnny Coy, Virginia Field. Directed by William D. Russell. Screenplay, Edmund Beloin, Jack Rose, Lewis Meltzer based on story by William Bowers, Robinson Holbert; songs, Jule Styne, Sammy Cahn; camera, Stuart Thompson; editor, Everett Douglas. Tradeshown N. Y. Dec. 26, '46. Running time, 91 MINS.

Henry Haskell	Eddie Bracken
Geraldine Ryan	Cass Daley
Jean Mitchell	Virginia Welles
Johnny O'Conner	Johnny Coy
Gladys Hayden	Virginia Field
David Harmon	Lewis Russell
Mr. Jones	Georges Renevant
Phone Operator	Roberta Jonay

Spike Jones & His City Slickers

"Ladies' Man" doesn't pack much punch but will serve as a palatable musical comedy creampuff for general situations. One of Paramount's lower cost items, film depends wholly upon the comic talents of Eddie Bracken to hold together a random assortment of specialty acts. Formula story of a rich yokel being taken for a ride in the big city is the peg for the musical score and comedy situations and is given a neat tongue-in-cheek treatment. But film is overlong for its purpose, and more decisive editing could cut between 10 and 15 minutes of running time for snappier results.

With Cass Daley and Spike Jones and His City Slickers acting as the chief supporting battery for Bracken's mugging and double-takes, plenty of raucous corn is to be expected. Miss Daley, in addition to a straight comedy part, does a vocal assault on "Mama ye quiere," while Spike Jones' combo hash up two of their best known numbers, "Holiday for Strings" and "Cocktails for Two." Johnny Coy registers solidly in two standout dance specialties. Bracken, in his screen's initial singing stint, does nicely on a couple of Jule Styne-Sammy Cahn tunes, "I Gotta Gal I Love" and "What Am I Gonna Do About You," and is backed up in a neat duet arrangement with Virginia Welles on the latter number.

Story concerns an Oklahoma oil king who comes to New York on a sight-seeing tour but gets tricked into acting as Prince Charming on a radio program contest. Bracken plays sucker as a beau geste towards Miss Fields, who leads him to believe that her job in an ad agency depends upon his cooperation. But disillusionment soon sets in together with the usual round of romantic difficulties against a background of niteries and behind-the-broadcast scenes. Throughout the proceedings, Virginia Field moves irrelevantly in a female Groucho Marx role of a phoney southern belle who sets her traps for Bracken.

Thesping by Bracken and supporting players is competent down the line. Direction is handled with an appropriately light touch although some of the specialty numbers are stretched out excessively. Musical score is okay, but nothing special in the way of hit tunes, while production dress and camera work is standard. Herm.

Martin Roumagnac

(FRENCH-MADE)

Paris.

Gaumont release of Alcina production. Stars Marlene Dietrich, Jean Gabin; features Margo Lion, Marcel Herrand, Jean d'Yd, Daniel Gelin, Michel Ardan, Marcelle Geniat, Paul Faivre, Lucien Nat, Jean Darcante. Directed by Georges Lacombe. Screenplay, Lacombe. Reviewed in Paris. Running time, 115 MINS.

Excellent casting of Marlene Dietrich and Jean Gabin, who turn in some top drawer thesping, makes this film a sure grosser here and likely b.o. wherever French pix are played. An adventuress, Miss Dietrich makes a play for small town contractor Jean Gabin. Falling heavily at first, he later gets wise to her true character and kills her in a fit of jealousy.

Packing more punch than most French-mades, pic is a fine vehicle for Gabin who is his usual authentic self in the part of the rough country guy unable to understand the sophisticated woman before it's too late. Miss Dietrich gives an interesting performance as the flighty woman, but disappears from the film three reels before the end.

Originally slated for leads in Pathe's "Night Doors," Gabin and Miss Dietrich turned it down, finding "Martin Roumagnac" more to their liking. Films' foreign rights have been acquired by Laudy Lawrence, film exec, formerly associated with Metro and Alexander Korda. Maxi.

New Foreign Films

"Det Regnar Pa Var Karlek" ("It Is Raining on Our Love") (SWEDISH). Nordisk Tonefilm release of Lorens Marmstedt production; stars Barbro Kollberg, Birgir Malmsten; features Goesta Cederlund, Ludde Gentzel, Douglas Hage, Hjoerdis Petterson. Directed by Ingmar Bergman. Screenplay, Bergman and Herbert Grevenius, based on play by Oskar Braathen. Camera, Hilding Bladh, Gneran Strindberg; music, Erland von Koch. Reviewed in Stockholm. Running time, 100 MINS.

Perhaps one of the best films any Swedish producer ever made, story's theme based on the premise that a man isn't a criminal just because he has erred once, develops into excellent entertainment chiefly due to fine scripting of Ingmar Bergman and Herbert Grevenius. Acting, lensing and direction are in keeping with other high production values. Looming as a top grosser in Sweden, picture should meet with worldwide b.o. success.

"Rumeurs" ("Allegations") (FRENCH). Consortium International release of C.A.P.A.C. production; stars Jacques Dumesnil, Jany Holt; directed by Jacques Daroy; screenplay, Simon Gantillon. Reviewed in Paris.

Poorly directed and photographed story that's very dreary. Shows Jacques Dumesnil as a small town garage proprietor who's wrongly suspected of the slaying of a prostitute. Preys on his mind and to relieve it he plans to commit a similar killing. Jany Holt is weak as the intended victim and whole production is below par. Mild for America. Maxi.

"Om Kjaerligheten Synger De" ("The Song of Love") (NORWEGIAN). Apollo Film release of Oslo Film production; stars Harald Heide-Steen, Elisabeth Gording; features Alfred Solaas, Edvard Drablos, Einar Vaage, Stig Egede-Nissen, Berit Brenne, Finn Bernhoft, Dagmar Myhrvold; directed by Olav Dalgard; screenplay, Dalgard, based on play by Nicolay Hoggenvik; camera, Reidar Lund. Reviewed in Oslo. Running time, 80 MINS.

Dramatic Norwegian film about a hotel worker wrongfully accused of arson develops into a domestic tragedy which may prove okay in Scandinavia. However, picture is too sentimental to offer much appeal to U. S. audiences, despite good acting and fair screenplay. Wins.

ENTERTAINMENT!

A New Main Title...

that means the Hallmark of Screen Entertainment.

Breaking All Records...Everywhere!

WALTER WANGER'S

"CANYON PASSAGE"

IN TECHNICOLOR!

The phenomenal gross-getter of the year...produced in the Walter Wanger tradition of superlative entertainment!

Follow-up Sensation for 1947

WALTER WANGER'S

"SMASH-UP

the Story of a Woman!"

...scaled to the same high level of production achievement and box-office magnitude!

Screenplay by John Howard Lawson • Additional Dialogue by Lionel Wiggam • Original Story by Dorothy Parker and Frank Cavett
Directed by Stuart Heisler • Produced by Walter Wanger • A UNIVERSAL-INTERNATIONAL PICTURE

"Let's Be Original"

By JAMES J. GELLER

SCENE: The spacious office of a film Producer. Seated at his desk, he addresses the Director, who is seated opposite.

PRODUCER:

Now that we have our musical down on paper, we must create some original routines for our specialties.

DIRECTOR:

Yeah. God knows, the writers were no help to us.

PRODUCER:

All the more reason we should incorporate some good zippy scenes with plenty of sex, comedy and musical numbers. Above all, let's be original.

DIRECTOR:

You're so right, Charlie. We'll set the pace.

PRODUCER:

Let's take it from the beginning. We need a better opening to introduce our girl. The way it is in the script, I find it dull.

DIRECTOR:

(With enthusiasm)

I have it! Remember the first shot of Stanwyck in "Double Indemnity" descending the staircase?

PRODUCER:

(Nods affirmatively)

Yeah.

DIRECTOR:

(Continuing)

Remember how Murray's eyes almost popped out of his head when the camera panned to her legs and then upward to the rest of her body?

PRODUCER:

Uh huh!

DIRECTOR:

Well then, we'll have our girl make her entrance coming down the staircase in a bathing costume. The boy gets his first eyeful as she goes to the pool.

PRODUCER:

I see what you mean. You've got a good thought there. Not bad!

(Scribbles on memo pad)

DIRECTOR:

(Smiling)

This is better than having a nude ascending a grand staircase.

PRODUCER:

As for the night club owner who's on the make for the gal, I've got a swell idea for a belly laugh. We'll have two G.I.'s carry him out of his own place, like what happened to that guy from Montgomery Ward. No rough stuff.

DIRECTOR:

Very funny. We could build up to it.

PRODUCER:

Don't forget that we also gotta have something novel for our leading comic.

DIRECTOR:

Before we come to him, let's establish the girl as a member of a crazy family like the bunch in that old play, "You Can't Take It With You."

PRODUCER:

For a musical they must be a little crazier than they are in that old play . . . And now for our singer.

DIRECTOR:

We must have a solid reason for a tenor.

PRODUCER:

Tenors are a dime a dozen. But our man should be presented differently.

DIRECTOR:

(In deep thought as he rises from his chair. Suddenly a notion strikes him.)

I've got it. We'll get some special lyrics and have him race through like Danny—

PRODUCER:

(Cutting in)

Kaye!

DIRECTOR:

That's a good approach.

PRODUCER:

Okay. That takes care of the singer for a couple of shots. Now for the girl who fools around with the musical instrument.

DIRECTOR:

You mean the one that plays the cello off key?

PRODUCER:

(Starts humming "Love in Bloom" as Director breaks in.)

DIRECTOR:

You've given it to me! A switch on the Jack Benny routine with the fiddle.

PRODUCER:

We'll get the music department to dig up something that Benny has never used.

DIRECTOR:

Of course.

PRODUCER:

That reminds me of "100 Men and a Girl." Do you remember how the film ended with "The Hungarian Rhapsody"?

DIRECTOR:

We shouldn't use that composition for our opus.

PRODUCER:

I'm not thinking of that number. We'll use another rhapsody for the finale.

DIRECTOR:

Fine.

PRODUCER:

I heard a Roumanian Rhapsody on last Sunday's broadcast from New York.

DIRECTOR:

Are you certain there's a "Roumanian Rhapsody"?

PRODUCER:

I guess so. All those Balkan countries have rhapsodies.

DIRECTOR:

Then no one can accuse us of plagiarism.

PRODUCER:

Look, as long as we're on our toes, no one can say we're copying. Incidentally, the studio has a commitment with the Two Inkwells. We've gotta use 'em in our picture. Let's get a new dance specialty, something that's never been done.

DIRECTOR:

I've just the routine laid out for the dance director. As a matter of fact, it's two routines which can be blended in one.

PRODUCER:

You don't say?

DIRECTOR:

Let's use a staircase similar to the one that the Nicholas Brothers had in a Fox picture a couple of years ago, work down half way, then make a flying leap on a large brass drum and finish the number the way Astaire did in "Roberta." Remember?

PRODUCER:

Pretty good!

DIRECTOR:

That'll take care of the Two Inkwells.

PRODUCER:

We've only solved half of our problem.

DIRECTOR:

But we're making fine progress . . . What's our next move?

PRODUCER:

We require a few more sock specialties to be interpolated into the script.

DIRECTOR:

Sure. Sure. We lack another big routine, for our second comic lead . . . Let's take a guy like Keenan Wynn.

PRODUCER:

(Interrupting)

I got it. Have you forgotten the marvelous drunk scene he did in a Metro picture?

DIRECTOR:

Yeah. I saw it recently.

PRODUCER:

Don't worry about it. By the time our picture is produced and released, the public will have forgotten about Wynn's drunk specialty.

DIRECTOR:

I guess you're right. Besides no one had a monopoly on drunk scenes.

PRODUCER:

That takes care of that. Now we should devise a few more routines. This time I'd like something even more original for our two leads in their joint dance number.

DIRECTOR:

(Reflectively)

What can we do to fill that spot?

PRODUCER:

It's more than a spot. We've gotta have something outstanding, something unique.

DIRECTOR:

Remember Gene Kelly in "Cover Girl"? His dance sequence, I mean.

PRODUCER:

The trick stuff he did with himself as——.

DIRECTOR:

The Alter Ego.

PRODUCER:

That's it. Now we don't want to duplicate his dance. We're not copy cats.

DIRECTOR:

All right. Let's forget the Kelly routine in "Cover Girl." That was a solo number.

PRODUCER:

Here's a thought. We'll have our boy and girl do, say, a similar dance number together and in the background, we'll plant their alter egos with a split screen effect.

DIRECTOR:

That's what I was aiming for in the first place.

PRODUCER:

Now if we think up a couple more routines, we'd be set. Something novel in which we can use soft music in the background.

DIRECTOR:

For example?

PRODUCER:

I've been thinking about the successful wave of those phychological pictures, "Lady in the Dark," "Spellbound," "The Dark Mirror" and others. We ought to select a scene where a girl is consulting a psychiatrist and do it with music.

DIRECTOR:

I'll accept that. It'll be a clever switch and it won't hurt our story line.

PRODUCER:

And now if we can get one final smash routine before the last fade-out, we'll be off to the races.

DIRECTOR:

We should slip in a minute or two of something dramatic. What Laughton did to "The Gettysburg Address" or the few words that came from that old guy in "The Spectre of the Rose."

PRODUCER:

Yeah, I see eye to eye with you on that. Nothing political, mind you.

DIRECTOR:

We'll have research get us something significant. A paragraph out of Roosevelt which everybody will recognize.

PRODUCER:

(Continues scribbling on pad)

We've done it. We'll have one of the most novel pictures ever produced.

DIRECTOR:

(Acquiescing)

And original, too. Every producer in Hollywood will copy it.

PRESS AGENTS STAR IN MAKING STARS GLITTER

By JOSEPH WECHSBERG

While Bette Davis was working on location in the California desert, news services carried the story that she had landed squarely in the middle of a cactus plant. Millions read in their papers that 49 cactus spines had to be extracted from her expensive silhouet, "soon to be seen in Warners' 'The Bride Came C.O.D.'"

When the late Carole Lombard told a director who was complaining about his income tax that for her part she was happy to pay sky-high taxes to Uncle Sam, a publicity man overheard it. He simply quoted her answer to the United Press; the actress made the front pages everywhere.

These are examples of two different schools of Hollywood publicity. The Bette Davis story was an out-and-out hoax: Miss Davis never sat on a cactus. Miss Lombard's spontaneous remark, cleverly ballyhooed, enhanced her prestige and that of the motion picture industry.

Through such experience, Hollywood's high-powered publicity wizards have discovered that dramatized truth is better than sensational hoaxes; such is those for which Harry Reichenbach is famous. Some 25 years ago this master of ballyhoo smuggled a lion inside a piano box into an apartment at New York's Belleclaire hotel, where a man had registered as "Professor T. R. Zann"—just before a new Tarzan picture appeared on Broadway. It was also Reichenbach who once put up eight musical-comedy Turks in the Hotel Majestic. They had "just arrived from Stamboul looking for a virgin named Sari." A week later, by an odd coincidence, Priscilla Dean's picture "The Virgin of Stamboul" was released.

The Doll and the Egg

Today, in spite of occasional excursions into lunacy (a doll resembling Ginger Rogers parachutes out of the sky to publicize "The Magnificent Doll," a man sits for weeks on an ostrich egg to promote "The Egg and I"), the crazy publicity stunt is vanishing.

An example of the now-preferred "dramatized truth" is the case of an actress from Dallas who insured her southern accent at Lloyd's for a million dollars. The insurance policy was perfectly above-board but the contract ran for only 24 hours. Then there was the press agent who watched three actors being tested before the camera with Andrea Leeds to determine her partner in a kissing sequence; the next day the story of the actress who had been kissed 468 times in four hours, establishing a new "osculatory record," was in every newspaper.

When "The Prisoner of Zenda" opened on Broadway, a Hollywood press agent flew 12 lone inhabitants of Zenda, Ontario, to New York in a chartered plane. The newspapers reported, with perfect truth, that "the entire population of the town of Zenda" had come to the premiere.

Simple stunts, but good press agentry. While Sonja Henie and Tyrone Power were thriving on a studio-sponsored romance, the skating star one morning found herself stranded in her suite on the 17th floor of Detroit's Book-Cadillac hotel by a strike paralyzing room service and elevators. Jack Cooper, a press agent, called local reporters in to watch Power clamber up 17 floors with a loaded breakfast tray. The papers gave a glowing account of "Sonja Henie's rescue."

These "romance publicity tieups" are routine in Hollywood. Claudette Colbert eloped with Dr. Joel Pressman to Yuma one morning at 1:30; after duly notifying Hollywood columnist Louella Parsons. The marriages of Deanna Durbin and Shirley Temple were covered by the press as if they were peace conferences. When Victor Mature, "a beautiful hunk of man," was photographed in public with 30 blondes in one year, his fan mail shot up. And everyone knew that James Stewart dated "263 glamour girls" before he went into the Army. His publicity agent saw to that.

400 Press Agents

Hollywood's 400 press agents range from $50-a-week "apprentices" to the $100,000-a-year publicity directors such as M-G-M's Howard Strickling and 20th Century-Fox's Harry Brand, acknowledged masters in shaping public opinion.

A major studio's publicity department is organized like a metropolitan newspaper, with reporters, a copy desk, photographers and contact people for national magazines, newspapers, wire services, tradepapers, the foreign press. There are feature writers, gossip "planters," fashion experts, art directors.

One of the masters of the dramatized news event is S. Charles Einfeld, former $156,000-a-year vicepresident in charge of advertising and publicity for Warner Bros., and now president of Enterprise Productions. Einfeld is credited by many with the invention of the "junket." In 1933 he sent the stars of "42nd Street" on a coast-to-coast trip aboard the "42nd Street Special," bringing the magic of Hollywood to small towns which had never seen film stars in the flesh. Special trains carried the press from New York and Hollywood to the the world premieres of "Dodge City," "Virginia City" and "Santa Fe Trail," held in those cities. "Knute Rockne, All-American" premiered in South Bend, Ind.; scene of Rockne's great football-coaching triumphs at Notre Dame University. "Destination Tokyo," a submarine picture, was previewed on the bottom of San Francisco Bay, inside a submarine which had been in action in Japanese waters.

Einfeld has a knack for twisting an event to his client's advantage. When Harvard undergraduates voted Ann Sheridan the actress least likely to succeed, he showed Miss Sheridan in front of a mule, commenting on the comparative salaries of Harvard graduates and Hollywood actresses.

Since pretty girls are the staple of Hollywood publicity, press agents sit up nights trying to find new stunts for them. The display of female pulchritude may range from tightly corseted ladies "picketing" their studio in protest against the tight corsets which they have to wear in "The Private Affairs of Bel Ami" to Goldwyn girls in bathing suits taking "aptitude tests" at the Institute of Human Relations.

The Burning of Atlanta

Rewards, lawsuits, "nation-wide searches," disasters, threatening letters—are all good for free advertising space. The search for actresses to play "Scarlett O'Hara," "Bernadette" and "Amber" became world-wide stunts. The burning of Atlanta in "Gone With the Wind" made front pages everywhere simply because the studio withheld advance announcement. Reporters, following the screaming fire engines to Culver City, where the entire Selznick studio seemed to be going up in flames, found mimeographed "news" stories and telephones for their convenience.

Most stars, aware of the sweet uses of publicity, gladly cooperate with their press agents. But John Barrymore for years refused to imprint his profile in the cement in front of Grauman's Chinese theatre in Hollywood, where most screen immortals have left their footprints. Finally he agreed to "play" the scene for the newsreel cameras, provided the actual imprint was made with a mask. But a smart press agent "forgot" to bring the mask along so he had the Great Profile into the wet cement while the cameras were grinding.

One of the most colorful publicity wizards is Russell Birdwell, who had an Imitation Oriental rug painted over six boulevard blocks in Culver City for the premiere of "The Garden of Allah." In San Francisco, Birdwell invited every one named Young to the press preview of a new Loretta Young picture. Thousands came, including Chinese Youngs from Chinatown. Birdwell sometimes thinks of himself as a humanitarian fighting for neglected causes. Not long ago, he read that practically all the cats had disappeared from the Philippines during the war. Sensing a worthwhile cause, he arranged for actress Eve Arden to sponsor sending a shipload of American cats to Manila. The authorities couldn't quite see the value of the cause but it got Birdwell (and his client) a lot of publicity.

The mobbing of stars by frenzied fans and bobby-soxers seeking autographs used to be a convenient means of getting free publicity. But it was overpromoted and now has become a real problem of the latest headache. Mobs of bobby-soxers, acting to perfection the part of lunatics, have torn actresses' expensive gowns, and knocked down and half stripped screen heroes. Things have become so bad that many stars are honestly afraid of being mobbed and mauled at railroad stations, notels and theatres; their dark glasses and side-door escapes are not poses, but actual self-protection.

Seldom have picture stars refused to perpetrate publicity gags, however inane. Hollywood therefore still cherishes the memory of the arrival of Olsen and Johnson to film "Hellzapoppin." A press agent had an idea that can hardly be described as highly original: the two slapstick comedians, on arrival, should throw lemon pies at each other while newsreel cameras recorded the scene for posterity. But when Olsen and Johnson got their cue to start pitching, they turned and with the aim of experts hurled the pies into the press agent's face.

Mickey Rooney Lone Kid Star to Last; Shirley Making a 'Comeback'; Deanna, Judy, Gloria Jean Started at 11-14

By HERMAN SCHOENFELD

It started back in the middle 1930s when Shirley Temple, as a tot, won America's heart and climbed to the pinnacle of boxoffice fame. Since that time more than 50,000 kids annually have been either carted directly to Hollywood's golden gate by hopeful and ambitious parents—or the parents hired agents to represent them and flood the studios with photos, descriptions and affidavits swearing to the charms of the youngsters in question. It's become part of the American dream that every kid has the chance to become either President of the United States or a prodigy of the silver screen.

The amount of faith that parents, friends, Chambers of Commerce, Mayors, and local exhibitors have placed in the talents of youngsters is beyond estimate.

But the record with respect to the lasting success of child actors is a discouraging one. It holds bad news for Margaret O'Brien, Butch Jenkins, Peggy Ann Garner, Jo Ann Marlowe, Dean Stockwell, Bobby Driscoll and the rest of the current flock of subteen-age cinema players. All of them will do well to save their money while they are making it.

A Million Kids

In the past 20 years, since the screen has talked, about 1,000,000 kids between the ages of four and 10 have been looked over by talent executives with a considerable number actually launched on film careers. Of that number, only a handful survived their first two or three pictures and only one, Mickey Rooney, developed into a top star able to stand by himself as a solid b.o. draw.

Shirley Temple, although not currently in Rooney's class as a marquee attraction, is another exceptional case of a kid star recapturing as a grownup a large part of her former stature. Other juve stars, like Judy Garland and Deanna Durbin, who stayed in the big time as they matured into young misses, are different matters since they were launched into pictures after they passed the crucial ages of 11 to 13 years.

Failure of the very young set of cinematic hopefuls to stand up under the vicissitudes of time is notwithstanding the brilliant sendoff and followup campaigns that most of the kids received.

Take the classic case of Jackie Coogan, who goes back to days before talkers. Coogan made his debut in the auspicious company of no less than Charlie Chaplin. But after scoring heavily in "The Kid" and several subsequent films, Coogan's film career was finished by the time he reached the age of 10. After a three-year absence from the screen, he returned and made some sporadic appearances, but from a boxoffice standpoint his days as a film star were over.

Jackie's brother, Robert, also made a prominent start in "Sooky" and "Skippy" but his career was even shorter. Another sensational start in pictures was given to Davy Lee, when he appeared at the age of four with Al Jolson in "The Singing Fool." This was one of the first pictures to have talking and singing, and for that reason, as well as the drawing power of Jolson, it shot Davey to overnight fame. But he was seen in only a few more pictures. Within five years he was gone from the screen. Jolson recently reported the interesting fact that while overseas on a USO tour, a six-foot GI tapped him on the back and said, "I'm the kid that sat on your knee while you sang 'Sonny Boy'." It was Davey Lee.

The Gals

As a three-year-old tot in "Moby Dick," back in 1930, Virginia Weidler stood out as prominently as Margaret O'Brien does today. But since 1939, her film roles have been few and at last reports she was singing for a disk company. One of the most touted juvenile skyrockets of the past two decades was Bobby Breen, the lad with the freak singing voice. Eddie Cantor featured Bobby on his radio program for months, and in 1936 the boy was starred in "Let's Sing Again" with an elaborate fanfare. Three years later Bobby was through with films—or vice versa. He's playing niteries and vaudeville.

For seven years, Mary Kornman was the "leading lady" of Hal Roach's "Our Gang," the comedy shorts with kiddie casts. As she grew up, Mary appeared in a few pictures but stardom never gave her the nod. Dozens of other kids received thorough cinema schooling in the "Our Gang" comedies, also in the "Mickey McGuire" series starring Mickey Rooney and the Vitagraph kiddie shorts that starred Bobby Connelly. The only one to get into marquee lights after growing up was Rooney. Jackie Cooper also did well as a youngster and kept working steadily up to the time he went into the Army but he never topped the performance he gave as a small kid in "The Champ."

Cora Sue Collins, one of the baby darlings of the screen some dozen years ago, and Edith Fellows, who was popular around the same time, did not follow through as screen bets when they entered the bobbysox period. Edith turned to the stage a few years ago while Cora Sue turned up in "Roughly Speaking" last season after a long absence. Freddie Bartholomew and Jackie Searle also have nothing to their credit now compared to the successes of their infancy.

Leon Janney flourished in films for a few seasons and eventually returned to the stage where he started his career at the age of two. Patty Hale called it quits after two pictures. And Jane Withers, after going exceptionally strong for eight or nine years, has slowed down considerably—at least she's been more publicized than employed. Even the versatile Mitzi Green had to turn to the stage and cafes.

Naturally, Hollywood has developed theories with respect to child players. One, amply proven by past events, is that a couple of hits doesn't make a permanent star out of a youngster. Personalities of children can change radically within a space of months—from one picture to another—and the change frequently transforms an appealing youngster into a negative, and even annoying character. On the other hand, many kids who show no thespic talents or inclinations as babes turn out to be oozing with personality when slightly more developed.

Deanna and Judy

Policy of waiting worked out well with Deanna Durbin and Judy Garland who did not crash the films until they were about 14. Jane Powell, one of the current brood of young players, also started in pictures at the age of 14. Gloria Jean had passed 11, the crucial age for girls, when she broke out as a singing prodigy in "The Under Pup." Roddy MacDowall also started his Hollywood career at the age of 14, though he made his first appearance in British films when he was eight.

It took a million aspirants to produce a couple of lasting topnotchers like Shirley Temple and Mickey Rooney. Even in the case of a natural-born trouper like Miss Temple, there was a time when it was feared she would not be successful in making the changeover from baby to lady.

In a few cases, there was some amusingly prophetic aspects in the title of pictures in which juveniles have appeared. Mary Kornman's last film, in 1940, was "On the Spot." Shortly before his film fadeout, Tommy Bupp appeared in "The Way of All Flesh." Especially young Hollywood flesh. And the second and last feature in which Patty Hale appeared was titled "I Was Framed." Which is as good an alibi as any.

PETE SMITH

Whose "Specialties" were again voted Number One in live action field of short subjects by exhibitor readers of "Fame Magazine" and "Showmen's Trade Review."

Schary's RKO Deal Gives Him One Pic A Year; Also Continues As 'Consultant'

Dore Schary will receive total profits, after deduction of distribution costs, from one film yearly which he'll personally produce, under terms of his new pact with RKO making him exec veepee over the studio's production activities. In addition, although the actual production contract runs only five years, Schary has the option to continue at the same salary with RKO as general supervisor over production for an indefinite longer period.

Inking of the new pact, announced New Year's Day (1) by RKO prexy N. Peter Rathvon, confirmed reports that Schary would take over the post that's been vacant since the death last February of Charles W. Koerner. Date on which Schary joins RKO is indefinite, depending on how soon he can break away from David O. Selznick's Vanguard Films, to which he's under contract for another 11 months.

Clause in the RKO pact giving Schary the option to stay on as consultant after his first five years of actual production are finished points up a new theory recently evolved by many top inside producers who've joined the major studios. In addition to the fact that they can turn out their own pictures without having to bear a large studio's overhead, the chief factor in the theory is the spread in tax payments.

Contracts give such production chiefs a chance to draw down a certain salary over a long period of time but the weekly salary is only half of what they would draw if they stuck to the original short-term contract. Instead of paying income taxes for seven years, consequently, on perhaps $5,000 weekly, they pay taxes over a 15-year period on only $2,500 weekly. Henry Blanke, for example, had such a contract with Warners under those terms and so takes advantage of the spread in tax structure. In case of his death before the expiration of his pact, the salary is paid to his estate.

Made Four for RKO

Although Schary is under contract to Vanguard, his last four productions were turned out on the RKO lot, which production activities have been headed up by Rathvon since Koerner's death. In a statement to studio personnel last Thursday (2), Schary declared he would readjust production operations but assured the workers and staff there would be no general changes in personnel.

New exec producer began his 14-year picture career as a writer and in 1938 received an Oscar for his screen treatment of "Boys Town" for Metro. That studio later made him an exec producer and he stayed there until joining Vanguard. He's also the author of several plays, including "One Every Minute" and "Man of Ideas."

'Outlaw' Booked For 22 Texas Theatres

Dallas.

Howard Hughes' "The Outlaw" has obtained local bookings at last—22 of them. It will open here Jan. 10 at 22 nabe houses, none of them associated with the Interstate Circuit, which so far has refused to book the film.

According to Fred M. Jack, southwestern divisional manager of United Artists, distributor of the film, "we will control advertising here. There will be nothing objectional." The main controversy around the film is its objectional posters.

Again An Article For 'Variety'

By GEORGE JESSEL

(1926-1947)

SCENE: GEORGE JESSEL'S OFFICE AT 20TH CENTURY-FOX STUDIO, BEVERLY HILLS, CALIFORNIA.

MR JESSEL ENTERS OUTER OFFICE.

Georgie Jessel

Jessel: Miss McKee, I hate to start making an after-dinner speech to you so early in the morning, but I have gotten to an age where I face life with facts. Now, if you will look out, Miss McKee, you will see that it is raining; you also know how much I lost yesterday on the horses; you know that there is a note from Zanuck on my desk insulting me. Let's look at these facts realistically: The day is anything but good...it's raining to pieces outside; all this office umglick is on my desk. So please don't make me any good morning, and remember, if I wanted somebody to lie to me I would have a relative as my first secretary, Miss McKee, not you....

Jessel exits to his private office. Business of looking over desk. From under desk comes Lew Cooper, Joe Cooper, Murray Ritter, and several visitors.

Jessel: Lew, I know that you have daily different friends of yours to visit the studio but they must stop getting in my desk.

Lew: Okay, but when you want things wholesale in New York don't promise everybody that gives you a dress for $14.95 that when they get out here they can kiss Betty Grable.

The Coopers and rest of crowd leave hurriedly. One of the women is heard to say, "Since he is a producer, it isn't the same Jessel."

Jessel (touched by this subtle remark, picks up telephone): Miss McKee, be sure to send three dozen roses to whoever it was that insulted me just now. Cooper will have the address, I am sure...And send Miss Murk, my private secretary, in.

Jessel lights cigar while waiting for Miss Murk, and sings softly (off-key).

Miss Murk: G. J., there are five manuscripts Mr. Zanuck wants you to read within the next hour and give him a report on. Mr. Brand of Publicity wants you to address the Exhibitors Luncheon this noon. You know it's Moe Croveney week. The affair is at the Ambassador Hotel and the company will have a car here to drive you back and forth.

Jessel: Fine...I'll make it.

Miss Murk: There is also a note from Mr. Zanuck that you are not to leave the studio.

Jessel: Fine...I'll make it. Tell Mr. Brand to let the 600 Exhibitors come here to my office. Cooper will see that they get in and give them all cigars.

Miss Murk: I hate to disturb you about this, but Miss Andrews says you are not to teach your daughter any such remarks as she came home with yesterday after she left you. She also says she knows that Mr. Cooper is a schm——, but you are not to teach that word to your child.

Jessel: (Rises to his full heighth.) You will call Miss Andrews, my lovely ex-wife, and tell her that despite my having no education I have this last week been the toastmaster for the President of the United States and that my vocabulary is beyond reproach, and if my good friend, Mr. Cooper, is a schm——, there is no need for me to tell my child that he is an Essex Street Santa Claus. What else is on the agenda?

Miss Murk: You have several tests to see for "Nightmare Alley," and there is some more scoring to do for "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now." Al Newman wants you to hear this new music.

Jessel: Newman...always a Newman. Did you know, Miss Murk, that statistics show there are more Newmans at 20th Century-Fox than there are buffaloes left in America? Well, let's get to work, and incidentally, I was rather rude to Miss McKee this morning. Call Jules Furthman and get some orchids for her to square me. Now before I do anything else I've got to write that Anniversary piece for the VARIETY.

Miss Murk: Yes. They should have had it last month.

Jessel: They should have had it last month! For what they're paying me to write this article, they should be satisfied if they don't get it at all. All right, let's reminisce. I guess that's what Abel wants. By the way, Miss Murk, can I use some of that stuff I wrote for that Northwestern Magazine about the old days in vaudeville?

Miss Murk: I don't know, Mr. Jessel. Is it ethical to give the same stuff to two magazines?

Jessel: I don't know why not. I did[illegible] get paid for that either, so nobody is getting stuck. But wait a [illegible]—Joe Laurie, Jr., writes for VARIETY, and if I'm not absolutely accur[illegible] he will take me to task for it. Smith & Dale were not in "Peter Pan" and Roger Imhof is not a hotel in New England but a fine, high-class Irish comedian...but anyway, let's get to work on this article for VARIETY.

The teletalk buzzes. Jessel answers it.

Voice: Ben Hecht is on the phone and wants you to make a speech with Quentin Reynolds on the Palestine Resistance Movement.

Jessel: Good...I'll do it.

Voice: Also, the group against the resistance wants you to make a talk for them.

Jessel: Good...I'll speak at both occasions and make a note that I don't commit myself as to whether I am for or against the resistance movement in Palestine. It's easy for me to do this as I'm plenty far away from the scene, so I'll tell some jokes about Cantor. All right, Miss Murk, back to the article for VARIETY. It was my good fortune as a little boy, at the age of nine, to have first come in contact with the VARIETY. I remember that I was nine because I was walking along Broadway with my little makeup box under my arm and stood outside Shanley's listening to the party that was going on inside when they were celebrating Al Jolson's 55th birthday. And it was just about that time that I met Sime Silverman about whom I could write page upon page hurling superlatives with every sentence, and they would be deserved. And the same sincerity, the same on-the-square attitude toward life, people, and the amusement business that Sime invested in the VARIETY since its inception has not left this publication even though Sime has left the scene. I spoke at his funeral and in the first two rows of Temple Emanuel I remember seeing the faces of Jimmy Walker, George M. Cohan and Damon Runyon. They too have left the Laughing '20's. All are sleeping under the hill, all of them: Sam Bernard, Hitchy, Foy, sleeping on, dreaming of the fun at the Friars Club...and how proud Froman looked as he walked into the Empire theatre with Maude Adams on his arm. It is impossible at my stage of the game not to become sentimental as each year finds me more alone. Force of habit through the years makes me look through the pages of VARIETY, not quite understanding why I don't find some news of the names that were so important to me as a kid around Broadway.

(Buzzer sounds)

Voice: Mr. Zanuck wants to talk to you.

Jessel: Yes, Darryl, I'll be right over just as soon as I finish this article for VARIETY. Yes, Darryl...Yes, Darryl...Yes, Darryl...Yes, Darryl...Yes, Darryl.

"The Best Years Of Our Lives"

Wins the New York Critics' Annual Award As

The Best Picture Of The Year!

Released thru RKO Radio Pictures

LOVER!

ROVER! ROGUE!

He told the world's tallest stories ...and made them all come true!— He stormed a veiled beauty's boudoir...and made her love it!—Fabulous romance, daring exploits...told against the splendor of Arabian nights, Persian palaces, perfumed harems, uncharted seas and exotic lands!

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, Jr.
MAUREEN O'HARA ★ WALTER SLEZAK in "SINBAD THE SAILOR"

with

ANTHONY QUINN • GEORGE TOBIAS

JANE GREER • MIKE MAZURKI

Produced by STEPHEN AMES • Directed by RICHARD WALLACE

Screen Play by JOHN TWIST

RKO RADIO PICTURES

FILMED IN TECHNICOLOR

From the Heart of the South to the Heart of the World!

Walt Disney's

GREATEST AND HAPPIEST PRODUCTION

SONG OF THE SOUTH

IN TECHNICOLOR

based on the famous tales of

UNCLE REMUS and BRE'R RABBIT

Featuring

RUTH WARRICK and LUCILE WATSON

HATTIE McDANIEL • JAMES BASKETT

LUANA PATTEN • BOBBY DRISCOLL

6 HIT SONGS! including

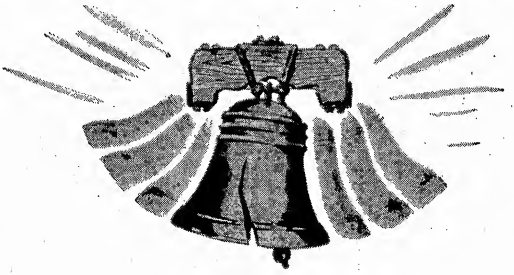
"ZIP-A-DEE DOO DAH"

"UNCLE REMUS SAID"

"SOONER OR LATER"

DISTRIBUTED BY RKO RADIO PICTURES

THE BELLS ARE RINGING



for

LIBERTY FILMS'

First Production

Frank Capra's

"IT'S A WONDERFUL LIFE"

starring

JAMES STEWART

and

DONNA REED

with

LIONEL BARRYMORE · THOMAS MITCHELL · HENRY TRAVERS

BEULAH BONDI · WARD BOND · FRANK FAYLEN · GLORIA GRAHAME

Produced and Directed by

FRANK CAPRA

Screenplay by Frances Goodrich, Albert Hackett and Frank Capra · Additional scenes by Jo Swerling

RELEASING THRU RKO-RADIO

NATIONAL RELEASE JAN. 30TH

Authors Should Own Copyrights And Limit the Usages

So Argues Ex-G.M. of ASCAP, Veteran Expert in Copyright Matters

By EDWIN CLAUDE MILLS

Nothing contributes as much to human happiness and comfort, and the advancement of civilization, from which all culture derives, as man's ability to produce an original thought. Of all the animals man alone has this capacity. It is rightly referred to as "genius."

Amongst the millions, whose abilities and capacities in general are about equal, no single quality is so rare as an ability to create an original thought in the form of a story, musical composition, song, painting or invention that will be accepted by and become popular generally with great masses of the world's population.

The primary beneficiary of such genius is the public, the whole people. All and each and every one of us who is literate are the beneficiaries.

The publisher of literature does not write the story; nor the publisher or entrepreneur of a musical work himself compose it. The actor speaks lines and interprets a character conceived by another; the producer of the show does not write the play. The dealer in art is rarely himself a painter.

But these brokers, these middlemen of culture and art, are an absolute necessity. They are the channel through which the products of the creators are conveyed to the public.

Only by a huge investment of his or his banker's capital can the producer of a motion picture bring to the millions of cinema addicts the entertainment, information and yes, even culture (regardless of those who decry the "movies") which this medium affords. The publisher of a book or a song must make a substantial financial commitment in order to bring a story effectively to

Legitimate Profit Move

The men and the corporations who make these expenditures do so only with a perfectly legitimate profit motive; they are not, in their capacity as middle-men, brokers or entrepreneurs of entertainment for the public, acting as philanthropists. They are business men.

Unless these men function, and find profit in doing it, the public will not receive the benefit of creative genius. They, therefore, render a great and valuable service both to the creator and the ultimate consumer. They have a proper and honorable position in their relationship to the transaction.

It is fundamental that an unpublished story, song or play is a nullity. No matter how good or worthy—it has no merit or worth to the public unless widely disseminated through commercial media—publication, production on the stage and/or in motion pictures, radio broadcasting, etc.

The public, final and foremost beneficiary of the labor of author and publisher, determines by the measure of its acceptance or rejection of a work, the true value of the contribution made to erudition, education or entertainment.

The governments of the world organize this situation by enacting so-called "copyright laws." The primary and fundamental purpose of these laws is to encourage those who have the genius to create, to labor at that genius and disclose the result to the public. In other words, the true purpose is to benefit the public by encouraging the author to create.

The government in effect says—"Now you are, or you want to be an author. You want to write original stories or music, or express original ideas that you believe would be of interest and benefit to the public. Very well. We have nothing of your ability, but this is the deal we are willing to make with you. You just go ahead and create, and then publish (which means to circulate copies to the public) and in consideration of your doing so your government will vest in you the exclusive right to print, reprint, publish and vend copies of your work. This right will be vested in you exclusively, for a limited period of time, at the expiration of which period the work shall become the property of the public—in other words, shall become part of the public domain. You can charge any price you wish for the work—you can sell it outright, or license it, or parcel out the various rights—such as serial rights, motion picture rights, stage rights, broadcasting rights, mechanical reproduction rights, etc., etc., etc. For the stated period you will own all the rights for the entire world, because your government has effected reciprocal copyright protection treaties with most other civilized countries, and your work will be protected against infringement abroad as well as at home."

The publisher—in the commercial sense, as a middle-man or broker—is not within the contemplation of the law. The law aims to encourage the author for the benefits of the public—so that the latter may have the benefit of the author's genius—through holding out the hope of financial reward to the author in sums to be measured in exact ratio to the extent of public acceptance and approval of the work.

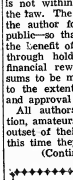
All authors are, without exception, amateurs or "beginners" at the outset of their careers as such. At this time they have no standing, no

(Continued on page 71)

Hollywood Vs. Writers

By BERTRAM BLOCH
Eastern Story Editor, 20th-Fox

As I begin this, somewhere in the United States some young writer is sitting at his typewriter sweating out the last pages of his first novel.



Bert Bloch

The front of his mind is working with his characters, their dialog, their actions. But what is in the back of his mind? What lurks there? The hope and desire that the book will be No. 1 in a series of novels which will carry our hero into the ranks of the famous?

No—not if a number of earnest and angry men in and allied to the publishing business are to be heeded.

In their opinion our young author's back-of-the-mind musings have to do only with sales to Hollywood. The prospect of motion picture money, big money, money in the tens and hundreds of thousands, has muddied the stream of his artistic consciousness and has perverted his ambition.

The charge that Hollywood is the weightiest of the many drags on American writing comes in several forms and with varying degrees of vehemence.

But boiled down, the picture companies are accused mainly of this—by buying only the second rate, inciting authors through their subsidies to write the second rate, and draining off the promising and conspicuous talents to fill highly gilded studio-writers' cells.

These allegations are founded in truth, but they are not the whole truth nor even a substantial part of it and they most certainly do not furnish an adequate explanation of what is wrong with American writing.

Picture companies do buy the second-rate—the best of the second-rate—in large quantities. So do the publishers and so does the American public—first. Hollywood also buys a fair percentage of the few first-rate books, and some of the third-rate. But it buys very little of the last—a very small percentage of what the publishers publish. Again and again reviewers, condemning a book—or a play—accuse the author of having had an eye on Hollywood, or if they are not so pointed they satisfy themselves that this work, lacking all literary merit but possessing a superabundance of lurid incident, will quickly find its way to the screen. But seldom indeed do these sibylline utterances bear fruit. Gaudy plots find few takers in Hollywood today. If it is true that writers or publishers are lowering their sights for Hollywood they are compromising their ideals to little purpose and with little encouragement from the motion picture industry. Contrary to their alleged belief, Hollywood does not automatically reject a book because it is well written. In particular "well-written" book is rejected, it is likely to be for one of the following reasons: it is too slight, it deals with a subject that might bring a screen company into conflict with an organized religious, political or social group, or it is a subject too limited in appeal for the mass motion picture audience.

That Sordid Detail—Lucre

If knowledge of the picture industry's disposition to avoid boycotts and suits is influencing writers to turn to less searching studies and characterizations in fiction, then, I suppose, Hollywood is adding its weight in the scale. But paradoxically, every day adds to the number of the young writers turning to subjects which, several years ago, subjects which hitherto Hollywood has considered taboo. And, to make a montage of paradoxes, Hollywood is being sufficiently impressed by the honesty and passion of these daring ones to begin reaching out for stories written for the sole reason that the author thought that he had something worth saying. And last paradox of all, when, as has happened on occasion, authors and publishers have conspired to create what they believed would be a "sure" seller to the pictures, in almost every case they have failed to make a sale.

I am not suggesting that Hollywood is now making pictures in the spirit of Evangelism, but merely pointing out that Hollywood is willing and anxious to follow writers into a more rarefied atmosphere and has no desire to pull them down to lower levels of writing.

The Playwrights and Novelists

The charge that Hollywood periodically decimates the ranks of going novelists and playwrights can more easily be substantiated by accusing critics. Taking the playwrights first, we find that the few well established, regularly successful playwrights can and do pick their jobs in Hollywood and their time and their compensation.

Hollywood.

There was a time, not so long since, when the literati perched smugly in the high altitudes of art and looked down their noses at Hollywood. The torchbearers scoffed at the cinema and the now shop-worn gag "There's no use doing a story for Hollywood; Hollywood has a story" gained currency among the authors who hoped to be credited with serious purpose.

It now looks very much as though this situation is being reversed. The literary artists—or, at any rate, the publishers who are their contact with the public—are going Hollywood, and Hollywood shows more and more unmistakable signs of going arty. There's no use in a writer doing a story for the publisher, the publishers have a story!

And the story the publishers have is nothing more nor less than the story Hollywood has been using for many years. It isn't of course, exactly one story. There are really three stories. The three may be catalogued as follows:

1. The story of the man who is irresistible to women and virtually has to employ a bodyguard to get to bed alone.

2. The story of the sexy, unscrupulous, intriguing female who may be referred to as the witch woman, if you don't care how you use your consonants.

3. The story of the harlot with the heart of gold.

These have long been considered surefire boxoffice. For years Hollywood producers have been buying best sellers at fabulous prices, setting high-salaried script-writers to adapt them to the screen and coming up almost invariably with some variant of one of the above mentioned yarns. Sometimes they have kept the title of the best-seller and sometimes they haven't.

It's a System

Publishers being canny business men with something of a flair for showmanship themselves, it was bound to happen, sooner or later. And it has now reached the point where most of the best sellers seem to be tailored in advance to standard picture patterns. The book club system has developed into a virtual

They move back and forth from coast to coast with the utmost ease and with little obvious effect on their playwriting. The lot of the younger, newer playwrights is not so happy. Too many of them have found the Theatre today a place to starve in. Little has been done by the Theatre to help playwrights try their wings or keep their feet. Under the spur of necessity, most of them have been forced to turn to other trades to make a living. More have gone into radio or fiction writing than have been drawn to Hollywood. Some of these still manage to find time to write plays, though the majority of them have turned away from the Theatre with bitter disapproval of its lack of interest in them.

As to the novelists: few beginning novelists are "tapped" by Hollywood. As a matter of cold fact, Hollywood today is probably offering more novelists help in the nature of subsidies to write novels than it is offering them jobs on motion picture scripts. Many successful novelists do go to Hollywood on individual assignments or on long-term contracts. Whether such a writer gives himself exclusively to motion picture writing seems to depend on the depth of his passion for his art.

I don't mean to suggest that Hollywood has gone altruistic. The motion picture business is still viewed by many of the people who run it as a purely commercial venture with no obligation to society, or to writing as an important part of American culture. Much too can be said in criticism of the restrictions put on writers once they are working in Hollywood. The motion picture industry's attitude toward writing is still too often undiscriminating, fearful and even downright stupid or cruel. A huge reservoir of talent is being drained too often to too little purpose. But Hollywood on the whole is moving in the right direction, and I am not at all sure that the same can be said of either the publishing business or the Theatre today.

Reade's $4,000,000 Acquisition of 15 Storrs Theatres

Circuit of 15 theatres in New Jersey and New York has been purchased by Walter Reade from the estate of Frank V. Storrs. Deal, which involved conversion of Reade's leaseholds on the theatres, was financed by the First National Bank of Boston with the advance of $4,000,000 for a period of 10 years.

Reade had been operating the theatres under lease for the past 20 years. The loan, partially used in the purchase, will also pay for development of airconditioning and remodeling on the houses and for new properties to be added to the circuit. New corporation, Walter Reade's Theatres, Inc., has been formed to take over the theatres and to acquire others throughout the U. S.

'Year' Has It

Results of the current "10 Best" lists selected by film critics throughout the country is expected to result in a mad scramble for titles with the word "Year" for forthcoming production slates.

Almost every critic chose "Best Years of Our Lives" as the top American film of 1946. Metro's "The Yearling," which has yet to be released nationally, received plenty of encomiums from reviewers who've thus far published their opinions on it. In addition, Metro's "Green Years" was named on many of the selections.

H'wood's 'Story' Becomes Basis For Best Seller Big Biz and Pix, Too

By FRANK FISKE

There was a time, not so long since, when the literati perched smugly in the high altitudes of art and looked down their noses at Hollywood. The torchbearers scoffed at the cinema and the now shop-worn gag "There's no use doing a story for Hollywood; Hollywood has a story" gained currency among the authors who hoped to be credited with serious purpose.

It now looks very much as though this situation is being reversed. The literary artists—or, at any rate, the publishers who are their contact with the public—are going Hollywood, and Hollywood shows more and more unmistakable signs of going arty. There's no use in a writer doing a story for the publisher, the publishers have a story!

And the story the publishers have is nothing more nor less than the story Hollywood has been using for many years. It isn't of course, exactly one story. There are really three stories. The three may be catalogued as follows:

1. The story of the man who is irresistible to women and virtually has to employ a bodyguard to get to bed alone.

2. The story of the sexy, unscrupulous, intriguing female who may be referred to as the witch woman, if you don't care how you use your consonants.

3. The story of the harlot with the heart of gold.

These have long been considered surefire boxoffice. For years Hollywood producers have been buying best sellers at fabulous prices, setting high-salaried script-writers to adapt them to the screen and coming up almost invariably with some variant of one of the above mentioned yarns. Sometimes they have kept the title of the best-seller and sometimes they haven't.

It's a System

Publishers being canny business men with something of a flair for showmanship themselves, it was bound to happen, sooner or later. And it has now reached the point where most of the best sellers seem to be tailored in advance to standard picture patterns. The book club system has developed into a virtual guarantee that a book chosen by one of the clubs will make the best seller lists. Book ballyhoo is being increasingly tied up with picture ballyhoo. The publisher judges the manuscripts submitted to him with an eye to the probable picture profits. He's on the lookout for the heroine, the witch woman and the golden-hearted harlot. There are undoubtedly a great many conscientious authors who are writing on other themes but their chance of hitting the big time in the book market is slim. If they're smart they'll come to Hollywood and try to peddle their yarns as original film material.

Just how many variants of "Kitty" and "Forever Amber" have been snatched up by the publishers and exploited with a view to selling them to the film makers for big money is something the statisticians would have to figure out, but there are plenty of them. It has been pointed out that they seem to be done mostly and done better by women and some critics have referred to them as feminine success stories. At that, they stick pretty closely to the old Cinderella pattern, except that it isn't by losing her slipper that Cinderella gets the prince.

Mostly the cinema sin for the season is being done in costume, the most modern example of the witch woman being 20th-Fox's "Leave Her to Heaven." Hunt Stromberg's "The Strange Woman" brought her as close to modernity as early day Bangor, Me., and Universal-International has just put out a new version of Robert Hichens' story of femme turpitude in 1900, "Bella Donna," this time under the title, "Temptation."

At first glance "Captain from Castile" and "The Black Rose," both on best seller lists and both due to come up from 20th-Fox, would seem to be off the Hollywood tri-sex beam. But one can't help a suspicion that Samuel Shellabarger and Thomas Costain were at least considering how it would all look in Technicolor as they wrote.

That Guy Again

"The Hucksters" advances the rather novel idea of telling the truth about the inner workings of the radio and advertising agency business, but quickly discloses a hero who is nothing if not the irresistible bedfellow of the old picture plot.

In short, Hollywood has bought books for picture making until it has reached the point where the writers and publishers are making books for Hollywood. Life imitates art and art is imitating the imitation.

And now the production pundits, having more or less unconsciously conditioned the literary market to their factory requirements, are going to have to find writers. They're complaining about the triteness and standardization of Hollywood product. Samuel Goldwyn is deploring the fact there is a dearth of thought and ideas in the current Hollywood product. Walter Wanger is pointing out the need for a significant message. Various producers are complaining of the lack of novelty in film material.

Some Switcheroos

In "The Best Years of Our Lives" Goldwyn has done something about it. William Wyler in putting the MacKinley Kantor story on the screen has pretty well avoided Hollywood corn and has ignored the three top standby characters completely. Frank Capra has done as much in "It's a Wonderful Life" and Sidney Franklin makes Metro's best picture of the year without adding a single one of the Filmland sex trio to Marjorie Kinnan Rawlins' "The Yearling."

Several recent pictures are reaching for novel touch by including shots of Heaven or, at least, angels in the story. Even Capra has gone for a guardian angel in "It's a Wonderful Life" and it looks now as though the angel might be going to take the place of the sexy hero as one of the industry's overworked characters.

But, anyway, don't hesitate to submit a story to Hollywood—Hollywood doesn't have one at the moment.

Freelance Writers

By THYRA SAMTER WINSLOW

Webster defines freelance as: "a. Formerly a knight whose services were purchasable by any state or commander; hence a person who acts on his own responsibility without regard to authority, and b. Colloquial. One who writes especially for newspapers or magazines, without being regularly employed."

Thyra Samter Winslow

There you are—practically a hobo. For the same Mr. Webster defines a hobo as: "A migratory worker, a professional tramp." And he never wrote a truer word. I ought to know. I've been a ho—pardon me, I mean freelance writer since I was 17—before that I had quite a respectable newspaper job. And that, as any of my friends will be glad to tell you, is a long, long time. Except for fairly brief stretches in Hollywood I've made a living—and without borrowing money, too, as a migratory worker, without being regularly employed. And I love it!

Of course there are freelance writers who are not hobos at all. Somerset Maugham, Fannie Hurst, a whole lot of them—sure of themselves, successful, even a bit smug. They've licked the game. They know where their next year's meals are coming from.

The freelance writers I like to align myself with are a more adventurous crew. Not the failures who can't sell at all and shouldn't be writers, anyhow—and only think they are because they are conceited enough to think some editor is going to discover them. But the thousands who are having a great time saying what they want to say as well as they can say it and managing to make a living at it, whether they write for the slicks, the pulps or publish "bound books" ever so often.

There are the editors. I'm rather fortunate in that the same editors continue to buy my things. If they didn't I could always go out and slit my throat. But even my favorite editors never like the things I like best—and who can say that they are wrong? Not I, for one! On the whole, editors are wonderful—and that's NOT bootlicking. Some of my best friends are editors, though, unless they send for me, I never go to their offices during office hours. I consider Herbert Mayes and Margaret Cousins of Good Housekeeping about the best judges of short stories in America. When they buy a story of mine I go around as if I'd been awarded an Oscar—and it isn't just the money—they don't pay more than other editors do. Bill Lengel, a brilliant writer himself, and young Geraldine Rhoads, of the Fawcett Publications, know stories, too. So does Kathryn Bourne, of Liberty. The New Yorker editorial staff is erratic, and brilliant. They may know what they want—but they never make it very clear to me. However, as long as they continue to accept just the stories I thought they simply wouldn't be able to stand I haven't anything to complain about. It's when they stop buying anything that I'll worry. Arthur G. Brest, of Go is hard working, enthusiastic, a swell person. Tom Robertson, of King Features, is a lamb. The gimmick there is that he'll accept everything you—that is, I—write for months on end and then, suddenly, he'll grow cold—and not accept anything. Just about the time I've measured out the poison and am about to take a hearty draught, he'll telephone an assignment or two—and there I am, all set—for a while.

There are other editors, too—but what's the use? They'll buy my things if they like them—without this free plug. And here's a slight hint to the new freelance—if he needs hints: Editors keep their jobs NOT by turning down stories but by buying them. They actually are always looking for good stories. That's the way they make a living. Every editor I know, even if he doesn't like me or know me or care one bit about my personal life, will buy anything I send him—if he likes it well enough. As to his likes, well, that's a few million other stories.

And the Dear, Dear, P.A.s

Then there are the press agents. They look askance—and rightly—at the freelance. Too many of them are free loaders, with no outlet in print. Part of the press agent's job should be sizing up his customers, the freelance as well as those with regular jobs. Some press agents are wonderful. There's Ted Saucier, for one. Whenever I need information that even touches on hotels I fly to him. He knows not only the Waldorf-Astoria, which he publicizes so brilliantly, but practically everything about New York's night—and day—life as well. If I had a dictaphone along when I talked with him my story would be written. Richard Maney is another brilliant publicity man—as every reader of VARIETY well knows. Not only does he write well, himself, but he'll tell you just the things you are trying to find out. Bernard Sobel, now buried under yards of Celanese, still carries the theatre in his heart and is a great help to every writer—freelance or staff.

All of the women press agents are as helpful as they are good looking: Marian Byram, Jean Dalrymple, Eleanor Lambert, Phyllis Perlman, Dorothy Ross. Some of the men press agents could learn a lot from them. The men I object to are (a.) those who send me old jokes that wouldn't be good if they were new and blame their clients for them; (b.) those who invite me to their nightclubs—and then spend the entire evening at my table—trying to be helpful, no doubt, but boring me to extinction—and spoiling what might have been a pleasant, on-the-cuff evening; and (c.) the press agent who has allowed the success of his clients to go to his head and I do mean — — —well, you name him! But anyhow, I, and every other freelance writer I know, do need and depend on press agents. Editors are no longer suspicious of them. They have—or should have—valuable background material for both fact and fiction stories. And as for those for-free parties—I love 'em! Going to them and openings or second-nights at the theatre are, to me, part of the rewards of freelancing. I always try to pay back in print. There's honor—even among freelance writers, you know.

The writer suffering in his attic has gone out. Most freelance writers I know do pretty well by themselves. Some of them are even apt to get a bit too comfortable. For, it seems to me, that part of the great fun of freelancing is never to be quite sure. If you take away the gamble and the surprise rewards—or failures—you spoil the game. It seems to me there should always be the pressure of those bills next month or at most, the month after, and vistas of gay parties, and friends and pleasant things to do and see—and long, solitary hours of work, too, and some place, always just ahead, the hope of turning out a really good piece of work.

Vigil For Van

By FRANK SULLIVAN

One afternoon not long ago I was in my hotel room in New York, crocheting some prose, when plumbers started to plumb in the next room. Eventually, as the boys worked up to the fortissimo passage in the third movement of their symphony for six wrenches, four hammers and a blow torch, I gave up and went for a walk.

Frank Sullivan

It was a chilly day but lounging along the embankment that fences St. Bartholomew's Church on East 50th street, across the street from the entrance to the Waldorf-Astoria Towers, was a group of 100 young ladies and young gentlemen, averaging about 13 years of age. They huddled there in vigil, blowing on their fingers and shifting from one foot to another.

"Who you waiting for this time?", I asked one miss.

A faraway look of ecstasy came into the child's eyes. She took a firm grip on her autograph album and sighed: "Van!"

Any time you walk along that block you can see this adolescent old guard hugging the St. Bartholomew wall, waiting for some current honeybuch to arrive or depart. All the idols stay at the Waldorf. An idol would lose caste if he didn't stay at the Waldorf.

On the day I made these researches Van drew the crowd. Frankie the Sin always blocks traffic. What would happen if the Sin and the Van both stayed at the Waldorf together is a picture to cause shudders. And once it did happen!

While I was cross-examining the vehement vestal of Van a series of falsetto shrieks suddenly shattered the air, and my little friend ran away, giving out with a shrill "E-e-e-e-e-e!" So I could not ask her what the rumpus was about, but I did not need to. I recognized the cacophony.

The Grapevine

What was up? What had happened? I found one damsel who was just coherent enough to tell me what was afoot. The grapevine had brought the sisterhood an ugly rumor that Van was planning to elude them by leaving the Waldorf at the 49th street entrance. If true, this was not cricket on Van's part. Protocol requires that the victim-idol face the music and run the gauntlet, by departing from the entrance where the vestals are gathered.

After hearing this base rumor they could not afford to take chances. They had to surround the dump. One platoon stationed itself at the 49th street entrance. A detachment of 50 or 60 sappers remained on the St. Bartholomew side, screaming. They were not screaming, you must remember, because they had actually seen Van, for they had not yet been granted this ineffable delight. They were just practising their screaming, getting in trim to cut loose properly when Gorgeous finally did appear—if.

Every time the 49th street guards would let out a scream the Park avenue squad would come scooting around the corner, knocking over old ladies, and scream too, just for the hell of it. Same with the Lexington and Bartholomew squads.

I know history will castigate me for this, but I never did find out which door Van used, or even if he came out at all, or if he did, whether he saw his shadow and went back in for six more weeks of winter. But if he outwitted the kiddies he is a cad. Yes, I say so—and a bounder. He should play ball with them. These wacky little people, the future fathers and mothers of our race [God save the Republic], are the very prop of his popularity, and of the popularity of all the movie idols.

The Clambake Award

By HARRY KURNITZ

Hollywood.

Oliver Orpheus, the story genius of Clambake Films, was pacing the floor of his office with the eager air of a man with big news to impart. He waved me to a chair, then climbed nimbly into his own.

"Take a scoop," said Orpheus. "Clambake Films is going to have a novel contest."

I pointed out that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer already had a novel contest, awarding annually a vast sum in cash and royalties. "Can you hope to top Metro?", I asked.

"Our prize," murmured Orpheus, "is the city of Cleveland, Ohio." He sneered in the general direction of Culver City. "Furthermore, the winner may keep Cleveland, or, after six months, sell the whole thing as a capital gain. We of Clambake Films," he read from a paper on his desk, "offer this as our humble and sincere inducement to the authors of America in the hope that our horizon of culture and thought may be heightened and advanced." He looked up, his shrewd, merry eyes twinkling across the desk. "That's a son-of-a-gun of a prize, ain't it, kid?"

"Sensational!", I cried, snatching at the phone on his desk. "Let me phone the Saturday Review of Literature. They'll have to tear out the front page to make room for this, but it's worth it."

"A few more details," said Orpheus. "The publisher of the prize-winning novel will receive a special award consisting of any other publishing company he chooses, which will be presented to him, lock, stock, barrel and authors. The agent of the winning novelist, in addition to the customary 10%, will receive a 99-year lease on the front booth in Romanoff's restaurant, and all his clients will be equipped, at our expense, with a new photo-electric device which cries 'Stop, Thief!' if the client so much as pauses in the vicinity of the MCA building. Naturally, with so much at stake, the judges have been chosen with infinite care: they are Princess Zoraida, a spiritualist who is in constant touch with the late Charles Dickens and who will read him all the entries; Storm Signals, the Literary Editor of the Daily Running Horse, and '—with a modest smile—yours truly.' No novel can be submitted to the contest by phone and entries which are telegraphed collect will be disqualified. If two or more writers submit identical novels, the entry bearing the earlier postmark will receive the award. There are no rules as to length, except that no writer may submit a manuscript weighing more than the writer himself."

"Eminently fair, but is the contest restricted? Can anyone compete for the rich prize?"

"An excellent question," said Orpheus. "The contest is open to every American except James M. Cain, his employees, or members of his family.

Jim Cain Proves He's Able To Raise Some Cain

And Authors Become Aware They Have Economics

By THEODORE PRATT

For the past two years the above annual by-line has been run over certain mutterings about authors' economics. It was pointed out that publishers, for one consumer of authors' goods, look upon writers with a pretty deep-seated myopia. Once, in the European Dark Ages, writers were regarded artistically with respect, but economically were thrown a bone in their attics upon the rare occasions no one else had any use for the bone.

Ted Pratt

The teeth of modern authors aren't much good for crunching hard, dry bones, and their ulcer-ridden stomachs decidedly can't cope with the unenviable fare. Also, they don't like living in attics any more. To hell with Bohemia. It's colorful, but give me the St. Regis; it's warmer and the beds are more comfortable.

That has been more or less the theme song of this department for the last two years. It could not be discerned that anyone paid much, or any, attention. Maybe the yearly words weren't loud enough.

Meanwhile, however, a couple of things were happening right in the same groove. Through more years than two, writers began to be thrown bones with a few scraps of meat attached. In Hollywood, with the book clubs, and by the best-seller lists, the bones arrived with large, juicy steaks built on. These were for a comparatively few authors. The rest had to be satisfied with a couple of fair chops at best.

But the back of the myopia, to coin a metaphor, had been broken. The publisher had glasses, even though not very efficient ones, forced on him. Through these he peered at the worm who approached him with a manuscript and to his discomfort, often saw that the worm had taken nearly human shape. The creature even looked as if it had rights, as well as a wife and some kids to feed. It might even be profitable, from the long view, to treat him better economically, particularly because rivals down the street might get the same idea.

Of course it wouldn't do to go overboard. Hang on tenaciously to the centuries old custom of taking half of the huge book club payments, letting the author keep the other half, or at least what he has left after paying his agent and straight personal income tax instead of the lower rate the publisher as a corporation pays on his like amount. Take this coin, often amounting to $50,000 as a first advance payment to each, without even blushing for having done nothing whatsoever to have earned it, the book written by the author solely and only earning it at that point because the publisher hasn't even published it yet.

Holdover From Another Era?

Hang on to taking half of all subsidiary publication rights; that's what the gentlemen publishers of the 90's did and what was good enough for them is good enough for us. Chisel out as much as possible of the picture and dramatic rights, though we'll never have anything to do with the picture or the play until we are sent free tickets for the opening. Dip into handling the radio and foreign rights for a nice fat share in spite of the author or his agent being able to do it for 10%. Hang together with other publishers in establishing these and other customs as traditional, for without them we couldn't do business. Or could we?

Middle Ages publishing viewpoints were making feeble and unenthusiastic attempts to keep up with the fact that this is the 20th Century. In the trade, authors may not have as much artistic respect as they had in Elizabethan times, but that's a commodity they've found they can do without better than they once believed—or were told. They'll now exchange it in inverse ratio to economic respect, and still do the best work they can.

But the going was tough. Finally they reached a point where they weren't going any farther forward. The pace had stopped at 50% of the book club and subsidiary rights, of picture companies almost always buying their work outright forever and forever, and making as many pictures out of it as they pleased with no further payment.

That was where matters stood last July. They stand much in the same place today. But last July a large and noisy firecracker exploded in the middle of the genteel situation. It awakened all the Katzenjammer kids. The firecracker was a little matter called the American Authors' Authority. It was cooked up by the screenwriters in Hollywood and mouthed, in their publication, through James M. Cain.

Cain rang the doorbell not twice this time, but when his finger went on it, the bell stuck. It is still buzzing, loudly, with lots of people running to many doors trying to answer it. To say that the AAA put everybody connected with authorship in the related fields of publishing and entertainment into a tizzy is to say that it put them into a TIZZY.

Here were no low-voiced murmurs once a year in a family weekly. Here was a bellow. It announced a plan. It stated specific cases and what might be done. It had a program. It showed fangs. It issued a clarion call.

It was heard, and produced turmoil that still needs no stirring. Some authors swallowed it whole, undiluted, and as first and almost savagely presented. Others became so frightened of it that they would have no part of it; they saw the teeth that were proposed to be given to the AAA to put the bite on users of written material as turning around and perhaps biting them.

Still others, the moderates said, "Wait a minute. Let's look at this thing. Let's question it. Let's consider it for what it is worth. Let's maybe study it and if it is worth anything, tone it down to reason, and try to apply it."

That's where she stands today. The original plan is being considerably altered, but kept is its basic premise of organizing writers effectively. Its greatest enemies probably are writers themselves who, being such crashing occupational individualists, can't get used to the idea of working as a team in their own economic interests. Whatever may come of the AAA-Cain plan it is generally felt that out of the boiling controversy will come certain financial reforms in the writer's affairs.

The year saw authors' economics jump from a shy column in the Anniversary VARIETY to the front pages of newspapers all over the country. Even authors became aware that they had economics.

Says
Trade Revie

THE PICTU
THE GOLD

"CALIFORNIA"
In Technicolor
Starring
RAY MILLAND
BARBARA STANWYCK
BARRY FITZGERALD
with
George Coulouris · Albert Dekker
Anthony Quinn · Frank Faylen
A JOHN FARROW Production
Directed by John Farrow
Produced by Seton I. Miller • Screen Play by Frank Butler and Theodore Strauss

"A boxoffice natural, filmed on the grand scale."
—M. P. Daily

• • •

"There'll be gold in them thar tills wherever 'California' plays. A lusty, sprawling, beautifully tinted western destined to mop up."
—Daily Variety

• • •

"A top western, solid boxoffice material. Enriched by luscious Technicolor, it's rough, it's tough, it's got plenty of action."
—The Independent

DON'T STOP COUNTING! THIS

FIGHT INFANTILE PARALYSIS

ORNIA"

Every wer, Will Be

URE WITH

EN 'GATE'!

World Premiere at N. Y. Rivoli, January 14th

"A super-western—strong contender for all types of patronage. Big league... Lushly budgeted."
—Boxoffice

• • •

"Action-packed epic bound to be successful. Exciting entertainment for audiences everywhere!"
—Showmen's Trade Review

• • •

"King-size epic for big hit. As a boxoffice attraction, it rates the endorsement of even the Miami Chamber of Commerce. What more can be said?"
—Hollywood Reporter

"An extraordinary picture—to do extraordinary business. The earnestness of 'The Covered Wagon,' the glamour of Technicolor at its best and the music of the period in brilliant performance."
—M. P. Herald

• • •

"A decided boxoffice parlay. The big sprawling western which Paramount used to turn out so artfully has overtaken that company again in 'California'."
—Variety

IS Paramount's FIFTH HIT OUT OF 5 FOR '46-'47!

Coldwave Can't Chill Chi; 'Years' 50G, 'Skies' 90G, 'Show-Off' 77G, 'Razor' 60G

Chicago.

Extreme cold wave didn't offer much competition to a Loop full of heavy grossers, with large holdouts not an unfamiliar scene, even during the day in some cases.

"Best Years," at Woods, continues as one of the top draws, with long grind carrying run all night to tune of record-breaking $50,000. Top money for week went to "Blue Skies," at Chicago, with Burl Ives on stage, for staggering $90,000.

Oriental's "Show-Off," with Kathryn Grayson and Johnny Johnston in person brought in second money with smash $77,000. First week of "Razor's Edge" at State-Lake, ran away with a good portion of the holiday biz with a bang-up $60,000.

Estimates for Last Week

Apollo (B&K) (1,200; 65-95)—"Jolson Story" (Col). Initial sesh good for sock $32,000.

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; 65-95)—"Blue Skies" (Par) with Burl Ives heading stage revue. Terrific $90,000 in first week.

Civic (Wildberg) (900; $1.10-$2.20)—"Henry V" (UA) (21st wk). Up a little over last week with $5,500.

Garrick (B&K) (900; 65-95)—"Return of Monte Cristo" (Col). Opener smart $25,000.

Grand (RKO) (1,500; 65-95)—"Wonderful Life" (RKO). Exceptionally good week here with $35 000.

Oriental (Essaness) (3,400; 65-95)—"Show-Off" (M-G) plus Kathryn Grayson-Johnny Johnston stage layout. First stanza good for smash $77,000.

Palace (RKO) (2,500; 65-95)—"Song cf the South" (RKO), with "Falcon's Adventure" (RKO) (2nd wk). Held its own with $22,000.

Rialto (Indie) (1,700; 65-95)—"Rage In Heaven" (M-G) (reissue). First week of new policy for former burlesque house was a firm $23,000.

Roosevelt (B&K) (1,500; 65-95)—"Never Say Goodbye" (M-G). This one bowed with neat $20,000.

State-Lake (B&K) 2,700; 65-95)—"Razor's Edge" (20th). Can't be beat, with no stage show, for mighty $60,000.

United Artists (B&K) (1,700; 65-95)—"Undercurrent" (M-G). Pretty big $32,000 for first week.

Woods (Essaness) (1,200; 95-$1.20-$1.40-$1.80)—"Best Years of Lives" (RKO) (2d wk). Long grind yielded a thumping $50,000.

Dallas Film Truck Robbed of 2 Comedies

Dallas.

A truck load of film, on its way to Gainsville and other cities, was taken from its driver who had parked the truck in front of building here to pick up some other merchandise.

Police recovered the truck three days later with two comedy reels and the truck's spare tire missing. Extra prints were obtained and deliveries made. Truck was operated by the News Films Agency.

Leggewie Upped at 20th

Edward Leggewie, former assistant manager of 20th-Fox International's foreign version department, has been named manager, succeeding Boris Vermont.

Vermont left the post last week to take over supervision of production of a special series of shorts for Fox Movietone.

Pitt Holiday Week Spotty; 'Rage' Leads With $19,500, 'Cristo' 17G, 'Show Off' 15G

Pittsburgh.

Holiday week didn't wind up here any better than expected, although reissue of "Rage in Heaven" picked up to do a little better than anticipated and lead the town. In reality, however, top money went to "The Show Off" at Warner and "Return of Monte Cristo" at Harris, both with much smaller capacities. "Suspense" was way off at Fulton, and Stanley fared poorly with "Man I Love."

Estimates for Last Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,700; 40-70)—"Suspense" (Mono). They just wouldn't go for this one, and whatever biz it got can be traced to turnaways in immediate neighborhood. Around $8,000, very weak for holiday stanza.

Harris (Harris) (2,200; 40-70)—"Return Monte Cristo" (Col). Management smartly shoved this one in couple of days ahead of schedule when "Bachelor's Daughter" (UA) flopped, and move paid off. Almost $17,000 in nine days. Pic out of circulation for two days while "Razor's Edge" opened simultaneously at Harris and Senator, then went into latter house while Harris kept "Edge" alone.

Penn (Loew's-UA) (3,300; 40-70)—"Rage in Heaven" (M-G). Picked up some down the stretch but still got nowhere near what this house is accustomed to doing at this time of the year. Did $19,500.

Ritz (WB) (800; 40-70)—"Lady Luck" (RKO) (m.o.). Bottom fell right out of this one, despite fairly good preceding session at Stanley. Just barely got $2,000, something awful.

Senator (Harris) (1,750; 40-70)—"White Tie and Tails" (U) and "Bamboo Blonde" (RKO). Nothing for this twin bill at all. Stayed only six days and in abbreviated session got only a little over $3,000.

Stanley (WB) (3,800; 40-70)—"Man I Love" (WB). Not up to holiday par either; in fact, way below it. Just got $16,500, which isn't as much as house frequently does in a regular session.

Warner (WB) (2,000; 40-70)—"Show Off" (M-G). Red Skelton starrer a big winner, soaring to $15,000. That's terrific and why it didn't stay here instead of moving to Ritz, and let "Man I Love" go to the latter site, is a mystery.

Paris UNESCO Council Seeing Pix Wholesale

Paris.

The UNESCO council, bent of getting full value from the current Paris session, is screening the international backlog of educationals at a fast pace.

Scientific pictures are shown at the Palais de la Decouverte, films on children at the Maison de la Chimie and educationals at the Musee Pedagogique. Over 100 pictures can be seen.

'Clouds' Neat 25G, 'Razor' 18G, Prov.

Providence.

Sock New Year bills all around have most stands playing holdovers for added coin. Among the biggies are "Blue Skies" at Strand, "Song of the South" at RKO Albee, "Razor's Edge" at Majestic and "Till Clouds Roll By" at Loew's State.

Estimates for Last week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 44-65)—"Song of South" (RKO) and "Falcon's Adventure" (RKO) (2d wk). Knocked off smash $20,000, with midnight show helping in first seven.

Carlton (Fay-Loew) (1,400; 44-65)—"Margie" (WB). Steady $8,000.

Fay's (Fay) (1,500; 44-65)—"Home In Oklahoma" and vaude. Very nice $8,000.

Majestic (Fay) (2,200; 44-65)—"Razor's Edge" (20th) (2d wk). First sesh was very happy $18,000.

Metropolitan (Snider) (3,100; 65-88)—"Below Dateline" (Mono) and eight acts of vaude. Fair $5,500.

State (Loew) (3,200; 44-65)—"Till Clouds Roll By" (M-G) (2d wk). First week was sensash $25,000.

Strand (Silverman) (2,200; 44-65)—"Blue Skies" (Par) (2d wk). First week's take hit sock $20,000 and still plenty strong.

'Skies' 21G, 'Time' 25½G, 'Show-Off' 21½G, Denver

Denver.

Even with a severe cold snap and snow over the weekend "Blue Skies" packed the Denham most of the time to ring up a very near record, and of course held over. "The Showoff" with "Cockeyed Miracle" took in what ordinarily would have been an easy holdover figure, but the house wanted to start with a new bill New Years. "Time, Place, Girl," however, took in the most money by reason of showing at three houses, the Denver, Esquire, Webber. Most houses were sold out New Year's eve.

Estimates for Last Week

Aladdin (Fox) (1,400; 35-74)—"Nobody Lives Forever" (WB) and "Wife Wanted" (Mono). After week at Denver, Esquire, Webber, still running poor $3,000.

Denham (Cockrill) (1,750; 35-70)—"Blue Skies" (Par). Big $21,000 and holding.

Denver (Fox) (2,525; 35-74)—"Time, Place, Girl" (WB). Day-date with Esquire, Webber, fine $17,000.

Esquire (Fox) (742; 35-74)—"Time, Place, Girl" (WB). Day-date with Denver, Webber, fine $4,000.

Orpheum (RKO) (2,600; 35-74)—"Showoff" (M-G) and "Cockeyed Miracle" (M-G). Big $21,500.

Paramount (Fox) (2,200; 35-74)—"Gallant Journey" (Col) and "Lady Chaser" (PRC). Fair $9,000.

Rialto (Fox) (878; 35-74)—"I've Always Loved You" (Rep) and "My Dog Shep" (SG). After week at Denver, Esquire, Webber, Aladdin, fair $5,000.

Webber (Fox) (750; 35-74)—"Time, Place, Girl" (WB). Day-date with Denver, Esquire, good $4,500.

RKO SWITCHING AD CAMPAIGN ON 'LIFE'

Because speed with which RKO was forced to send Frank Capra's "It's a Wonderful Life" into release prevented launching it with an adequate campaign—and results are being felt at the b.o.—distrib last week ceased accepting dates until latter part of January and early February. New publicity-ad campaign on the Jimmy Stewart-starrer is being launched in the meantime.

RKO originally intended to precede "Life" with "Sinbad," but latter is in Technicolor, and strike prevented obtaining prints. Thus, in need of a top picture for some 20 or so Christmas week dates, "Life" was rushed in before campaign was ready. Biz at the Globe, on Broadway, and in other spots is said to be "good," but not up to expectations.

BALL, SIMON FOR 'MATING'

Hollywood.

Lucille Ball and S. Sylvan Simon are on loanout from Metro to Raphael Hakim to star in and direct, respectively, "The Mating Call." Picture will be made at Columbia

Boston in General Biz Uptake; 'Nocturne' 30G, 'Clementine' 25G

Boston.

What looked like a general uptake in biz all around got nipped by a blizzard opening days of last week to keep takes on a moderate keel, but all houses did a fine New Year's biz and it seems fairly clear the post-holiday advance in grosses will develop. On top here are "Clementine" at the Met, "Till the Clouds Roll By" at the State and Orpheum, and "Nocturne" plus stage show at RKO. "Best Years of Life," h.o., also big.

Estimates for Last Week

Boston (RKO) (3,200; 50-$1.10)—"Nocturne" (RKO) plus Prof. Lamberti, Sibyl Bowman, Tommy Dix, others on stage. Got off to a good start and should put house back to its high average $30,000 level.

Esquire (M-P) (1,200; $1.80)—"Best Years Lives" (RKO). Second week right in groove at $16,000 after SRO $16,500, first.

Fenway (M-P) (1,373; 40-80)—"Deception" (WB) and "Dangerous Millions" (20th). M.O. from Met and husky. About $11,000.

Majestic (Indie) (1,500; 40-80)—"Johnny in Clouds" (Indie) and "Devil's Play Ground" (Indie). Opened fairly well, to around $6,000.

Memorial (RKO) (2,900; 40-80)—"Song of South" (RKO) and "Dark Horse" (U). Finishing out third week but died around $15,000.

Metropolitan (M-P) (4,367; 40-80)—"Darling Clementine" (20th) and "Personality Kid" (Col). Strongest bid for biz in town with very nice take anticipated, around $25,000.

Orpheum (Loew) (3,200; 40-80)—"Till the Clouds Roll By" (M-G). Powerful product drawing very well and promising fine take, over $26,000.

Paramount (M-P) (1,700; 40-80)—"Deception" (WB) and "Dangerous Millions" (20th). M.o. from Met and still lively. Around $17,000.

State (Loew) (3,200; 40-80)—"Till the Clouds Roll By" (M-G). Should bounce this place back into running, bettering last week's $16,000.

Translux (Translux) (900; 30-74)—"Notorious Gentleman" (U) and "Don't Gamble Strangers" (Mono). Second week looks good for $5,000 after swell $7,000, first.

Redgrave Due In Jan.

London, Dec. 26.

Postponing his Hollywood trip twice due to delays in his current starrer, "Fame Is the Spur," Michael Redgrave leaves for the U. S. Jan. 6.

He'll star in a film opposite Joan Bennett. Fritz Lang will handle the directorial chores.

'Clementine' 38G, Leads; D. C. Off to Good Year; 'Girl' 29G; 'Clouds' 30G

Washington.

Business generally is staying prime along the F street midway, giving 1947 a nice kickoff in these parts. Most of the houses are playing nine-day runs, with "Darling Clementine" heading the parade with $38,000 for that stretch. Close behind "Time, Place, Girl" at $29,000 and "Clouds Roll By" at $30,000, are both in the big numbers.

Estimates for Last Week

Capitol (Loew) (3,434; 44-80)—"My Darling Clementine" (20th) with vaude. Tall $38,000 for nine days.

Columbia (Loew) (1,263; 44-70)—"Show-Off" (M-G) (m.o.). Good $13,000 for nine days.

Earle (WB) (2,154; 44-85)—"Time, Place, Girl" (WB). Sizzling $29,000 for nine days.

Keith's (RKO) (1,838; 44-80)—"Song of South" (RKO) (2nd week). Smash $25,000 after a terrif $32,000 for the first stanza.

Little (Miller) (285; $1.20-$2.40)—"Henry V" (UA) (9th wk). Continuing at $6,500 capacity, same as last week.

Metropolitan (WB) (1,513; 44-70)—"End of Time" (RKO) (m.o.). Fairish $9,000 for nine days.

Palace (Loew) (2,370; 44-70)—"Till Clouds Roll By" (M-G) (2nd wk). Hot $30,000 for nine days, after elegant $27,000 for first week.

National Boxoffice Survey

New Year's Week Biz Spotty—N. Y., Chi Hot; Pitt, L. A. Slump; 'Razor' Leads

New Year's week business in the nation's key city first runs emerged somewhat spotty, with bad weather taking its toll in several situations. New York held to expectations, chalking up a record $1,061,900 in its 18 top houses. Chicago biz was good despite a severe cold wave on the Loop but Los Angeles slumped badly, with some houses off as much as 50% from their holiday biz of 1945.

Pittsburgh showed no signs of recovering from its pre-holiday slump, featuring generally poor biz all around. Philly, hypoed by a group of top new pictures, came out well. Terrific snowstorm through New Year's Eve cut into Boston grosses considerably but the Hub boxoffices indicated they were on the upbeat.

In general, the pix that had already proved their drawing power in showcase runs remained in the week's charmed circle, with "Razor's Edge" (20th), "Blue Skies" (Par), "My Darling Clementine" (20th), "Till Clouds Roll By (M-G), and "Best Years of Lives" (RKO) topping the lists. "Time, Place, Girl" (WB), teeing off this week in New York, rolled up record $95,000 and also showed considerable strength in its other test runs. "Return of Monte Cristo" (Col) and "Showoff" (M-G) broke in strongly in several spots and "Rage in Heaven" (M-G) continued pacing the reissue entries.

"Edge" polled terrific $175,500 in seven weeks, including New Year's Eve, in N. Y., and also showed smash $112,500 in four L. A. houses, spectacular $50,000 in its Philly preem, and hefty $60,000 in Chi. "Clouds" came through with record-breaking $176,000 in eight days at the Music Hall, N. Y., hung up sensational $25,000 in Providence, and neat $40,000 in two Boston theatres. "Clementine" faltered to mildish $22,000 in its fifth N. Y. stanza but pulled sturdy $25,000 in Boston and tall $38,000 in Washington.

"Time, Place, Girl" set precedent-shattering $95,000 mark in N. Y., following through with husky $40,000 in Philly, and smash $29,000 in Washington. "Best Years" continued strong in N. Y. with solid $67,000, rolled up thumping $50,000 in second Chi week, and sock $16,000 in similar Hub sesh. David O. Selznick's "Duel in Sun" showed hefty $40,000 in its roadshow world preem in L. A. "Yearling" (M-G), also preeming via an L. A. roadshow, broke the house mark with smash $24,300.

"It's Wonderful Life" (RKO) slumped to mildish $35,000 in second N. Y. week, with disappointing grosses echoing in 19 other runs throughout the country. "Nocturne" (RKO) hung up record $25,500 in Philly, did average $30,000 in Boston. "Man I Love" (WB) added to poor Pitt biz with dim $16,500 in one of first test engagements.

Is This a Business?

By MAURICE A. BERGMAN

Historically, the answer is no. Most of us can remember when the conventions of normal commerce were very much resented by everyone in the picture business.

It's not so many years ago that all of us felt a keen delight when people used to say: "He's crazy; he's in the movie business."

Maurice A. Bergman

Now we have become sensitive about our modified lunacy. We have been in such propinquity to business that we actually are under the illusion that we are related to the traditions of enterprise.

Actually, the psyche of our environment bears no relation to the mentality of any other business.

First of all, we are essentially abstract. Our commodity is primarily an idea and there's no appraising the value of an idea until it has been reduced or processed into something tangible which in this case is a motion picture.

Now, no one ever knows what kind of a motion picture will come out of a particular idea. Yet year in and year out we (and our bankers, God bless them) bet a half billion dollars that the ideas will be good ones.

You might say in view of all this that ours is a gambling business and therefore not much more of a gamble than any other business.

That is completely wrong. We are not even a good gamble. Then, anyone might ask, how is it that we get along so well. I will tell you.

The movies have done so well in the past 50 years because they have not suffered the same inhibitions that their customers have. In the movies we make love on the screen. Our hero and heroine discuss getting married in the open. They do all the things everybody would like to do as a normal social thing, yet never do.

In other words we have a spirit. We are a bit childish and immature and admit it; whereas other businesses are just as immature but hide in it many different ways by conventions we see attached to them.

Of course, we can't completely resist the pseudo-science that pops up all around us. Now and then you hear us talking like Stuart Chase and once in a while we deal in the mumbo-jumbo of the statistician. We even go in for research and surveys; but this is more in the spirit of confirming our own hunches rather than exploring new horizons.

The danger is that we may become a business and strangle our lunacy to the degree that we become dull. Then nobody will love us.

Perish Forbid!

We press agents know that showmanship is doing the absurd thing at the logical time. We may well fear that we will end up doing the rational thing at the illogical time.

In a sense we are ethereal and not down to earth. Whereas it is a great virtue in other businesses to have your two feet on the ground, it is quite salutary in the movie game to have our neuroses in the heavens.

I live in agony of the thought that the tide of economics, which so few of us understand, will enmesh us and, before we know what happens, we may all be talking about the laws of marginal utility and diminishing returns.

Every now and then I myself slip and find a Latin phrase rolling off my tongue. Just the other day in an ad meeting a young colleague nonchalantly said he had no a priori view of the matter.

These symptoms crop up now and then but we manage to keep them in line.

Some good leg art can neutralize a lot of sophistication.

We are told that the public is growing up. So are we. Wait till you see a picture called "Stairway to Heaven."

This may not be a business but I managed to get in one plug.

L.A. Spotty; 'Razor' Keen 112½G in 4; 'Duel' Fast 40G; 'Humoresque' 71G in 3

Los Angeles.

New Year's Eve business proved spotty in most first runs despite big pictures. In some instances biz was off as much as 50% under last year and exhibs blame concentrated accident-prevention campaigning over the holidays as a factor in the drop of trade. Although no records were set, houses had generally good grosses and in three Warner spots, biz was ahead of last year.

"Duel in the Sun" teed off to a fine start New Year's Eve on a roadshow policy in two situations and looks like a fine $40,000 for the initial frame. Other new bills for the holiday were "Verdict" and "Genius at Work" in three houses. It is pointing for an okay $31,000. First stanza of "Razor's Edge" pulled up with a smash $112,500 in four houses. "Humoresque" was a great $71,000 in three spots on the first frame. "Yearling" roadshow wound up first frame at the Carthay with $24,300, or $159 better than the previous record holder, "Gone With the Wind."

Estimates for Last Week

Belmont (FWC) (1,532; 60-$1)—"Love Laughs Andy Hardy" (M-G) (2d wk). Weak $6,600.

Beverly (FWC) (1,270; $1-$1.80)—"Best Years Our Lives" (RKO) (2d wk). Nifty $16,800.

Beverly Hills Music Hall (Blumenfeld-G&S) (824; 65-$1)—"Strange Woman" (UA) (3d wk). Smart $6,600.

Carthay Circle (FWC) (1,518; $1-$1.80)—"Yearling" (M-G) (2d wk). Record $24,300.

Chinese (Grauman-WC) (2,048; 60-$1)—"Razor's Edge" (20th) (2d wk). Socko $29,000.

Downtown (WB) (1,800; 50-$1)—"Humoresque" (WB) (2d wk). Big $25,000.

Downtown Music Hall (Blumenfeld) (872; 55-$1)—"Strange Woman" (UA) (3d wk). Near $19,000.

Egyptian (FWC) (1,538; $1-$2.40)—"Duel in Sun" (RKO) (roadshow). Sighting $25,000.

El Rey (FWC) (861; 60-$1) — "Verdict" (WB). About $7,000.

Four Star (UA-WC) (900; 60-85)—"Verdict" (WB) and "Genius at Work" (RKO). About $6,000.

Guild (FWC) (968; 60-$1) — "Temptation" (U) (2d wk). Dull $3,700.

Hawaii (G&S-Blumenfeld) (956; 50-$1)—"Strange Woman" (UA) (3d wk). Nifty $7,200.

Hollywood (WB) (2,756; 50-$1)—"Humoresque" (WB) (2d wk). Sharp $23,000.

Hollywood Music Hall (Blumenfeld) (475; 50-85)—"Strange Woman" (UA) (3d wk). Good $6,400.

Iris (FWC) (828; 60-85)—"Temptation" (U) (2d wk). Light $5,100.

Loew's State (Loew-WC) (2,404; 60-$1) — "Razor's Edge" (20th) (2d wk). Great $47,900.

Los Angeles (D'town-WC) (2,097; 60-$1)—"Love Laughs" (M-G) (2d wk). Poor $22,100.

Loyola (FWC) (1,248; 60-$1) — "Razor's Edge" (20th) (2d wk). Big $18,200.

Million Dollar (D'town) (2,420; 55-85) — "Beauty and Bandit" (Mono) with Tito Guizar on stage. Good $21,000.

Orpheum (D'town-WC) (2,210; 60-$1) — "Verdict" (WB) and "Genius at Work" (RKO). Sighting $18,000.

Pantages (Pan) (2,812; 50-$1) — "Wonderful Life" (RKO) (2d wk). Sturdy $32,300.

Paramount (F&M) (3,398; 50-$1)—"Blue Skies" (Par) (3d wk). Handsome $35,900.

Paramount Hollywood (F&M) (1,451; 50-$1) — "Blue Skies" (Par) (3d wk). Hefty $22,400.

RKO Hillstreet (RKO) (2,890; 50-80) — "Wonderful Life" (RKO) (2d wk). Closed initial stanza with $28,600.

Ritz (FWC) (1,370; 60-$1) — "Temptation" (U) (2d wk). Fair $8,600.

Studio City (FWC) (880; 60-$1)—"Temptation" (U) (2d wk). Fair $6,100.

United Artists (UA-WC) (2,100; 60-$1) — "Temptation" (U) and "Slightly Scandalous" (U) (2d wk). Slow $14,900.

Uptown (FWC) (1,719; 60-$1) — "Razor's Edge" (20th) (2d wk). Great $20,300.

Vogue (FWC) (885; $1-1.80)—"Duel in Sun" (SRO). Sighting $15,000.

Wilshire (FWC) (2,296; 60-$1) — "Love Laughs" (M-G) (2d wk). Slow $10,100.

Wiltern (WB) (2,300; 50-$1) — "Humoresque" (WB) (2d wk). Bright $23,000.

CANTOR SHOOTING

Hollywood.

Eddie Cantor's production, "If You Knew Susie," started lensing at RKO on his 28th anniversary in show business.

Cantor costars with Joan Davis in film as well as producing.

Grosses Are Net

Film gross estimates, as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net, i.e., without the 20% tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U.S. amusement tax.

Healthy Seattle Sesh For 'Razor' 25½G; 'Fab' 10G; 'Blue Skies' 6½G

Seattle.

The new year appears to have settled down with take healthy, but not sensational. Over the holiday it was big. All night spots were sellouts. Midnight shows at most pix houses got good attention and pepped the grosses.

Estimates for Last Week

Blue Mouse (H-E) (800; 45-80)—"Blue Skies" (Par). Okay around $6,500.

Fifth Avenue (H-E) (2,349; 45-80)—"Razor's Edge" (20th). In opener, swell $25,500; reaching out for top grossers at this house.

Liberty (J & VH) (1,650; 45-80)—"Jolson Story" (20th). Around $14,300; big. Holding.

Music Box (H-E) (850; 45-80)—"Show-Off" (M-G) and "Phantom Thief" (Col). Big opening added to $15,300.

Music Box (H-E) (850; 45-80)—"Notorious' (RKO) (5th wk). Around $5,800; good.

Orpheum (H-E) (2,600; 45-80)—"Never Say Goodbye" (WB) and "Secrets of Sorority Girl" (PRC) (2d wk). Five days, $6,100; good.

Palomar (Sterling) (1,350; 45-80)—"Fabulous Suzanne" (Rep) and "Neath Canadian Skies" (Golden Gate). Plus stage. Zorina on stage, billed as "Queen of Nudists" the reason for big $10,000 for "Fabulous Suzanne" (Rep) and "'Neath Canadian Skies" (Golden Gate).

Paramount (H-E) (3,039; 45-80)—"Nobody Lives Forever" (WB) and "Great to Be Young" (Col). Not so hot at $8,100.

Roosevelt (Sterling) (800; 45-80)—"Wake Up and Dream" (20th) and "Dangerous Millions" (20th). In 2d wk. big $6,100.

Winter Garden (Sterling) (800; 45-50)—"Casablanca" (UA) and "Boy's Ranch" (M-G), split with "Claudia and David" (20th) and "Faithful in My Fashion" (M-G) (3rd runs). Very good, $4,800.

K.C. 'CLOUDS' $23,000; 'RAZOR' CUTS $20,000

Kansas City.

Biz, starting off strong Christmas Day, continues brisk. "Razor's Edge" started second smash week Dec. 31. "Till Clouds Roll By," opening solo Tuesday (31) at the Midland is sighting a great $23,000.

Estimates for Last Week

Esquire-Uptown-Fairway (Fox Midwest) (820, 2,043, 700; 45-65) — "Razor's Edge" (20th) (2d wk). Sighting $20,000.

Midland (Loew's) (3,500; 45-65)—"Till Clouds Roll By" (M-G). Opened Tuesday (31) for great $23,000.

Newman (Paramount) (1,900; 45-65)—"Blue Skies" (Par). Okay $15,000.

Orpheum (RKO) (1,900; 45-65)—"It's Wonderful Life" (RKO) (2nd wk). Fair $9,000.

Tower (Fox-Joffee) (2,100; 45-65)—"Gentleman Joe Palooka" (Mono) and "Rolling Home" (SG) plus vaude. Opened Friday (3).

'Show-Off' Sock 18G, 'Margie' 17½G, Indpls.

Indianapolis

Holiday week biz represented a good advance over recent grosses, although only one house went to bat with attraction expected to hold, on account of desired New Year's change. "Show-Off," at Loew's, was powerhouse, with sock $18,000. "Margie," at Indiana, came through with strong $17,500. "Magnificent Doll," at Keith's, was sturdy enough to stay second week.

Estimates for Last Week

Circle (Katz-Dolle)—"Lady Luck" (RKO) and "Criminal Court" (RKO). Fair $10,000.

Indiana (Katz-Dolle) (3,300; 40-60)—"Margie" (20th). Hefty $17,500.

Keith's (Indie) (1,300; 40-60)—"Magnificent Doll" (U). Dandy $13,000 and holds over.

Loew's (Loew's) (2,450; 40-60)—"Show-Off" (M-G) and "Devil's Playground" (UA). Socko $18,000.

Lyric (Katz-Dolle) (1,600; 40-60)—"Spider Woman Strikes Back" (U) and "House of Horrors" (U). Oke $7,000.

'CLOUDS' ROLL 23G, K.C.; 'RAZOR'S EDGE' $20,000

Kansas City.

Films continue with grosses in the heavy vein. "Till the Clouds Roll By," at the Midland, which opened Dec. 31, looks for a great $23,000. Three of the other first runs have holdovers, all doing well. Tower is only house to maintain a Friday-opening policy through the holidays. Blizzard last week-end no help.

Estimates for Last Week

Esquire - Uptown - Fairway (Fox-Midwest) (820, 2,043, 700; 45-65)—"The Razor's Edge" (20th) (2d wk). Keen $20,000. Last week film got smash $28,000, setting house record.

Midland (Loew's) (3,500; 45-65)—"Till the Clouds Roll By" (M-G). Bangup $23,000 and will hold.

Newman (Paramount) (1,900; 45-65)—"Blue Skies" (Par) (2d wk). Nifty $16,000 after last week's $23,000, house's top figure.

Orpheum (RKO) (1,900; 45-65)—"It's Wonderful Life" (RKO) (2d wk). Fair $9,000, against last week's $13,000.

Tower (Fox Joffee) (2,100; 45-65)—"Stars Over Texas" (PRC) and "Scandal in Paris" (UA), with Roscoe Ates heading stage bill. Good week with $10,000.

'Razor' Sharp 50G, To Lead Philly

Philadelphia.

Sloppy weather on New Year's Day put a slight dent into the hefty holiday week grosses, but red-hot Eve biz hypoed prices, more than making up for it. Most of the first-runs are holding over with big league product predominating. For first time in history of Warners' Earle a stage show is being held over for second week. Attraction is Louis Prima's band.

Estimates for Last Week

Aldine (WB) (1,303; 50-94)—"Song of South" (RKO) (2d wk). Last week neat $21,000.

Arcadia (Sablosky) (700; 50-94)—"Meet John Doe" (Indie) (reissue). Showing surprising strength. Last week, "Verdict" (WB) tepid $4,000 for second run.

Boyd (WB) (2,350; 50-94)—"Undercurrent" (M-G) (2d wk). Opener fine $31,000.

Earle (WB) (2,760; 60-99)—"Betty Co-Ed" (Col) with Louis Prima's band being held over for an unprecendented second week on stage. Last week combo of "Vacation Reno" and Prima good for boff $45,000.

Fox (20th) (2,250; 50-94)—"Razor's Edge" (20th) (2d wk). Opener last week spectacular $50,000.

Goldman (Goldman) (1,300; 50-94)—"Cross My Heart" (Par) (2d wk). First week's take great $26,500.

Karlton (Goldman) (1,000; 50-94)—"Rage in Heaven" (M-G) (2d wk). Last week neat $16,000.

Keith's (Goldman) (1,500; 50-94)—"Dark Mirror" (U) (2d run) (2d wk). Last week okay $7,500.

Mastbaum (WB) (4,350; 50-94)—"Time, Place, Girl" (WB) (2d wk). Last week husky $40,000 plus good $4,000 for Sabbath showing at Earle.

Pix (Cummins) (500; $1.95-$2.60)—"Henry V" (UA) (2d wk). Opener of roadshow (two-a-day) snagged good $12,000.

Stanley (WB) (2,950; 50-94)—"Blue Skies" (Par) (6th wk). Fifth canto of Crosby starrer great $32,000.

Stanton (WB) (1,475; 50-94)—"Nocturne" (RKO) (2d wk). Opening sesh broke house record with $25,500.

Kay, 'Daughters' 40G; 'Song South' 13G, Cincy

Cincinnati.

Strong array of new bills for festive rush has five of the seven downtown houses in upper brackets. Revival of stage shows at the Albee after a fortnight's recess, with "Bachelors Daughters" and Beatrice Kay topping vaude lineup, is topping the town with a sensational figure. "Time, Place, Girl" and "Secret Heart" are neck and neck for second laurels.

Estimates for Last Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; 55-95)—"Bachelors Daughters" (UA) plus Beatrice Kay, Modernaires, Paul Winchell, others on stage. Sensational $40,000, puffed by sellout of midnight performance New Year's Eve at $2.40 top.

Capitol (RKO) (2,000; 55-70)—"Secret Heart" (M-G). Big $16,000. Holds.

Grand (RKO) (1,430; 55-70)—"Song of South" (RKO). Whammo $13,000 and remains for second round.

Keith's (UP) (1,542; 55-70)—"Temptation" (U) (2d wk). Holding to plump $8,000.

Lyric (RKO) (1,400; 55-75)—"Westerner" (FC) (reissue) (m.o.). Socko $8,500.

Palace (RKO) (2,600; 55-70)—"Time, Place, Girl" (WB). Swell $17,000.

Shubert (RKO) (2,100; 55-70)—"Song of South" (RKO). Great $10,000.

'Clouds Roll,' 'Secret Heart'-T. Dorsey, 'Time, Place'-Monroe, 'Razor's Edge' Set N.Y. Records, Latter for 3d Time

Following the boffo pattern set by Christmas week business, which snapped Broadway film houses back sharply from their seasonal slump, biz during New Year's week held up to optimistic expectations. Although grosses did not equal the $1,086,000 originally hoped for on the basis of early estimates, the 18 first-run theatres, bolstered by hefty New Year's Eve biz when almost all tilted their prices, chalked up a hefty $1,061,900.

Four new records were set during the week, with grosses at the Music Hall, Roxy, Capitol and Strand all toppling their previous highs. Most theatres showed strong increases over Christmas week biz, with such houses as the Astor, Paramount, Hollywood and Palace picking up strongly.

Tops of the holiday session was the $175,500 raked in by "Razor's Edge" for seven days, including New Year's Eve, at the Roxy. Sixth week figure is by far the highest ever rung up by one theatre anytime and means the Roxy has broken its own house record three times during the run of the same picture. Roberto & Alicia replaced Rosario & Antonio on the Roxy stage this week.

"Till the Clouds Roll By," in its fourth week at the Music Hall, did a terrific $176,000, but the figure includes both New Year's Eve and Day, making it an eight-day roundup. Total represented not only the greatest amount of money ever passed over the Hall's ticket sills but also the greatest number of customers in a similar period.

Most surprising new entry of the week was "Time, Place and Girl," at the Strand, where, with Vaughn Monroe orch heading the stage bill, a smash $95,000 record was hung up. Mark, near capacity for this house, was made possible by the upped holiday prices. "Secret Heart," doubling with a stage bill headed by Tommy Dorsey orch at the Capitol, soared far above expectations to achieve a hefty $111,000, topping previous house high by $1,000.

"Best Years of Our Lives," at the Astor, aided by considerable word-of-mouth which has brought out many infrequent theatregoers, pulled in a smash $67,000, with biz hypoed by two extra shows New Year's Eve and upped admish prices. Paramount, with "Cross My Heart" and a stage bill topped by the Andrews Sisters, fell slightly below hopes but still did a neat $107,000 in its second week. "Humoresque," in its teeoff session at the Hollywood, came near the house record with a solid $54,000, while "Song of the South," at the Palace, with kids lined up long before noon, zoomed to a fifth week total of $50,000.

British pictures continued to hold their own. "Stairway to Heaven" garnered near-capacity $22,000 in its first stanza on the house's two-a-day reserved seat policy, while "Henry V," now in its 18th week at the Golden, showed a solid $15,000. "Overlanders," stifled by its long length and the small capacity of the Rialto, still managed a good $8,000.

"Wonderful Life" proved one of the most disappointing of the week, with holiday biz failing to bring it above an n.s.g. $35,000 in its second round at the Globe. "Abie's Irish Rose" also sagged badly in its first holdover stanza to $8,000 and is being pulled after one more week at the Gotham. "My Darling Clementine" did a mildish $22,000 in its fifth week at the Rivoli but holds for two more sessions.

Estimates for Last Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,300; 70-$1.40)—"Best Years of Lives" (RKO) (6th wk). Ran in two extra shows New Year's Eve, which, with tilted holiday prices, rang up smash $67,000 for week ending Thursday (3), which included New Year's Day. Film's getting strong word-of-mouth and continues indefinitely.

Capitol (Loew's) (4,820; 60-$1.10)—"Secret Heart" (M-G) plus stageshow headed by Tommy Dorsey orch. In first session, ending Dec. 31, and including New Year's Eve, did record-breaking $111,000, topping previous house mark by a G-note. Befogged by bad weather New Year's Day, show still rang up another $14,000, for eight-day total of $125,000.

Criterion (Loew's) (1,700; 60-$1.25) — "Temptation" (U) (2d wk). First session ended Monday (30), with eight-day total, including New Year's Eve, reaching $35,000. Second week appears likely to slump to $22,000. Holds.

Globe (Brandt) (1,500; 70-$1.20)—"Wonderful Life" (RKO) (3d wk). Disappointing $35,000 for seven days, including New Year's Eve. Hopes for the second round, ending Friday (3), had been for at least $42,000 but low holiday gross stymied it.

Gotham (Brandt) (900; 70-$1.40)—"Abie's Irish Rose" (UA) (3d wk). Barrage of bad notices and outside criticism seem to have taken their toll, with the film stumbling to disappointing $8,000 for third week, ending Friday (3) and including New Year's. Holds one more week.

Golden (769; $1.20-$2.40)—"Henry V" (UA) (19th wk). Climbed nicely over the holiday season, with a hefty $15,000 expected in till for 18th wk., ending last Saturday (4). Previous stanza was $12,500.

Hollywood (WB) (1,499; 70-$1.10)—"Humoresque" (WB) (2d wk). Started second session Wednesday (1). First week, including New Year's Eve, soared to near-house record of $54,000 and film looks set for at least several more good rounds.

Palace (RKO) (1,700; 60-$1.20)—"Song of South" (RKO-Disney) (6th wk). School holiday is boosting this one, with moppets still lined up. Fifth week ending Dec. 31, and including New Year's Eve, equaled expectations with smash $50,000, far ahead of fourth week's mildish $22,000.

Paramount (Par) (3,664; 70-$1.20)—"Cross My Heart" (Par), and on stage, Andrews Sisters, Tony Pastor orch, Les Paul Trio, others (3d wk). Third week started New Year's Day (1). Second holdover stanza, which included New Year's Eve, rang up hefty $107,000, way ahead of opening session's big $80,000.

Park Avenue (U) (583; $1.80-$2.40)—"Stairway to Heaven" (U) (2d wk). Second stanza started New Year's Day (1). Teeoff session, not including an extra New Year's Eve screening, rose to smash $22,000, virtual capacity for this house on its two-a-day policy.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (5,945; 70-$1.25)—"Till Clouds Roll By" (M-G) and Christmas pageant on stage (4th wk). Climbed to new record of terrific $176,000 for week ending Wednesday (1), which included New Year's Eve and Day. Picture holds indefinitely. Fourth week broke all attendance records at house.

Rialto (Mayer) (594; 35-85)—"Overlanders" (U) (2d wk). Holding up well, with strong $8,000 for this frame, same as in the teeoff session. "Murder in Reverse" (English indie) opens Friday (10).

Rivoli (UA-Par) (2,092; 60-$1.25)—"Darling Clementine" (20th) (5th wk). Seven days, including New Year's Eve, did mildish $22,000 with fourth week ending Monday (30) up to fairish $27,000. Holds until next Tuesday (14), when "California" (Par) takes over.

Roxy (20th) (5,886; 90-$1.20) — "Razor's Edge" (20th); with Roberto & Alicia topping new stage bill (7th wk). Still breaking records, with $175,500 for seven days ending Dec. 31 and including New Year's Eve. Topped only by current stanza at Music Hall as top weekly grosser of all time and holds indefinitely.

State (Loew's (3,450; 43-$1.10) — "Undercurrent" (M-G) (2d run) and stage bill headed by Johnny Morgan and Yvette. Mildish $32,400 for week ending New Year's Day (1) and including New Year's Eve. "Return of Monte Cristo" (PRC) and Paul Small's "Showtime" on stage took over Thursday (2).

Strand (WB) (2,756; 75-$1.20) — "Time, Place, Girl" (WB) and stage show topped by Vaughn Monroe orch. Most surprising entry of the week. Opened day after Christmas (26) and soared to new house mark of $95,000 for first session, including New Year's Eve and Day at tilted holiday scales.

Victoria (Maurer) (720; 70-$1.20)—"Beast With Five Fingers" (WB) (2d wk). First week ending Tuesday (31) and including New Year's Eve, held to expectations with fancy $21,000. Holds for at least one additional stanza.

Winter Garden (UA) (1,312; 60-$1.20)—"Wicked Lady" (U) (3d wk). Second session ending Friday (3) and including both New Year's Eve and Day fell off, to disappointing $28,000, after hefty $40,000 for the opener. Holds.

'Blue Skies' 17½G, Mont'l; 'Sleep' Solid $14,500

Montreal.

Holiday biz good all around with three holdovers among five chief main stem houses.

Estimates for Last Week

Capitol (CT) (2,700; 35-63)—"Big Sleep (WB). Hefty $14,500 and held over.

Palace (CT) (2,300; 35-63)—"Margie" (20th). Solid $13,700, staying second stanza.

Loew's (CT) (2,800; 35-67)—"Blue Skies" (Par.). Socko $17,500, also repeating.

Princess (CT) (2,300; 35-53)—"Angel on Shoulder" (UA) and "Vacation in Reno" (RKO). Nice $7,800.

Imperial (CT) (1,950; 30-50)—"White Tie and Tails" (U) and "Cuban Pete" (U). Okay $5,300.

Through Variety we send Happy New Year wishes to all our friends from
M-G-M Pictures, Loew's Theatres,
M-G-M International,
Station WHN and M-G-M Records.

WREATHED IN SMILES!

M-G-M is Heaven in 1947.

Stay merry with Leo all year long.

Just a few of his BIG ONES on next page→

CLARK GABLE

GREER GARSON

SPENCER TRACY

JUDY GARLAND

VAN JOHNSON

KATHARINE HEPBURN

WALTER PIDGEON

LANA TURNER

HAPPY M-G-M NEW YEAR!

WILLIAM POWELL

MICKEY ROONEY

FRANK SINATRA

KATHRYN GRAYSON

JUNE ALLYSON

ROBERT TAYLOR

GREGORY PECK

MARGARET O'BRIEN

IRENE DUNNE

GENE KELLY

ROBERT MONTGOMERY

ESTHER WILLIAMS

MYRNA LOY

ROBERT WALKER

LUCILLE BALL

"THE YEARLING"
(Technicolor)
Gregory Peck, Jane Wyman
Claude Jarman, Jr.

"TILL THE CLOUDS ROLL BY"
(Technicolor) Stars Alphabetically
June Allyson Lucille Bremer
Judy Garland Kathryn Grayson
Van Heflin Lena Horne
Van Johnson Angela Lansbury
Tony Martin Virginia O'Brien
Dinah Shore Frank Sinatra
Robert Walker

"THE SECRET HEART"
Claudette Colbert Walter Pidgeon
June Allyson

"LADY IN THE LAKE"
Robert Montgomery

"THE SHOW-OFF"
Red Skelton

"THE SEA OF GRASS"
Spencer Tracy Katharine Hepburn
Melvyn Douglas Robert Walker

"THE MIGHTY McGURK"
Wallace Beery

"A WOMAN OF MY OWN"
Greer Garson

"LOVE LAUGHS AT ANDY HARDY"
Mickey Rooney Lewis Stone

"THE BEGINNING OR THE END"
Brian Donlevy Robert Walker

"SUMMER HOLIDAY"
(Technicolor)
Mickey Rooney Gloria De Haven
Walter Huston Frank Morgan
"Butch" Jenkins

"THIS TIME FOR KEEPS"
(Technicolor)
Esther Williams Lauritz Melchior
Jimmy Durante Johnnie Johnston
Xavier Cugat

"THE UNFINISHED DANCE"
(Technicolor)
Margaret O'Brien

"HIGH BARBAREE"
Van Johnson June Allyson

"FIESTA"
(Technicolor)
Esther Williams Akim Tamiroff
Ricardo Montalban Cyd Charisse

"IT HAPPENED IN BROOKLYN"
Frank Sinatra Kathryn Grayson
Jimmy Durante

"TENTH AVENUE ANGEL"
Margaret O'Brien

"TO KISS AND TO KEEP"
Gene Kelly

"GREEN DOLPHIN STREET"
Lana Turner Van Heflin
Donna Reed Richard Hart

"A LOVE STORY"
Katharine Hepburn Paul Henreid
Robert Walker

YEAR IN YEAR OUT—TBOCFMGM

(The Big Ones Come From M-G-M!)

WALLACE BEERY

ANN SOTHERN

RED SKELTON

BRIAN DONLEVY

LIONEL BARRYMORE

GEORGE MURPHY

LASSIE

Like Everything Else That He Does, a Producer's Prerogative Is His Own Clothes

Here's a Beau Nash Stance on Impresarios' Sartorial Foibles

By BERNARD SOBEL

Bernard Sobel

Clothes make not only the man, but also the theatre producer. Odd though this statement may sound, it has held true along Broadway for more than half a century.

During this time most of the famous producers have cultivated an eccentric or distinctive fashion in clothes, either for the purpose of building themselves up into a personal tradition or to add to the glamour and mystery of the stage and its people.

This custom, strangely enough, has influenced the history of the American theatre directly or indirectly. Because of their clothes, producers have been easy to identify about town, in the street, in hotel lobbies, on the elevator, and in restaurants. Often as a result, actors who could not get by an arrogant office boy would march right up to the producer on the street and say:

"Oh, Mr. Gest, I recognized you by the tie you wear and I just had to speak to you. I'm terribly eager to get a part in one of your productions."

This courageous, unconventional procedure often had a happy outcome; and even if it did not, the producer, impressed by the stage aspirant, might later, following a formal interview, agree to an audition or even sign a contract.

Thus, clothes helped to break down barriers, encourage the timorous composer, lyricist and director. At the same time, they gave the celebrity-hunter a chance to say he had seen or met a theatre notable.

Certain producers, once famous for their sartorial habits, are no longer part of the Broadway scene. They have passed away or retired, and in spite of the great influence which they exerted in making stars, putting on plays, and giving pleasure to thousands, they are forgotten by the general public, their names mere memories, nostalgic symbols that will eventually fade out forever.

David Belasco, for instance, has a theatre named after him on Broadway at this moment, but most of the people who go there have no idea whatsoever of the man's personality and accomplishments. Yet he was an exceedingly colorful character, especially from the standpoint of dress. Though he belonged to the pagan stage world, he liked to give the impression, for some strange reason, that he was a clergyman. He always wore a black suit and a Roman collar, the unbroken white band seen on Episcopalian and Catholic clergymen. Clad in this solemn attire, he affected a soft, sacerdotal manner, except of course, when he was caught, off-guard, driving a hard bargain or directing in the Belasco manner which was violent and explosive.

His most important contribution to the stage was the realistic setting. Insisting that the background was as important as the dialog, he startled Broadway by presenting a Child's restaurant scene, complete in every detail, including knives, forks, salt cellars, mustard pots and napkins. He insisted, too, on the use of practical doors; that is, doors made of real wood instead of painted canvas substitutes. In a further effort to create the effect of a real room with four walls, he placed andirons and chairs down by the footlights so that the characters might sit there facing the audience as if they were actually in front of the hearthstone.

Gest's Left Bank Look

Unique also in his attire was Morris Gest, producer son-in-law of David Belasco. No matter where he went, he always wore a Windsor tie, the kind which artists used to sport at that well-known Montparnasse rendezvous for painters and models, the Dome restaurant in Paris. And no matter whether he was in the money or broke, Gest always wore a velour fedora hat, slouched, untidy and seemingly rain-drenched. But as his staff knew, the producer went to a great deal of trouble buying this wearing apparel; the hat coming direct from Italy and the tie from one of the oldest and smartest London shops.

Gest will be remembered for his elaborate spectacles, "Chu Chin Chow," "Mecca" and "Aafgar." In order to present "The Miracle," he rebuilt the Century theatre, turning the inside into a complete cathedral with altar, choir lofts and pulpit. Then, for good measure, he started a feud between his two distinguished stars, Princess Matchabelli and Lady Diana Manners.

Far removed from foreign titles were the interests of George M. Cohan, remembered as the chief executive in "I'd Rather Be Right" and for his flag-waving in "Little Johnny Jones" and other typically American musicals.

Cohan was conspicuous for the fact that he never changed the cut of his trousers from his teens until his death. Old narrow, they displayed his prefectly modelled feet which were never spoiled by dancing. And to insure their trim appearance, Cohan always had about 25 pairs of shoes on hand which he shed as soon as they showed the slightest sign of wear. On the stage, he always carried a cane, but never in real life. Though his plays are largely forgotten, his personality is not, for, more lucky than Gest or Belasco, he became the hero of a modern motion picture biography.

Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr. took first place among producers as a fashion expert, being credited with starting the vogue for colored shirts. He wore silk ones, made to measure and popularized pointed, brown shoes. He had a valet in continuous attendance, the famous Sidney, who saw to it that Ziegfeld never wore the same suit twice in succession.

Oddly enough, in spite of his attention to formal dress, Ziegfeld was the only person in the audience at his brilliant premieres who appeared in street clothes. Instead of full dress, he usually wore a brown suit and stood back of the last row watching the show like an innocent bystander whose interest was merely casual. He insisted, however, that his staff wear dinner jackets at every performance.

Though gone almost 14 years, Ziegfeld is still called the peer of American musical comedy and revue.

Al Woods, another veteran, whose recent sporadic attempts to return to Broadway, have been disastrous, was once an imposing figure on the radio. Smart clothes he eschewed, but he made a point of wearing a big cigar constantly and further distinguished himself by calling anyone he liked, whether male or female, "Sweetheart."

Curiously enough, Woods won his way to fame and fortune by exploiting a form of entertainment now extinct, 10-20-30c melodramas, elemental thrillers like "Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl" and "Nellie, the Beautiful Cloak Model," with bold bad men, erring young ladies, and a big scene showing a locomotive about to run over the heroine or a sawmill ready to slit the hero in half.

When, after some years Woods made a fortune on plays of this sort, he went highbrow and brought to Broadway distinguished stars like Katharine Cornell, Leslie Howard and Ann Harding.

'Man of Distinction'

The current crop of producers has done little to carry on sartorial tradition. Vinton Freedley, however, is automatically outstanding for the perfection of his dress. Handsome, a former football hero and whilom leading man, he stands out in any crowd as the ideal American male, Arrow collar style.

Quite different is Michael Todd whose clothes are casual and who, like Al Woods, wears a cigar continuously. For some unknown reason this young producer has such a detestation for jewelry that he won't even carry the functional key ring, with the result that he is always in trouble about locked entrances and intervening exits. His diversion is gambling, according to hearsay, and the chances he takes on almost any proposition are perilous.

Todd's rival, the diminutive Billy Rose, is practically never seen in anything but a Navy blue suit, double - breasted. At rehearsals, though, he wears an enormous white sweater with a choker collar, a collar so deep that it almost engulfs him. This seemingly freakish procedure is perhaps, a small man's method of maintaining authority, because by making himself conspicuous, he compensates for lack of height and a commanding presence.

Billy Rose's memorable contribution to the amusement world was the World Fair's extremely beautiful "Aquacade," in which for the first time in the history of aquatics, scores of swimmers worked out a series of designs to musical accompaniment, swimming every stroke in unison, in the same manner that dancers perform together on the stage. Rose married his star, the famous swimming champion, Eleanor Holm, and together they keep open house and invest great sums in collecting modern paintings.

Max Gordon who owes some of his distinction to having produced plays by Claire Luce, is Broadway's most unobtrusive manager. For this, doubtless, by having people asking him constantly for interviews, auditions and miscellaneous favors, he

(Continued on page 71)

Season's Greetings
JOHN LUND
Under Contract to Paramount Pictures

Post Mortems of 1946

(Rhymes Out of the B'way Nursery for Variety's 41st Anniversary)

By ALBERT STILLMAN

The world is daily growing littler,
When the news was flashed that they'd be hung,
A certain senator was unstrung;
"Oh, my! oh, my! oh, my! oh, my, oh!"
Exclaimed the Gentleman from Ohio.
The President advised Mr. Henry Wallace, he Didn't like Henry's foreign policy.
"Get out of my teepee!
"That's all, brother!"
Said one ex-V.P.
To another.

The O. P. A. is dead and gone,
But F. P. A. still carries on.
The Hat brought tinhorns to their knees
When he went on the Blue for Blue Moon cheese.
The Redhead's grief was ill-concealed
When Tragedy came to Ebbets Field.
The Series Scrap (can this be treason?)
Ran right into the football season.

The Louis-Conn fight was a match without spark
That should have been held in Belmont Park.
The Atkinson boys had winning ways,—
One rode the horses, the other rode plays.
"The State of the Union" had weight and wit.
"Annie Get Your Gun" was a bulls-eye hit;
But praise was not precisely showered
On "Present Laughter" by Noel Coward.
"The Iceman Cometh" got quite a chill
From some critical gentlemen of ill-will.
(I didn't see it, because I eat
Home every night up on Dyckmann Street.)

The Freddie-Tallulah breakfast bit
Was so good, they repeated it;
But Radio still was pretty bare
With Easy Aces off the air.
Ring Lardner, Jr., got quite a rise
Out of Walter Winchell, et all guys,
When he ribbed him gently in The New Yorker.
(He's prob'ly a pal of Danton Walker.)
The Tax Collector made out fine
With the firm of Rodgers and Hammerstein;
And you wouldn't exactly call it tin,
What he extracted from L Berlin.
In fact, it was small, but it really hurt,
What he took from Stillman, A. (Advert.)

In Lit'rature, the current tide
Was somewhat on the sinful side.
"The Egg and I" was a Grade A one,—
It talked about eggs, but didn't lay one.
The Bards found no new rhyme for Love;
Dewey was re-elected Gov.
When the G. O. P. even nasse—got in,
The Gag* of the Year might well have been:
"Two headaches for ev'ry aspirin."

Some, for headaches, took a Bromo,
While others listened to Perry Como.
Winter, summer, spring and fall,
The line was around the Music Hall.
M. G. M. and Robbins parted,
And neither one was broken-hearted.
Kramer, slightly over twenty,
On the tennis ball had plenty;
Tatum Tilden, fifty and some,
Still can stroke 'em hard and handsome.

Xmas came and Xmas went,
And Mr. S. Claus was a stingy gent.
He gave fewer presents. You wanna know why?
'Cause the cost of giving was pretty high.
Well, I hate to end on a sour note,
But somebody really rocked the boat;
I mean we got in a dreadful fix
In Nineteen Hundred and Forty-six.
And don't think everything will be heaven
In Nineteen Hundred and Forty-seven.

* La Guardia's.
 I may be a crook, but I'm not a faker:
I copped that phrase from H. Brubaker.

Things I Like to Remember

Continued from page 2

boardwalk, and I wound up getting the wrong job—assistant to the president.

The night Al Woods produced "The Trial of Mary Dugan" and Rose Woods, Nell Kettering and yours truly walked out on it, pronouncing it a flop, but hurried back in time for those 10 final curtain calls.

The time I argued with Guy Kibbee for an hour to get him to take a weekly wage of $85 to play in my "The Marriage Question."

How Hartley Manners and I acquired Irish brogues reading our two new plays to each other. His was "Peg o' My Heart." Mine, "Rose of Killarney."

The night Laurette Taylor and I sat musing over the above in the Opera Bar right after she had, once again, soared to the heights in "The Glass Menagerie."

That day when "Sport" Herrmann said "the quickest way to get into a hospital is to kick my dog Rowdy." And the night he tossed a newspaper-covered package into a taxi, carelessly picked it up and, in his hotel room, cast it into a wastebasket, and I toppled over when he told me it contained $10,000.

The Monday matinee that Frank Tinney filled in at the Majestic and bowled 'em over and himself to fame.

When we press agents visited Jack Lait, drama critic, and Tom Bourke, vaudeville editor, of the Chicago American.

The days when Marcus Heiman and Asher Levy were treasurers of the Garrick theatre, John Mears did like duty at Powers, John J. Garrity at the Grand, and I sold 'em at the Colonial.

The night Olga Nethersole kissed me, and I was five, too young to appreciate it. But, it led to a friendship with her brother, Louis, who produced years later one of my plays in London.

The night Jeanne Eagels attempted to kill me.

The morning I got a citation from President Woodrow Wilson.

The day Gus Hill gave me $150 for "McFadden's Row of Flats" script.

The day MGM gave him $150,000 for the film rights.

The time I sent a script to Brock Pemberton as a gag, urging him to produce it and make a million. He did and it did. It was "Strictly Dishonorable." Oh, well.

When Hollywood Was Still in the Woods

Film Veteran Recalls the Saga of Col. Wm. Selig--When Tyrone Power, Sr., Called His Film-Trouping 'Acting on the Sidewalk,' The Old H'wood Hotel Days, Etc.

By ALFRED COHN

[Veteran film writer-producer, Al Cohn, is working on a Hollywood saga, "Gold, Fame and Tears."]

Hollywood.

It is a common plaint of old Hollywooders that the town ain't what it used to be. The Boulevard, they say, might be just another Main Street in any middle-sized city, in any state, Oklahoma preferred. No more does one encounter a familiar face in a stroll from Vine to Highland. No more pretty girls who came out to crash the movies and settled for a job in the "five and dime" or behind the counter at the Pig 'n' Whistle. Time was when the stores and lunchrooms were full of 'em. The sidewalks of the Boulevard are more crowded now than ever, but the casual stroller will see nothing he can't see on the main drag of Tulsa or Wichita or Altoona.

But to the pioneer of the movie lots there is hardly a block that doesn't provide something that brings back memories which, all put together, would make a fascinating bit of reading. Some of the signs are mere geographical sites, others human, for people still frequent the Boulevard who once figured prominently in the activities of movieland's ateliers. F'rinstance, that handsomely gowned, statuesque blonde just entering the bank on the corner; you'd never think she was the first heroine to face snarling lions in a serial thriller—Kathlyn Williams, star of "The Adventures of Kathleen," which made the youngsters of a generation ago cling to their seats in breath-taking suspense. She's still a beautiful woman.

And that handsome elderly gentleman emerging from the same bank with a courtly bow to the lady—once he, Bill Farnum, co-starred with her in the first version of "The Spoilers." His fight with Tom Santschi in the Alaskan epic is still regarded by pioneer players and fans as the most realistic ever screened. Bill was once the highest paid star in the business with a two-year contract with William Fox at $10,000 each and every Saturday—and little or no income tax to pay.

Farnum, whose brother, Dustin, was Cecil deMille's first star, is the only surviving principal of Hollywood's first theatrical event in which the movie stars appeared. It was an open air performance of "Julius Caesar," staged May 19, 1916, in a natural amphitheater at the head of Beachwood Canyon, now known as Hollywoodland. The town's civic organizations combined on the venture, its first recognition of the talent that was in its midst. And what a cast! Farnum played Cassius, Theodore Roberts was Julius himself, Marc Antony was played by Frank Keenan and Tyrone Power, the elder of course, was Brutus. It was Tyrone who loftily referred to his movie endeavors as "acting on the sidewalk." Oh yes, there were some other notables in the cast. Douglas Fairbanks in the role of Young Cato and DeWolf Hopper (Hedda's famous hubby) was Casca. There were many others in minor roles, such as Mae Murray who did a wild dance. This production was actually the forerunner of the Hollywood Bowl, which came a half dozen years later.

Hollywood and Vine

But let's get back to the Boulevard. See that "five and dime" across the street? Part of that was Armstrong & Carleton's Blue Front. The gang from the Lasky studio on Vine (now National Broadcasting's rococo home) used to come up here for lunch in makeup and costume. Passersby could rubber in and see Tommy Meighan and Gloria Swanson in their "Male and Female" getup and sometimes even "C.B. himself" would drop in for his sandwich and milk; perhaps just to be sure his stars didn't dawdle too long over their coffee.

This wasn't the first beanery frequented by the stars. There was John's Chop House a few blocks up. Can't quite figure out if it's that dress shop, that cocktail lounge, or the jewelry store. John's was the first all-night joint in the town. Nothing fancy about it; oilcloth on the tables and a long lunch counter. A great spot for the ex-Broadwayites who couldn't get used to going to bed before dawn. On Vernon fight nights it was always crowded from midnight on and hardly a night but saw Charlie Chaplin come in for his hot apple pie. Once in a while Jackie Coogan's parents would leave "The Kid" in John's care while they took in a movie. John has a spot now down near Vine but the Owl Drug Store makes it pretty tough for the Greek. [Maybe a reminder like this'll send some of the old guard down to speed up his cash register.]

And here's the stairway to the once famous Montmartre. The wise guys all said Eddie Brandstetter was crazy to start such a ritzy place in Hollywood but in a short time it became the most publicized cafe in the country. Tourists were wont to crowd the thickly carpeted stairs so that the stars had to go up the back way. I believe it was Ben Bernie's band that opened it as a dinner spot. There was a bachelors' table frequented regularly by Adolphe Menjou and Tom Mix. Tom was quite frankly jealous of 'Dolph's French gab with the waiters. When business got really heavy Eddie started the Embassy Club next door for the movie gang that didn't want an audience for their chop wrangling. It was short-lived. It's now a brassiere foundry. Maybe that's significant, or something. Poor Eddie! He took the "Dutch" way out, as the boys say, after he flopped with his last venture, Sardi's; sat in his car and ended it all with a bullet. The verdict was that Hollywood finally got him. Maybe so.

Memories of the Hollywood Hotel

Well, what d'ye know? I see they're painting the old Hollywood hotel. That's good news because it means they won't tear it down soon, as reported, to make way for a department store. Any oldtimers who have tears to shed would certainly let fly with 'em if the grand old joint ever was turned over to wreckers. For all during the most exciting era of Hollywood history it was the social center of the artistic community. Ah, those Thursday night dances in the lobby! Valentino, Nazimova, Swanson, Pickford, Fairbanks, Shearer, Barbara LaMarr, Vi Dana, ZaSu Pitts, Bert Lytell, Milton Sills and oodles of others who acted; writers like Somerset Maugham, Sir Gilbert Parker, Elinor Glyn, Gertrude Atherton, Rupert Hughes. What memories! The poker game in the cupola suite; the night the lads hollered "Fire" outside Elinor's door to see what she really looked like; their keen disappointment when she appeared immediately just as they had last seen her—golden wig, eyelashes and all—in the lobby. The farewell party to Maugham which sent him off to the Orient and sent them to bed suffering from the effects of a punch made of corn liquor, vanilla extract, orange juice and Lilac Vegetal. The Golden Wedding of William H. Crane and his Ella, both of whom spent their last days in the place; the way Myra Hershey, the octogenarian owner, rode herd on the dancers to prevent any unseemly familiarity or hip-wiggling; and summarily stopped the orchestra when the clock struck 11. Yep, those were great days.

Across the street, on the second floor, once flourished Hollywood's first night spot. It didn't flourish long, though. It was called the Little Club and the backer was newly rich Rudy Valentino. But Prohibition had started its reign and things were very tight even if the customers couldn't be. Besides, early-to-bed Hollywooders complained about the dance music keeping them awake. Anyhow it was highly unexciting.

And now let's turn down Highland. Here's Hollywood High, where quite a few movie stars learned their algebra and geometry, and elementary necking. There's the drugstore where Mervyn LeRoy discovered Lana Turner, who had sneaked across the street for a chocolate malt. LeRoy's attention was attracted when she spilled some of it on her sweater.

The Writers Club

That vine-draped bungalow over there on the corner was once the famous Writers Club, first organization of professional folk with the exception of the Photoplayers Club. The latter had quarters in downtown Los Angeles and was skippered by Wally Reid, but that was way back around 1913. The Writers occupied a unique place in the early 1920s. They had a little theatre which seated close to 400. Writers, directors and players came from the studios for lunch on the veranda and brought their families for dinner at night. Once a week pictures were screened and monthly there were one-act plays, most of them written by members. The studios ganged up on us after the audience unmercifully kidded a new picture—so the projection machines started rusting.

High point in Club history was reached when a musical revue was produced for one night at the Philharmonic Auditorium downtown. It had the greatest cast ever assembled on any stage including such stars as Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks playing a bearded extra, ancient Theodore Roberts as Little Lord Fauntleroy—practically every star in the "colony" was on stage some time that night. It was a succession of satires on recent pictures with songs and dances, including a chorus of leads boasting such names as Conrad Nagel, Milton Sills, Bert Lytell and others.

There was a burlesque on Von Stroheim's "Foolish Wives" with Alan Hale impersonating Von with much vocal gusto and adlibbing; a merciless travesty on the "Great Director" with the comic opera star, Edwin Stevens, in the name role, a name which will not be divulged here, and a version of "The Three Musketeers" that had the British pantomime star Lupino Lane portraying a Fairbanks even more agile than the original; Adolphe Menjou, looking just as he did in the picture, as the king; and tiny Snitz Edwards doing Richelieu. The latter two played the opening scene identically as it was done in the picture but the audience almost grew hysterical as they started talking in Yiddish dialect. Sophye Bernard just in from a starring engagement at the New York Hippodrome sang the role of the queen with Lila "Cuddles" Lee as Constance. Young Mervyn LeRoy who had helped us with the staging was rewarded with a bit which he almost stretched into a lead. There was a brief prologue and what a cast! William H. Crane, Henrietta Crosman, May McAvoy and Charlie Ray!

Writers' Revues were given the two succeeding years but they never equaled the initial show. In the second, Charlie Ray and Wally Beery played the principal roles. Honors in the third and final show went to Ben Turpin, playing Fairbanks in "The Thief of Bagdad" and Betty Blythe as the Arab princess. Ben was excruciatingly funny without ever reading a line as written. He just couldn't remember.

The Saga of Col. Bill Selig

See that chubby little man with the stubby grey moustache who just came down the stairs alongside the furniture store and is waiting for a Sunset bus? His alert air and snappy step would indicate a man at most in late middle age, certainly not one in his '80s. You'd never pick him as the real daddy of Hollywood, the boss of the first movie outfit to invade the West Coast. A great many people believe that Cecil deMille invented Hollywood but it was more than six years after "Colonel" Bill Selig's camera first saw the magic light of the wonderful California sun that "C.B." set down his camera and carpetbag in a barn at Vine and Selma and ordered old Sol to give out with his best rays.

One could wax sentimental over the colonel's present status, the doughty little warrior of the earlier movie wars, waiting for a bus instead of a shiny limousine manned by a liveried chauffeur. He is Hollywood's "man nobody knows" despite the fact that once upon a time he possessed millions garnered from his movie pioneering, his adventure serials, his many experiments including the first "hoss opera," the first movie more than a reel in length, and "The Spoilers," that epic multi-reeler which antedated even "The Birth of a Nation."

For several hours a day the chunky little man sits among his books, plays and manuscripts which he bought more than a third-of-a-century ago for conversion into celluloid dramas—paying as high as $300 for some of the rights. They are all that remain of a huge fortune. Hollywood history is well punctuated with stories of people who fell before the slings and arrows of both adversity and prosperity. The little old colonel bowed to neither. Nor has he ever uttered a squawk. His cheerful wave to the busman belies the gloomy threats of a future that includes possible eviction from the modest little rented home, because of a forthcoming sale. Here is poignant drama right under the nose of a Hollywood that howls mournfully for great human stories.

Nearly 40 years have elapsed since a strangely garbed figure waded through the surf at La Jolla (pronounced, I believe, San Luis Obispo), paused dramatically in front of a huge camera and declaimed at the top of his sonorous voice "The World Is Mine!" It must have scared the La Hoyans—also it might have been the cinema's voice of prophecy—Hollywood's first boast. It was the first scene made under the beneficent rays of a California sun. To many the speech is familiar as the great thrill of "The Count of Monte Cristo." James O'Neill, actor-sire of the author of "The Iceman Cometh" and other footlight charades had shouted it thousands of times. It was a Selig Polyscope production and a company headed by Francis Boggs, director and star, who had come all the way from Chicago to make this climactic scene, there being no sunlight in the Windy City at the time. Less than two years later Boggs came back with sealed orders from "Colonel" Selig to make pictures regularly in the land of perpetual sunshine, as guaranteed by the Chamber of Commerce.

When H'wood Blvd. Was 'Prospect Ave.'

"Love Among the Roses" was the title of the first movie ever shot in Hollywood proper. The locale was a rose garden in the home of Paul deLongpre, noted artist, at the corner of Prospect and Cahuenga. You don't recognize the site? Well, at that time—early in 1909—Prospect avenue was the name of Hollywood Boulevard. But getting back to the picture. The director and producer was a young refugee from the stage named David Wark Griffith (better known as Larry); the star was a pretty lass of 15 with long curls who had not yet been dubbed by Sid Grauman, Coast entrepreneur, as "America's Sweetheart." They, too, came back to Hollywood and unprecedented fame.

There is a tablet in front of the ornate, skyblue Columbia Broadcasting establishment at the corner of Sunset and Gower on which is chipped the legend "This is the site of the first motion picture studio in Hollywood . . . . October 27, 1911." Slight recognition of an important historical event. This was the site of the old Blondeau Roadhouse, put out of commission by local option and rented by Al Christie, Hollywood's real movie pioneer. Al had tossed a coin with his financial backer, Dave Horsely, in their Staten Island studio to determine whether Al was to make pictures in Florida or California. Dave, of course, favored Florida because he could run down overnight to see how things were going. That's why Al wanted California. They called it the Nestor Company and until it was absorbed by "Uncle" Carl Laemmle for Universal, they made three pictures a week; and with one camera crew. Milt Farney did a western, ancient Tom Ricketts a drama, and Christie himself a comedy. At the time it was a series of "Mutt and Jeff" laugh-evokers from the comic strip of the same name by Bud Fisher. This was the initial venture in putting a comic on the screen. The leading ladies, both in their early teens, were Dorothy Davenport, who later became Mrs. Wally Reid, and Victoria Forde who married Tom Mix. Christie never had but one argument with his landlord, a Los Angeles Brewery. That was when they wanted to raise his rent from $35 a month.

Extras recruited in downtown Los Angeles got $1 a day net, meaning that they were also recipients of 20c carfare and a lunch consisting of the best sandwich a dime could buy and a bottle of milk. Some of our best directors and most distinguished players of a later date got their start right here and in that way.

And in the News Ever Since

The Los Angeles press paid little or no attention to the movies then. About the first time they crashed the front page was when Francis Boggs of "Monte Cristo" fame was shot down by a crazy Jap gardener at the Selig studio in Edendale in 1912. The reporters, including this writer, made quite a story about it. Hobart Bosworth, who was a Los Angeles stage star by night and a worker by day in the celluloid vineyards—incidentally the first footlight celebrity to fall for the lowly movies—helped us dope out a motivation for the crime.

As printed from coast to coast, the Jap became obsessed with the idea that the camera was a hangout for evil spirits which could only be exorcised by liquidation of the boss. (Actually Boss Boggs had chided the Nipponese for ignoring the geraniums in favor of a lady of the studio who didn't take to the make.) As stated, the story was printed from Escondido to Penobscot. And Hollywood has been in the news ever since.

Making a Comic's Temperature Rise

We spent over four years at the Army bases and I think this is the funniest episode of the entire tour. With Ish Kabibble, after a regular auditorium show at the hospital in Asheville, N. C., I started through some of the wards. The first ward we hit was a big one and had about 50 men in it. We tried one of our tried and true routines....paused for the laugh....and there was none ....puzzled but still pitching we gave with another.... still no laughs....not even a snicker. I was ready to sneak out and Ish looked like he was going to cry, when I noticed a nurse at the far end of the ward doing something to the boys—she was removing a thermometer from each mouth. Seems we came in just after she had placed the long thin glass in their mouths. Ever try to laugh with a thermometer in your face?

—Kay Kyser.

Mr. EXHIBITOR —

GET READY FOR A VERY IMPORTANT CALL!

THE WARNER MAN WILL BE TALKING TO YOU SOON ABOUT

"NORA PRENTISS"!

Night Letter Biographies

By ASHTON STEVENS

Chicago.

When "VARIETY" was some 16 years younger, there began to be issued from publishing houses long-winded actorial autobiographies, most of them easier to review than to read.

In a vain effort to pause this consternating consumption of ink, paper and cloth, I engaged in a one-man battle against the volunteer army of 1-witnesses in behalf of their own greatness.

With the aid of the treasury department of the old Chicago Herald-Examiner, I dispatched prepaid invitations to carefully selected actors, authors, and mapagers, requesting complete autobiographies confined to the dimensions of a Western Union night letter, which at that time ran 50 words before the extras began to count up.

I have saved the original telegrams for reproduction during some lull in my own famous and yet unwritten autobiography, which Walter Winchell seems to think will be entitled "When Cabs Wore Horses."

The following are truthful but not photostatic copies. Read 'em and try to tell me time hasn't marched!

AT AGE OF 18 COULD READ AND WRITE, AND HAD GRADUATED FROM EVERY CIRCUS THAT CAME TO TOWN. DID NOT RUN AWAY AND GO ON THE STAGE BECAUSE THERE WAS NOTHING TO RUN AWAY FROM. EVERYBODY HELPED ME TO LEAVE — AND THAT HAS BEEN GOING ON EVER SINCE. IT IS NOW 1930 AND I DO NOT FEEL VERY WELL.

—WILLIAM GILLETTE.

BORN 1878. DEBUT 1887. FAMILY SHOW 1890. STOCK 1891. VAUDEVILLE WITH FAMILY TILL 1901. MUSICAL COMEDY WITH FAMILY TILL 1904. INDIVIDUAL STAR PRODUCING PLAYS WITH HARRIS TILL 1918. INDEPENDENT PRODUCER THEREAFTER. RETIRED 1922. RETURNED 1923. RETIRED 1924. RETURNED 1925. RETIRED 1926. RETURNED 1927. SIDESTEPPED TALKIES 1930. STILL ANNOYING PUBLIC.

—GEORGE M. COHAN.

A BRUSH APE FROM MISSOURI. BUT HANDSOME, BRILLIANT AND DEBONAIRE WITHAL. OLDFASHIONED ENOUGH TO LOVE HIS WIFE DEVOTEDLY. CONSTANT COMPANION IS A DEAF BOSTON TALKS TO HIMSELF IN THE BATH. MISTAKES BUS BOYS FOR WAITERS. DRESSES LIKE A RAINBOW AND IS FULL OF RED ANTS AND CANAL WATER.

—O. O. McINTYRE.

STARTED OUT TO BE A GEORGE SAND. IMAGINE EMBARRASSMENT WHEN TURNED OUT TO BE A MOVIE CRITIC. WAS M.C. IN CHICAGO AS LONG AS THEY COULD STAND ME. THEN NEW YORK WHEN THEY RAN ME OUT I CAME TO HOLLYWOOD, WHICH WILL HAVE TO LET ME STAY OR I'LL GIVE ALL THE MOVIE STARS' SECRET TELEPHONE NUMBERS TO THE TOURISTS.

—LOUELLA O. PARSONS.

HIGHLY REPUTABLE AMERICAN NUMEROLOGIST DECLARES DATE OF MY BIRTH SIGNIFICANT. MANY THINGS HAVE HAPPENED AND WILL HAPPEN TO ME, SAYS NUMEROLOGICAL SEER. THAT EXPLAINS WHY I PLAY FEMININE ROLES ON STAGE, PAINT FOR PLEASURE, BOX FOR RECREATION, DABBLE IN MECHANICS FOR FUN, BUT CAN'T MAKE AMERICANS ADOPT CHINESE DRAMA.

—MEI LAN-FANG.

BORN JULY 4TH, ALREADY A HOLIDAY, BIRTH ADDING NOTHING TO HISTORY. INHERITED INFERIORITY COMPLEX; WISDOM TEETH NEVER APPEARED. STARTED IN SHOW BUSINESS TO SEE WORLD, NOT LOOKING WELL IN SAILOR SUIT. DISLIKE PASTRY AND WHALEMEAT; LIKE RED VESTS AND TROLLIES ON STRAWHATS. HEIGHT OF AMBITION, TO PLAY LEAPFROG WITH HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME.

—FRED ALLEN.

BIRTHPLACE, INDIANA; WHISKED TO NEW YORK AT 3; EDUCATED GRAMMAR SCHOOL. DEFINITELY DECIDED HATED BUSINESS. STUDIED ART—PAPA UPSET. SWITCHED TO SINGING, OPERATIC AMBITIONS — PAPA DESERTED, NO MONEY—STARTED DANCING, MUSICAL COMEDY, NEW YORK, LONDON, PARIS. SWITCHED STRAIGHT COMEDY: MADE PICTURES WITHOUT SOUND. BACK AGAIN MUSICALS, MORE MONEY. LOVE AND KISSES.

—CLIFTON WEBB.

ARRIVED ON BROADWAY A GOOD GIRL BUT KEPT IT SECRET. PLAYED FIVE YEARS WINTER GARDEN AND AM GOOD GIRL YET, BUT, OH, ASHTON, IT WAS A STRUGGLE! OPENED FIRST NIGHT CLUB AND HAD EIGHT—CAN PROVE IT WITH WORLD'S LARGEST COLLECTION OF PADLOCKS. IF EVER CLOSE GREEN MILL IN CHICAGO WILL REVIVE HERBERT'S "RED MILL" ALL OVER UNITED STATES.

—TEXAS GUINAN.

BORN IN BED TO MY EMBARRASSMENT WITH A LADY. WANTED TO BE A TEXAS GUINAN, BUT ENERGY FORBADE. INHERITED THE QUALITIES OF A GENTLEMAN, BUT LIVE THE LIFE OF A BUM. LOVE TO WRITE AND WRITE FOR LOVE. OCCASIONALLY EAT AT THE BROWN DERBY, BUT SELDOM WEAR ONE.

—WILSON MIZNER.

BORN BACK OF FATHER'S BLACKSMITH SHOP. STUDIED VIOLIN AT 6, PIANO AT 7, CORNET AT 8: FAILING IN ALL THREE WAS DESTINED TO BECOME A LEADER. STUDIED CIVIL ENGINEERING TILL MET DIFFERENTIAL CALCULUS, WHICH DROVE ME ON STAGE. TEAMED WITH PHIL BAKER AND WE STILL OWE EACH OTHER MONEY.

—BEN BERNIE.

RECOUNTING ONE'S LIFE IN 50 WORDS IS LIKE SEEING IT IN THE FEW SECONDS' VISION ATTRIBUTED TO DROWNING MEN. I'M OF NEW ENGLAND AND CLERICAL ORIGIN. WHAT CAUSED ME TO BECOME AN ACTOR CAN'T TELL, PROBABLY MY MOTHER; SHE WAS ARTISTIC. HAVE FOUGHT MY WAY THROUGH COUNTLESS PARTS—AND HERE I AM AS PAPA JUAN.

—OTIS SKINNER.

BORN PROMPT CORNER. BROUGHT UP ON GREASEPAINT. SERIOUS ACCIDENT SWALLOWING POWDER PUFF, MIRACULOUS RECOVERY. SHAKESPEAREAN STAR 4. DRAMATIC STAR 6. PANTOMIME STAR 8. ORDINARY CHILD FEW YEARS. FOURTEEN. CELEBRATED GAIETY GIRL. BALLET DANCER, MODERN OLD WOMEN, "INGENUES." FROM 18 ACTED SPLENDIDLY INNUMERABLE FAILURES. BAD IN ONLY SUCCESS; REMOVED FROM CAST.

—CONSTANCE COLLIER.

BORN HERMAN, BUT CHANGED TO WOODS IN ADMIRATION OF N. S. WOODS, BEST 10-20-30 ACTOR OF HIS DAY. HE HAS SINCE WORKED FOR ME AND IS STILL 10-20-30, WHILE I'M IMPROVED. I NOW PRODUCE "NELLIE, THE BEAUTIFUL CLOAK MODEL," UNDER TITLES SUCH AS "WITHIN THE LAW," ONLY DIFFERENCE BEING IN PRICE.

—A. H. WOODS

SPOT WHERE I WAS BORN IS MARKED BY A TABLET OF FIVE GRAINS OF ASPIRIN, A PINCH OF BICARBONATE AND JUST ENOUGH WATER TO ALLOW THE WHOLE THING TO DISSOLVE PROPERLY. BEFORE I REALIZED IT I WAS A MAN, AND THEN IT WAS TOO LATE TO DO ANYTHING ABOUT IT.

—GROUCHO MARX.

EMERGED FROM CONVENT WTIH TOP NOTES AND MEDALS. JOINED FARINI OPERA COMPANY AS LILY WEST, PRIMA DONNA. RICE THOUGHT I HAD TWO GOOD REASONS FOR APPEARING IN "SURPRISE PARTY" AND "EVANGELINE," CREATED FIAMETTA IN "MASCOT" AND MADE BROADWAY SENSATION KICKING OFF SLIPPER. MARRIED HARRY BROWN, ACTOR. WHEN SON DIED, LEFT STAGE. H. T. WHITE MADE ME DRAMATIC CRITIC, KNOWN AS

—AMY LESLIE

LEFT NEW YORK 25 YEARS AGO A SOPRANO SINGING WITH ANNA HELD; WOKE UP IN WASHINGTON A BASS. STARTED IMPERSONATIONS—GOOD THING FOR ME JOLSON WENT ON THE STAGE. JOINED MY BROTHER GENE; TOGETHER EVER SINCE. WILL PRODUCE MY OWN SHOW AS SOON AS TALKING PICTURES BLOW OVER.

—WILLIE HOWARD

ABE LINCOLN WAS WRONG WHEN HE SAID "ALL THE PEOPLE." ETC. MY DECEPTIONS STARTED 60 YEARS AGO. SIX MONTHS BEFORE I WAS BORN MY NAME WAS CHARLOTTE, BUT I FOOLED MY MOTHER. MAGIC WORKS, ASHTON. I'VE FOOLED 40 MILLION PEOPLE, BUT I WOULDN'T FOOL YOU FOR THE WORLD.

—HOWARD THURSTON

BORN BENNETT'S MILL, IND., AT EARLY AGE. CAME AWAY SOON AS REALIZED WHERE I WAS. I KNOW LOTS OF CLEVER PEOPLE WHO COME FROM INDIANA. HAVE BEEN WAITER AND STEAMBOAT PORTER. IN MY TEENS SERVED 18 MONTHS IN PROFESSIONAL PRIZE RING, WHICH MAY EXPLAIN MY ATTITUDE TOWARD ASHTON STEVENS.

—RICHARD BENNETT.

NO WONDER I AM WHAT I AM. IN MY GIRLHOOD I WAS A WAITRESS IN MY FATHER'S RESTAURANT, WHERE I SANG 25 SONGS DAILY. SINCE MY RECOGNITION AS THE ONLY SINGER WHO CAN TEACH THE TROMBONE ITS PLACE, I AM STILL SINGING AT BREAKFAST, LUNCHEON AND DINNER SHOWS.

—SOPHIE TUCKER.

BORN TIFLIS, CAUCASUS, 1897, AT SUNRISE, AND ASKED NOT TO BE DISTURBED UNTIL NOON. BEGAN ACTING CAREER 10; RETIRED 15. GRADUATED IN LAW MOSCOW UNIVERSITY; ON WAY TO COURTHOUSE FOUND MYSELF IN THEATRE. STAYED, DIRECTING, FOR BETTER OR WORSE. STEPPED ON CHEWING GUM ON BROADWAY 1927 WHILE GOING TO REHEARSE "PORGY." BEEN PRAYING TO AVOID IT EVER SINCE. UNSUCCESSFULLY.

—ROUBEN MAMOULIAN.

BORN IN MOSCOW YEAR I NEVER COULD FIND OUT; DEBUT, IMPERIAL THEATRE 1917. DIED YEAR LATER FROM DISEASE KNOWN AS BOLSHEVISM. BORN AGAIN NEW YORK 1922: SHOWGIRL; NO. 4 PRIMA DONNA "BLOSSOM TIME," PLAYING EVERY ONE-NIGHTER IN AMERICA. INVOLUNTARILY RETIRED, COOKING FOR HUSBAND ON DIET. "AND SO TO BED" IN CHICAGO.

—EUGENIE LEONTOVICH.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT, I WAS BORN IN NEW YORK WHILE MY MOTHER WAS WAITING FOR A STREET CAR. AT THE AGE OF 10 WAS KISSED BY VISITING AUNT AND IMMEDIATELY LEFT FOR CHICAGO WITH HIRED GIRL. WHILE THERE MET THREE BOYS WHO SUBSEQUENTLY BECAME MY BROTHERS. THEY SHALL NEVER WANT AS LONG AS I LIVE.

—CHICO MARX

LIFE BEGAN AT 9 WHEN FATHER INSISTED ON HORACE MANN SCHOOL AND MOTHER ON METROPOLITAN BALLET SCHOOL. MOTHER WON. BECAME SOLO DANSEUSE; LEARNED HOW TO SPELL IT. HAVE THRILLING MEMORIES OF TIMID ASSOCIATION WITH CARUSO AND FARRAR; AND MUSICAL COMEDY HAS BEEN KIND, BUT HAVE ALWAYS HANKERED FOR A CIRCUS. SOME DAY I'M GOING TO TRY IT.

—QUEENIE SMITH.

JACK LAIT, NEE JACQUIN LEONARD LAIT, CHICAGO PATRIOT LIVING IN NEW YORK, WAS REPORTER, NOW SHORT-STORY WRITER — ALWAYS WROTE FICTION. LOVES HOME, BUT SELDOM GETS THERE. STARTED ON CHICAGO AMERICAN YEAR OF BIG WIND AND BIG HEADLINES; NOW BIG-SHOT EDITOR WITH HORN-TIRED GLASSES AND COPY-TIRED EYES. USED TO KNOW EVERY WAITRESS IN HENRICI'S PERSONALLY; NOW KNOWS EVERY WAITER IN REUBEN'S IMPERSONALLY.

—JACK LAIT.

WAS REPORTER. COULDN'T WRITE OR SPELL AND HATED WORK, SO BECAME CIRCUS PRESS AGENT. QUIT BECAUSE ELEPHANT GOT MOST PUBLICITY; BOUGHT A JOE MILLER AND BECAME COLUMNIST. OTHER CONDUCTORS CLAIMED JOKES THEIRS, SO RENOUNCED GREAT GOD GAG. AGAIN A PRESS AGENT, FINDING IT EASIER TO STEAL SPACE THAN BRAINS. SELAH!

—NELLIE REVELL.

I GOT THE BREAKS. STARTING FROM NOWHERE IN THE CORN BELT, I HELPED EDIT A COUNTRY WEEKLY, THEN WAS JACK-OF-ALL DEPARTMENTS ON AN OBSCURE DAILY, SO THAT WHEN I ARRIVED IN A BIG CITY EVERYTHING I TACKLED IN THE LINE OF COLUMN CONDUCTING AND SYNDICATE PEDDLING AND PLAY-WRITING HAD TO BRING PROMOTION, BECAUSE I HAD NO SOCIAL STANDING WHICH COULD BE ENDANGERED, NO REPUTATION TO TOSS AWAY AND NO PRIDE WHICH MIGHT SUFFER A SETBACK. EVERYTHING I ACQUIRED HAD TO BE VELVET. YOU CANNOT LOSE YOUR SILVER SPOON IF YOU ARE BROUGHT UP ON PEWTER.

—GEORGE ADE.

BORN APRIL 7, 1897, IN NEW YORK CITY. DIED AT THE KEDZIE THEATRE, CHICAGO, NOVEMBER 23, 1916, BARRED OUT OF ALL SHUBERT THEATRES JANUARY 1, 1927, AND RUINED ALL CHANCES OF REINSTATEMENT BY CRACKING, "I'M NOT ALLOWED TO THE SHUBERT OPENINGS SO I WAIT THREE NIGHTS AND GO TO THEIR CLOSINGS."

—WALTER WINCHELL.

INVENTED 1893; NO GOOD REASON; COULDN'T MAKE CHORUS; MARRIED ONTO STAGE 1911. HAD SOME SUCCESS AT DANCING EXCEPT IN OKLAHOMA CITY. RETIRED BECAUSE OF INABILITY TO MASTER CHARLESTON. ONLY LIVING ACTRESS YOU CAN DEPEND ON AS RETIRED. NEVER MADE FAREWELL TOUR; NEVER LEARNED BRIDGE. BEEN VACCINATED NOR CANCELED RESERVATION ON TITANIC. PREFER DOGS TO MOST PEOPLE AND HAVE MY REASONS.

—IRENE CASTLE McLAUGHLIN.

BORN ON EAST SIDE DURING A LULL IN THE CONVERSATION. AS YOUNGSTER COULDN'T MAKE MY EYES BEHAVE. NOW THAT I'M AN AUTHOR CAN'T MAKE MY I'S BEHAVE. WENT ON STAGE AT 12 BECAUSE THEY WOULDN'T ALLOW ME IN POOLROOMS. MARRIED; FIVE DAUGHTERS; ALL GIRLS. WAS RICH UNTIL "CAUGHT SHORT."

—EDDIE CANTOR.

Available from COLUMBIA now!

in TECHNICOLOR!

The JOLSON STORY

with LARRY PARKS · EVELYN KEYES
William Demarest · Bill Goodwin
Screenplay by Stephen Longstreet
Directed by ALFRED E. GREEN · Produced by SIDNEY SKOLSKY

HUMPHREY BOGART
LIZABETH SCOTT
in JOHN CROMWELL'S
Dead Reckoning

with Morris CARNOVSKY · Charles CANE · William PRINCE · Marvin MILLER · Wallace FORD
Screenplay by Oliver H. P. Garrett, Steve Fisher
Directed by JOHN CROMWELL · Produced by SIDNEY BIDDELL

DICK POWELL EVELYN KEYES
Johnny O'clock

with Lee J. COBB · Ellen DREW · Nina FOCH
S. THOMAS GOMEZ · JOHN KELLOGG
Screenplay by Robert Rossen
Directed by ROBERT ROSSEN
Produced by EDWARD G. NEALIS · Associate Producer MILTON HOLMES

The Return of Monte Cristo

starring
LOUIS HAYWARD · BARBARA BRITTON with GEORGE MACREADY
HENRY STEVEN RAY LUDWIG
UNA O'CONNOR · STEPHENSON · GERAY · COLLINS · DONATH
Screenplay by George Bruce and Alfred Neumann
Directed by HENRY LEVIN · Produced by GRANT WHYTOCK
AN EDWARD SMALL PRODUCTION

Mr. DISTRICT ATTORNEY

starring
DENNIS O'KEEFE · ADOLPHE MENJOU
MARGUERITE CHAPMAN · MICHAEL O'SHEA with GEORGE COULOURIS · JEFF DONNELL · STEVEN GERAY · RALPH MORGAN · JOHN KELLOGG
Screenplay by Ian McLellan Hunter
Based on the radio program "Mr. District Attorney" created by Phillips H. Lord
Directed by ROBERT B. SINCLAIR · Produced by SAMUEL BISCHOFF

...and these top attractions will be followed by many more from Columbia in 1947!

COLUMBIA Pictures

Couturiers' Tieups With Hollywood Nowadays a Big Business Both Ways; Films' Sartorial Creations Spell B. O.

By KAY CAMPBELL

Hollywood.

Paradoxically, while Hollywood spent an estimated $1,000,000 more on screen styles during 1946 than during the previous year, production budgets were nicked less heavily for fashion outlays than ever before. For, thanks to exploitation tieups, wardrobe figures moved out of the red and into the black—in a large way.

How much publicity can you get from the fashion department of a picture? Well, until a couple of smart flacks from Selznick's sort of extended this style tieup idea in connection with "Duel in the Sun" nobody had the foresight that it might pay off to any great extent. Trend-setting? Sure, everybody in Hollywood knew that Paris stole screen designs and that adaptations of these same styles turned up on 7th avenue, a few months later, but after you'd photographed them and sent them to 900 editors what more could you do with them? Spasmodically, somebody would figure out an additional stunt, such as when Russell Birdwell sent the tiara worn by Madeleine Carroll in "Prisoner of Zenda" around to exhibs and thereby made it pay for its rental costs, or Metro's stunt of placing the "Marie Antoinette" costume on display in department store windows, at Warners' "Rhapsody in Blue" tieup with a fabric manufacturer. These, and similar publicity deals, made intermittently, were never taken very seriously by studio execs.

Then, in 1945, Selznick's flacks took the period costumes worn by Jennifer Jones and Lillian Gish to market and came back with $1,750,000 worth of paid advertising space, plus an equal amount of publicity space from designs created by Walter Plunkett. These styles and adaptations "cracked" Butterick patterns, never previously tied up with film creations, high-style manufacturers, 2,000 window displays in department stores and snagged double trucks in slick and fash mags.

Now, the lid's off. Film fashions are Big Biz today. Nearly every studio is conscious of space, paid advertising space, to be had for the seeking. The industry is familiar with ad tieups, and has used them in every conceivable manner—except for wardrobe exploitations. Paramount's Sam Vorzimer, for example, garnered $7,000,000 worth of paid advertising space in billboards, mags, newspapers, and displays on one picture, "So Proudly We Hail." Though this moola was spent by manufacturers plugging cosmetics, cigarets, cola, cups, blankets, soap, silver and pearls, not one line was directly connected with the duds worn by the three photogenic stars —Colbert, Goddard and Lake. This procedure was the rule, not the exception, at every studio.

But, last year, 1946, marked the beginning of a new era in fash exploitation. Though wardrobe budget costs had upped at least 60% due to both labor conditions and added cost of materials, to an estimated total expenditure of $5,000,000, ad tieups resulted in space worth twice this estimate. Orry Kelly started sketching adaptations of "Temptation" costumes before the production was finished. Jean Louis "modernized" the Grecian duds worn by Rita Hayworth in "Down To Earth" as fast as he turned out originals.

International Pitch

Samuel Goldwyn, ever-conscious of the foreign market, spent $10,000 re-furbishing the wardrobes for the six Goldwyn Girls to wear on their ballyhoo trip to England, where the gals would beat drums for "The Kid From Brooklyn." Following a report from Dr. Gallup's poll-takers which showed that the sextet from Goldwyn added $500,000 to the gross take of a picture, commercial tieups were made on various items of their apparel, including sports clothes, bathing suits, cosmetics, gloves and dinner dresses—all adaptations from their film garbs. The gals modeled these in a fash show staged by a Seattle department store, with the retailer paying all costs, including salaries of the gals; and a local buying office filed a request with Bill Hebert's office to send the six on a tour of selected stores throughout the country to put on [illegible] shows —with all expenses paid by the buying office.

Miracle Productions tossed plenty into the wardrobe coffers for the 20 changes designed by Michael Woulfe for Sylvia Sidney to wear in "Mr. Ace." Since this was a "modern" picture, with a number of costumes suitable for commercial purposes, including a grey crepe dinner gown heavily festooned with silver bugle beads and rhinestones at the throat and waist line, a black satin dinner suit, a double breasted coat dress of sheer yellow print wool, and a bugle-beaded chiffon negligee, the studio collected 10 times its expenditures in tieups with fabric, accessory, fur, dress and negligee manufacturers.

Enterprise's merchandising program for "Arch of Triumph" was one of the most outstanding. It involved giving the rights to make "Arch" prints to one fabric house. These prints were then released to makers of accessories, dresses, hats, lingerie and shoes. When these coordinated groups were completed, store-wide promotions were arranged in one retail outlet in each of 3,000 towns, with newspaper, magazine and display coverage. Total advertising space was estimated at $1,500,000.

The list of studio designers participating in such exploitations included Renie, Eddie Stevenson, Travis Banton, Howard Shoup, Walter Plunkett, Rene Hubert, Orry-Kelly, Edith Head, Adele Palmer, Irene Shareff, Oleg Cassini, Leah Rhodes, Milo Anderson, Jean Louis, Elizabeth Montgomery, Charles LeMaire, Dorothy O'Hare and Bonnie Cashon.

Luxury Wardrobes

Luxury wardrobes are definitely back, and the movies have got them. For her role in Universal-International's "Lessons in Love," Travis Banton designed Lucille Ball an ermine blouse. She wears this with a black tailored suit. And Merle Oberon's costumes, alone, set that studio back $43,600 in "Temptation." An eyelet embroidered gown, and a bustled chintz-appliqued on crepe dress designed by Orry Kelly cost $1,050 apiece.

The highest budget on any one production was the $250,000, set aside for "Forever Amber," by 20th-Fox. Linda Darnell flaunts 43 costumes created by Rene Hubert, each of which weighs 35 pounds at least. Hubert had to make his own fabric for one outfit, which consisted of a base of white organza on which was stitched yards upon yards of inch-wide angel blue velvet, slightly narrower lame ribbon, and a narrow pale blue velvet ribbon.

Just a Light Wardrobe

An organdy formal, very bouffant and heavily encrusted with pearls and sequins was designed by Howard Shoup for June Allyson to wear in "High Barbaree." And the period gowns worn by Lana Turner designed by Walter Plunkett for "Green Dolphin Street" mounted to an astronomical total.

A white evening gown of Alix jersey with irridescent paillettes embroidered on the sleeves and worn by Michele Morgan in "The Chase" nicked Nero productions $1,500. And a bugle-beaded dress worn by Marguerite Chapman, and topped by a stole of white fox in "Mr. District Attorney," represented an equal outlay at Columbia. Jean Louis created this, as well as the Rita Hayworth costumes in "Down to Earth," which added up to a fancy figure.

Republic's expenditures reached a new high with Vera Ralston's wardrobe in "Plainsman and the Lady," with one period evening gown of white satin shot with gold costing $1,500.

Fifty thousand dollars was spent on Eddie Stevenson's costumes for RKO's "Sinbad," with $1,500 going into one East Indian dress worn by Maureen O'Hara, which had to be made in duplicate. Renie designed 20 changes for Martha Scott's "So Well Remembered."

'Father's' $300,000 Nut

High budget picture at Warners was "Life With Father." One exciting outfit worn by Irene Dunne and designed by Milo Anderson, was fashioned from a museum piece of lace, purchased from a Pasadena society matron who had paid $1,500 for the yardage years ago in Brussels. This was originally intended for her daughter's wedding dress, but since the daughter eloped, was never used. In "A Very Rich Man," Martha Vickers wears superb resort clothes styled by Leah Rhodes which have already been adapted commercially.

Edith Head had two "super" pix at Paramount, one period, one modern. This designer puts her period styles to novel use by adapting from them for modern pictures. "If they're good enough to talk about adapting, do it yourself," is her theory.

And from her modern picture, "Perfect Marriage," Miss Head has used several adaptations of the Mexican overskirt which Loretta Young displays in pajamas, dresses and negligees, as well as a belt which is formed of a series of flat pockets which make up a peplum.

Hollywood May Be Stumbling But It's Certainly More Realistic Than B'way Or British, Sez WB's Jerry Wald

Admitting that Hollywood today may be stumbling in the dark in its search for screen material, Warner Bros. producer Jerry Wald came to the defense of the American film industry against concerted attacks from the British press and several Hollywood toppers by pointing out that the British also had produced nothing but escapist pictures since the war's end.

In New York for a month's combined business-holiday junket, Wald declared that the greatest trouble with Hollywood today is that there are only about 25 good writers and it's these alone who determine the top pictures. "No director can take a bad script and enhance it," he said. "Once such writers as Robert Sherwood, Norman Krasna, Nunnally Johnson, Charles Brackett, Billy Wilder, Robert Riskin, Shakespeare and G. B. Shaw have been taken into consideration, there aren't many more writers capable of turning out good pictures."

Rest of American show business is also at a loss for top writing talent, Wald said, and this dearth of scripters extends across the Atlantic. Need today is not for pictures with "social significance," as some Hollywood attackers have proclaimed, but for pictures that reflect the times we live in—pictures that will give people 50 years from now an idea of what our life is. Fact that customers today are most interested in what's going on, hence that directly affects them, is attested to by the business being chalked up by Samuel Goldwyn's "Best Years of Our Lives."

"The world today is going through the greatest transformation since the beginnings of history — the transition from the industrial age into the atomic era," Wald said. [illegible] the legitimate stage or the publishing business seem to have recognized this by putting out properties dealing with the problems inherent in the transformation." Every great writer, including Dickens, Shaw, Thackeray, etc., have reflected the times in which they lived but writers today "seem to be on a vacation."

Ahead of Legit or Books

Even though Hollywood might be lackadaisical in facing the world's problems, it's still far ahead of the legit stage or publishing, Wald declared. Very few good novels dealing with topical problems have been forthcoming from the book publishers, so that Hollywood must take the initiative by assigning its own scripters to work out ideas. As for the stage, Wald expressed great surprise that only two current legiters —"State of the Union" and "Born Yesterday"—could fall in the topical category.

Hollywood, on the other hand, has taken many steps in the right direction. Much-maligned cycle of gangster pictures, although they met with sarcastic criticism from foreign reviewers, presented a true picture of an American problem and, by bringing that problem to the fore, did much to dispel the evil. In the same way, "Grapes of Wrath" presented its problem. "How Green Was My Valley" portrayed the labor-management problem of the coal mines and a long list of war pictures brought the war home to the public. England, on the other hand, produced only one good picture—Noel Coward's "In Which We Serve."

Hollywood is going forward in this direction, Wald said. "Lost Weekend" presented a serious portrayal of the alcoholic's problems and several studios have scheduled pictures dealing with juvenile delinquency, divorce, etc. Despite these good pictures, Hollywood is still stifled in the main by a lack of imagination, Wald said. Typical philosophy of most producers is to make films "tried, true and trite." He quoted other producers as declaring that "if a picture's made money before, let's make it over again."

Taboos Retard Progress

Outside forces also militate against Hollywood's purpose, he said, citing the Production Code's ban against any property dealing with social diseases and the tumult stirred up by the Legion of Decency when the PCA eased its ban against narcotic themes.

As for the British, Wald implied they had no grounds on which to criticize American product so blandly. Majority of British films since the war's end have been purely escapist and the English have produced nothing to help explain their problems to U. S. audiences via the screen and so help the two countries achieve mutual understanding.

Paradoxically enough, he pointed out, the best pictures about Britain have been turned out not by British producers but by Americans in Hollywood. "Cavalcade" is still considered a classic and other films, such as "Mrs. Miniver," "Random Harvest," "Lives of a Bengal Lancer," etc., have followed along in that vein.

New European Theatre Bldgs. Have Apts., Stores To Amortize High Costs

Unprecedenty high costs of building materials in Europe are cuing a new type theatre which combines both residential apartments and stores with the filmeries, Ben M. Cohn, Universal-International's theatre chief, said last week following a six-week looksee of the Continental scene. Theatre architects are planning a flock of these houses because the nut on theatres is so high that foreign exhibs feel the necessity of supplementing the b.o. take with rentals from flat dwellers and store owners.

While film business abroad is still at a high enough level to meet investment charges on new houses, need for augmenting it with rentals to aid amortization process is being talked up by the industry, Cohn said, since that's a long-term operation. Cited as an illustration is an ambitious building program in Milan, Italy, in which local architects have blueprinted a project which merges a theatre, 25 stores in arcade, and some 50 apartments in the same building.

Cohn eyed a number of likely sites both in Europe and North Africa for expansion of U-I into foreign exhibition field, long planned by the company. No deals have yet been closed, but it's understood that a number of acquisitions will be polished off within the next few months.

BETTY HUTTON
"PERILS OF PAULINE"
A PARAMOUNT PICTURE

Season's Greetings
from
REPUBLIC PICTURES

MY FAVORITE STORY

J. C. Nugent

Of course the teacher was bombastic and the scholar cynical or it wouldn't have happened.

"All great painting is simple, all great acting is simple, all great men are simple," said the teacher at the drama class. "You must be very great," said the scholar, "because to my mind you're so simple you're idiotic."

Eddie Cantor

Because this happened so recently, and because I can't think of it even now without laughing, I think you should know that in Milwaukee, the latter part of July, I was seated calmly at breakfast when a knock came at the door. My "come in" brought a goodly-sized woman holding an emaciated looking child about nine. No hello, no greeting of any kind, the mother pushed her child in front of me with the loudest "Sing," you ever heard. The kid went into two choruses of "Let It Snow" and segued into "Laughing on the Outside, Crying on the Inside."

When she finished, her mama said just one word to me: "Well?" I told her the truth. "This child, madam, has no talent at all. Take her home, let her play with her dolls and skates. I'm sure she'll be better off living a normal existence. She's just no good for this business, believe me."

Up jumped mama, grabbed the little girl fiercely, went to the door, opened it, looked back, pointed her finger at me and said, "You stink, too."

Jay Brennan

Kathryn, film star, had a lover by the name of Don, a spendthrift. Kathryn was tight fisted. One day Don put the bee on Kathryn for $100. Kathryn said no, not a dime, and went out. While she was away from the apartment Don snuck his head in the gas oven and committed suicide. When I went to the Waldorf Towers to see Norma I told her.

"Did you hear the dirt about Kate's boy friend Don?"

Norma—"Yes . . . I wonder how she's taking it?"

Jay—"I just left her. She's acting like a Mad Woman. All she does is scream and yell."

Norma—"She's screaming now?"

Jay—"Yeh but wait'll she gets the GAS BILL."

Victor Borge

Olaf was a neighbor of mine in Denmark. He usually spent Saturday evenings in town celebrating and early one Sunday morning staggered home and crawled under his wagon to sleep off the effects of his big evening.

In the morning his wife found him there, lying under the wagon in a heavy frost.

"Yump up out o' there, Olaf," she called. "You'll catch your death of cold."

"Yumping yimminy," said Olaff, "It is cold. Throw on another wagon before I freeze."

Tom Howard

Two friends met on the street. One carried his arm in a sling.

"Have an accident Joe?"

"No thanks I just had one."

"Well, that's too bad."

"Oh, this ain't nothing; my brother-in-law was killed by a weasel."

"Killed by a weasel?"

"Yeah, he was walking down a railroad track and he didn't hear the weasel."

Bud Abbott

Mrs. Cristillo's servant had been in service for three months when she came to her mistress and informed her she would have to quit. Mrs. Cristillo asked the reason and was informed by the servant girl that she would soon have a baby, and not being married, she would have to leave. Being kindhearted Mrs. Cristillo explained to the girl that she and Mr. Cristolla were childless and nothing would please them better than to have a child. So the servant girl was given the best guest room, catered to, and in the course of time the baby was born and adopted by the Cristillos.

Almost a year went by and again the servant girl came to Mrs. Cristillo saying that she was again going to have a baby and that she would have to leave. Although a bit surprised, Mrs. Cristillo thought it over and once more explained that they would give her the best of care and would adopt the coming child, adding that it would be a playmate for the other baby. Again time passed as the servant again occupied the guest room, was catered to and given the attention of the best baby specialists in town. The child was born and adopted by the Cristillos.

As another year came to its end, the servant girl, still unmarried, came to her mistress and informed her that another baby was on its way and this time she must definitely quit. Mrs. Cristillo, although greatly shocked, offered to adopt the third child, but the servant girl insisted that she must leave the employ of the Cristillos. When asked the reason why she must quit, the servant girl replied, "I refuse to work for a family that has so many kids."

Jack Benny

My favorite story is about two fellows playing Gin Rummy. One man dealt the cards and the other picked up his hand—it looked so good, he had a big smile on his face. After drawing four cards, he said, "I'm going down with three." The other fellow said, "I got two." The cards were dealt again—the first guy picked up his hand and it was even better than the one before. He drew three cards and said, "I go down with two." The other fellow said, "I got one." So, of course, he lost this time, too. The cards were dealt again and this time the fellow picked up the best hand he ever had. He only needed one card for "Gin." He drew the first card and said, "I've got Gin." The other fellow said—"I got 14 cards."

Arthur Kober

Two old Jewish gentlemen were seated on a park bench, staring lugubriously into space. There was a profound silence for the longest time, broken at last by the grayer member. He emitted a long-drawn sigh and said, "Oi!" His companion looked at him dolefully and said, "You're telling me!"

Bennett Cerf

A man phoned an undertaker and said, "Please hurry over here. I want you to supervise the burial of my poor, departed wife."

"Your wife!", gasped the undertaker. "Didn't I bury her two years ago?"

"You don't understand," said the man. "You see, I married again."

"Gee, I didn't know that," said the undertaker. "Congratulations!"

Jack Oakie

I always enjoy the one about the woman who was advised to see a psychiatrist.

"Doctor, there's really nothing the matter with me, I just happen to like potato pancakes."

"You're right," the doctor agreed, "there's nothing wrong in that. I happen to be very fond of potato pancakes myself."

"You are," exclaimed the delighted woman. "You must come to my home some time. I have trunks full of them."

Jack Carson

My favorite story is the one about the fifth rate burlesque company that is touring the south. They have very little success and one of the ingenues dies of old age. They don't have enough money between them to afford a proper burial so they lay her to rest in Potter's Field. At the grave the company manager says that he thinks they should have some prayers for the occasion. So the first and only comic says, "What prayer?" And the manager replies, "Oh I don't know, any prayer, the Lord's Prayer." The comedian says, "Do you know the Lord's Prayer?" Then he asks another member of the company, and another, and the answer is always no. In frustration he says, "For Pete's sake, doesn't anybody know that Lord's Prayer bit?"

Eddie Davis

A certain chap woke up one morning, alarmed because of a sudden throbbing in his throat and ringing in his ears. He rushed to his doctor, who diagnosed it as appendicitis and ordered immediate surgery. After weeks of recuperation the poor guy was discharged from the hospital. The moment he hit the street, the throbbing in his throat and ringing in his ears started all over again. So he went to a specialist who said it was lung trouble and removed one lung. But the throbbing in his throat and ringing in his ears started all over again the moment he left the second hospital. Three specialists after consultation agreed it was kidney condition and that the offending kidney must go. After this operation, the chap was so at his wits end to find the throbbing in his throat and ringing in his ears still with him that he went to the Mayo Clinic. There he was told he had only two more weeks to live.

Determined to enjoy his last two weeks on earth, the fellow drew all his money out of the bank and decided he would have the time of his almost-finished life, with the sky the limit. Going to a very exclusive haberdashery, he saw some beautiful shirts at $60 each, and ordered 15 so he could have a clean one for each of his remaining days. He insists he wears a 15½ collar, the clerk argues 16 is his size. Our hero is adamant and finally the clerk wearily says "OK—I'll give you 15½—but I'm warning you, you'll have a terrific throbbing in the throat and ringing in the ears."

Joe E. Lewis

I was shopping at Gimbels. It was awfully hot that afternoon. Suddenly a floorwalker sinks to the floor crying "Water, water," and he gets help not a second too soon, for in another moment his collar would have died.

P. S.—This is a big lie. It's raining outside, and love is everywhere, especially in the third chapter of "Forever Amber."

Georgie Price

Goldfarb, the movie exhibitor, was an inveterate card player. One night while playing a particularly exciting hand, he suffered a heart attack and died. His cronies decided it was necessary to advise the widow. Buxbaum, the lawyer, was chosen to break the news to her as gently as possible. He rang the bell to the Goldfarb apartment and when Mrs. Goldfarb opened the door he said, "Good evening, Mrs. Goldfarb, your husband was playing gin for $1 a point and he was on a triple blitz. He knocked with two, was undercut and lost $1,800." "He should drop dead," shouted Mrs. Goldfarb. "He did," whispered Mr. Buxbaum, "Good night."

Louella O. Parsons

Years ago when Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks were the reigning king and queen, they planned a trip east. Doug used to have an annoying little habit of tickling Sid Grauman, and he hated it. So when the Fairbanks left Pasadena on their way east, Sid hired a trained goose and sent it to their stateroom. The goose earned $750 a week, and the man who owned it, gave all sorts of instructions. When time went on and the goose wasn't returned, Sid wired Doug, "Please return goose." The answer came back, "We just ate him for dinner, and he's delicious."

The topper on the joke was that it cost Sid over $1,000 to pacify the irate owner of the bird.

Pat C. Flick

During one of the many studio strikes an executive of a major company was engaged on the phone. "Will you please call my husband, Phil, to the phone?" pleaded a female voice on the other end of the wire. "Phil? Phil?" asked the executive, "does he work at this studio?" "Of course he works there," she replied. "But right now he's out front picketing the place."

Hildegarde

My good friend, Gracie Fields, tells it and I love this little story. A man was drinking a glass of beer at a bar when another man came in and ordered a coke. He drank the coke, walked up one wall of the room, across the ceiling, down the other wall—and then went right out the door. The beer drinker was shocked. He turned to the bartender and said: "What a peculiar fellow!" The bartender nodded: "Yes, isn't he? He never says goodnight!"

Louis Sobol

When Hollywood's No. 1 hypochondriac, Carl Laemmle, Jr., called in a new doctor recently, that smart medico, after examining him carefully concluded it was all in the mind. Nevertheless, he said nothing but told Junior he would send him over some special pills—they were to be taken three times a day. A week later, Junior Laemmle visited the doctor—all smiles.

"Those pills," he exclaimed. "They're wonderful. I sleep better. I feel better. I'm a new man."

"Those pills," said the doctor, dryly, "are made of bread. Nothing more than little balls of bread."

"My God!", screamed Junior, going ashen white, "whole wheat or white?"

Senator Ford

Screwball Jake went into his barn and saw his kid Xerxes shaking a rabbit and yelling, "Come on, how much is five and five?"

Jake said, "Xerxie, what's the idea of shaking the bunny and askin' him how much is five and five?"

Xerxes replied, "My teacher told me that rabbits multiply rapidly—and this dumb kluck can't even add!"

Lou Holtz

Lapidus was complaining about the high expenses to run his store. He said, "It cost me $50 a day before I open the store. Just expenses." Shapiro said, "Well, how do you live?" Lapidus said, "I close the store Tuesdays and Fridays and on $100 a week I get along."

Harry Hershfield

A wife wanted a fur coat and after much pleading the husband opened his heart and gave her $100. After a lot of shopping, she got herself a black sealskin coat. After he saw the black sealskin coat on her, he walked her up Park avenue. Right ahead of her was walking a woman with a $10,000 mink. The wife turned to the husband and cried, "Now, that's a beautiful coat. That's the one I should be wearing." And he replied, "If you like brown so much, why did you buy black?"

Gertrude Lawrence

Have a great affection for this debunking little limerick of Mr. Shaw's (G.B., not Artie):

There was a young man from Saint Bee's
Who was stung on the arm by a wasp.
When they asked, " Does it hurt?"
He replied, "No, it doesn't,
But I'm glad that it wasn't a hornet"!

Ed Wynn

The Indians are forming a third political party for the 1948 election. They're going to beg the Government not to give the country back to them.

H. I. Phillips

Dear Mr. Anthony: I am a second-story worker and I have a cousin who is a Democrat. My father is in Atlanta and my mother has just run away with a gangster. The home is now dependent for support on two sisters who are strip teasers. I have a brother, but he is in Alcatraz. I am in love with a Zulu girl who is in a home for delinquency. Though she knows nothing of my background, she loves me. We intend to get married as soon as she settles a bigamy case which is now in court and I get the court to drop a morals charge against me. When we are married we intend to open a honky-tonk near the Brooklyn Navy Yard. Now Mr. Anthony, this is my problem: In view of the fact I intend to make this girl my wife and bring her into my family, should I or should I not tell her about my cousin who is a Democrat?

Bobby Clark

I like the one about the baseball fan who went to the race-track for the first time. He bet on a horse, and just as the horses neared the finish, his nag was about a yard behind the first horse. He yelled at the top of his lungs to his horse, "Slide, you sucker, slide."

Gertrude Niesen

The brother-in-law came for a weekend—and stayed for a year and a half. His hosts decided to get rid of him so the wife said at dinner, "The soup is too cold!" The husband said, "No it's too hot." Idea was that whichever one he agreed with, the other would get mad and throw him out. Comes dinner—soup arrives—wife says, "It's too hot." Husband says, "It's too cold." Turning to the brother-in-law he says, "What do you think?"

America's guest replies, "I don't know from nothin'. I'm staying two more weeks."

Paul Whiteman

Twenty years ago, in the days when Morton Downey sang with his band, it was not the fashion to have vocalists who were only singers and not musicians as well. Downey was a terrific singer but he couldn't play an instrument. Consequently, I gave him a French horn to hold in his lap and told him not to blow it.

Most being a whimsical fellow, however, couldn't resist putting the mouthpiece to his lips and tooting, usually just at a time when the sour note could be clearly heard. I plugged the mouthpiece with a cork and that subdued Downey for a while. But a little later he pulled out the cork and began blowing again.

The trouble wasn't ended until I had someone take the horn to a blacksmith and welded, thereby forever silencing the instrument and ending Downey's brief, unmusical career as a French horn player.

Earl Wilson

At the Banshees luncheon, Milton Berle used a familiar comedy routine, asking Hugh Herbert, "What are you smoking—old rehearsal clothes?" and "Don't you ever inhale?" When he asked Herbert if he didn't inhale, Herbert said, "Not with you in the room."

THE NEW PRC

presents

NANCY COLEMAN
MARGARET LINDSAY
PHILIP REED
FELIX BRESSART

in

"HER SISTER'S SECRET"

with

REGIS TOOMEY · HENRY STEPHENSON
FRITZ FELD · GEORGE MEEKER

A HENRY BRASH PRODUCTION
BASED ON THE NOVEL "DARK ANGEL"
BY GINA KAUS

DIRECTED BY
EDGAR G. ULMER

The New PRC Pictures

Thumbnose Sketch—Olsen & Johnson

Almost half a century ago, two Nutleys were born. The births were clearly a case where the stork collaborated with the cuckoo! One of the nutlets was born in Peru, Ind., and was named John Siguard Olson; he was later called "Ole Moses Olsen" and then just Ole Olsen. The other nutlet was born and grazed in Chicago and was christened Harold Ogden Johnson, he was later called "Chic" for his own protection. The doctors figured they'd never grow to be normal, and they were right! They were bottle babies and what suckers they were.

Ole Olsen hung around Peru while slowly approaching adolescence, very slowly. He did odd jobs while waiting for Johnson to grow up in Chicago. He struggled through the best years of his life with a violin which later turned out to be just a fiddle. Playing a fiddle was the only way he could get a napkin around his neck. In winter time he would pump the church organ, teach Sunday School and hang around the local ice rink and pick up fallen women. In Chicago, Chic was 12 years old when his parents packed him off to kindergarten, where he gave matches a hot foot. He was also learning to play the piano. He grew up very fortunate, escaping an education that may have ruined his theatrical career.

By now Ole was old enough to borrow enough money to get to Chicago, so he combed his hair with a Notre Dame shift, and got off the train from the middle door and landed in Chicago with a violin, bow, resin and ambition. He attended Northwestern University to get a general musical education paying for it by making up beds and waiting on table. It was here he met Chic, in one of the beds. Using the bed as a piano stool he played for Ole. Ole in turn took out his violin (from hock) and played for Chic. Then they both played together. The professors heard them, and that is how Olsen & Johnson left Northwestern University to make the world a bitter place to live in.

Their first date was at the North American Restaurant. One patron complained that the table he had obstructed his BOO! Ole would lay on the floor while Chic would play the piano—seems hard to pick up the pennies. Ole was the comic of the act as he had experienced singing ulcerated songs, but it wasn't long before Chic became the comic. They rehearsed day and night; in fact rehearsals made a wreck out of them and the audience noticed the improvement. It was no time when vaudeville called and the boys brayed back. They played their first vaudeville date (if you can call playing at the Mabel theatre on Lincoln Ave., Chicago, vaudeville). They had the audience in spasms of silent hysteria, so they got booked for the Empress where their names were in lights. The manager used the early radio bulbs. What the boys were young and their eyesight good, so they kept looking at the sign all night. It was just a short jump to McVicker's and then they went on the Pantages Circuit. They went so far west that sunset couldn't find them!

Only 2-Act With 50 People

Years went by, but our heroes never did. They were nuttier than a squirrel's love chest. Olsen & Johnson was a human word concoction while Chic was laughing up is own gags. He was a regular he-he man. In 1926 they picked up enough unused people on the road and made them stooges, putting on a unit called "Monkey Business." They did plenty of business while monkeying around the vaudeville houses of the nation. They were now a standard act. It was the only two-man act in show business with 50 people! By now the boys were tired of success so they went to Australia where they played in "Tip Toes" and "Tell Me More." People stayed away in big crowds. So the boys packed their belongings in a Kangaroo's pouch and went back to the States and were starved in "Take a Chance." They did pictures for Warner Bros. such as "50 Million Frenchmen," "Sailors Behave," "Golddust Gertie." They photographed like a Rand-McNally map. Then they did 39 weeks for the Ritchfield Oil Co. on the radio and got enough out of it to go back in vaudeville with a bigger and better unit show. They now had 51 people!

While playing in Philadelphia, Earl Carroll saw them and told J. J. Shubert about them. Lee and Harry Kaufman borrowed fares from J. J. and went to see the show before it flopped. When they got back to the Shuberts wired the boys, "How would you like to play on Broadway?" The boys wired back, "What, in all that traffic?" J. J. finally made himself understood and the boys came to New York and made good—money! "Hellzapoppin" is part of theatrical history. Opening night the critics, outside of Walter Winchell, said it was a flop, but it proved the noncensus of public opinion. The show ran 1,125 times, besides touring three companies. It just had to stop because they ran out of bulletins!

By now the boys were in the big dough. They made a picture of "Hellzapopplin," they co-produced "Sons o' Fun" with Ole Olsen & Chic Roberts, they invested in dozens of ventures, restaurants, sporting goods, gag files, pushcarts, real estate, and Chic bought all the cows and paraphernalia of Borden's at the World's Fair and became a gentleman farmer in Connecticut, as nice a guy as ever posed a mule with a hoe handle. At sunset he puts tuxedos on his scarecrows.

The Original Hoifoot Kids

This shows you what two wisecrackers could do, especially when they are 1% wise and 99% cracked. Olsen & Johnson have a definite nuisance value in show business. They used to play the Palace, now they live in one. They have a special double-sized income tax form issued to them by the Government for their tax returns. They have hobbies; they take crackers to bed with them—firecrackers! They sure get a bang out of life. The boys suffer from an inferiority complex; they think each other inferior. After the shooting in their shows a lion's den looks like a sanitarium to them.

Here are two boys that made it the hard way. They started in a restaurant and are now back in one. This time at the Carnival, N. Y. intery, where they are elevating the stage as well as the price of admission. A ticket for their show is a contract to make your face do some laughing. For over 30 years it has been their fortunate lot to give belly laughs to a nation and a nation thanks them in return with respect and affection. Ole and Chic have played benefits for all sorts of causes, they never say "No" to a plea for help. They'll empty their last cartridge for a pal. They are always ready to fire a fusillade of fun for any charity. They have the ability to win the hearts and confidence of all with whom they associate.

The Lambs are proud of them, so are the Saints & Sinners, the Legionnaires, the Elks and dozens of other organizations. They have joined everything including a lending library, and they pay their dues, so why shouldn't they be proud of them?

I like Olsen & Johnson because they are loyal to each other, to their families and their friends. They are really grand Son's of Fun! They are Nutty but Nice!

—Joe Laurie, Jr.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Ad agencies are urged to get hep and start using films as a selling medium for their clients by Theodore Ahu Ben Adhem Still Asleep," by Al Sherman, a Washington consultant, in visual media public relations. Sherman contends that the agencies are ducking films the way they feared to take a chance on radio years ago, and points out that only six agencies have picture departments. He contends that the advertising boys are liable to miss the boat and have someone take the business from them.

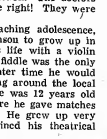
Henry Wallace's leftish New Republic has joined the chorus in an attack on Hollywood's production code along with a prediction that the "code dam is certain to break." Hollywood correspondent for the mag pastes the code as a weapon "of even mildly liberal ideas" and airs the familiar charge that a producer can follow the letter of regulations and still turn out a work of suggestive sexiness.

Wanna Know About Showmanship? Get a Load of Willie Hammerstein

Oscar II Is One of Today's Outstanders, and His Grandpop, the First Oscar Hammerstein, Was OK Too, But Willie's Exploits at the Old Victoria Were Fabulous

By JOE LAURIE, JR.

The Hammersteins are legendary in show business. Today's Oscar Hammerstein 2d is one of the theatre's shining lights. His uncle, Arthur Hammerstein, made Broadway musicomedy history in the 1920s with such hits as "The Firefly," "Naughty Marietta," "High Jinks," "Rose-Marie," "Sometime," "Blue Kitten," "Song of the Flame," "Golden Dawn" and dozens of others he produced.



Joe Laurie, Jr.

But it is of Arthur Hammerstein's brother—the father of Oscar 2d—that we'll talk about, the fantastic and fabulous Willie Hammerstein, it was through his management and great showmanship that Hammerstein's Victoria became the greatest and most colorful vaudeville theatre in the world! In its 17 years on Broadway between 42nd and Broadway, it grossed over $20,000,000 and made a $5,000,000 profit for the Hammersteins. But it isn't the money, but the "fun" making it that I believe you'll be interested in.

Talent and showmanship were never rationed in the Hammerstein family. A few highlights of Oscar Hammerstein the 1st. who was the father of Arthur and Willie, will give you an idea of Willie's background and also prove the old Persian adage, "The apple does not fall far from the tree."

The first Oscar Hammerstein came to America from Berlin when he was about 15, started as a cigar maker and became one of the greatest impressarios of grand opera. In his day he discovered many musical and operatic talent than any of his contemporaries. Among the old vaudeville fans and actors he will always be remembered as the building of the famous Hammerstein's Victoria Theatre and Music Hall. On the site of an old barn, on 42d Street and Broadway, he built this "freak" house with old building materials, because of his shortage of cash (one of the many times). It was a combination theatre, music hall and roof garden, playing the great dramas, musical and variety shows. Drinks were served during the performance, the bar was never closed during all the time that Hammerstein's was opened. The last show at this house was on April 26, 1915, just beating Prohibition by a couple of years.

The Victoria was Hammerstein's fifth plunge theatre building. He first built the city's first theatre north of Central Park, the Harlem Opera House in 1899. He then built the Columbia on East 125th street, which was bought in 1900 by F. F. Proctor for his continuous vaudeville shows. It was in that year that Hammerstein built the Manhattan Opera House on the north side of 34th street, between Eighth and Ninth avenue. It was in this house that he introduced the odd combination of Opera & Vaudeville. It was here that he first circused Grand Opera, selling a ticket for $6, which entitled the holder to see two operas in one day—"Electra" at the matinee and "Salome" in the evening. In 1901, at his same Manhattan Opera House he inaugurated a 24-act vaudeville show, the first and only three-ring vaudeville bill. There were three dumb acts performing at the same time—a bicycle act, a contortionist and a wire walking act. The show would start at 7:30 p.m. and last until 11:30 when the picture would go on. It was a financial failure.

Oscar's fourth venture was building the Olympia theatre, which took up the entire block on Broadway between 44th and 45th streets. It was the site of the old 71st Regiment Armory. The Olympia was later known as the New York theatre and also housed the Criterion theatre. It was on the 7th floor that Ziegfeld first played the "Follies." The opening of the Olympia was the talk of the town. A combination theatre, music hall and roof garden, there were six smoking and billiard rooms besides large lounging and cloakrooms. Admission was 50c. Oscar lost this when the N. Y. Life Insurance Co. foreclosed a $900,000 mortgage. Again he was broke and it was then he built the Victoria, and in 1900 he also built the Belasco theatre on 42d street adjoining the Victoria. The Belasco was later known as the Republic and played dramas, and years later it received national publicity when Minskys took it over for burlesque and stripteasers. It is now a grind picture house. Besides these theatres, Oscar built opera houses in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Boston and London to back the powerful Metropolitan Opera Co. which finally bought him out for $2,000,000 which he promptly invested in putting on Comic Operas (his contract only specified that he could never go into the Grand Opera business). He lost this money also and smiled.

Handling Money a Nuisance

Making money was a pastime for the elder Hammerstein, handling it was a nuisance. Many is the time Willie had to shove a $5 bill in his Dad's pocket, so he wouldn't find himself without a penny when he went to pay for something. Truly a fantastic figure was Oscar Hammerstein, who made theatrical history with a dockless office, a bookless bookkeeper, a reversible plug hat, a gold headed cane and a Van Dyck beard. To cash a $100 check he wrote a comedy opera "The Kohlnoor Diamond," words and music, in 24 hours, and produced it. Just to prove that he could do it. It was a failure, but he won the $100! He invented many work-saving devices for the cigar business, which kept him in fresh money. The management of the Victoria was turned over to his son Willie to run as he liked, and he liked to run it. This is the background of the father of Arthur and Willie, and the grandfather of Oscar Hammerstein 2d! Truly a talented showman!

In the 20 years that Willie managed the Victoria, he brought more new ideas and received more space for his attractions in the newspapers than any manager in our generation! He violated all managerial traditions by coming to work at 8 a.m. and quitting at 9:30 p.m., when he would go right home. He was known by everybody on Broadway, but he never went for the night life of the Big Street. His home was entirely separate and distinct from his theatre life. With the exception of a very few intimate friends, he never invited anyone to his home. In the 20 years as a manager, he never saw a play at any other theatre, and only once did he drop in next door at the Belasco, to see part of an act of "The Girl From The Golden West." His only office was the lobby of his theatre, sitting in a crooked chair surrounded by his cronies. Cronies that consisted of actors, press agents, playwrighters, managers, wine salesmen, vaudeville agents, bookers, gamblers and newsboys. He loved these characters who would gather in the lobby while the show was going on. From them he would get the gossip and new stories of Broadway. The admission to this "inner circle" was being "funny" or "interesting." Willie possessed a grand sense of humor and was one of the greatest of practical jokers.

Killing the People

As a headline hunter he had no equal. He inaugurated the "freak act" in vaudeville. He played all the prominent fighters, wrestlers, bicycle and running champions. He played the killers and near killers. A couple of comely looking girls by the name of Lillian Graham and Ethel Conrad shot at W. E. D. Stokes, prominent socialite and real estater. The bullet struck the three-inch gold gentleman in the leg and he promptly had the girls arrested. The newspapers were filled with the accounts of the shooting. Willie went bail for the girls, and booked them for Hammerstein's, billing them as "The Shooting Stars." They couldn't sing, dance or act, but jammed the house. When James Thornton, the noted monologist was asked what he thought of the girl's act? He said, "They'll have to KILL someone, to get next week!" Hammerstein also played Nan Patterson, a lady who shot her gentleman friend but didn't kill him. Willie paid her $500 a week. Blanche Molineaux, another lady sharpshooter, also headlined in the early 1900's. A little lady by the name of Beulah Binford, didn't shoot but a man killed his wife for her. Managers wouldn't book her, and it was even too raw for Willie, so she hired the Garden Theatre and played a maid in a sketch. There were 40 people one night who showed up to see her; that was the high attendance for the week at 10, 20 and 30c. prices. She gave up. Florence Carman, the wife of a Long Island M.D. accused of shooting a man named Mallett of her husband's through a window in her Freeport, L. I. home, also got booked. She sang "Baby Shoes."

A freak engagement is made with the deliberate object of creating publicity, financial profit being secondary. People come to the theatre who have never been there, or have been there very seldom. They see the rest of the show and like it and become regular customers. Willie Hammerstein was an institution, and as my friend the late Channing Pollock once said, he took care it wasn't an institution for the blind. He taught the public the danger of trifling with a young girl's affections. He found Max Silvan, who won fame by suing a certain rich man for breach of promise. Her talents seemed limited to love and litigation.

Hammerstein's had some of the greatest press agents in the business. Abe Levy, Ann Marble, Nellie Revell, John Pollack, Joe Flynn and Morris Gest. They were the type who would think up many novel ideas of publicity, but Willie was the Commander-in-Chief. Hammerstein's Roof Garden had many attractions. Sober Sue, when nobody could make laugh, was just an ignorant hick comic, but even though the greatest comedians would tell her jokes, she still could laugh. Man with a 17 ft. beard, cows and beautiful milkmaids, acts, music—all of it was just a great hangout for the ones who had to stay in the City in the hot summer days.

When Evelyn Nesbit Wowed 'Em

The biggest receipts at Hammerstein's were from the Evelyn Nesbit engagement. After the sensational testimony and notoriety she received in the White-Thaw case, no manager would give Evelyn Nesbit a job. Willie sent her to Europe, where the rabies came to America about her tremendous success as a dancer. Newspapers those days would accept news from abroad and feature it, but wouldn't touch the same story if coming from America. When Miss Nesbit arrived in New York she was an object of great curiosity. The first week she played Hammerstein's, luck was with Willie, from a publicity standpoint. Harry Thaw's mother, Mary Copley Thaw, instantly Evelyn became the center of attention by declaring in a dramatic manner that she feared for her life, now that Harry K. Thaw was free. Willie got a detail of police (in uniform, of course) to attend her day and night. Some people even accused Willie of engineering Thaw's escape. Miss Thaw became the most talked of woman in the world. Hammerstein's made an $80,000 profit on the two weeks engagement and he paid her $3,500 a week. She went on tour and became a terrific boxoffice sensation. Gest and his associates made over $100,000 on her tour, and even the Keith Circuit played her!

Willie believed that one of the greatest attractions he ever had was Gertrude Hoffman in "Salome." The "Salome" craze was at its height. Willie read a

(Continued on page 74)

THE FIRST BIG ONE FROM Eagle-Lion

THE WICKEDEST WOMAN WHO EVER LOVED!

By the AUTHOR of "LAURA"

"Bedelia"

J. ARTHUR RANK presents
MARGARET LOCKWOOD · IAN HUNTER
ANNE CRAWFORD · BARRY K. BARNES in VERA CASPARY'S
"BEDELIA"
Directed by Lance Comfort • Produced by Isadore Goldsmith • Screenplay by Vera Caspary, Herbert Victor and Isadore Goldsmith • A JOHN CORFIELD PRODUCTION
An EAGLE-LION FILMS RELEASE

HOLLYWOOD'S NEWEST

EAGLE-LION FILMS

ENTERTAINMENT LEADER

Movies Should Go to College

By ROBERT GESSNER

(Professor of Motion Pictures; Chairman, Department of Motion Pictures, New York University)

It is high time the enfant terrible of the arts learned where babies come from. All its seven older brothers and sisters—drama, literature, painting, sculpture, architecture, dance, music—knew the facts of life. Talent—that elusive life-blood of a creative art—must be discovered, encouraged and nurtured in the young.

Robert Gessner

The Seven Arts are being constantly refreshed by a steady stream of trained aspirants—the overwhelming majority of whom have been university men and women. You have to think double to recall a novelist, playwright, short-story writer, architect, composer, et al who hasn't been college-trained. The opposite is the case with Motion Pictures—and yet Motion Pictures is the dominant art form of this century, the most powerful medium of communication.

What's wrong with this still-life picture? The fault lies with both the Industry and Education.

The major charge against Motion Pictures is the lack of breadth in story material. This seems to have been the case or the rule since birth. On the site where R. H. Macy & Co. now sell ready-made wearing apparel, sizes 2 to 42, the Motion Picture Industry was appropriately born. That was 50 years ago last April. Since that time the width of the ready-made product has not changed—35 mm.—the length has been stretched from a minute to 225 minutes, while the depth has remained curiously static. On the night of April 23, 1896, "two precious blonde young persons" danced—(they still do in "Ziegfeld's Follies")—"the angry surf amazed the spectators"—(as in "Hurricane," etc.)—"a burlesque boxing match"—(note "The Kid From Brooklyn")—comics and farces "repeated over and over again"—(glance at the ads)—an allegory, a farce, and "a skirt dance by a tall blonde."

Something is wrong with an art form—or an industry—that repeats itself.

The Industry, as almost anybody so intimately calls it, receives the alternating affection reserved for mother-in-laws with a bankroll. Of all man's enterprises, known as industrial activity, the Motion Picture is the most intensely adored, but taken the most for granted. Every self-respecting enterprise, from the manufacturing of steel to the sewage-disposal industry, has an apprenticed system sponsored by the industries to be so benefited. Eleventh in capital, 17th in turnover, first in the hearts of our countrymen—the Industry has no long-range plan for improving its personnel or its product.

Hotels Smarter Than Show Biz?

With the exceptions of only two universities in the country, there is no training program or talent discovery program—neither one of which is sponsored by the Industry. Steel, oil, chemicals, banking, and even hotels, as well as the ceramic industry, have long provided, collectively as trade associations, for instruction in accredited colleges and universities from Maine to Oregon, California to Florida. Are the hotel operators wiser men? I don't think so, but they have been in the business since the ceiling was taken off the Garden of Eden.

Secondly, there is a question of prestige. The eighth art of man has been behind an academic eightball. Both the art and the industry have not received their just recognition as business enterprises and as a cultural influence. As an art, the reluctance to recognize motion pictures as a contemporary art is in the tradition of academic conservatism.

To bolster the waning prestige of Hollywood films abroad, the Industry should also consider a recent proposal which has come, curiously enough, from abroad. A year ago my attention was brought to a proposal of the British Film Institute, The Association of Cine-Technicians, Cinematheque Francaise, Paris Institute of Cinema Techniques and The French Film Union. The proposal is to send superior foreign students to American Universities for study in Motion Pictures, and in turn a proportionate number of superior American students are to study European techniques. The sponsorship was first proposed to the Motion Pictures Foundation for Colleges and Universities, Inc. and is now on the broader desk of UNESCO. The plan is stopped before it can begin because of the limited number of Motion Picture curricula available in this country.

This is curious indeed because the Biarritz Army University for G. I. scholars in France modeled its Motion Picture Division on an American Plan—the four-year curriculum of New York University. The instructor in charge used for lecture notes his student notebook, for examinations and required reading lists the same he had studied himself. Now that many Veterans are in universities an added pressure is present on every campus.

During this past year, while on leave of absence from New York University, I was on a barnstorm tour of college towns, attempting to convince college authorities that the motion picture, like the horseless carriage, is here to stay. After a decade of pioneering at New York University, a liberal institution in a liberal city, I was prepared for a variety of academic objections. Instead almost universally there was a welcoming mat, a handshake, and little sales resistance. The use of training films during the war has taught educators that the medium can be a powerful force for good as well as a perpetuation of the low national I.Q.

This is one time, the first time in the history of education, I believe, that professors are more hep than motion picture people. Eight leading colleges scattered throughout the country, representing the best of the drama departments in America, are willing to take on the responsibility of teaching a workshop experimental course in Motion Picture Production. A subsidiary group of 15 colleges and universities, second only through administrative exigencies, are willing to enter into a consultive, teacher-training period until they could be launched on a similar program.

These colleges and universities are willing to take their superior drama students, train them in motion picture writing, acting and production. They were willing to earmark their best drama instructors for a teacher-training program in motion pictures. A cultural grassroots evolution is in the making. Through the best creative drama brains of the colleges who knows what new forms of story-telling, acting, editing, lighting might evolve?

Baker's famed 47 Workshop at Harvard and later at Yale definitely affected the quality of the Broadway theatre through the works of Eugene O'Neill, Sidney Howard, S. N. Behrman, Philip Barry, Robert E. Sherwood, the stage designers Robert Edmond Jones, Lee Simonson, and Donald Oenslager. Some day there may be a comparable list of university-trained motion picture creators.

The Motion Picture Foundation for Colleges and Universities, Inc. is the Paul Revere who has awakened this nation-wide college interest. It was the original foresight of Burgess Meredith, wisely counseled by Morris Ernst, which instigated the Foundation, but in spite of Mr. Meredith's initial and courageous crusade the rank and file of Hollywood were reluctant—for a variety of unrelated reasons—to broaden the democratic base. This is regrettable, because a rare and unusual rapport might be established with the best of the independent artists and craftsmen working in the industry in Hollywood with the best of the teachers and superior students throughout the country. The governors of the Academy of Arts and Sciences voted to sponsor the Motion Picture Foundation for Colleges and Universities provided the Motion Picture Association of America would join in a financial support. The logic of this step was inevitable when the industry-wide benefits became evident to all.

And there it rests, in the minds and on the agenda and conscience of Motion Picture executives. An opportunity awaits. The colleges and universities await, a bit amazed that so rich and so powerful an Industry, spending untold sums for public relations and good will, is slow to recognize the immediate and unique value of the eighth art blossoming forth from behind an eightball of its own making.

SEN. TAYLOR IN TRIBUTE TO SHOW PEOPLE AS BIG BULWARK TO DEMOCRACY

By GLEN H. TAYLOR

(U. S. Senator from Idaho)

Washington.

In recent years, show people have become aware of the fact that they are also citizens. We have fought for political issues and candidates, and have run for office. Indeed, some horror-stricken gentry have even accused entertainers and playwrights of trying to make their audiences think. We have found out that politics is not a closed corporation, that we can perform as well as the next. And our effectiveness has been duly attested: we have been honored by some of the choicest epithets that could get by the Chicago Tribune's libel lawyers.

But we are still less fully represented in Government than lawyers or real estate men or even undertakers. When the so-called anti-Petrillo bill recently came before Congress, I was the sole alumnus of the show business on hand, and I had the pleasure of standing up to a chamber-full of lawyers.

In general, show people tend to be liberals. Many show people have demonstrated remarkable courage in speaking up for civil liberties, for the rights of the little guy and against racial discrimination.

I have often wondered why the actor in politics usually turns out to be a progressive while the insurance broker tends to be a conservative. Perhaps it's because the actor, in his daily life, is uniquely dependent upon his public and uniquely independent of his boss. Our audiences make or break us, and our employers follow the dictates of the audience whether they like it or not. We have thus developed a sense of confidence in the people, and a comforting awareness that some of our best friends are individuals whom we've never met.

What Makes a Liberal?

Congressmen occasionally think of reelection. And they plan it in the terms in which they customarily think. Most of them think in terms of a small clique of business and political leaders who dominate the scene in the State Capitol rotunda. Afraid of the people, they ask the witch doctors to exorcise the evil spirits.

But the actor tends to look for support directly to the public, rather than to a small group of courthouse insiders. He scoffs at their pretentions to intimacy with the mass mind, and he is satisfied that he needs no intermediary in his dealings with his constituent. So he feels free to be honest and to follow the dictates of his conscience. And men who do that are usually liberals.

I have no fear that actors will continue to be predominantly liberal. But I do have some fear that a few will lose some of their interest in politics. For the era of the free ride in American progressive politics is now definitely over. Honesty and integrity are growing less respectable. In the Restoration period we are entering, the decadent morals of the Harding-Coolidge-Hoover Era seem to be coming into vogue again. It may be a lot easier to escape into the artificial gaiety of a new Bohemianism, or cry into your beer on some foreign strand, than to stand up and talk. The boy who speaks out boldly will no longer get a lollypop from a gentleman in striped pants. Instead, he might be asked by the cop to keep moving.

I hope all men of good will have the guts to stick it out. We've learned enough to realize how important the stakes are to the American people, which includes us. Democracy cannot work if it is the exclusive game of professional politicians and clubhouse hangers-on. Every citizen shares the responsibility to keep it going, and I hope that actors, singers, musicians, prop men, writers, technicians, electricians, scene designers, press agents, and ushers will never forget that they have a vital part in the production.

Ethel Barrymore's Hoke

Two hoofers after 30 years of hard work made the Palace, and after opening day they just about fractured themselves doing every kind of a wing and difficult step in their repertoire in an endeavor to score a solid hit. They finally staggered off the stage exhausted, sweaty; they just managed to make the wings before the applause died away. Couldn't even milk 'em for one bow. As they stood in the wings, Ethel Barrymore went on in a short piece called "The Five-Pound Look." They stood and watched as the elegant Miss Barrymore entoned in sonorous accents the mellifluous measures of the piece ending in the famous line, "That's all there is, there isn't any more."

Well, the theatre fell in—the audience applauded for 15 minutes. She took bow after bow. Finally she swept to her dressing room leaving the audience still clamoring for more. One of the hoofers turned to the other and said, "Mac, that's the kind of hoke we're going to give them next season."

—Bing Crosby.

No Organized System to Develop New Talent For Pix, Air, Legit

By JACOB WILK

(Eastern Production Head, Warner Bros.)

Every season legit producers turn the Shubert Alley fence into a wailing wall and shed hot tears over the scarcity of new blood in the theatre. This is a phenomenon that is by no means confined to what is laughingly called the legitimate stage. The chorus of wails is swelled by every show business field—films, radio and, for all I know, tab shows and unicycleriding.

But is talent really as scarce as the profession beard-pluckers would have us believe? Personally, I doubt it. The trouble isn't that we're failing to grow a new crop of playwrights and actors. It's that we have no system of discovering, developing and placing those we do grow. Every big business field in the country, with the single exception of the show business, has ways and means of filling its ranks. And it's about time the show business began to think of doing something about it.

In the legit field, for example, the howls of the tear-spangled prophets are easily shown to be as phoney as the golden curls of a Tom troupe's Little Eva. As the producers bite their nails in synthetic agony, theatrical schools are boasting banner enrollments—and each youngster is potential new talent. The American Academy of Dramatic Arts, which limits its rolls, has 220 people in attendance. The theatre division of the New School has 700. The Feagin School has 600. That hardly looks like a dearth of potential new talent.

We face not only the problem of weeding out these hopefuls who've had courage enough to attack the guarded doors and barred windows of the fields they want to enter—though that in itself is tough enough. Beyond that is the problem of placing and helping and fostering those we've weeded. Plus the additional problem of finding and fostering the tremendous wealth of new talent that doesn't even attend theatrical schools or assault the portals of the networks.

Getting the Break

business. The success stories they've heard represent a minority so small it would make last November's Democratic vote look like a landslide. And as for talent, the way things are set up now it has nothing whatsoever to do with getting a first break in the show business.

Getting that break today depends on possessing the salesmanship of a bucket-shop operator, the hide of an elephant with chronic callouses, the push of a snow-plough, and the general perseverance of a fly butting its head against a windowpane for three days and figuring it will get through if only it tries long enough.

Unfortunately, those qualities aren't invariably associated with talent; and the result is that a good number of those who get their first break have nowhere near the real talent possessed by the blushing violets.

In one respect the wailers are right: it's rare that real talent hits the top fast. But the scarcity of such cases isn't caused by a dearth of talent. It's caused by a show business setup that gives the initial palm to brass rather than ability. Brass with a ladleful of luck thrown in.

Obviously, there's talent—real talent—among the kids trying to break into the business today. Just as obviously, there must be even more real talent hidden behind haystacks and ribbon counters throughout the country. It stays where it is, undiscovered and unsuspected, because its possessors like to earn enough money to allow them the luxury of eating.

The talent is there, if the boys only bothered to look. Sometimes it's under their very feet—often in the process of getting a swift boot in its posterior.

Its presence can be proven numerically—and mathematically—and without going into the deeper labyrinths of the differential calculus to do it. It wouldn't take any India-rubber stretch of the imagination to believe that out of every hundred people in the United States there are five who have more of some one show business talent than most of their contemporaries—that they sing better, act better, dance better, or even play "Rock of Ages" on the occarina better. If that's true, then 5% of the entire population of the United States has incipient show business talent—and you can do the figuring from that point yourself.

Figures That Don't Lie

But let's be conservative. Let's take actual figures from a dissimilar but equally hidden field. Surveys made by large numbers of big non-show business corporations have shown, with startling unanimity, that from 2 to 3% of their employees display potential executive ability. Let's say that in America, a predominantly commercial country, potential executives outnumber potential talent by four to one. Surely that's not claiming too much for talent.

That would leave us a talent quotient among the general population of just ½%. The population of the country is now approximately 140,000,000. A quotient of ½% would give us 700,000 potential talent finds. Not even a small fraction of this number is now enrolled in theatrical schools or storming its way into Hollywood or Radio City.

In the cases of those in the schools or at our doors, we can make a stab at finding them. But even then, what do we do with them after they're found?

In medicine, prize students are sure of winning internships at top hospitals. Prize law school students get appointments in the offices of leading lawyers. In the business world, big corporations send potential executives to schools of business, with key jobs waiting at the end of the scholastic career.

The show business is almost alone in having no thorough weeding out process—and no way of taking care of young talent, short of throwing it into the middle of topflight competition, even after it's found. It's true that many producers read—or have their readers read—at least a part of every play submitted to them. Film companies regularly search for talent at every possible source. There are opera auditions, play competitions, prize novel contests.

But these things, conscientiously as they may be planned and carried out, merely scratch the surface. It's safe to say that infinitely more potential talent is turned away from the door of opportunity than ever finds its way in.

At least, though, there are some of us who know the youngsters' problems—who realize that it's difficult to tote a spear year after year, while blatant blabbermouths, strictly no-talent guys with a bit of pull, hog the spot. We know the problem, even if we haven't found an answer to it. The number of us is increasing.

Who knows? Maybe we'll come up with a practicable plan before VARIETY publishes its next Anniversary Number.

Moral: Don't brush off that boy or girl who wants to talk to you about getting a break in your organization.

Happy Birthday
VARIETY
SHOW BUSINESS
41st ANNIVERSARY
National Screen Service

Zolotow's H'wood Story

Continued from page 34

my laundry to the valet at the Knickerbocker on the assumption that I would get it back the following morning. It turned out I wouldn't get the laundry back till Monday. This is Monday. I still haven't got the laundry back. The laundry is at the Knickerbocker. I am at the Beverly Hills, about four miles away...

...so after dinner I returned to my room to wait until eight when I'd get a cab out to Miss Brice's home, nearby—nearby according to Hollywood ideas, only about $1.50 on the taximeter, normally it costs $2.50 to get anywhere. So I am sitting in my "suite," admiring the paling fence outside, when there is a knock on the door. "Who is it?" I asked. "The bell captain," a voice said. I admitted the bell captain, a dour shrivelled little man. He was followed by a blonde dish with firm hips. She was carrying a sheaf of cards. The bell-captain looked about, in a puzzled fashion. I suspected he was going to fix me up with the blonde thing. "Pardon me," he said, "do you happen to know where the rate-card is posted?" Looking superior, I conducted him to a door in the dressing room. He promptly removed the old rate card and tacked on a new one. No language that I know of, including Attic Greek, can adequately portray my mixed emotions as I saw that according to the latest OPA ruling they were now going to charge me $18.50 a day for the room. I was about to hit the ceiling, but hesitated lest they charge me $27.50 for damage to the ceiling, doubtlessly made of alabaster or porphyry. So I went out and told the room clerk, whose name, curiously enough, was Porphyry Rubinstein, all about it. He curled his upper lip. "My good man," he said, "you have a patio." "What patio?" I inquired naively. I learned that the affair of the dock chairs and paling fence was a patio. I then informed him that I neither wanted nor needed a patio and all I wanted was a little room to hang my teeth in...

I had just gotten back when Herb Stein called and asked me over to the house for a drink. His wife was sitting in a hostess gown drinking gin, straight. We went to Chasen's for a sandwich and a glass of gin, but I am still drinking scotch, probably my last connecting link with civilization as we know it...

Love,

Maurice.

* * * * *

Holly-Commodore Hotel, Wednesday, April 17.

Dear:

Wednesday dawned bright and sunny. That is no novelty. Every day dawns bright and sunny. This is the most monotonous climate in the world, like a girl who is constantly giggling. Today, I was supposed to check out of this hotel, as my time has run out and return to the Hollywood-Knickerbocker. The tooth still aches, a dull constant pain, which suddenly flares up into an intense twinge. My room is swelling slightly and my cheek is puffing out. At the Knickerbocker there was no reservation. They said it would be fixed up by three. I went out for lunch with Eddie Cantor. My room wasn't ready when I returned. Waiting, waiting. At seven, they told me there was no room and I better look elsewhere. At their suggestion I tried the Vine Hotel, the Eleanor Hotel, the McAdden Arms, the Biltmore, the Broadway-Hollywood, The Hollywood-Plaza, the Hollywood-Drake, and finally got a double room at a hotel I shall call the Hollywood-Commodore. But for one night only. I must speak to a Mr. Winn, the room clerk, the following morning. I have a lovely room, adjacent to the elevator shaft, so I can hear the grinding of the cables and the lumbering cars all night long...

M.

* * * * *

Thursday.

Darling:

...after breakfast, I went to see Mr. Winn, who was sitting at a desk. I decided to play it cagily. Instead of saying I had a room for one night only, I said that I was in room 308 and wondered if I could be changed to a QUIETER room for the balance of my stay. But Mr. Winn was no fool. He was not to be taken in by my subterfuge. He replied that 308 was one of the nicest rooms in the hotel and furthermore wasn't I supposed to be out of the hotel by this afternoon? "By the way," he said, "what's your name?" I told him. He extended his hand and remarked, somberly, "It's a pleasure to know you, Mr. Zolotow." We shook hands. I then got the hint and removed a $5 bill from my wallet and tucked it into my sweating palm. We shook hands again. Now I can stay here until Monday...

Adieu,

Maurice.

* * * * *

Bar of the Hollywood-Commodore Hotel, Monday.

Dearest:

From where I am sitting I can see the golden sun spilling on the pavements of Hollywood Boulevard. A block away are the fabled footprints outside Grauman's Chinese theatre. Mickey Bogart or was it Humphrey Bergman just drove by in a Hispano-Suiza. Today I am very happy. I am waiting for Milt Samuel to come by in a few moments and pick me up and drive me to the station. I have just made a wonderful discovery. I mean gin, straight gin, plain gin, undiluted with water, lemons, sugar or limes. I have just had my second gin, with a gin chaser. That was Ginger Rogers sauntering by. She looked like a melody (May I remind you that a pretty girl is like a melody?) and the sun spilling molten gold on her glinting hair, running riot with flecks of auburn. Ah, life. Ah, love. Ah, youth. The palm trees wave lazily, hardly stirring in the limpid air. The sun pours molten gold on the pavements. Waiter, another of the same if you don't mind...

Love,

Maurice.

Authors' Own Copyrights

Continued from page 50

reputation, are not "recognized." They must make a start somewhere, to make a beginning they must be "published."

It is the publisher who decides when and in what form the work will be published, what and when royalties will be paid, and just what rights the respective parties will have. It is not the author who decides these matters, it is the publisher. It is for the writer to accept the conditions, or take his work elsewhere. The beginner rarely, if ever, takes the latter alternative.

If his first work is successful—that is if the publisher makes a satisfactory profit incident to its publication, the author has less difficulty in placing his next creation—and so he grows or diminishes in stature in the field in which he works in direct proportion to the public acceptance of his work.

Many of the works thus sold outright during the early years of an author's career—and subject for the life of the copyright to the terms of the original contract—come to possess substantial residual values.

There is no reason why an author should not be held to the terms of a contract which he has made. No publisher is to be blamed for making good business deals, the best he can under each set of circumstances. But to pretend that there is anything like equality in their respective bargaining positions is a resort to hypocrisy.

The Issues

My only purpose in writing this article is to ask, and to answer, two questions:

1. What are } the rights of
2. What should be } an individual author?

1. Under common practice his rights now are to invest his time and talent (and genius, we hope) in the creation of an original literary or musical work; to produce a workmanlike manuscript, and submit it (either directly or through an agent) to any publisher who will consider it, and accept or reject such terms as the publisher may offer.

Or the author may himself publish and copyright the work.

2. Having determined upon a career of authorship, he should have the right and opportunity to join an organization of writers (under a suitable designation or classification). He should have the privilege of agreeing at the outset of his career to abide by and conform to trade practices and customs devised to protect his legitimate and equitable interests during the formative period of his career.

He should have the right to be taught, from the very inception of his career, the fundamentals of an intelligent business relationship with his publishers—and he should be protected by his organization in the right to require conformance by all commercial users of his creation to the sound business rules laid down for his benefit and protection by the organization.

* * * * *

Two fundamental rules should be brought into universal practice:

1. Under no circumstances whatever should outright ownership of the copyright be sold, assigned or otherwise conveyed from the author to another, in part or in whole.

2. Leases or licenses only should be granted for the exercise of any or all of the rights under the copyright, clearly specifying and limiting the use granted, both as to the extent and the period.

I repeat, and for emphasis italicize—the author should, under any and all circumstances secure and hold the copyright, in his own name, for the entire term thereof, and for the entire term thereof.

An individual author, in the early years of his career especially, is helpless and hopeless to establish proper trading conditions for himself. Nor can an organization of beginners hope to accomplish much. The organization must have the support and encouragement of the veterans, the established, the "recognized" authors.

No question but that the authors, individually and as groups, are beginning to think about these matters—the "yeast is in the dough"—it is to be hoped that a fully baked and digestible loaf will finally come out of the oven.

Producer's Prerogative

Continued from page 58

goes out of his way to avoid indentification.

"He dresses," declared a member of his staff, "like an ordinary business man."

Accurate certainly is this description for even on opening nights, when the audience is in full dress, ermines and diamonds, Gordon drifts about in plain clothes, quite unnoticed.

Arthur Hammerstein, producer of hits like "Rose-Marie," and uncle of Oscar, Hammerstein 2d of "Show Boat," "Oklahoma!" and "Carousel" fame, was called a smart dresser when he was active on Broadway. But he always dressed quietly in what was called the "best taste."

One day, however, while he was taking a shower in his private bath at the office, someone broke in and stole his clothes. The dignified producer, as a result, was obliged to walk several blocks down Broadway wearing his Negro chauffeur's gaudy uniform lent for the emergency.

To Brock Pemberton goes the distinction of being the best dressed Broadway manager. He carries his title, however, as casually as his succession of hits: "Enter Madame," "Strictly Dishonorable," and "Harvey". He has patronized the same tailor and bootmaker for at least 20 years; Tony Williams for clothes and Oliver Moore for shoes. And they, appreciating his reticence, have succeeded in making his apparel indicative of the man.

On one occasion, however, he recalls with amusement, that a highly observant judge of good dressing awarded him a prize for wearing the best looking brown suit with a chalk pin stripe, the only award of this sort in the history of men's clothes.

Miller's Own Tailor—Literally

The most fantastic story in the history of managers' dress concerns Gilbert Miller. Doubly successful in the presentation of plays here and in London, Miller for many years made his home in England. Socially prominent there and a great friend of the Duke of Windsor, he was well-known for his fastidious dressing. His admiration for English-cut trousers led to this incident:

"For a long time," says Mr. Miller, "I had been getting my trousers made by a certain cutter. But he was so popular that he'd move from one shop to another and always with an increase in salary. Every time he made a change I followed him. Finally, however, I grew too old to go to one tailor for my waistcoat, another for my top coat and still another for my trousers. So to make things easier for myself and to assure myself, at the same time, that I would never have any worry about my trousers, I took the man away from the firm he was with and proceeded to set him up in business, under the name of "Jolley & Squires."

Thus when Gilbert Miller says, "I'm going to my tailor," he means exactly what he says, being, perhaps, the only man in existence who runs a tailor shop for his own special convenience.

Everything from clothing to history is unusual about John Golden, one of Miler's prominent contemporaries. This modern philanthropist has an unusual story. He made his original fortune on the song called "Poor Butterfly" and another fortune on plays like "Lightnin'," one of the longest run plays in the history of Broadway.

About two years ago, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was interested in a hand-weaving project which she helped found in the backwoods of West Virginia for the benefit of poverty-stricken farmers. Though this was new work for them, they succeeded in turning out a handsome and durable tweed.

To celebrate this achievement, Mrs. Roosevelt gave several yards of the material to John Golden. He was so delighted with this gift that he had a special label designed which mentioned the source of the material and the name of the donor which he had placed inside his breast pocket. Thus, every time that he opened his coat, Golden flashed the fact that he was wearing a suit given him by the wife of the late President.

THE Mercury

ONE-STOP, DAILY SERVICE TO LOS ANGELES

4-ENGINE FLAGSHIP

Lv. New York 9:00 p.m. • Ar. Los Angeles 7:50 a.m. PST

Now American's famous Mercury flight is operated exclusively for coast-to-coast passengers. No extra fare.

Phone HAvemeyer 6-5000

Ticket Offices: Airlines Terminal, 80 East 42nd Street
Rockefeller Center, 18 West 49th Street
Hotel New Yorker—120 Broadway

AMERICAN AIRLINES

David O. Selznick

is pleased to announce that his

Technicolor production

"DUEL in the SUN"

has now been completed with the following distinguished cast:

JENNIFER JONES • GREGORY PECK

JOSEPH COTTEN • LIONEL BARRYMORE

HERBERT MARSHALL • WALTER HUSTON

LILLIAN GISH • CHARLES BICKFORD

"Duel in the Sun" is currently undergoing the process of Technicolor printing and will soon be available for exhibition in theatres throughout the United States.

IN A TRADITION SELZNICK INTERNATIONAL OF QUALITY

Mencken Eschews Theatre

Continued from page 3

prized enchantments. But I can make a pretty close guess that it is not much, for I can still read the newspapers and magazines, and am thus familiar with the reports of their agents at the ringside. Moreover, I am in the confidence of George Jean Nathan, the undisputed dean of the fraternity, and I can always get from him, at a small expenditure for food and drink, a detailed and reliable relation of any play done on earth during the past 50 years.

Nor am I one to whom the theatre is strange ground, despite my current laying offen it. There was a time when I worked as a play reviewer for the principal newspaper of a rich provincial city, and attended the local playhouses at least four times a week. That was before the road went to pot, and the fare I tasted was the best of its time. I can think of no star of the 1905-1912 era whose operations I did not observe and report, sometimes with almost clairvoyant accuracy. I was probably the first dramatic critic in America to note that Joseph Jefferson's scenery was in rags, that Charles Klein was one of the worst dramatists on earth, and that Richard Mansfield, despite the most beautiful voice of his sex and age, was indistinguishable from a ham.

Ibsen for Example

What happened to the theatre in the closing years of my service may be described very simply. There had appeared in Norway, in the late 70's, a dramatist in mutton-chop whiskers named Hendrik Ibsen, and by the middle 80's he was all the rage on the Continent. By the late 90's he began to be heard of in England, and at the turn of the century he penetrated even America. This Ibsen was a very skillful playwright, but that was not the reason for his vogue. The thing that fetched the boobs was the whisper that his plays were full of deep and esoteric meanings—that they not only provided a show for the evening but also taught something. But what was it that they taught? On this point there was much difference of opinion. Old William Winter insisted that it was subversive and wicked stuff—for example, that women married to fatheads should leave their husbands. The younger critics saw his teaching as something far more subtle and at the same time far more inspiring. Their reports on him indicated that he was a sort of cross between Immanuel Kant the philosopher. Nitsky the German infidel, and the mysterious John who wrote the Book of Revelation. As they described his Message no one could understand it, so playgoers assumed that it must be profound indeed.

Having sat through half a dozen of his plays, mainly put on by deliquescent leading women making one last desperate grab for immortality, I proceeded to examine the texts in the privacy of my sacristy. What I found in them was simply a vast mass of hollow platitudes—that a woman of any intelligence, treated like a doll by her husband, does not like it; that a man suffering from what was then called a social disease runs some risk of having cuckoo children; that becoming a mother, to a woman who hates her husband, is extremely unpleasant, and so on and so on. These platitudes, set forth with all the old boy's skill as a theatrical mechanic, and conveyed to the audience by actresses made up to look like Duse's maid and actors wearing putty Adam's-apples and long-tailed coats, drove the fans of the time crazy. Charm be damned! Romance be damned! Humor be damned! The idea in going to the theatre, it appeared, was not to pass a pleasant and stimulating evening, becoming to a civilized man, but to be puzzled like a schoolboy wrestling with Wentworth's Geometry and alarmed like a yokel at a crossroads revival.

Came the Road Companies

Worse, all the other dramatists of the time took to imitating this frostbitten heir of Snorri Sturluson and Bore Boreson. Arthur W. Pinero, abandoning such agreeable buffooneries as "The Magistrate" and such toothsome after-dinner sugar-teats as "Sweet Lavender," took to writing such highfalutin balderdash as "The Notorious Mrs. Ebbsmith." Augustus Thomas, suddenly ashamed of the innocent melodrama of "Arizona," went Ibsen with a dish of tripe called "The Witching Hour," and took to parading Broadway wearing the green gloves, tin sword and gold fez of the American Academy of Arts and Letters. And all the rest went down the same chute, including especially Shaw. Shaw, at the start, promised to become the most adept British dramatist since Sheridan, but by the middle 90's he was already converting his stage into a soapbox, and ever since that unhappy time he has been battering his customers with "ideas" so banal, so dull and withal so false that you will have to go back into history 500 years to find their match.

If there were space enough I'd like to describe in some detail the effect of this lust to expound and expostulate upon the current playwrights of the republic. But being cribbed and confined I can only refer you to Comrade Nathan's volume on the New York season of 1945-46. Therein he tells of buncombe piled upon buncombe, of third-rate farce-writers disguised idiotically as Henry Wallace or Harold Ickes, of a vast emission of lofty-whim-wham about social justice, international politics, and other such catnips of the unintelligentsia. What a steady diet of that sort of garbage does even to dramatic critics, a notoriously enlightened and well-informed class of men, is shown whenever a chance dramatist sets a real idea or two before them. I cite the case of Eugene O'Neill and "The Ice Man Cometh." The effect of this play upon the brethren was precisely as if an Indian in full warpaint had leaped up in the stalls and begun haranguing them in Choctaw upon the theory of least squares.

Tele Policing

Continued from page 3

nent code, there are certain precepts of standards of good taste which are essential and to which television should subscribe "at the earliest possible moment — surely before many more stations go on the air."

Quotes Kobak

In the committee to set up the code Poppele maintained that there should be represented every organization which will have a hand in television programming, including broadcasters, film producers and ad and talent agencies. He asked that committee recommendations be submitted to the association as a whole within the next few months. Poppele summarized his discussion with a quote from Ed Kobak, Mutual Broadcasting System prexy, in a speech made at the October TBA Conference, where Kobak said: "We must not forget our responsibility as licensees or we may wind up not running this television business. Television is going to have a great deal more to do than the movies or radio in bringing understanding among people . . . and with that responsibility we have to be very careful that we don't misuse it."

In the earlier part of his report, Poppele summarized the gains made by the industry during the past year, using as an indication the number of licenses granted by the FCC during 1946. He said that, as a result, the total number of stations in operation by 1949 should be at least 78. He added that the most unfortunate factor in the progress of the infant industry was the constant labor-management unrest, which cut equipment manufacture considerably.

However, said Poppele, the future success of video is up to the men who own and operate the stations. "There is one absolute certainty," he stated, "television programming will make or break this great new industry."

Europe Tourism

Continued from page 3

other nation in the world is making for U. S. dollar exchange are bound to be turning up this year on the greatest scale since 1938, according to seasoned shipping execs.

Europe is preparing for 300,000 visitors from the U. S. in 1947, declares Ralph T. Reed, prez of the American Express Co., while Britain's Labor Government admits that it hopes to bring $500,000,000 worth of tourist trade to that country alone during the 12 months. It operated strenuously at the recent International Tourist Conference to encourage traffic by reducing the red tape involved in across-the-border travel.

Atlantic transits, it is predicted, will be the favorite, although there is also certain to be heavy travel to Bermuda, Hawaii, Latin America and anywhere else an American who has been forced to remain close to home for six war years can hope to find something different and exciting. For the transatlantic trade, Reed states, there will be 200,000 berths aboard ships—including the Queens Elizabeth and Mary—and 100,000 seats on planes.

U. S. will continue to furnish about 75% of all transatlantic travelers, according to shipping officials. Most of them on their vacations during the summer months will prefer ships to planes, it is said. Nevertheless, airlines have been booked from three to six weeks ahead, with a slight easing of the situation since the flock of recent crashes.

'Father,' 'Okla.!' B.O. Wows

Continued from page 3

of the theatres, grossed into the $4,000,000 mark, last season figures showing $1,820,000 for the New York run (1933-41) and $2,482,080 for its various tours, to total $4,302,080. A touring company just laid off because of the death of its perennial lead, John Barton.

The miracles of the forties, "Oklahoma!" and "Life With Father," between them have grossed another 20 millions to date, "Oklahoma!" with $12,115,869 thus far, and "Father" with another $9,908,000.

That's a lot of dough, even up in Heaven. The figures dwarf, even as the atom bomb the popgun, the grosses of the oldtimers.

Neither "Oklahoma!" nor "Father" has established a longrun record for this century—although if one can wait until next June 14, "Father" will oblige. On Jan. 1 "Father" racked up a New York run of 2,995 performances. "Oklahoma!" has chalked up 1,617.

Together with its sister musical "Carousel," "Oklahoma!" has brought into Theatre Guild coffers the astonishing total of $16,594,081—and the end is no where in sight.

The two present-day earners—"Oklahoma!" and "Father"—merit a closer view. Firmly established as the country's longest running and most successful musical, "Oklahoma!" slipped unostentatiously into the St. James theatre, N. Y., on March 31, 1943, via New Haven and Boston, and has been there ever since. A visit to the show has become as much the "must" of the tourist as a gander of the Statue of Liberty, the Empire State Bldg. or Radio City Music Hall. The show has racked up a boxoffice total of $6,273,114.

Meantime, a road (or national) company of "Oklahoma!" has been roaming the hinterland, playing to SRO houses, and grossing thus far an additional $5,842,755 to make the combined "Oklahoma!" take reach $12,115,869. The road company broke the all-time record for any touring show with a gross of $119,000 at Oklahoma City's Municipal Auditorium for a week's engagement recently before 46,144 people.

Not content with this sort of distinction, "Oklahoma!" won the Pulitzer prize committee special award in 1944, and covered itself with glory when an overseas USO-Camp Shows company played to combat troops and hospitals in the South Pacific while the Japanese fracas was at its toughest. Company flew 50,000 miles in eight transport planes, traveled an additional 20,000 miles in trucks, jeeps and carry-alls, and on two occasions walked 10 miles in rain and mud to give performances.

No slouch either, "Carousel" has won itself an award by the New York Drama Critics Circle, and has run up a total of 716 performances at the Majestic, N. Y. since bowing in April 19, 1945, while grossing $4,478,212.

As for the vigorous "Life With Father," the N. Y. version opened at the Empire Nov. 8, 1939 and played there five years and 10 months before switching to its present habitat, the Bijou. In addition to its 2,995 performances, it's been seen by 2,730,000 people and has grossed $4,860,000. The various road companies have done 2,898 performances before 3,640,000 people for another $5,048,000 receipts, to make the combined take $9,908,000. Figures don't include special benefit performances or the "motorized" version of the play that's been out since last September.

Talent Incubator

"Father" has been quite an incubator for legit and films. The various companies used a total of 207 players during the past seven years, of whom 83 were boys for the four kid roles, plus understudies. Two boys who began with "Father" opened importantly recently on Broadway, Richard Tyler in "Christopher Blake" and Richard Simon in "Years Ago." Beatrice Pearson, ex-maid in a second touring company, is now the lead in "Voice of the Turtle." Teresa Wright, the first N. Y. Mary, and Cathy O'Donnell, a road company Mary, are important adjuncts in the current Sam Goldwyn film, "Best Years of Our Lives." Andrea King, first road Mary, is with Warner Bros. Ted Donaldson and Raymond Roe, featured film players, graduated from "Father." Among ex-fathers, Carl Benton Reid is in "Iceman Cometh," Arthur Margetson in "Park Avenue," Percy Waram in "Another Part of the Forest" and Louis Calhern in the touring "Magnificent Yankee." And Harry Bannister is set for "William Loves Mary" and Wallis Clark for "Little A."

Negro Film Studio

The five-story former Brooklyn home of the Elks has been taken over by Federal Studios, subsidiary of Herald Pictures, producers of Negro films, for conversion into a film studio. Plans call for three fully-equipped studios plus use of the top floor for television productions. Building is expected to be completed around June 30.

New York Theatres

Darryl F. Zanuck's production of W. SOMERSET MAUGHAM'S
The Razor's Edge
20th Century-Fox
and Great Stage Revue!
ROXY 7th Ave. & 50th St.

Dennis MORGAN
Jack CARSON
Janis Paige • Martha Vickers
in Warner Bros. Hit
"The Time, the Place and the Girl"
In Technicolor
In Person
Vaughn MONROE
AND HIS ORCHESTRA
Plus
A BIG STAGE REVUE
Broadway at 47th Street STRAND

"Great as drama, lively and lovely as comedy"—SUN
"The BEST Years of Our Lives"
Continuous Performances ASTOR B'WAY and 45th ST.

JOAN CRAWFORD • JOHN GARFIELD
in the New Warner Achievement
"HUMORESQUE"
with
OSCAR LEVANT
J. CARROL NASH
Directed by Jean Negulesco
Produced by Jerry Wald
Broadway at 51st Street HOLLYWOOD

RKO PALACE B'WAY AND 47 ST.
WALT DISNEY'S
SONG OF THE SOUTH
IN TECHNICOLOR

RADIO CITY MUSIC HALL
Rockefeller Center
"TILL THE CLOUDS ROLL BY"
With 13 BIG STARS
in Technicolor • An M-G-M Picture
Spectacular Stage Presentation

LOEW'S STATE
ON SCREEN HELD OVER
All New Adventures
'The Return of Monte Cristo'
Louis Hayward
Barbara Britton
A Columbia Picture
IN PERSON
JIMMY PALMER and Orchestra
EXTRA!
Jean Carroll

Betty Hutton
Sonny Tufts
'Cross My Heart'
In Person! THE ANDREWS SISTERS
LES PAUL & HIS TRIO
TONY PASTOR
PARAMOUNT
MIDNIGHT FEATURE NIGHTLY

'Sick' Theatres Can Be Cured Into Profit-Makers, Says Vet Operator

By JOSEPH R. SPRINGER
(General Manager, Century Theatres)

If your theatre isn't returning a satisfactory gross—don't set a match to it. If you feel like Robinson Crusoe every time you walk into your theatre on a Saturday night, don't—not yet, anyway—offer it to your local grain and feed man for a warehouse.

It is my feeling, from experiences with Century theatres during the last 25-odd years, that almost any theatre can be made to return a profit. I hasten to say, however, that there is no single bit of showmanship alchemy that can transmute the baser metal of a theatre in a total wilderness to the gold of one of any of the powerhouses.

But if your theatre has an audience potential it is quite possible that, with investigation and the judicious expenditure of some money, you can transform a turkey into a lot of turkey dinners.

Some of Century's 37 theatres have been what one might call reluctant dragons. The customers were "reluctant" to enter them, and the nut for these incipient garages was certainly "draggin'" the gross receipts for our circuit down.

So we did some investigating. We would study a bad house—thoroughly. The type of audience, grosses, admission prices, draw, competition, run, modes of transportation, staff, toilets, sound and projection, and the general comfort and personality of the theatre. We knew everything there was to know about any given theatre.

Then we made our diagnosis, trying in general terms to define what was wrong with the patient. Once we had that set up in our minds it was only a question of doctoring and prescribing the proper Rx.

K'ngfish Grubber

Before I go into a few case histories, I'd like to discuss the matter in general terms. Without trying to sound smug, or press-agenty, over where I am we talk constantly about giving a house the "Century operation." To those of you out of the metropolitan N. Y. area that may sound, despite my slightly apologetic preface, blurby. But the "Century operation" is known to a great many people very favorably and it's kind of a proud thing with us. We'll match the operation of our theatres, house to house, with any comparable theatre in the country.

Reduced to its essentials, the Century operation means clean, safe, comfortable houses; it also means technical excellence in the exhibition of sound motion pictures.

We believe that in that economically-worded paragraph lies the answer to a great number of theatre failures that exist. If every theatre adhered to that credo, many that now are financially moribund would come surprisingly alive. That's not hearsay; it's from straight experience.

But there are some theatres which we took over for which the general Century operation was no cure. In other words, when you've got more than a headache an aspirin won't give relief. You've got to do something more. All right. Some case histories.

A simple one. A theatre in the heart of Brooklyn, subsequent run. Considerable competition but enough audience potential so that the competition wasn't the depressor. After the customary investigation ruled other things out, we ripped out the seats and put in fewer but much more comfortable ones. We told prospective patrons how "every seat was a comfort treat" and presto! it worked. And business has held up.

We took over a theatre that had a hoodlum audience. That was its main problem, as far as we could see. By chance the house had an auxiliary entrance. We closed the one entrance, started using the auxiliary, jumped prices slightly, and the trick was done. The hoodlums stayed away, the nicer people came and we're in fine shape.

Right now we're instituting a radical policy change as well as a physical change in a theatre whose grosses leave something to be desired. The house is big, barn-like, and has a late run. We're planning to make it an "arty" theatre, hoping to attract students of the motion picture and intellectuals from all over, rather than from the area surrounding the theatre. We'll run class revivals, foreign films, and occasional documentaries. We'll "warm" up the house by changing its name, the manager will be a man of culture, with some knowledge of letters, music and art; he will wear slacks and a sport jacket and will smoke a pipe. We plan to change the name of the theatre, add a music and game room; one large foyer will become an art gallery in which we'll show and sell the finest in contemporary art. We're also going to try some special new services. And who knows, maybe it will work. We believe it will.

In general terms, as far as increasing theatre grosses is concerned, these things should be said. We aren't in the grocery store business. We're in show business. As important as good sound and projection and clean toilets, is the showmanship aura that surrounds a theatre and gives it an alive personality. Bright lobbies, stunts, fully-lamped marquees; these are bones and sinew of a successful operation.

Try special morning kiddie shows when your Saturday program has only an adult draw. Use periodic, low-cost stage attractions. Add stuff shows. These are all possible hypodermics for your boxoffice ills.

Better films? That's another story.

Pres. Aleman Labor Stand Pleases Mex. Producers

Mexico City.

Sudden withdrawal without explanation of the strike announced against 27 film houses in Monterey, eastern Texas border industrial center, by the National Cinematographic Industry Workers Union (STIC), to enforce pay-hikes, is seen in pix circles as a demonstration of vigorous action of Pres. Miguel Aleman, as shown in the oil labor trouble case. Rightist stand demonstrated by Pres. Aleman is pleasing employers, sparing them possible grief from STIC in 1947.

The 10 American distributors expect little if any labor trouble when their two-year work contracts expire in August. Pacts were made in 1945 to end a strike.

NO MISS MOTEL OF 1946

By BARNEY OLDFIELD

Hollywood.

Momentus is the word for 1946, publicity-wise.

I was here and saw it happen—a tieup was turned down.

Maybe that doesn't sound like much, but it is a matter of record in this convention city that almost no organization, or industry, or group of more than three of anything bound together for any purpose other than a meal in the Brown Derby, has been passed over as the years went by without being urged by some p.a. to pick his client for something.

I found myself in this history-making affair through the recent great war. During this conflict, I picked up a friend and we travelled about quite a bit together in a jeep seeing Europe.

I did not hear from this friend until a few days ago, when he informs me that his father has been elected to the office of president of the United Motor Court Operators of these United States.

A national president of anything is not to be sneezed at lightly in Hollywood, and lo, my wartime friend tells me, he is willing to elect some gal with a fair frame on which to hang as few clothes as possible who will be featured by having her photo hung in state in every tourist court in the land.

Being loyal to this friend, to whom I am bound because we were in the war together and because he knows enough of my secrets to get me in all kinds of trouble, I offered this opportunity to every publicity agency I knew in Hollywood.

My friend and my friend's father waited in Hollywood for a week, and finally went back to attend to their sprawling business empire.

I am embarrassed, of course, but I had absolutely no cooperation.

This, 1946, was the year Hollywood said NO to a tieup.

There will be no Miss Motel this year.

Grub Street

Or the Trials of Writers Who Make Up for Low Rates With Great Outputs

By JOHN WILSTACH

Major Arthur J. Burks, of the Marines, must have grinned if he read the obits of E. Phillips Oppenheim in which that writer's prolific writing was wondered at, for in five years Burks, while freelancing, had turned out quite as many printed words as had Oppenheim in half a life time. Today there are lads who author novels for "house characters" and 100,000 words a month is easy to them. That would mean, if between covers, 16 big books a year.

That's Grub street for you. Oh, yes, it still exists. In Dr. Samuel Johnson's time there was a street with the actual name in London. It was renamed Milton street after respectable folks moved in, but make no mistake, Milton the poet wasn't in mind, but a prosperous British merchant. In his famous dictionary Johnson defined Grub street as the place from whence come any mean literary production. That was a bit raw, from the old bird, for he lived on Grub street for many a long year.

Nowadays Grub street is where writers make up for low rates by great outputs. When certain blots turned literary they said it was better to starve than be meretriculous. Well, there are well known names that did literary streetwalking. Way back, Edgar Allan Poe hacked for The Southern Literary Messenger at a few dollars a page. Lafcadio Hearn got a hundred bucks for an English version of an Anatole France novel. Stephen Crane, before "The Red Badge of Courage," was always in debt while writing newspaper botboilers.

At times a lad can avoid the street. Joseph Hergesheimer had a gilded chaise lounge for fourteen years while no one took his stuff, thus avoiding the hells bells before entering belles lettres. Sinclair Lewis is going as strong as ever. Grub street never lowered his vitality while he wrote for this and that and peddled plots to Jack London. James Branch Cabell once put it exquisitely:

"Unfortunately, most books are less a question of art than of bread and butter. The average fiction writer, at all events, cannot afford to look down upon the public only, as the acrobat looks down upon the tight rope, to ascertain where it leads—and to make sure that it supports him."

Coming back to Grub street, and years gone by, among word champs were William Wallace Cook—and you'd be surprised, maybe—Upton Sinclair. In his youth Sinclair wrote millions of 10c. novels for Street & Smith. Then he entered belles lettres with a book called "The Journal of Peter Sterling." It was supposed to be the diary of a poet who drowned himself in the Hudson river. Sinclair made the announcement, described Sterling to the newspapers, and then produced his supposed journal. The hoax went over for a while, and romantic ladies mourned the American Shelly. Then the exposure, but Sterling had gone on to "The Jungle." And thence to Helicon Hall, with a socialistic group, and Red Lewis supposedly stocking the furnace. Anyway, the place finally burned down.

Kingfish Grubber

Then there was the king of the old fiction factories, Gilbert Patten, better known as Burt L. Standish. He wrote for years about Frank Merriwell, and then Dick, taking each first through prep school and then four years at Yale. Before he died he confessed ruefully that he was dated; he couldn't write stories successfully without using the old stuff that would seem silly to the unromantic lads of today.

In the old days of Grub street, in the U. S. A., there was a clearly defined line between the wood pulp and the slick field, but that has been done away with for some years. In World War II, Frederick Faust was killed during his first week as a war correspondent on the Italian front, the same week a serial of his started, using his real name, in the Satevepost. For 25 years, as Max Brand, Faust wrote millions of words, mostly westerns, and millions under nom de plumes. Readers still write letters to Zane Grey, whose books are still coming out—and more due—many not knowing he's dead. The publishers of Max Brand have a backlog of at least 50 western novels, and they'll be issued, two a year, for 25 years.

The really top ex-Grub streeter is Erle Stanley Gardner, once the favorite of the pulps, where he wrote immensely. Though now in the big money, with two crime series for novels, Gardner has so much extra energy that he still writes for pulps, now and again, not minding the rates.

Hammett the Grub-Streeter

The one who proved that your past Grub street career needn't be held against you is Dashiell Hammett. An exception, he started as a story master. His masterpiece, some say, "The Maltese Falcon," was published in a wood pulp, The Black Mask, edited by Joseph T. Shaw.

Today Grub street, with the return of so many veterans bursting with Great American novels, or reasonable facsimiles, is thickly populated. Many young fellows will be the country's future greats—or go to Hollywood. Others will just make a living, and stay where they are; it is all in the cards.

Yeah, Grub street is still an imaginary place—but real enough—where some begin, and leave, and some linger on—never getting out of hells bells to reach belles lettres. Youth is there, and promise, and those whose promise never comes true. And the gals are around, now, crowding old Grub streeters in their own neighborhood. Sometimes dispossessing 'em, other times marrying into the ranks.

The more Grub street changes the more it's just the same.

Hammerstein's Showmanship

Continued from page 67

description of a Salome dance that Maude Allan was doing in London at the Palace Music Hall. "We must have a Salome," said Willie. Seeing Gertrude Hoffman seated in a box with her husband and musical director, Max, he convinced her that she would be the one to do it, as she already had a big name in vaudeville. This would make her still bigger. It didn't take very long for Hammerstein to convince anybody, and in a few days she sailed for Europe with her husband under the name of Mr. and Mrs. Adams. She had a letter of introduction to Alfred Butt (now Sir), manager of the London Palace. She told him she wished to rehearse her act, and after Butt made her sign a contract for a week, she got the privilege of the stage for rehearsals mornings. It didn't take her long to see what Maud Allan was doing and she returned to America without fulfilling the week for Sir Alfred. (He made her play that week years later). When Gertrude Hoffman put the act in rehearsal here, Oscar the elder heard about it and objected. "I have just engaged Mary Garden to sing 'Salome' at my Opera House, we cannot have two of them." This tied the act up for a while, but soon he gave his okay and "A Vision Of Salome" was put on and became a terrific sensation, it ran for 22 weeks, which was the longest run for any attraction at Hammerstein's up to that time.

Willie could make an attraction out of almost anybody. With his genius for getting publicity and knowing what people wanted he could make a money-maker out of an obscure person. There was a girl by the name of Flossie Crane, who worked in Smith's Cafe, one of the best known popular spots in Coney Island. She was a raw looking, gawky gal, strictly country-style. When she sang, she seemed to have two voices for she would change from baritone to soprano. The crowd would laugh. Willie sent for her. It took a long time for him to convince her that she wasn't being kidded when he offered her a job at his theatre. She rehearsed an act and Willie billed her like a circus—"New Discovery, Flossie Crane, The Girl From Coney Island." "You know people like that," said Willie, "people like to discover talent, especially a poor girl from a saloon; Cinderella stuff always gets them." Flossie was still afraid it was a gag, that they were going to throw things at her or that the stagehands would let the scenery fall on her, or poison her, or a hundred and one things to make her the victim of a ghastly joke. She went on and did fairly well, and was a good drawing card while she lasted. She never got any other engagements, never went back to Smith's, just passed out of the theatrical picture. Many like her came and went and never were heard of again after Hammerstein's.

The biggest fake attraction at the Corner was Carmencita the dancer. Away back in 1894 when Koster & Bial's Music Hall was the center of gay life in New York there had been a famous dancer named Carmencita. She was the idol of the wolves and a sensation in her day. The original Carmencita had been dead for over six years, but Willie engineered a "farewell" appearance for Carmencita.

Next door at the Belasco "The Rose Of the Rancho" was playing, and in that show there was a former chorus girl who interpolated a Spanish Dance in the drama. She became Hammerstein's Carmencita. He signed her to a contract, sent her to Europe and agents there cabled back about her success. She came back to America, grabbed lots of newspaper space and was interviewed by some of the biggest reporters, and her appearance at Hammerstein's was a riot! Billed as "Re-Appearance of the famous dancer, Carmencita, after an absence of 10 years," all the old timers and tired wolves came to see her once more. Nobody discovered that she had been an obscure dancer next door to Hammerstein's only a few months before.

One time Willie missed up. He sent Gest to sign Dowie, the Apostle of a new religion at Zion City and was getting terrific publicity. Gest got a wire when he was half way there, saying "Come back. Father has engaged Melba and is afraid she will quit if the house books Dowie." Gest wired back "Peace Be With You" which was Dowie and his disciples' password—The same as Father Divine's. "Peace, Brother, Peace!" today. By the way, Melba was a fortune-getter for Hammerstein's.

Al Jolson first played Hammerstein's as a single in New York. He was one of the biggest hits that ever played the house. The aristocrats and the blue bloods of vaudeville appeared at Hammerstein's.

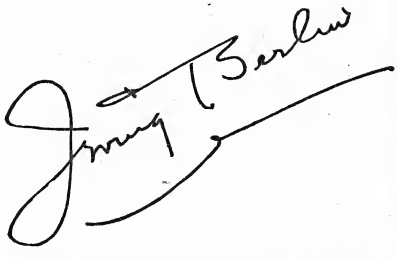
You didn't need a contract with Willie, who just said, "Okay, you play here week of so-and so." And it was better than a contract. When the Palace theatre opened on 47th street and Broadway, Hammerstein sued because he held the Keith franchise for vaudeville for this particular district. E. F. Albee, head of the Keith Circuit settled with Willie Hammerstein for $200,000. Latter said it was $200,000 more than he expected.

Willie was neutral. One week he would book an act that drew a lot of women that acted like men, and the next week he'd book an act that drew in a lot of men that acted like women. Anything for a laugh especially if it could jam 'em in.

Between packing the house and joking, Willie found recreation in playing horses, shooting craps, playing poker and pinochle, with his own particular friends. He did this to relieve the terrific strain of handling the Victoria. He never spurned a "freak attraction" that had been advertised. Fighters, runners, infamous women, armless and legless freaks, bearded men—they all meant to him one thing! Box Office! Actors loved to play the Corner. It was the Palace of it's day, plus more fun. Hammerstein's was billed as The Stepping Stone to Broadway.

It was the fantastic Willie Hammerstein that helped many an actor step on that magic-stone to Broadway fame and fortune. Broadway misses him.

BEST WISHES



Irving Berlin

HAPPY NEW YEAR

FROM

BUTTERFIELD THEATRES

A

MICHIGAN

INSTITUTION

1906 1947

OUR GREAT-GRANDFATHER FRANK KEENAN READ VARIETY

OUR GRANDFATHER ED WYNN READS VARIETY

OUR FATHER KEENAN WYNN READS VARIETY

IN A FEW YEARS WE EDMOND KEENAN WYNN

AND

TRACY KEENAN WYNN

WILL READ VARIETY

RADIO CITY MUSIC HALL

Showplace of the Nation

Rockefeller Center, N. Y.

An institution known throughout the world for its presentation of outstanding motion pictures and stage shows notable for their good taste, beauty and perfection of execution.

Leadership

THROUGH

Showmanship

NATIONAL THEATRES
Charles P Skouras, President

FOX MIDWEST THEATRES
Elmer C. Rhoden, President

FOX INTERMOUNTAIN THEATRES
F H Ricketson, President

EVERGREEN STATE THEATRES
Frank L. Newman, President

FOX WISCONSIN THEATRES
Harold J. Fitzgerald, President

FOX MICHIGAN THEATRES
David M. Idzal, President

FOX WEST COAST THEATRES
Charles P. Skouras, President

From The Offices Of

GEORGE JESSEL

PRODUCING FOR TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX

NEXT RELEASE

"I WONDER WHO'S KISSING HER NOW"

Technicolor Musical With

JUNE HAVER - MARK STEVENS

•

IN PREPARATION

"NIGHTMARE ALLEY"

ALL STAR CAST

•

"THE BALLAD OF FURNACE CREEK"

•

"DANCING IN THE DARK"

Season's Greetings

Comerford-Publix Theatres Corp.

EDWARD

EVERETT

HORTON

Season's Greetings

BUD ABBOTT AND LOU COSTELLO

NOW IN PRODUCTION

"BUCK PRIVATES COME HOME"

A Universal-International Picture

FUTURE PRODUCTION

"MEXICAN HAYRIDE"

From Broadway Musical—With Cole Porter Music

A Universal-International Picture

In Technicolor

ON THE AIR

For CAMELS — NBC

Thursday Evenings

Exclusive Management
EDWARD SHERMAN AGENCY
Beverly Hills, Calif.

JOHN M. STAHL

"LEAVE HER TO HEAVEN"

PREPARING

"WALLS OF JERICHO"

Season's Greetings

LEO ROBIN

SEASON'S GREETINGS

AL BLOOMINGDALE

COLUMBIA STUDIOS

Greetings From

THE ITURBIS

AMPARO and JOSÉ

★

BALDWIN PIANOS

★ ★

VICTOR RECORDS

★ ★

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER

SOL M. WURTZEL
PRODUCTIONS, INC.
1417 N. WESTERN AVENUE, HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.

RELEASED

"RENDEZVOUS 24"

"DEADLINE FOR MURDER"

"STRANGE JOURNEY"

"DANGEROUS MILLIONS"

COMPLETED

"BACKLASH"

"JEWELS OF BRANDENBURG"

PREPARING

SIX MORE TOP ATTRACTIONS

for

DISTRIBUTION BY 20TH CENTURY-FOX

in 1947

Greetings

TO EVERYBODY
IN SHOW BUSINESS

ALLIANCE
Theatre Corporation
231 So. LaSalle St. Chicago, Ill.
S. J. Gregory, General Manager

Holiday Greetings

DOC MERMAN
Production Manager

Pine-Thomas Productions

PAT CASEY

NASSOUR STUDIOS, Inc.

EDWARD NASSOUR
PRODUCTIONS

5746 Sunset Blvd.
Hollywood 7381

Hollywood 28, California
Gladstone 8330

Season's Greetings

BOB HOPE

★ ★

Season's Greetings

JONES, LINICK & SCHAEFER

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

★ ★

GREETINGS

ASTOR and VICTORIA THEATRES

NEW YORK

The World's Greatest Western Attraction!

ROY ROGERS

"KING OF THE COWBOYS"

—SCREEN—
REPUBLIC PICTURES

—RADIO—
"SATURDAY NITE ROUNDUP"
OVER NBC COAST-TO-COAST & CANADA FOR MILES LABORATORIES

—RECORDINGS—
VICTOR RECORDS

ROY ROGERS' WORLD'S CHAMPIONSHIP RODEOS
UNDER DIRECTION OF ROHR COMPANY • BEVERLY HILLS, CALIF.
PHILO J. HARVEY, General Manager

ART RUSH, Inc., Exclusive Management • Radio City, Hollywood, Calif.

GEORGE RAFT

INGRID BERGMAN

SELENA ROYLE

•

SEASON'S GREETINGS

CONGRATULATIONS

DONALD O'CONNOR

UNDER CONTRACT—PICTURES
UNIVERSAL-INTERNATIONAL

•

UNDER CONTRACT—RADIO
BORDEN SHOW

Exclusive Management
G. COLTON CRONIN

Greetings To All
Our Friends In Show Business

WHITE WAY ELECTRIC SIGN
AND MAINTENANCE COMPANY

315 WEST WALTON STREET
CHICAGO, ILL.
MICHIGAN 6580

THOMAS F. FLANNERY
President

Showing First Run Pictures Exclusively
Under Its New Policy

AT CHICAGO'S BUSIEST CORNER —
STATE AND VAN BUREN STREETS
IN THE MIDST OF ITS MOST IMPORTANT AND LARGEST STORES —

Screening and Exploiting Leading Product of the Major Motion Picture Producers

NEW RIALTO THEATRE
STATE AND VAN BUREN STS.
CHICAGO, ILL.

Holiday Greetings

PARAMOUNT
THEATRE
NEW YORK

Original Home of Broadway's
Greater 2-for-1 Shows

Michael Curtiz Productions Inc.

MICHAEL CURTIZ . . . PRODUCER-DIRECTOR

JACQUES LESLIE . . . . GENERAL MANAGER

BESS MEREDYTH . . . . . STORY EDITOR

FRANCES MARION . WRITER & SUPERVISOR

WRITERS

JULES EPSTEIN PHILIP EPSTEIN
ARTHUR KOBER RANDY MacDOUGALL

GEORGE AMY . . . . . PRODUCER

In Production

"THE UNSUSPECTED"

In Preparation

"SERENADE" • "VICTORIA GRANDOLET"

(To be released through Warner Bros.)

• MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM •

Jeffrey BERNERD

PRODUCER

Completed

"SWEETHEART OF SIGMA CHI"

•

In Production

"BLACK GOLD"

Hal E. CHESTER

PRODUCER

Completed

"GENTLEMAN JOE PALOOKA"

•

In Preparation

"A GUY NAMED JOE PALOOKA"

"MASTERPIECE"

Jan GRIPPO

PRODUCER

"BOWERY BOYS" SERIES

Current Releases

"MR. HEX"

"SPOOK BUSTERS"

James S. BURKETT

PRODUCER

"CHARLIE CHAN" SERIES

Current Releases

"THE TRAP"

"DANGEROUS MONEY"

• MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM •

• MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM •

Jack BERNHARD
Bernard BRANDT

B AND B PRODUCTIONS

In Release

"DECOY"

•

In Production

"VIOLENCE"

Jack WRATHER

PRODUCER

•

Completed

"THE GUILTY"

Lindsley PARSONS

PRODUCER

In Release

"GINGER"

•

In Production

"LOUISIANA"

Irving ALLEN

PRODUCER

Completed

"HIGH CONQUEST"

•

In Preparation

"OLIVER TWIST"

• MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM • MONOGRAM •

RAINBOW PRODUCTIONS, INC.

"BELLS OF ST. MARYS"

Produced and Directed
By
LEO Mc CAREY

R-K-O RADIO

Best Wishes for
The Holiday Season

JOHN GARFIELD

★ ★ ★

LLOYD BACON

"I WONDER WHO'S KISSING HER NOW

20th Century-Fox

★

In Preparation

"GLITTERING HILL" "BARNSTORMING"

We salute VARIETY for 41 years of outstanding service to the entertainment world

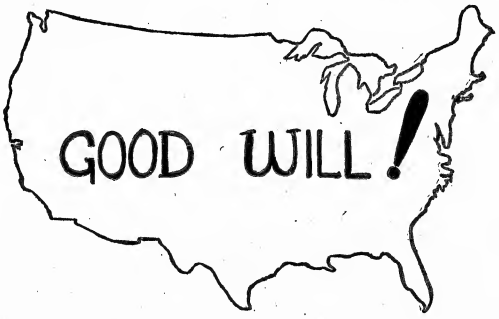
A AND S LYONS INC.
ARTISTS' MANAGERS
Agency

LONDON BEVERLY HILLS NEW YORK

Many Happy Returns!....

RKO THEATRES

Placing investment capital in the Theatre of the Motion Picture coast to coast



W. F. BRASCH & COMPANY

135 SOUTH LA SALLE STREET

CHICAGO 3

NATIONWIDE REALTY

Le meilleur hotel a Miami Beach est le Lord Tarleton.

Si quelqu'un desire de faire des reservations ici a

Los Angeles, veuillez vous mettre en rapport avec Al Jolson.

Le Lord Tarleton est merveilleusement accommode et dirige par les freres Jacobs.

SEASON'S GREETINGS....

EDMUND GOULDING

SAM SPIEGEL

(S. P. EAGEL)

UNIVERSAL INTERNATIONAL PICTURES

COMPLETED

THE STRANGER

CURRENTLY IN PREPARATION

DELUSION

SONG OF NORWAY

AFTERMATH

JAMES S. BURKETT

PRODUCER OF

"BELLS OF SAN FERNANDO"

A

SCREEN GUILD PRODUCTION

RELEASE

JOHN WAYNE

ALLIED ARTISTS PRODUCTIONS, INC.

ROY DEL RUTH

PRODUCTIONS

"IT HAPPENED ON FIFTH AVENUE"

Starring

DON DeFORE • ANN HARDING • VICTOR MOORE
CHARLIE RUGGLES • GALE STORM

* * *

Producer-Director	Associate Producer	Musical Director
ROY DEL RUTH	JOE KAUFMAN	EDDIE WARD
Cameraman	Songs	Art Director
HENRY SHARPE	HARRY REVEL	LEWIS CREBER

FOR ALLIED ARTISTS RELEASE

ALLIED ARTISTS PRODUCTIONS, INC.

KING BROTHERS

MAURICE FRANKLIN

PRODUCERS OF

"SUSPENSE"

In Preparation

"THE GANGSTER"

MacKinlay Kantor's

"GUN CRAZY"

FOR ALLIED ARTISTS RELEASE

ALLIED ARTISTS PRODUCTIONS, INC.

ALLIED ARTISTS PRODUCTIONS, INC.

BENJAMIN GLAZER • NAT W. FINSTON

SYMPHONY FILMS

In Production

"TRAGIC SYMPHONY"

Based on the Life of

TSCHAIKOWSKY

FOR ALLIED ARTISTS RELEASE

SEASON'S GREETINGS

Paramount Theatres Service Corporation

+

PARAMOUNT BUILDING
NEW YORK

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

MAINE
AND NEW HAMPSHIRE
THEATRES CO.

John J. Ford

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

EDMUND GWENN

CURRENT RELEASES

"UNDERCURRENT"
M.G.M.

"OF HUMAN BONDAGE"
W.B.

•

AWAITING RELEASE

"BOB, SON OF BATTLE"
FOX

"LIFE WITH FATHER"
W.B.

"GREEN DOLPHIN STREET"
M.G.M.

•

CURRENT ASSIGNMENT

"THE BIG HEART"
FOX

•

UNDER CONTRACT TO METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER

BIRTHDAY
GREETINGS
to VARIETY
from CANADA!

FAMOUS PLAYERS
CANADIAN CORPORATION LTD. operating
THE FINEST THEATRES IN CANADA AND NEWFOUNDLAND

There is only one . . .

Technicolor

TECHNICOLOR MOTION PICTURE CORPORATION

HERBERT T. KALMUS, President and General Manager

holiday greetings

TO THE MANY PERFORMERS WHO HAVE CONTRIBUTED SO MUCH TOWARD MAKING THIS A "GREAT" ENTERTAINMENT YEAR!

Congratulations to

Sam Steiffel and

MICKEY ROONEY

A GREAT SHOWMAN

FOR HIS RECORD-BREAKING PERFORMANCE

ESSANESS ORIENTAL THEATRE

CHICAGO

Congratulations

FROM THE

World's Largest and Most Beautiful

DRIVE-IN THEATRE

AT

WAUKEGAN & GOLF ROADS

(9500 NO. WAUKEGAN)

CHICAGO, ILL.

GREETINGS

RUSSELL MARKERT

OF

RADIO CITY MUSIC HALL

NEW YORK CITY

MR. EXHIBITOR

Investigate Filmack's NEW Prevue Trailer Service Before Signing Any Trailer Contracts

WRITE — WIRE — PHONE

FILMACK

1327 S. Wabash, Chicago 5, Ill.

Rep. Capsules As British Preview

Hollywood.

Republic will send capsulized versions of 1947 product overseas to England for early display to exhibs of what will arrive later in finished prints. Thousand-foot versions of features would help hypo exploitation angles and keep distribs posted on studio activities far in advance of films.

Chief complaint of Britons in past has been lag of time between films announced and prints' arrival.

Herbert J. Yates, and Sir Arthur Jarratt of British-Lion, Republic's British distrib, worked out plan several months ago.

First films to go over on "dehydrated" basis will be "Hit Parade of 1947," "Gallant Man" and "Wyoming."

KELLY SEEKING STUDIO SPACE TO FILM ABROAD

Current shortage of studio facilities in the U. S. and England is pointed up by the trip of Arthur W. Kelly, president of General Motion Picture Corp., who left for Europe on the Queen Elizabeth Friday (3). Kelly is heading for the continent to make an investigation of studios available in France and Italy, where he and partner Edward Small plan to produce five films, if lot space permits.

Kelly admitted that British and American studios are too crowded to accommodate GMP productions. While they don't plan to build new studios overseas, Kelly said the corporation would probably enlarge any they could find. Films will all be English versions with casts imported from the U. S. and England. Native technicians will be used except in key spots, such as sound technicians and engineers. Kelly said French and Italian cameramen are very good.

GMP topper wouldn't divulge the titles of any of the five films which are already in working script form, saying that three of them are in the public domain. None of them will release through United Artists, with which Small has a release deal.

'Films Can Break Russia's Iron Curtain'—Goldwyn

Marking the acceptance by at least one U. S. picture topper of foreign films' place in the American market, Samuel Goldwyn, in Wednesday (1) on the Queen Elizabeth, advocated internationalization of the Academy Awards. Producer said, "The day has gone by when awards can be limited to nationalities. Motion Picture Academy should be broadened to include films from all over the world."

"Best Years" producer averred that "if anything can break down Russia's iron curtain, it'll be films, because the Russians are great motion picture fans." He added that "Best Years" deals with problems currently being encountered in every country which took part in the war, and had been so hailed in England where it was privately screened.

In an off-the-record meeting with English film critics at the Savoy in London, Goldwyn explained some of the differences in British and American film making. He also told them that they didn't devote enough space to motion picture reviews, arguing that more people see a film than read one of their papers through.

Haskin's B'way Chore

Hollywood.

Byron Haskin will leave for Broadway in the late spring to produce and direct Alexander Laings play, "Sea With C."

Haskin goes on leave of absence from Hal Wallis when he finishes directing "I Walk Alone."

PALMER LOANOUT FOR 'BODY'

Hollywood.

Lilli Palmer moves to Enterprise on loanout from United States for femme star role in "Body and Soul," formerly tagged "Burning Journey."

She'll play opposite John Garfield. Film will be actress' second in the U. S., following "Cloak and Dagger."

JACK BRUCE

SKIRBALL—MANNING

SKIRBALL—MANNING PRODUCTIONS

UNIVERSAL CITY, CALIF.

THE EIGHTH ANNUAL REDBOOK AWARD to Sidney Franklin and Associates for "The Yearling"

Redbook Motion Picture Award is presented each year by Redbook Magazine to "the individual or organization which, in the editors' opinion, contributed most to the art of the motion picture." The large Redbook cup is engraved with the name of the winner and is held by them for a year, when it passes to the new winner. A replica of the cup is given to each winner as a permanent trophy.

The 1946 Redbook Award goes to Sidney Franklin and his associates for the making of "The Yearling," the film version of Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings' Pulitzer Prize novel produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Previous REDBOOK Award Winners

1939—BETTE DAVIS for her performances in "Dark Victory", "Juarez", "The Old Maid" and "The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex". (All Warner Bros.)

1940—TO THE PEOPLE of "Our Town"; Sol Lesser, producer; Sam Wood, director; Thornton Wilder, author; William Mowitze, set designer; cast including Frank Craven, Fay Bainter, Thomas Mitchell, Martha Scott and William Holden. (United Artists release)

1941—TO GARY COOPER for his outstanding portrayal in "Sergeant York". (Warner Brothers)

1942—TO THE MAKERS AND PLAYERS of "Mrs. Miniver"; to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios; to Sidney Franklin, associate producer; William Wyler, director; cast including Greer Garson, Walter Pidgeon, Teresa Wright; Jan Struther, author; James Hilton, Arthur Wimperis, George Froeschel and Claudine West, screen writers.

1943—TO THE MAKERS AND PLAYERS of "Watch on the Rhine"; Warner Brothers studios; Hal B. Wallis, producer; Herman Shumlin, director; Lillian Hellman, author; Dashiell Hammett, adaptor; cast including Bette Davis, Paul Lukas, George Coulouris, Lucile Watson, Geraldine Fitzgerald, Beulah Bondi and Eric Roberts.

1944—TO BARRY FITZGERALD, BING CROSBY and LEO McCAREY for acting and directing of "Going My Way". (Paramount)

1945—TO CHARLES BRACKETT and BILLY WILDER for production, screenplay and direction of "The Lost Weekend". (Paramount)

REDBOOK first in entertainment, first publisher of top box office pictures. Redbook hits now playing: "The Razor's Edge" (Darryl F. Zanuck), "Claudia and David" (20th Century-Fox), "The Green Years" (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer).

444 MADISON AVENUE, NEW YORK 22, N. Y.

New Year's Binge 25% Below 1946, Cueing '47 Cautious Spending

The night club patron will be a more discriminating shopper in 1947 if the New Year's eve trade is any indication. Majority of the revelers hitting the cafes were minimum spenders, and grosses, as a result, were 25% below those of last year. Most large spots were sold out, but the patronage ordered with the check in mind. There were comparatively few champagne parties, and most business was confined to beer, bourbon and scotch.

Bulk of the patronage came from last minute transient trade. Dinner business was comparatively light and bulk of customers started coming in at 11 p.m.

Minimums up to $20 were in effect in some spots such as the Embassy, Carnival and Diamond Horseshoe, but most cafes averaged $10 per person. Top hotel rooms such as the Persian Room of the Plaza, the Waldorf's Wedgwood, Glass Hat of the Belmont Plaza, the Biltmore's Bowman Room, Cotillion room of the Pierre, charged a maximum of $15. As a result, the hotels did comparatively better.

Only one fight because of charges was reported. There was a tiff at the Mardi Gras. One spender vigorously protested the charges of $1.50 per shot at the bar.

So far, most cafe ops claim that prices cannot be lowered while talent, music and operating costs are high. However, they concede that the general public is keeping the rubber band around its wad for the time being, and are studying to lower overhead in order to entice spenders with lower tariffs.

England No Threat to U.S. Films' World Mart—Carr

After a six week stay on the Coast, Teddy Carr, J. Arthur Rank general manager, left for England Friday (3) on the Queen Elizabeth. Carr set up Rank release deals through Universal-International and Eagle-Lion while in America.

On his return to England, Rank g.m. will set up release dates for new Rank productions, first prints of which have already arrived in this country. Among them are "Odd Man Out," starring James Mason; Daphne du Maurier's "Hungry Hill," starring Margaret Lockwood; and Charles Dickens' "Great Expectations," with Johnny Mills, Valerie Hobson, and newcomer Jean Simmons, child actress for whom Carr predicted a warm reception.

After his initial look at Hollywood's production line, Carr stated that he didn't think English filmmakers would ever approach the mass output of the Coast studios, but that they would continue to concentrate on fewer and bigger films. Also said that, for this reason, England would never be a serious threat to the worldwide, mass market appeal of American films.

GREGORY RATOFF

Directing

PEGGY CUMMINS VICTOR MATURE

and

ETHEL BARRYMORE

in

MOSS ROSE

A Gene Markey Production for 20th Century-Fox

Holiday Greetings

PINE-THOMAS PRODUCTIONS

for

Paramount Pictures

Wm. H. Pine Wm. C. Thomas

Season's Greetings

Confidential Reports, Inc.

WHAT DO YOU THINK?

"...a lusty tale of romance and daring, tingling with adventurous action." —MIRROR

Only James MASON could hold his own with 'The Wicked Lady'

J. Arthur Rank presents
James MASON · Margaret LOCKWOOD
Patricia Roc in "THE WICKED LADY"
A Universal-International Release

NOW PLAYING continuous to 4:00 A.M.
WINTER GARDEN BROADWAY at 50th ST.

Gaumont, Pathe Combine French Studios, Labs In New $800,000 Setup

Paris.

Gaumont and Pathe, longtime competitors, are about to join forces, at least so far as studios and labs are concerned.

Early in 1947 they'll jointly promote a new $800,000 company with each holding half the stock and to which they will turn over their studios. Gaumont will offer the St. Maurice (former Paramount) and Marseille studios, and Pathe the Paris and Joinville plants. Another new subsidiary, with same capitalization and ownership, will handle their joint labs.

This is a first step in centralization of the bigger interests in an attempt to place the industry on a businesslike footing, by dissociating the studios from production proper which, up to date, remains a hazard and has put them in the red. It's felt here that attempting to produce heavily-budgeted supers is a losing game until French distribution abroad permits recovering at least part of the cost from foreign revenue, and that until then it is better to slow down production.

M. Vilmart has been appointed new Pathe production head. He isn't a picture man and comes from the Renault automobile industry. What the majors are most anxious to promote is coproduction with American tieups, including filming French versions here providing for a Hollywood remake. This would permit the majors to rent their studios to indies willing to take risks which is what the majors feel they must now avoid. They are not so much worried about their theatres, latter keeping out the red despite the heavy taxes.

Film Wage Hike

Sacramento.

Film workers drew average wages of $96.65 per week last month, compared with $85.38 for the corresponding month in 1945.

While the hourly rate mounted, the average hours per week dropped to 45.3, compared with 46.02 for the previous month.

'ARCH' TO BE CHIPPED

Hollywood.

'Arch of Triumph" will be sliced from its present length of over four hours to two hours 45 minutes for final release.

First sneak preview will be three and a half hours in length, with trims to be determined by audience reaction.

AUSSIE HOLIDAY B.O. GOES INTO NOSEDIVE

Sydney.

With the poorest Yuletide and New Year's biz in the memory of Aussie's oldest showman, Aussie theatres have been suffering due to relaxation of wartime gasoline restrictions which sent patrons outdoors after years of limited touring. Well-attended England vs. Aussie cricket matches have also dented b.o.'s, with their take as high as $32,000 daily.

Tending to cut grosses still further have been the Davis Cup tennis matches with SRO attendance. Houses, on what once were regarded as ace playing time, are returning record lows for U. S. distribs. Best draw is Ealing Studio's "The Overlanders" at the Tivoli. Aussie-made film is garnering high take plus vaude with Tommy Trinder on a twice-nightly policy introduced by showman Dave Martin.

Special 10% Muny Tax May Close All Mex. Theatres

Mexico City.

National Exhibitors Assn. is protesting vigorously to the municipality of Torreon against latter's planned special tax of 10% on film grosses, to be paid by exhibs. Assn. claims it will close all of Mexico's 1,245 film houses and keep them shut indefinitely, as protest against what they call totalitarian, unjust taxation.

Torreon is an important industrial and agricultural town in Laguna district, Mexico's No. 1 cotton belt. Muny fathers claim they need money for urgent public works.

The Same Old Greetings From the Rialto New York City

•

Arthur Mayer

Mr. Exhibitor: Investigate Filmack's NEW Prevue Trailer Service before signing any trailer contracts. Write, wire or phone Filmack 1327 S. Wabash, Chicago 5, Ill. and receive full details.

MILTON SCHWARTZWALD

Universal-International Studios

ASTOR PICTURES CORP.

R. M. SAVINI, President
FRED BELLIN, General Manager
JACQUES KOPFSTEIN, Vice-President
JOS. ELICKER, Vice-President

FLORENCE ROGGE

ASSOCIATE PRODUCER and BALLET DIRECTOR

RADIO CITY MUSIC HALL—NEW YORK

A BRIGHT AND HAPPY NEW YEAR

• • •

TO OUR FRIENDS OVER HERE AND OVER THERE

• • •

BEN - BEBE AND RICHARD LYON

DON'T LOOK NOW . . . . BUT YOUR RADIO'S STATIC

The Radio Industry Looks Into 1947, Takes Stock and Senses Some of the Problems It's Up Against

By GEORGE ROSEN

Static is a thing called thisiswherewecameinlastyear.

But listeners don't have to take static for long. Radio either remedies the faulty situation or invites a switch-off. The question is, what course will radio follow in 1947.

Unless there's a complete economic collapse, network billings will probably continue to hug the $200,000,000 mark; turnover in stations will probably fetch considerably more coin than in the previous year. But in terms of the average day-to-day listener, what will radio offer in '47 that wasn't around in '46? And by the same token, how many of the evils that circuited the kilocycles during 1946 and retarded radio's growth, will be eradicated in the coming 12 months?

Look for the signposts, and what do you find? Less than a handful of healthy influences that have projected themselves through an otherwise "static-quo" year just past in radio. Oddly enough, perhaps the most significant sign as radio moves into another year is the realization within the industry itself that much of the criticism heaped on radio—and the critics had a field day in '46—has been justified; that the time has arrived for a "let's-put-our-house-in-order" reappraisal of the whole structure of radio as a public service and entertainment medium for its multi-million listeners daily.

When William S. Paley, chairman of the board of CBS, stood before the convention of the National Association of Broadcasters in Chicago last October and cautioned the industry that it was time for radio to take a good look at itself, it was a milestone in progressive thinking within the ranks of the broadcasters themselves. They weren't accustomed to that kind of self-censure.

But just what radio intends doing about it still remains to be seen. The year 1947 could well be the most significant year in radio annals. And again it could be a mere reprise of 1946.

Approaching the various facets of radio as both a show business medium and one for public enlightenment and understanding, what do the signs portend?

COMEDY PROGRAMMING: There's an ever-growing awareness that something will have to be done in a hurry about radio finding a correct formula for development of fresh talent in the comedy field. Time was when it was a subject only bandied about in the trade. Today the general public is raising its voice above a whisper and asking, in effect, "Why, year after year, are we getting the same handful of comedians? Ten years ago we were listening to Fred Allen and Jack Benny, and today they're still the top men in radio. With the exception of Bergen, radio there hasn't been an important addition to the ranks in several years. What's the answer?"

Perhaps the answer lies in the whole faulty concept of radio, which has made a practice in the past of looking to other fields for its talent. Let a singer hit the million sales jackpot via a recording and only then is radio ready to accept the personality. Or why, for example, must radio wait for niteries, or the stage, or even pictures to incubate new talent before it is willing to concede that that star belongs in radio? It's felt that not until radio recognizes that in imitating it is not prolonging its life, and until radio initiates a style of entertainment that is essentially its own and not borrowed or transferred from another medium, can it expect to be firmly entrenched on the path of a permanent art.

As radio moves into a new year, many are asking what has happened to the lofty intent of the networks to nurture its own comedians and develop programming by farming out potentially promising talent to the hinterlands until such time when they have sufficiently developed for the bigtime. During 1946 NBC, in particular, made much of inaugurating such a project. But it seems to have been an abortive move.

And what, others are asking, has happened to CBS' top coin investment in a comedy development division within the programming department, which boasts no less a personality than Goodman Ace at its helm? If any striking benefits have come out of the new setup certainly, it's felt, it's time that they were transferred to the kilocycles. Meanwhile one thing remains crystal clear—the radio comedian of '46 was the radio comedian of '36, and he isn't getting any younger.

COMEDY WRITING: It is an accepted adage that a comedian is no better than his material. With but few exceptions, like an Allen or Benny, whose innate sense of showmanship and timing can frequently convert a dud into a boff, it's the guy behind the typewriter who provides the substance which the comedian sparks. Yet the writer situation is up against the same stalemate—the same handful of select gagmen and writers are churning out the week-to-week contribs, the only difference being that this year the Hope scripter of five years ago might now be working for Cantor. It's the reason why the same gags, on the same nights, are riding the comedy circuit, and why the dialer responds with a nightly tune-out protest.

There appears to be a three-fold blame for the lack of an open-door policy on new writers. The top, well-heeled comedian, being solidly entrenched, will dish it out to the tried-and-true guys rather than risk a Hooper nosedive by experimenting. The agencies say, in effect, "Why should we jeopardize a million-dollar account by playing around with untried talent?", and as a result are always throwing up to the job seeker: "What is your last Hooper?" And third, the networks that are in a better position than the others to encourage and develop new writer talent seem inclined, it's claimed, to let the status quo prevail.

Isolated cases crop up of comedians taking the bull by the horns in a move to inject a freshness into script writing. For example, Edgar Bergen has just come forth with his own open-door policy in a bid to invite new comedy scripters into the fold. Also, has Eddie Cantor, who is currently circling the collegiate route for writing talent. But these are too few and far between, and a broad plan enlisting support of comedians, agencies and networks would seem to be the only solution.

FCC AND THE BLUE BOOK: There is general acknowledgment within the industry that up to now the nearly year-old "Blue Book" promulgated by the Federal Communications Commission has been a force of good (despite wholesale condemnation by the industry), if only for the fact that it has alerted network and station operators to an awareness that by everyone except the Brooklyn fans. But that's how baseball is.

All right, so the season ended. Only a handful of fans could attend the World Series. Millions had to attend by remote control. They had to depend upon the radio. By virtue of the fact that they (the fans) had supported professional baseball; had made it possible to baseball owners to buy good players and pay them salaries commensurate with their worth—they felt that these broadcasts were not merely something tossed to them by the large commercial heart of the Gillette Razor Co. They felt that they had the same right to hear the World Series broadcast as they had to listen to a speech by the President.

Nuts to Logic

No logical, serene-minded citizen could quarrel with that viewpoint, but we baseball fans are not logical, serene-minded citizens. If we were, would 70,000 of us storm the gates of the Yankee Stadium to watch the Yankees play the inept, last-place Philadelphia Athletics, as we did on one occasion last year?

Then they sat back to listen to the World Series. Before three games had been played their cries of anguish were heard all over the land.

The whole trouble with the World Series broadcasts was the emphasis on commercials. The ordinary half-hour program is allowed three minutes of commercial. Commercials by Messrs. Britt and MacDonald during the World Series came with sickening rapidity. The plugs came at the end of each time at bat. There being nine innings, this meant 18 commercials. Before you could relax after hearing how Terry Moore ended the inning with a spectacular catch, you were caught in the drool of the 20,000,000 of commercial. In a nine-inning game (approximately one hour and 50 minutes) there were 18 commercials, plus a few before and after.

Gillette, which paid $175,000 for the broadcasting rights plus approximately that again for the network charges, certainly had the right to plug its product, but not to such an extent that the broadcast of the games themselves suffered.

The only answer, of course, is to have baseball itself sponsor the broadcasting of future World Series. We fans do not want our base hits mixed up with razor blades, even good razor blades.

One objection would be that the players' pension fund (the $175,000 from Gillette went into that fund) would suffer. The league owners would undoubtedly say that the organized baseball could not afford the big network charges. These objections can be met by the 20,000,000 of us who paid to get into ball parks last year. Stick a 5c tax on all reserved seats for all games and divide that between the players' pension fund and a fund to pay for World Series broadcasts. That'll solve everything. I suppose the average fan sees 40 games a year, which means that he'd be paying $2 more than he paid last year. A non-commercial World Series broadcast would be worth $2 of anybody's money.

If this sounds unreasonable, I would like to submit in rebuttal that I am a baseball fan and therefore am not amenable to reason.

In The Public Interest

With all evidence pointing to less and less Government interference in the operation of bigtime commercial radio, 1947 will pose the question as to how much radio "in the public interest" will get an airing. The networks aren't kidding anybody; until now they've dished out public service programming (and an unusually high percentage of it very good), but only so long as it did not interfere with the balance sheet. Of course the war years brought different pressures, and the conscience of the country and the network execs was alerted to emergency needs. Today, with restrictions off, both financial and Governmental, the lip service era looks set to ride high and wide.

True, there is some lofty talk from the direction of CBS aimed at exposing multi-millions of listeners to vital documentaries by knocking off on occasion cream time commercial shows, but when a Norman Corwin series growing out of his "One World" tour winds up "Behind the Hope Ball" at 10 o'clock Tuesday night it obviously raises the question of how serious is the intent of the network to assume its public obligation. A look at the record shows all networks remiss in their obligations toward a full bodied UN coverage, certainly the most vital and historic programming on today's radio agenda.

Commercial radio is here to stay, and if there is a more ideal setup, it is not in the immediate offing. That it has its advantages is reflected in the night-to-night cycle of entertainment furnished the world. But the fact remains that radio has failed to embrace seriously any other role than that of an entertainment medium. The networks have had their chance. There may still be hope in the small individual stations throughout the country and in the opening up of FM channels. If competition and the demands of the people force the broadcaster to prove the merit of his individual station (this will be particularly true in the case of FM) radio may lose it static quo.

What Do the Signposts Portend on Comedy Programming, Writing, Public Service and the 'Blue Book' Credo?

of just how serious some of their indiscretions have been. However, in the face of ominous rumblings out of Washington, it can very well be that 1947 will not only negate whatever benefits have accrued from the Blue Book, but that the champions of strictly commercialized radio will be even more firmly established in the saddle.

The boys who are laying 100 to 1 odds that William Randolph Hearst will wrap up a renewal of his WBAL in Baltimore in the first major test of the Blue Book dicta are conscious of the forces of reaction that are moving in on the FCC, cued to the whole new GOP controlled pattern of the D. C. political scene. The signposts, they say, are up: Commissioner Clifford J. Durr, who has fought the noble fight of the "Great Dissenter," is running out his term with little or no likelihood of reappointment, and it appears obvious that Chairman Charles R. Denny, also a Democrat, won't be given much rope.

It's conceded that a Hearst victory on the WBAL case and the inevitable letdown on standards that would follow do not bode too well for a radio "in the public interest."

TRANSCRIPTIONS: Look for 1947, goes the thinking, to set the pattern for bigtime transcription shows. NBC and CBS aren't too happy about it, but overall industry sentiment is that there is no stopping it. There was considerable rejoicing among the opponents of transcribed radio when the Bing Crosby show for Philco took a sharp nosedive a while back, a rejoicing only matched by their "we-told-you-so" pronouncements whenever periodic flaws crop up in the transcriptions themselves. They're all set to officiate at the wake.

But those technical difficulties can—and obviously will—be remedied. And when the big wax splash gains momentum the anti-transcription networks, faced with a decentralization of programming, must inevitably revise their prejudices. The transcription opponents are crying "It's nothing short of mechanized show business," but in rebuttal the platter proponents point to the classic example of Crosby in arguing that if a transcribed show is bad, it's because the show itself is bad, not because it's transcribed. And with the advent of FM, there is no arguing with the natural affinity that transcription will bear to this large new arena of stations.

THE NETWORKS: 1947 will bring the networks face to face with the problem of how they can set themselves up as a going entity financially. The year-end statements have suddenly projected into black and white (and maybe red) the problem that confronts the major webs. Operating costs have risen to new highs but the income accruing to the networks, under the present rate structure, cannot be upped. It is no secret that the real margin of profit comes from the owned-and-operated stations and from the networks' other vested interests.

In some quarters there is talk that the webs may initiate a move during 1947 to hike their rates. Obviously, only the fear that this may invite an exodus of clients from radio into periodicals and other media is holding them back. The only alternative left the nets would be to initiate economies which in turn might invite lower-budgeted shows and curtailment of public service programming and experimentation. It's a decision that may have far reaching consequences.

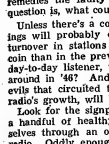
PETRILLO AND LABOR: Right now the networks are suffering a case of the jitters. For this is Petrillo time. They know that the AFM czar, having won his bout with the Government on the Lea Act, will put his best foot forward. The prospects of Petrillo's demands frighten them. Having averted a strike with the American Federation of Radio Artists over the "unfair station issue" and having gone through the most labor-conscious year in all radio, the networks, from all indications, stand ready to fight Petrillo's proposals tooth and nail. Don't be surprised, is the word from authoritative quarters, if Petrillo sparks the first strike in radio.

The networks are of the opinion that they have been made, to yield much to labor during the war. They realize what this has already meant in increased operating costs as against a static income. And it all points to a fight to the finish.

Irate Fan Doesn't Want His Baseball 'Casts Loused Up By Inept Radio Commercials

By QUENTIN REYNOLDS

Any time that 20,000,000 people buy tickets to watch an act—that is VARIETY's business. That is also the excuse for filling this space with a discussion of baseball—the act that 20,000,000 people paid to see last summer. The act only lasted



Quentin Reynolds

154 days, but it grossed better than $40,000,000, which puts it (relatively speaking) in the class with moving pictures and above the legitimate theatre as a revenue producer.

All summer long the faithful filed into the ball parks of the nation. To them baseball wasn't just another medium of entertainment; their feeling toward baseball was something between the fervor of the devout Holy Roller toward his priest and the unquestioning allegiance of an alumnus (New York subway variety) toward the Notre Dame football team.

To fans baseball is almost a religion. They give not only their dollars but their moral and spiritual support to the team of their choice. It will be recalled that a clergyman in Brooklyn held prayer meetings on the Borough Hall steps during the crucial St. Louis-Brooklyn series, an example of bad taste and misguided spiritual fervor which was laughed

America Likes Its Commercials

Reflections on a Medium Catering to the Masses and an Answer to the Critics of National Taste

By CARROLL CARROLL

Hollywood.

The steady flow of criticism levelled at commercial radio is not insidious because it's consistently carping but because it's almost exclusively in media that feel radio's advertising competition and offer no opportunity for rebuttal. Radio's so-called "public service" or non-commercial moments are sometimes praised, though generally ignored by the public, while its most popular stuff is systematically panned. The fact that the sock advertising programs are barbecued almost exclusively puts the sincerity of the criticism in jeopardy and opens to the suspicion of venality the entire editorial policy of the publication that carries it.

The sincerity of each individual critic of radio, his right to criticize and the validity of his writing is not questioned. The trouble, in most cases, is that the critic, clothed in a knight-in-armor complex, approaches his task as a defender of the people. He defends them by whacking away at radio commercials and the way they're handled, yet there is no definite indication that most radio commercials are truly resented by any great number of people. The few cranks write letters and can always get them published. But a hundred, or a thousand or even ten thousand letters can't represent 20 million listeners. The average radio critic says radio is in a rut. He wants things changed. Yet there is every proof that change for the sake of change is the last thing the radio audience will accept. And so it goes.

The truth is this. Almost anyone who cares to knock radio can find editorial sanctuary somewhere. Congressmen who need a little publicity pick on Hollywood or radio or both. Reformers who would like to be quoted take a poke at radio. Radio has been accused of causing everything from juvenile delinquency to bad crops. Anybody who can write convincingly can take a jab at radio and get it published in some magazine or newspaper. Why? The magazines don't sock the press and the press rarely criticizes the magazines. But they'll all pile on to this Johnny-come-lately of advertising that has made itself felt.

Even this would be okay if there were any forum in which to answer detractors who publish letters and write articles beginning—"Whenever I hear a commercial announcement I turn off the radio?" There is no available space in which to reply to those who curiously qualify their right to criticize by saying "Of course I never listen to radio but. . . ." Then follows a blast against material the writer presumably absorbed by osmosis. Where can FCC's frequent complaints that commercial radio is not in the public interest be answered?

A medium of radio's size and dignity deserves a defense area in which to point out to a lot of people that all this criticism consistently ignores the primary purpose of commercial radio. That purpose is to interest a huge audience. Each program seeks the largest it can get. None hopes to please only a certain few. There are some who could prove that this is the essence of democracy. But its critics contend that commercial radio is something between intellectual-suicide and moral share-cropping.

The Federal Communications Commission, for instance, is constantly objecting to the quality of commercial radio. But no government commission exists to police other forms of intelligence. No government agency objects because all books published are not of the highest type and the ones that sell fastest are generally the hottest or the funniest. Nor does the government tell newspapers to play down sensational stories and stuff that gets circulation.

But What About the Masses?

Only the intellectual element of the lunatic fringe wants to censor books, all of which are commercial projects—even the Bible—but everyone feels free to demand that "something be done about radio." Everyone ignores the fact that he has the power to make the most devastating attack in the world on commercial radio . . . the power to turn it off.

The fact is always ignored that commercial radio's catering to the masses has resulted in the most constant flow of high grade entertainment in the world, which boils down to the greatest good to the greatest number. That commercial radio makes people happy by giving them a lot of entertainment, and makes advertisers happy by giving them a lot of business, would seem to be sufficient grounds on which to rest any defense of it. But no! Commercial radio is forced to make an effort to confound its critics by trying hopelessly to prove that it's something it never set out to be, Art.

In countries where radio attracts no very great or faithful audiences, because no program is forced to compete with another in catering to the national tastes, radio is dull as entertainment and ineffective culturally for the simple reason that it does not reach the people. Symphonic music played all day offers little to listeners who don't like, nor understand, this music—and what's more don't want to. Lectures, even the best, are wonderful only to those who listen to them. And such listening can't be forced.

Ignoring this completely, critics of commercial radio lash out at the shows and stars this nation loves and deplore the fact that radio doesn't do more to educate and uplift. They prefer to scream at what the people quite obviously prefer. Thus the critics of commercial radio are critics not of art, nor of intrinsic goodness, but of the national taste. As such they are naturally entitled to criticize until their lifetime pens expire. But why blame radio? Why blame advertisers? Advertisers have actually improved the national taste in many, many ways both in print and on the air.

There is no purpose in trying to defend commercial radio as Art. But it can be defended as the greatest and most loved form of entertainment in the world; great because it's highly competitive and loved because it is carefully planned to give people exactly what they long for . . . quick, easy, free, entertainment.

It's axiomatic that commercial radio in order to merit the word commercial must present what vast throngs of people like to hear most. Because when people don't listen in large numbers to a commercial program, it cannot sell enough product to pay for itself. It immediately ceases to be commercial and very soon ceases to be. The public, therefore, is the critic, judge and jury on every sponsored radio show. A very large segment of the public—one or two million people at the very least—must like a commercial program or it cannot afford to remain on any network.

Rarely, if ever, does the public dislike a radio show because it carries advertising, in spite of the fact that many of radio's critics live by fostering this belief. Actually I have never seen anyone get up to turn off a commercial announcement. This is not because many commercials don't deserve turning-off but because people are educated to accept them. People know they'll end in a minute and people are lazy. I have, however, seen many a person turn off the entertainment portion of a radio show because he knew it would not end in a minute and he couldn't stand it. When enough people do this the commercial announcements are automatically turned off at the source.

Jingles: The Voice of a People

For this reason, and for no other, commercial radio in the United States is most truly the voice of the whole population. The people ask for what they want by rejecting what they do not want. Radio entertainment speaks the thoughts of the nation in so far as it reflects its taste. The voice of a people can't be the cultured tones of its intellectuals anymore than it can be the babbling of its illiterates. It does not pay commercial radio to cater to either of these peripheral groups. The mighty middle class is the big buying public and the man who guesses best what that class wants to hear is radio's Number One Genius for the semester.

In those parts of the world where radio is not in the hands of the much maligned advertisers, anxious to please large groups, there is very little incentive to give people really high-calibre entertainment of a diversified nature. Nobody cares who listens when nobody benefits by increasing an audience.

Perhaps it is culturally deplorable that more people in the United States want to listen to Abbott and Costello than to Toscanini and 100 men, although analagous tastes are undoubtedly international. Nevertheless, much maligned radio offers both Mr. Toscanini and the Messrs. Abbott and Costello. While the critics snarl at the time Abbott and Costello waste, and much of the public snarls at the time Toscanini wastes.

The truth is that radio's critics have adopted a set of false values and refuse to associate cause and effect. They stand aghast at the size of the audience that listens every Tuesday at 10 p.m. E.S.T. and wring their hands because so many people can't be mentally improved at that time instead of just amused by Bob Hope. But put in the mental improvement show, take out Hope, and try and find that huge audience.

Among the things the war proved was the social and educational value of commercial radio with its gigantic audiences absolutely absorbent to the ideas of their weekly-heard friends. Bing Crosby in a few casually read words could instill more patriotism and fire in more people for getting on with the war than all the best poetry of Stephen Vincent Benet, Archibald MacLeish and Norman Corwin set to kettledrums and broadcast nightly over four joined networks. During the war commercial radio with its selling know-how, packed the big propaganda punch. Cultural and intellectual radio sounded more inspiring sometimes to the cultured and intellectual few who listened. But the technique of the commercial announcement was the hard slogging doughfoot the propagandists turned to when there was a tough job that had to be done. And it proved these hard slogging commercials were listened to on large audience commercial shows.

Fibber's Culture Vs. Allegories

Jack Benny, Fred Allen and Fibber McGee, through their immense audience, are potentially greater sources of culture to the masses than all the allegories, wonderful as they may be, that Arch Oboler ever wrote. The fact that these commanders of public opinion don't exercise their power doesn't lessen it. Though they hold their power casually, sometimes even unconsciously, any three top network comics working solidly together could swing the country any way they wished. People even elect hillbilly singers to high political office.

When Jack Benny has Joseph Szigeti as a guest he's doing more for music in a half-hour than many a whole season of relatively unheard symphonic broadcasts, because men are judged by the company they keep. And if Szigeti pleases Jack Benny and Jack Benny pleases Joe Public, Joe Public is going to like and listen to Szigeti. It's another proof that things equal to the same thing are equal to each other.

No rush of critical torment is brought on because there are only a few concert halls in New York City and over three-score theatres. (All commercial projects.) No one wails because most of the best remembered stage successes are musical comedies and operettas. Yet, because radio consciously caters to this same general taste, radio is excoriated.

Nobody balks at buying a magazine for from 10 to 50 cents, knowing it's perhaps 50% or more paid advertising. Yet critics insist these same people have cause to scream when a $15,000 radio program, which they get for nothing, is interrupted for 2½ minutes of advertising during 29½ minutes. Make it three minutes out of 30, and it's only 10% advertising for radio as against 50%, and over, for periodicals. And it's for free vs. for cash.

There is no way to deny that radio advertising, far from impeccable, sometimes tramples taste. But there is also no denying that publication copy is frequently just as "peccable." Each medium does its best to police its advertisers, but Natures spelled backwards is no different in print than on the air. Radio critics say commercials come into your home, your living and dining rooms. So do magazines. Radio is turned on with the knowledge that advertising makes it possible. And a 10-cent magazine buyer is aware that so much desirable reading could not be delivered as cheaply without advertising.

True, children can hear radio and perhaps not read publication advertising. But most children who listen consciously to the radio can read. And only the fewest of radio's most violent critics complain for the sake of children. Furthermore most of the people who worry about children's tender ears either ignore or don't know how hardy young minds can be.

For every critic of commercial radio there must be a minimum of 5,000,000 radio fans. If they do not all actually benefit culturally when they turn on their radios they benefit to the degree they expected to benefit. If they don't, they turn it off.

The FCC not long ago gave out a snort against "Soap Operas" emphasizing all their weak points and adding the charge that they contribute to imbalance on a station's program. Imbalance, a beautiful word, is apparently exactly what radio listeners want most. At the times when station and network programs are in most marked imbalance they enjoy the largest audiences. There is Tuesday with the imbalance of four big consecutive comedy shows: Amos 'n' Andy, Fibber McGee and Molly, Bob Hope and Red Skelton.

A similar imbalance is found in the Sunday comedy series. Jack Benny, Phil Harris, Charlie McCarthy and Fred Allen have a tremendous audience.

It is impossible to put anything important in competition with one of these top programs because then the criticism comes from quarters crying to know, for example, why an outstanding show like Frank Sinatra is put in direct competition with Ed Gardner of Duffy's Tavern. People who want to hear one probably want to hear both. Whenever a network or station has tried to combat or break-up the imbalance of big shows or soap-operas following one upon the other the effort has been unsuccessful.

The FCC claims Soap Operas please advertisers because they're cheap. If they were only cheap, advertisers would not care for them. The fact that they're also effective proves people listen to them. The fact that they've defied competition proves people prefer to listen to them.

To argue against imbalance on the air, and urge that educational material be sandwiched in with other stuff, has as much logic as to demand that newspaper editorials be slapped between "comic" strips. Or "comics" put on the editorial page. There is every good reason of logic and balance in favor of such a move. But the people have proved their preference for imbalance. It's more convenient for them. If you want to make them go out of their way, you can make them turn to the editorial page to read a comic. But you'll never make them read an editorial that way.

Public Sets the Pattern

Another claim of the FCC is that radio favors the sponsor before it favors the public. To fix this, FCC suggests more non-sponsored programs and fewer shows built to a standard pattern. This frames a nice question: Shall the public have what sponsors have discovered the public likes or what the FCC thinks it should have?

An examination of available surveys indicates that the type of shows FCC suggests meet with considerable apathy. The standard patterns FCC wants to eliminate are only offered by sponsors, not dictated by them. The patterns used are used because they are the ones the public chooses to listen to. And experiment on the part of sponsors has proved it's useless to try to change these patterns to any great extent.

Life in a Fish Bowl

By LESTER GOTTLIEB

I can remember when I first broke into the radio phase of show business, how I used to dread explaining to relatives and friends how and why I earned my modest keep.

"What do you do for a living?" they would ask.

"Radio," I replied.

"Fix 'em or sell 'em?"

This would inevitably pose a dilemma for me. If I told them I was specifically a radio press agent, I was doomed for the rest of the evening, conducting a vague tour through Broadway and Hollywood. It would leave me uncomfortable and perspiring and my interrogators not only confused, but suspicious. I had never rated very high scholastically with them and their opinions about my educational limitations were then confirmed. Sometimes I resorted to what I thought was the easy way out by replying that I not only fixed 'em, but sold 'em. But this was worse. I have trouble dialing a push button model and as for selling 'em, I always thought the Atwater Kent was a pretty snappy job.

How I used to envy the more solid and substantial citizens, who, when asked the nature of their livelihoods, could quickly reply doctor, lawyer or candlestick maker, and satisfy the most curious.

But now all of this has changed. As if by a miracle, all the people who used to give me third degree examinations, don't ask anymore. They tell me! Overnight these erstwhile show business innocents act like they swallowed whole copies of VARIETY. And how they love to trap a victim even if he's only, like myself, an unimportant cog. Paradoxically enough, I find the new atmosphere even more untenable. I long now for the good old days.

Of course, you guessed what brought about this unwelcome metamorphosis. It's difficult to go to a movie or a play, or pick up a book or a magazine article wihout finding the characters or the locale of Broadway or Hollywood.

Today, an octupus isn't a specie of marine life, but a description coined for the largest flesh-peddling institution in the world. A Stein isn't a beer mug, but this organization's prexy.

A huckster isn't a push-cart merchant, but a youknowwhat.

Honest Abe isn't the Great Emancipator, of our Lincoln legend, but an undersized talent genius named Lastfogel.

The Chief: Vehicle for Ulcers

The Chief isn't an Indian tribesman, but a vehicle for ulcers.

People don't hum plaintive love songs, rhyming June with Moon. Instead they chirp "There's No Business Like Show Business."

Kids don't play with hoops anymore. They ask about Hoopers.

Flack isn't anti-aircraft barrage, but a press agent, Pygmalion-style.

George Jessel, Sophie Tucker, Gertie Lawrence, Eddie Cantor, Bob Hope, C. B. Cochran and Fred Stone are just a few show business celebs who have told all in autobiographies that give Womrath attendants more trouble than John Sumner. Now, with S. Hurok's behind-the-scenes saga of the twinkletoes industry, and the forthcoming musical called "Look Ma, I'm Dancing!" even the terp crown will be getting more lighting than a police lineup.

And certainly the tunesmiths are leading fish bowl existences, thanks largely to Messrs. Warner.

Cary Grant is Cole Porter; Robert Alda, George Gershwin; John Garfield fiddles while Joan Crawford burns; and Paul Henried and Bette Davis say 'cello again in "Deception."

And soon to climax the whole show business expose is the screen biog of Sime Silverman. They will probably use as a sub-title "The Abel Green Pastures." As a matter of fact, it's rare when a movie actor doesn't pick up a copy of VARIETY.

I say enough is enough. Let some other industry take the rap for change. How about a campaign to expose the dress business? Let the Saturday Evening Post do a three-part installment on the garment industry; let Simon and Schuster publish the Memoirs of Sam Splotz, Boy Converter; and next time Bette Davis picks up a trade paper in a film, let it be Women's Wear.

Daytime Needs Needle, Dignity, Imagination

By LOUIS G. COWAN

Today, more than ever, daytime radio needs its own Lindsey and Crouse, Hammerstein and Rodgers, its own Sherwoods and Shaws and Ziegfelds. It needs its own new voices and new talents if it is to climb to its potential heights of brilliant showmanship.

Louis G. Cowan

Today, daytime radio is pretty much in the doldrums. This is no secret to the profession, and not much of a secret to the listeners. Otherwise, why all the pressures and defences? American radio is essentially show business with clanging cash registers, Hooper ratings, and Nielsen surveys as its box-office. However, all of this must be considered in the light of radio as a mass medium. Only it can give instant communication of news and it is one of the most powerful influences on the American mores. For this it must and does bear its responsibility well, since the broadcasters are licensed trustees for the people who own the airwaves. This is an important underlying theme to any discussion of all radio's part in show business.

How does daytime radio, in its showmanship role, manage to bring those priceless moments of joy, absorption, inspiration? It does well, it does badly, but mostly, it seems to lack the inventive entertainment genius and talent that aim at greatness. Why? There are many answers. Part of my own answers boil down to this equation:

Entertainment = FRC
F = Formula
R = Rating
C = Cost
Entertainment = Formula, Rating, Cost

Formula, Rating, Cost—the usual guide-posts to programming. To have a chance of sale, a new show must resemble an established formula. If it can't get rating, then comes the proverbial cost per point computation, usually followed by cancellation by station, or network, or client. This, I know, is at the heart of the showmanship problem facing the creative people in the networks, agencies, and stations.

With the flexibilities of radio as a medium, miracles can and have been worked on new shows once they hit the air. This has been done by a new twist, the addition or deletion of a personality. But, unfortunately, the screws usually are set too tightly for great revision and change. The big exception to this, of course, is the "out-of-town break-in"—the Hartfords, the New Havens of radio—where programs are smoothed and put into working form before hitting the network limelight.

Exploring New Ideas

Until these last few years, adherence to formula mostly meant daytime serials. But as resistance to these began to grow, different ideas were tried. For example, NBC brought Fred Waring to daytime radio at a large figure and made a fight of it. Here was a real try for something big, a real daytime attraction. ABC backed Don McNeil's "Breakfast Club." Here was a showmanship formula that won daytime fans. Tom Breneman set the radio industry talking with his new daytime show, "Corny," they say, but good enough to bring farmers in from the fields to join in the nation's laughs with a new name. CBS moved Arthur Godfrey's fine, warm personality onto the national scene. Mutual got Morton Downey. These, and others, are among the attempts toward improvement. But, they are not enough.

For a long time the daytime serial, invented by Frank Hummert and indigenous to radio, seemed to be the only surefire formula that could work, and many were those to follow in its path. The howls against soap operas have been loud and articulate, but are all of them justified? I think not. Some of the shows are sheer trivia and bear no resemblance to the realities of our unsettled times, but others are plotted and written by some of our most talented writers, whose skills give meaning and purpose and real entertainment to the listeners. In my mind, I can see no real story telling difference between this original radio form and its counterpart, the stories which appear regularly in the slick magazines.

To meet this one successful daytime radio formula, there have been searches for something different. The "something different" came with a deluge. I mean, of course, the audience participation—giveaway, bank night, and dish night shows. They hit with a bang, and certain theatres used such devices to pull customers when they couldn't attract them any other way. As used in the film industry, they were a substitute for real showmanship, and for real quality in entertainment. Now they're with us in bulk.

Dishes Vs. Soap

Those seeking other daytime shows that could adhere to the Formula, Rating, Cost pattern became intrigued with these. They clicked at night, so, reasoned broadcasters, why not try variations for daytime? To be different, they wanted to give them a plus—prizes. These were to be virtually unobtainable gifts that wartime restrictions kept from the markets. They gave ranges, refrigerators, stoves, radios, etc. These gifts, coupled with laugh-provoking contestants, they reasoned, should rock the country. They did, and have conformed with FRC, with real emphasis on the C—Cost.

To meet the daytime formula, these have been the most talked-of opposition to daytime serials. They have saturated the country on network and local stations alike. And they paid off. The formula is proven. Ratings were usually good. So with costs very low, these are the shows that many now want to add to the already sprawling list. They're in vogue.

But do these programs satisfy our own standards of entertainment? Are they the best that daytime radio can provide? I think not. All of us must recognize the current difference between daytime and nighttime audience potentials. Nighttime radio gets the larger budgets for that reason, with much lower daytime budgets restricting its development. But with greater showmanship made possible by increased appropriations, the over-all daytime audiences can be increased far beyond their present size.

All radio, and certainly daytime radio, is still in its pioneering stages. The limitless imagination, the soaring freedom for expression within the framework of radio awaits those who will or can meet the challenge. Throughout the nation are untried and unknown talents who should be brought within radio's fold.

It's up to advertisers, the networks, and stations to search more intensively for these new ideas and new people and strive for finer quality in the shows that now exist. Freshness, brilliance, wisdom, with smart showmanship, can bring radio to this great dignity and even greater service to the nation.

Thoreau, nearly a century before radio came to life, pointed the way when he said: ". . . man's capacities have never been measured; nor are we to judge what we can do by any precedent, so little has been tried."

This you can tag to radio, but good.

KOBAK BITES 'VARIETY'

By EDGAR KOBAK
(President Mutual Broadcasting System)

Now is the season of the year for people in and out of the radio business to make forecasts about what the future holds in store for broadcasting—and people.

All the trade publications in the industry feel bound to publish a statement of this kind, but I think it is high time that somebody published a statement about the future of trade publications—and one in particular. Who cares what I say about Mutual? What I say about VARIETY is a different matter.

Edgar Kobak

I don't happen to have with me any copies of VARIETY 25 years ago, but I recall the paper was very different in those days.

It's necessary to get a little background before trying to ascertain what the future might hold, and I think it is pretty clear that during these past 25 years VARIETY has broadened its appeal to include a great many people who never read the paper before the days of radio.

It has done this in two ways—first by intriguing them and interesting them in VARIETY's own special idiom and interests, and secondly by adapting its contents to suit the needs and interest of these new readers.

I expect this process to continue but I believe and hope that through it all VARIETY will continue to maintain its own personality.

I don't expect VARIETY to become too research-minded for instance—not that I am against research, but I feel that other business papers are more naturally concerned with those aspects of radio.

I think there is room in the radio business for several different kinds of publications and I look to VARIETY to continue as one of the foremost representatives of what I would call the "show business" aspects of broadcasting.

There are other good publications that cover the show business part of radio too, and each has its own point of view. For that reason I look for VARIETY in the future to strengthen and develop what I might call its own special editorial viewpoint and its own special brand of criticism. I like VARIETY's program reviews — they are an important feature.

Be sure your reviewers are qualified at all times and remember there is no perfect program. (Not even on Mutual.) You've been pulling your punches lately, be careful or you'll be coasting on your reputation.

I look for VARIETY to continue to be a puncturer of balloons—not to say a destroyer of idols—because I think a healthy spirit of constructive criticism very well expresses VARIETY's place in our field—but you put too much personal opinion in your news stories and headlines. How about more editorials for this purpose?

Allowing for the necessities of keeping up with the times, I look for VARIETY to be more like VARIETY than ever in 1947.

I think I see in the development of the television section a new broadening of the scope of VARIETY's coverage of show business. It brings back the visual appeal which has been somewhat under wraps during the heyday of sound broadcasting. I don't think that there will be too many changes during the year 1947 on account of television, but I think it is pretty clear that 1947 will be the beginning of a series of years in which television will loom larger and larger on our horizon and in the editorial makeup of VARIETY and other trade papers of the industry.

VARIETY has for many years been acutely conscious of the effect of showmanship on the boxoffice. It is a weekly meeting place for the two worlds of showmanship and advertising. If it continues to do this job in 1947, VARIETY will be making a real contribution to the entire broadcasting industry.

Now Comes the Commercial

So much for the general aspects of VARIETY's future as I see it. (Here comes our commercial.) Perhaps I should also say a few things about the Mutual Broadcasting System's probable influence on the paper! Needless to say, I expect more and better headlines for Mutual in 1947—I expect them not because I think VARIETY has any special respect for Mutual but because it is Mutual's ambition to provide the stuff the headlines are made of.

In 1947 we hope to give VARIETY the opportunity to comment on a few more sacred cows we have milked—a few more strands of red tape we have cut—a few more taboos flouted and places blasted.

We know we shall hit all-time highs in better programming and in the number of Mutual affiliates and expect this will also mean we'll be closer than ever to the hearts of American listeners everywhere. The closer we get to the listeners and the more of their attention we are able to demand, the better job we'll be able to do for our advertisers and (we hope) the more business will come our way. This should give VARIETY plenty of interesting news items at reasonably frequent intervals during 1947.

We may say it is a very great pleasure to contemplate the possibility of doing all these good turns for VARIETY in the year to come. We feel very mellow about the whole thing.

(Editor's note—Have to take up "too much personal opinion" in news stories and headlines with this guy. Don't agree on that one. Hey, Betty! Try for an appointment with Kobak.)

IS IT PLAGIARISM OR COINCIDENCE?

By IRVING BRECHER
(Producer-Owner, "The Life of Riley")

Hollywood.

Nobody in his right mind is envious of the bigwigs in network radio whose function it is to keep Mr. Sponsor and Mr. Public happy at the same time. It is a hectic and thankless job, only slightly assuaged by the fact that they're well overpaid for it.

Assuming that most advertisers are mainly concerned with getting the widest possible number of ears into which they can bellow about "Phlugg Cigarettes"—'Made by the Mayo Brothers—Great for what ails you!" and "Varf, the plastic cereal", are there any new angles the networks haven't explored in their efforts to build audience? Or to hold what they have?

Right after radio was born, everybody wanted to see the new baby—anything went with the listeners. Just hearing a commercial was intriguing enough to make many a burglar stay home at night. Then, after the shiny newness faded, and an element of competition crept in, the networks woke to the fact that the surest way to jam 'em in was with comedy. That's still true.

So they culled from the theatre, and came up with clowns who were surefire: Benny, Wynn, Allen, Pearl, Burns & Allen, Cantor, et al. And going further, they even let The Easy Aces, Amos 'n' Andy, and other newcomers get a hearing. Big laughs, big audience, big sales.

Whether by plan or not, nighttime radio—pick any night you want—today has a marked resemblance to a vaudeville show. The format from 8 p.m. to 11 may be different than at the old Palace, but the elements are the same: songs, comedy, music, "the personal appearance" of newsworthy personalities in sketches—everything is there except the acrobats. Even they occasionally turn up, in a distorted form, on audience participation shows, breaking their necks for six Turkish towels.

If Radio has done so well, borrowing from Vaudeville, why not go all the way and borrow one more item that the theatre managers used so successfully in the Palace—and in all the big theatres all over the country? I mean watchdogging the material every act used, so that each act was "different."

Here's How Keith's Protected Itself

When Burns & Allen were headlining for Keith, there may have been other man and girl teams on the same circuit. But none of the other acts would ever dare to lift their "Lambchops" bit. Because if they did, Keith would not book the thieves. And Keith was worrying about Burns & Allen when they exercised this watchdog attitude. They were thinking of how to keep selling tickets, and they knew duplication of this sort would inevitably drive away audiences. They were right. Because when the vigilance was relaxed, and every vaudeville show began to look and sound like the one you saw last week, that was the end.

There is tremendous duplication on the networks today. One prime example is a show on another net that apes NBC's Jack Benny from start to finish. No one, least of all Benny, would want to restrict another show from using a comedian, jokes, songs, and commercials. And Jack is probably unconcerned that this particular show borrows his characterization of a tight-fisted, put-upon bachelor butler. But certainly the networks involved should be concerned. Especially the one on which Benny's road company operates. Because part of Benny's tremendous audience may tune in this other show some night, get a feeling that all this is very familiar, and run for the exits. That hurts the other shows on the network involved. And the funny thing is—this particular show could be better if it cast off some of its unoriginal elements, since its star is great in his own right.

There are other examples: "The Aldrich Family" is being mimicked flagrantly, on another show. The two leading characters are so identical in voice and style with Henry Aldrich and his pal Homer that even if the script were absolutely original, it all sounds like you've heard it before. So a lot of people, hearing it just once, don't come back. This hurts everybody: mainly the imitator, but also it dulls the glow of "Aldrich," and inevitably the blur that it creates for the listener will result in his leaving the radio for something better.

But the main sore spot with programming is not the intentional piracy—it is the accidental duplication of subject matter, especially stuff. Does it help Amos 'n' Andy, Fibber McGee, Hope and Skelton, a standout parlay of prime funny men, if on the same night they each do a "coal-miner" joke? True, from a time standpoint, Amos 'n' Andy get there first, and the others follow. But isn't their John L. Lewis gag, no matter how good, dulled in your memory when Fibber tells his a few minutes later? And doesn't Hope's suffer too, and Skelton's? On their own show, none of these would tell the same joke twice. But on Tuesday night, in two hours, the subject may come up four times, as far as the guy at home is concerned. When the evening is over, I wonder if the listener can remember who said what?

Maybe it isn't important—these shows are all up on top—but isn't it just possible that it would be better if it didn't happen? If you will accept the premise that the absence of one joke can never hurt a good show, how about trying this:

Tuesday morning when NBC's continuity department has all the final scripts for that night, its editor phones Hope and Skelton, for example, and informs them that they each have a joke of similar nature. Skelton, who follows Hope, should have the right to keep his in if he so desires—for NBC is merely acting as a service, not a censor) but at least he knows that Hope is going to beat him to the punch.

If the proper understanding could exist, fostered by the network and accepted by all the individual comedians, a rotating system might possibly be worked out where, if one night Skelton cut a joke, the next time a conflict arose Hope would delete one, and after that, Fibber, or Amos 'n' Andy. It would all work out even in the end—their shows would still be good, with a greater air of freshness that must inure to everybody's benefit.

It goes deeper than an individual topical joke. Occasionally an oldie pops up twice in an evening—and, less frequently, but conceivably, two or three situation shows accidentally come up with stories of the same nature, in a single week. Suppose "Gildersleeve" sweats out a parking ticket rap on Wednesday, and Burns & Allen get a traffic summons Thursday, and "Riley" has cop trouble Saturday? Wouldn't it be better if scripts for all these shows, or at least story lines, could be in NBC's hands early enough so that all three producers could be tipped off in advance? Personally, I want to know when this condition exists so I could switch and put in another show instead.

"THE CLUCKSTERS"

Are Studio Audiences Necessary? — Or How to Kill 3½ Minutes of 'Spread'

By HAL KANTER

In this, as in other editions of show biz's senior class year book, all phases of the entertainment world are subjected to a number of treatises from the pens of alumni. And although this macrobian magazine contains articles probing the specific field of radio from most angles, the element of the audience has gone unrecognized, unheralded and, alas, uninhibited since the first anni edition conned a by-liner from a headliner. It is time that great mass of gaping gabboons who populate broadcast studios from a quarter 'til Breakfast Club until half-past-Coast-repeat-show had a champion. Because most champions are busy endorsing breakfast foods, the mantle has been draped over these shoulders by the Brillo-haired Boswell of 46th Street who edits his copy in a walk-up sleeping room.

But one who has waded through the noxious effluvium of a studio audience is no man to be championing the bird-faced gapers who form festoons of flesh at the footlights. It is no secret that the enthusiasm of the average comedy show audience is greater than that of a college cheerleader auditioning for the Big Game and a sampling of their intellects would clearly show why: the norm of an audience's intelligence quotient is doubtless less than a well-digger's ankle. There are many types of putty faces who make up the average audience, and Hooper have mercy on the comedian who gets all of them at one broadcast! Let's look at some of those types. But first, one man's answer to the burning question "Is the studio audience necessary?"

It is necessary to have an audience, because they make noises. The laughter, applause, whistling, whispering, sneezing, coughing, hacking, wheezing, cellophane-rattling and burping provided by audiences blends into a 3½-minute cacophony known in production circles as "spread." When writers have to write an 18-minute script on a comedy show, they immediately figure that 3½ minutes, talk the vocalist into doing an extra chorus, slip the announcer a fifth of bourbon for reading the commercial more slowly and thus have only 13 minutes of script to compose.

If there were no audience, the show would end 3½ minutes early and cataclysmic penalties would result: the work produced would be divested of his stop-watch and studio schedules; the agency producer would be busted to vice-president; the writers would be stripped to the waist and lashed with comedians' entrails; and the announcer on duty at studios, NBEL, Bronx, would have to read a Shaner's Grill spot announcement seven times before the next show came through.

It is necessary to have an audience. Because they make noises.

The Clucksters who compose a studio audience fall into various categories. The first can be immediately dispensed with, as it is definitely in the minority. That would be the bright, intelligent man and wife from Savannah who want to see just one broadcast and who are disillusioned by the whole thing. They are quiet. They applaud on cue and laugh only when dialog merits laughter. They leave immediately upon the announcer's good night and you've been the best audience we've ever had." They never comeback to the studio. They go home to Savannah, and never listen to anything after that, save Gabriel Heatter.

The Mitt Man

Of the other types, one of the most annoying Clucksters is the Mitt Man, or Applauder. If the comic ever utters a joke the Applauder doesn't understand, he whacks his callused paws together. If there is a "topical" joke (any straight line employing the name of a figure, place or event that made the newspapers within the month), the clap-happy chap beats his beefy palms. He applauds at mention of the words Brooklyn, the Dodgers, Crosby's horses, Pasadena, or La Brea tarpitos, "and here she is now." In addition, there are deaf mutes who attend broadcasts and when they see others in the audience laughing, they applaud to express their appreciation. Then there are the common human sheep who see deaf mutes applauding and begin slapping their hands themselves. There are also writers who place themselves under the audience mikes and applaud their jokes; and writers' agents who applaud on signal from their clients. (One agent we know lost a promising client for applauding an ad lib.)

Type No. 2 in this galley of galling geese are the Moaners. Moaners are usually people of self-appointed intellect who moan at puns. They never laugh at anything; they never applaud. All they do is moan. They fortify themselves with great Hungarian meals before entering the studio, thus assuring them of resonant, projected moans that can hit a stage microphone from a gallery seat.

Shriekers are another type. Usually fat women with enormous earlwlsons, they lumber into studios the moment doors are opened, knocking down the smaller page boys and plop into several seats near the front. The Shriekers cut loose the moment an "on the air" sign lights red and periodically during the half hour emit high-pitched noises not unlike a wounded fire siren. These women, research tells us, are not shrieking because they enjoy what they see or hear. They are shrieking because they've found a sudden exhilaration accompanied by vocal gymnastics relieves the tension on their gut caused by tight, cheap corsets. The only place they can shriek without bestirring the gendarmes is in a radio studio.

Need we say anything about type the fourth: the Pucker Pusses, or Whistlers? Introduce anybody on a radio show and they edge forward on their studio seats and cut loose with shrill, windy noises. Let any woman, be she Carole Landis in a negligee or Dame May Whitty in a farthingale, come within his range and the Whistler will blow an engineer's V.U. needle up 15 decibles. He has also been known to whistle for certain jokes when told with an accompanying leer and to look in a chorus or two during the musical number.

The Silent Sadies

A fifth type is not so disconcerting to the listeners. She's the Silent Sadie, who sits in the front row, wearing a hat she made for a visit to Brenneman's, staring at the people onstage. Sadie doesn't make any noise because she doesn't hear a word or a note. She is there to stare and make mental notes about what the stars are wearing. She usually has a runny nose, the result of a cold contracted on the Grey-hound trip from Pontiac, Michigan, and so stoic is her face and posture, the performers are annoyed by her very presence. She is the last to leave the studio, because she sits

(Continued on page 120)

KLZ CANARY

BETTYANN DAVIS

Bettyann's voice is a favorite throughout the Denver region and is a regular feature on several current KLZ shows.

KLZ, DENVER

Queen of Soapers Asks: Does Radio Want New Writers?

By ELAINE CARRINGTON

There are new writers clamoring to be heard in radio...beating on the closed doors with eager young fists. I know, because my purpose in producing the Carrington Playhouse was to find just such writers. My search for new writers brought forth at least 75 scripts a week—sometimes a hundred. It was usually out of a two weeks' batch that one script, which was at all possible, was found. However, when that script was found, it was frequently a gem. Young and old writers—because I did not limit it to young ones—came through with fresh and original ideas and I think, on this program for the first time, the new writer was spotlighted, his reasons for having written the story given, his background, and his aspirations; because I know only too well, being a writer myself, what it means to have someone not only believe in you but talk about you, too. Writers—and I suppose all creative artists—are peculiarly sensitive beings, having very little faith in themselves and their own ability. It meant everything to me at the beginning of my career to win a prize. And I think that boost which was given to me so long ago has always been in the back of my mind, and out of it came The Playhouse and its Award.

I am inordinately proud of many of our productions and of the roster of new writers who have been launched on their careers as a result of Playhouse productions under the direction of Perry Lafferty. There is Kenneth Greenberg, who wrote "The Sparrow"; Winifred Wolfe, who wrote "Portrait of a Girl"; Howard Rodman, who wrote "Ride a Cock Horse"; Carolyn Darling, who wrote "Enter Youth"; Jane Speed, who wrote "My Dear Aunt Sponge"; and from a radio station in Hartford, Ralph Klein with his unusual and clever mystery stories. And there were others equally as creative.

Springboard for Many

Nearly every writer whose work appeared on the Carrington Playhouse has gone forth to conquer new fields, injecting the new blood into radio which the business is crying aloud for, yet the Playhouse was discouraged when it was discovered that it was to be an experimental program.

I was told over and over again that what the public wanted was "boy meets girl—boy loses girl—boy marries girl." "Just give us that true and tried formula and never mind about any new forms in radio. Radio doesn't want anything new. It won't get a rating."

On the contrary, I think The Playhouse would have gotten a rating in time. Perhaps what is wrong with radio, and why it is dying on the vine, is the fact that it refuses to open its doors to the young writer who has something to say—something tender or brilliant or satirical, something with social significance, something with strength and purpose. I should love to have continued with The Playhouse indefinitely—I should love to have built it into an institution from which came the great radio writers of the future.

I feel that the 33 weeks of The Playhouse were of inestimable value to me. I met a group of youngsters who, I think, will make history in the theatre if not in radio. And I was able to open some doors to them which could not otherwise have been opened. But I see very little chance of new blood coming into radio—the new blood which the industry claims is a necessity—until radio itself opens wide its doors and lets it in.

THE MODERNAIRES
with PAULA KELLY

Program Managers and Record Jockeys of over 400 Lang-Worth affiliate stations are anxiously awaiting the first release of a 60-tune pact just signed with The Modernaires and Paula Kelly. Bill Sieganweyer piloting the accompanying group, it's bound to be Radio Box office with a capital "B".

LANG-WORTH, INC., NEW YORK

A Joke Is Born

By AL and SHERWOOD SCHWARTZ

Hollywood.

If you think it's tough on an expectant father waiting for his baby to be born, let's join any comedian outside any script room as he waits for his writer to deliver a joke.

Bob McBenny paced nervously in the NBC corridor. He tried telling himself that others had gone through this same ordeal, but he couldn't calm his fears. He knew that in spite of the most modern methods and the Unabridged Humor Thesaurus things sometimes went wrong. Worried thoughts tumbled through his mind.

"Would this new arrival be a boff like the last one, or would it be a misfit?" He silently prayed that it wouldn't be another egg. He was tired of pinching the girl singer to get a laugh.

McBenny's thoughts were interrupted when the script room door opened and a girl tiptoed out.

"Any news?" he inquired anxiously.

"Not yet, Mr. McBenny.

"He can't do this to me. I've got to have it by seven o'clock. It's in his contract."

"Be patient, Mr. McBenny. He's doing the best he can. He's cooperating in every way."

"Well, couldn't I go in and offer a comforting word?"

"I dont think he'd care to have you see him in his present condition."

Bob McBenny grew angry. "What's taking him so long? I told him specifically I wanted a topical one. By the time he gets through there won't be any topics left."

"It won't be long now, Mr. McBenny. He just started moaning."

"He's just acting. He wants to make it look hard. I could do better mys——" McBenny paused. "What was that? I just heard a scream."

"It's not yours. That's Eddie Skelton's."

"Eddie Skelton's? He got here way after me."

"I know, but he's got a higher Hooper."

"Hoopers, bah. I haven't believed in them for five years. Since I was No. 1."

"Relax, Mr. McBenny. Take it easy."

"Take it easy? This constant waiting and worrying is driving me mad. I've got a good notion to let him go after the next 13."

Another loud noise from the next room brought an eager look to Bob McBenny's face.

"Well?"

The girl shook her head. "That's Dennis Young's."

"Hmmmmmm. Beginner luck. Why can't mine turn them out like that?"

"Nature has to take its course."

"Nature. Why didn't the agency tell me that when they introduced me to him nine months ago. No. They just said, 'I now pronounce you comedian and writer until William Morris do you part.' A fine thing——"

The girl quieted him for a moment as she heard a familiar sound. She beamed at McBenny. "You can go in now."

The moment had come. Bob McBenny's anger melted. He opened the door with a trembling hand. His heart was beating fast. There at the other end of the room was his little helpmate. The one who stood by him through high and low stringing for the one who had sweated and slaved in Los Angeles while he played golf in Palm Springs.

The writer smiled up bravely. His ordeal was over. There at his side was the results of all his efforts.

"What do you think of it?" he managed hopefully.

Bob McBenny stared down at it for a moment. "Looks kinda familiar. Something like the one on Joan Haley last week."

His writer sobbed. "After all I've gone through. You know, all this talk about painless delivery is a lot of bunk." Tears streamed down his face. "It took me three hours."

"So what? It always takes you a long time."

"How can you say that. Last time I had one in the taxi on the way over here."

Bob McBenny couldn't hide the disappointment in his voice. "It looks like a very small one. But maybe the old McBenny personality will put it across."

"McBenny personality. Your personality is flatter than Doc Shurr without his shoe on."

Bob McBenny wavered a bit. "Maybe I should ask Foote, Ruthrauff & Rubicam what they think."

"Don't be silly. They haven't got time to think anymore. They're too busy becoming vice-presidents."

"You can't blame me for being a little disappointed in this last one, dear. Just look at it. I'm sure John Crosby will say something nasty."

"Oh, you've always complaining. What difference does it make to me if it is a good one anyway. I do all the suffering and you get all the credit."

Sniff. Sniff.

"Stop sniveling."

"Boo hoo, boo hoo. I've given you the best punchlines of my life. I'm going home to mother—you can get somebody else for your ad libs from now on."

"Don't excite yourself, dear."

"I know what I'll do. I'll get a divorce. And I'll win custody of the Gruen plugs and the free cokes."

"Okay, okay, calm down. I'll keep it."

"That's better." The writer breathed a sigh of relief. "Who will the godfather be?"

"The sponsor. Same as with all the others."

"Must we? Everything is always a matter of policy with him."

"Policy or no policy, he's the one who's paying the hospital bills."

"Sponsor—that's the racket. No worry, no ulcers. He just sits there back east on his big fat product."

Bob McBenny glanced at his watch. "Well, I've got to be going now, dear, and I'm so glad that we made up."

The writer smiled. Then he tenderly handed the precious little laugh-provoker to McBenny. McBenny lifted it carefully into his arms. But just as he started toward the door a hand suddenly grabbed him. McBenny looked up fearfully. There stood Clarence Menser with his blue pencil.

"You're not going any place with that."

"Why not?"

"Sorry, old man. You'll have to clean it up first."

McBennny realized from previous experience that argument was useless.

And so as we leave our happy little couple the writer has gone back into the labor room, the comedian has gone back to his pacing. And the Hooper? That's probably gone back, too.

E. T.'s Causing D. T.'s?

By ANTON M. LEADER

(Director, "Murder at Midnight")

The newest and most formidable controversy to come upon the radio scene is the transcription. This medium, in itself not new, has had a new vitality breathed (or should I say "groaned") into it by the Bing.

What is the controversy? NBC and CBS have maintained a united front against the broadcast of transcriptions over the network. Why? I believe the objectors take root from the early disfavor universally held of the transcription which prompted the ABC to insist on opening and closing designations: "The following (the preceding) program is (was) transcribed." This was originally designed to protect the listener from fraud of a sort. Then, as time went on, the networks, battling to maintain eminence through their individuality and exclusivity of programs, naturally shied away from a medium whose overtones are anything but exclusive, whose very character and availability cross network boundaries without conscience.

To reinforce their stand, particularly as the opposition increased, the networks seized on "quality" as their standard. They held that the average transcribed program was inferior. We must not forget that all this time, even though their arguments were gradually being nullified, their position remained impregnable because they had sold-out schedules with waiting lists on their own terms. So, they could turn down many a new, exciting program idea. When Roger White and I sold General Motors on the Show of Shows, an hour made up of memorable bits from outstanding radio shows of the week, recorded on films (using the Fonda Film Recorder) Paul Garrett said "But NBC (which at that time was Red and Blue) and CBS won't take it!". They didn't and I am sure there are many other similar experiences on file throughout the industry.

Then Came Bing

Then, along came Bing! He was tired, so tired he was obstinate. And fortunately, he was so sought after that he could remain obdurately obstinate. Bing couldn't understand why he should not record a few programs during a lull in his other activities and then relax a while far away from writers conferences, agency executives and radio studios. Lots of us joined Bing in his puzzlement, but NBC and CBS still said "No!" However, the Blue had now grown up, married a Du Saver and changed its name to ABC—and ABC was willing, and so was Philco, and Bing Crosby won the first round. But only the first round!

Only the first round in this long bout for the championship. And suddenly, strangely, Crosby's opponent turns out not to be NBC or CBS but Crosby himself. The standard for quality he built during the past years is now his bitterest opponent. This is where I believe the real battle lies—quality. If Crosby can maintain high quality he is bound to win and even NBC and CBS must finally succumb. If the Bing loses, the cause of Transcriptions will be set back immeasurably.

Among Bing's champions were those who pointed at films and said: "See, that's how to make a perfect show! Do it over and over until its perfect." That, incidentally, is when my interest was whetted. As a director, that thought excites me because then the production of transcribed shows becomes, like films, a director's medium. Unfortunately, there are some real drawbacks we must face.

To begin with, the present form of recording for transcriptions is too clumsy and awkward. In order to benefit from the process of dubbing together the best of a number of takes, we must have the mechanics with which to do this simply and easily. Any of you who have cut a dubbed sound in the two forms know that the film method is far superior from every standpoint. Therefore, in order to benefit from the prime advantage inherent in the transcription medium the present archaic processes must be replaced immediately.

It's All in the Editing

This means added costs and is likely to be frowned upon, but I never was popular with the maintainers of the "status quo," so I may as well continue consistently. For instance, Bing Crosby should record an hour, or even more, and then edit until he has the perfect half-hour. If we approach the job with that attitude our writers, actors and directors, too, will bring new vitality to the Transcription. Too long have they (along with NBC and CBS) looked down their noses at it. It has been just another source of income to them, but artistically?—give them a live show. They must not forget that a transcription can be immortal, whereas the live show dies at 29:30.

The public? Don't worry about the public. They don't give a torn-off boxtop whether it's live or transcribed. If it is a good show they'll listen, if not, that knob or button works miraculously and turns off the live show as easily as the transcribed.

Eventually we come to the sponsor. Ironically and aggravatingly, no matter how high falutin we get we have to end up worrying (and I do mean worrying!) about the sponsor. Don't kid yourself, he doesn't care what you call it or how you do it as long as it pays off.

Finally, if I may touch briefly on another industry sore-spot, during a group discussion of the subject someone asked: "Will there be transcriptions in Television?" The answer was: "Yes, the film will be the transcribed show of Television and will represent the major portion of production in quality as well as in quantity!"

I believe that, too.

Tears, Laughter and Hoopers

By ART HENLEY

The guy who said the highest form of wit is a blend of tears and laughter must have had a low Hooper. Because top kilocycle comedy needs only the laughter to hit the mass audience. Anyway, there's not much wit in radio; most funnymen aren't wits, they're comedians . . . another thing.

Anybody's humor depends on ideas. Radio's depend on gags, characterization or situation and all three depend on construction. Today's better comics realize that the wording of lines in a manner unreal to the comic is what really individualizes a personality. Flop comedy shows often offer the unfortunate clown lines that would just as well suit any member of AFRA.

Of course, too many "comedians" aren't comedians at all. They haven't the showmanship, tonal variety, acting ability or timing sense to be so, at least not on radio. And if the material should rise above the funnyman, the funnyman is doomed.

A word knocked around by the pucksters is "situation." I prefer a word I coined, "squatuation," a situation which didn't quite "sit," and sadly the most common kind, usually featuring the comic as a glorified straight-man. If gag artisans were permitted to concentrate on the comic's personality as the prime mover, gags and situation would come naturally from the consequent characterization!

Try and Escape It

You can break down any humorous show into these basic formulas: I. Boy meets girl, boy loses girl, boy gets girl. Which is simply "man gets involved in something, man does wrong thing, man resolves difficulty with or without outside help. 2. Double-entendre, clean or suggestive; the old mistaken-identity chestnut, still good. 3. Satire treated smartly or broadly, by writer, actor and producer.

Smart writers understand acting and production and their material is always consistent with the comic's established characterization. So when Ed Gardner uses "Butch" Jenkins as a guest, I'd like to sell him a line which reads, "Just lookit him . . . he's on'y a kid. Why, he don't even play the horses yet!"

A boff, a yok, a bomboola!

FM Means Business—And Sales Approach

By CHARLES R. DENNY

(Chairman, FCC)

Washington.

"FM—what is it?" That question is the springboard for the mushrooming campaign to make America FM-conscious. Answering that question is demanding the best showmanship, salesmanship, indoctrination and proselytizing zeal that the FM builders can muster. Answering that question means conditioning America's millions for a new radio voice. The density of ignorance on this subject presents an inviting field for the practitioner of modern advertising, publicity, promotional techniques. Here are a few of the methods being used to introduce FM.

The general pattern of approach has as its first step the winning over of the distributors and dealers. Working on the principle that to hear FM is to want FM, the enthusiasts are circularizing the dealers, sending them monthly news letters, conducting clinics for them, and arranging for them actually to listen to FM operation. Schools are held for servicemen, both those employed by dealers and the independent ones. A Southern broadcaster persuaded two distributors to buy time on his station at $500 per month each although there are only a half dozen receivers in the town. Dealers and distributors are asked to write to the manufacturers calling for early delivery of FM receivers.

Having won over the dealers, distributors and servicemen, the FM prospective broadcaster moves on to the listener. Curiosity is whetted by placards over the area reading "What is FM?" Billboards are used. Match packets, blotters and similar gadgets are passed around. One grantee having a newspaper lineup had 75 news stories printed before his station went on the air. These were later assembled into a throwaway.

Community Pitch

In one city, the grantees are studying a plan which I would like to see become a trend. Plan is to combine forces to sell FM to the community as a new service—ignoring the competitive angle for the time being. There are already some outstanding individual instances where FM stations are plugging each other on behalf of the art.

After a station goes on the air, opportunities for showmanship always exist. A favorite event is to stage a demonstration in a theatre to determine how many of the customers can tell the difference between the music coming from the orchestra on the stage and the same selection coming from a high fidelity FM receiver. Another method is put on the road to make the county fair, Grange, Rotary Club and church supper circuit. One canny operator pitched his county fair demonstration opposite a battery of milking machines that played bob with AM but never laid a glove on FM. This told the farmers more about FM than a thousand words. Trailers carry FM demonstrations to busy city street corners and to village squares.

I am told that the more ardent FMers pray for frequent thunderstorms to hypo their demonstrations. An especial play is made for music teachers.

Pioneer listener clubs have been formed, the members getting handsome certificates in return for providing the station with information concerning reception conditions and program reactions. Aerial photographs of coverage areas are placed in store windows.

The early prewar FM operators were as conscious as today's operators of the need for getting sets around in the community as quickly as possible. Some of them bought sets outright and spotted them in schools, stores, restaurants and roadhouses. One oldtimer recalls his success in inducing dealers to sell 2,000 sets in his area before the station went on the air.

Group Sets

In these latter days, the FM broadcasters have been bombarding the manufacturers with demands for sets which are only now starting to come on the market in appreciable numbers. One grantee has told me that he plans to buy 300 sets and will even seek to finance garages and similar organizations. He will buy them through the local dealers for two reasons: first, because that's the only way he can get them, and, second, because he would want to build good relations with the dealers anyway. Another FM zealot has purchased 1,000 antennas and proposes to give them to dealers to be placed in the homes of the first purchasers in his community.

Several stations distribute programs of their fine concerts to large mailing lists. And everyone in the business knows about the station which sells such a program service to 30,000 subscribers for one dollar a year.

Sloganeers' Field-Day

FM Days to mark the inauguration of a new station have been found effective. Sloganeers have been busy; "FM Means Finer Music," "FM Means Far More Listening Pleasure," "FM—Broadcasting's Better Mousetrap," "FM Means Folding Money," "FM Knows No Seasons."

A number of manufacturers have provided excellent kits for their customers—giving a virtual cradle-to-the-grave promotional service.

It is this kind of concentrated effort that is needed to educate the American people on the advantages of what the FCC has officially characterized as the "finest aural broadcast system attainable in the present state of the radio art."

The commission hopes that every applicant and every grantee will contribute his full share toward preparing the public for the advent of this new service. This should be an all-out effort on the part of all of us—the applicant, the grantee, the dealers, distributors, servicemen, the manufacturers and the commission. The more intensively we tell the story of FM, the sooner the listener and everyone else concerned will benefit.

THE GOOSE WAS DYING

By ALAN LIPSCOTT

Hollywood.

The Goose was dying.

Poor Goose! His golden egg had turned into an ulcer.

I remember when Joe Hale first propositioned the Goose to join his writing staff. It was about three years before RWG. We were having coffee at the bitter at the counter of the Thrifty Drug Store. The Goose was washing dishes behind the counter. I even remember the gag that started the whole thing. A storm was blowing up outside when the Goose ad libbed, "It's so windy in Hollywood, they'll have to put a hat pin in the Brown Derby." Joe did a take, then looked at me and I nodded. Joe started duelling with him and the Goose topped him every time. I gave up after exhausting the few stockolas I always carried around in my mind for such occasions.

And then Joe started to woo the Goose. It was the usual routine.

In smooth, dulcet voice, he kept repeating such words as "glory," "opportunity" and "fame." The Goose listened but he wouldn't take his hands out of the soapy water. Then Joe started a new attack. He purred about the glamorous gals, the many stars he would talk to, and then he threw in the privileges of his swimming pool. And all the time Joe talked, the only time the Goose opened his mouth was to breathe on a glass before he wiped it. And then I remember how the Goose politely said, "That's fine, Mr. Hale, but how much money does the job pay?" And when an angry Joe Hale hissed "35 bucks," "report to work tomorrow," the Goose calmly said, "50." That's when I fell in love with the Goose. And when Joe said, "50" and picked up the check, the Goose took off his apron and handed it to the chef.

And now the Goose was dying.

The Goose made the 11th writer in the Joe Hale gag mill. I handled "insults" with Lionel; Sid and Al collaborated on "He's so thin that"; Jack concentrated on "Yo Yo's," and also helped Bernie on "He's so cheap that"; Floyd worked from the neck up on "big nose," "big ears" and "bald head"; Elwood handled everything from the neck down; the Goose was assigned to "He's so fat that" and Phyllis, the only gat gagster in captivity, specialized in "girdles."

And here we were, all gathered in the Goose's hospital room for the blackout. We didn't do much talking. Phyllis was sobbing.

Joe had just telephoned from the golf course. He had three holes to go. The doctor came in, felt the Goose's pulse and turned on the oxygen. The Goose with feeble voice, introduced us to the doctor. "Doctor Green," he murmured. "It was an effort, but the Goose believed in credits.

Payoff for the Plug

And when the doctor remarked that he was running short of oxygen, the Goose sallied, "Don't worry, Doc, we'll mention the brand on the air and get you a case for nothing." And Phyllis sobbed louder.

And as the oxygen hissed, I remembered the time when Joe first asked the Goose to sign a contract. To the surprise of Joe, the Goose read it, the first of us who ever did. And after he read it, it suddenly burst into flame on account of it got too close to the Goose's cigar. The Goose says it was an accident. I personally don't think it was Joe's cigar. I figured it was the fire in the Goose's eyes. And the Goose was very apologetic as he swept up the ashes. One piece of ash that still glowed, a moment ago was a 20-line clause assigning all future radio rights to Joe. Another piece that was slowly scarring Joe's mahogany desk was a 50-line clause relinquishing all rights to television, pictures and recordings. And that piece, fluttering to the ceiling, was a "no credit" clause. The clinker he was crushing between his fingers forbade him ever to strike. Joe never offered the Goose another contract.

And now the Goose was dying.

And as he lay there gasping, I remembered the time when Joe asked the Goose to write a guest shot for a prominent Negro comic. And the spot that he turned in had no "He's so lazy that" gags, and no references to chicken-stealing, crap-shooting or Pullman porter impersonations. He wrote him as he would a white comic. And I remember the slow burn Joe did as he read the spot and how he tore it up into little pieces. And then I remember how the Goose reached into his pocket and brought out a completely copy and made Joe listen. And Joe did the spot and the yoks were frequent and lusty and the critics said nice things about Joe. And when he gave the Goose a $10 raise, funny, but not one of us was envious.

The Goose suddenly stopped gasping. We all suddenly stopped breathing. The doctor felt his pulse, listened to his heart and turned off the oxygen.

It was then that Joe came into the room. His shoes still had dust on them from the golf course. He waved to the waxen face on the pillow and called cheerily, "Keep punching, Goose!"

And when I told Joe that the Goose was dead, tears came to his eyes and I thought he was going to faint. Joe was sentimental that way. We gave the Goose a modest burial. To the surprise of us all, Joe insisted on buying the stone. And he ordered an expensive one. It cost about $1,000. Phyllis called it a bonus. A month later, Joe invited us all to the unveiling services. After Joe delivered a short eulogy that was written by Sid and Elwood, the stone was unveiled. On it was inscribed the only piece of material Joe ever wrote:

Here Lies
Writer No. 11
On the Staff of JOE HALE.

Saga of Lingo Outlets Sweet & Sad, But Profitable Period Lies Ahead

By ARNOLD HARTLEY
(Program Director, WOV, N. Y.)

In 1927, columnist John Wallace, of the radio fan magazine Radio Broadcast, was curious to know "why no station has ever come into existence operated by a foreign-born or foreign-descended group for the benefit of its fellows who cling to the mother tongue." Four years later, foreign-language programs were being broadcast in virtually every urban center in America where any sizable foreign-language community was to be found.

Ownership by foreign-born or foreign-descended groups had very little to do with this development. Something else had happened: Radio had become a business. As a business, it needed economic foundations. One favored group of stations, usually those with the most desirable frequencies, came to enjoy the competitive advantage of affiliation with the newly-formed networks. Others, forced to scratch for audience as best they could, turned to specialization of one kind or another. Farm programs paid out for many on-the-line religion for others; and for still others—foreign languages.

Any initial diffidence the broadcaster may have felt about entering the field of non-English broadcasting was effectively dispelled by the crash. Purchasing power dived for bottom at a speed equal to that of the ex-millionaire plummeting from an upper story of his foreclosed skyscraper. With sales resistance the toughest in history, it was discovered that a sales message would bring enormously greater returns if delivered in the language the listener spoke at home—and there were countless times where language other than English were spoken. Foreign-language broadcasting became the Open Sesame to the niggard pocketbooks of hard times.

I will never forget how one pioneer foreign-language client in Chicago built himself a fabulous business in the very depths of the depression by using Bohemian-language radio to sell canaries. The promise of a chicken in every pot had gone agglimmering but so far as the Bohemian community of Chicago was concerned, we did put a canary in every cage.

Untapped Market

The proliferation of foreign-language broadcasting opened up to the advertiser a great market whose full potential had never been fully tapped by the language press. Throughout the 30's, foreign-language programs increased in number, and their billings rose steadily. By the end of the decade, 200 stations were carrying programs in a total of about 30 different languages. Some of the stations derived no substantial income from any other form of broadcasting.

Born out of the broadcaster's need to pay his bills, and growing up Topsy-like without a great deal of professional tutelage, some foreign-language broadcasting may have lacked the broadcaster's most solicitous parental attention and an adequate education in radio's amenities. It required the war to bring a certain measure of repentance and reformation, and an improvement in administration and program content.

Today, with the war well behind us, there is probably less foreign-language radio than at any time in the past 8 years. Not that the market has evaporated. It continues to exist and to show appreciable economic strength in the major centers. But two factors have been operating to reduce broadcast time devoted to foreign languages.

One is the generally improved competitive position of the urban independent station vis-a-vis the networks. A number of independents have demonstrated forcibly that high ratings are not necessarily an exclusive attribute of network affiliates. This has meant adequate revenues without recourse to specialization. The tendency has accordingly been for many broadcasters to minimize foreign-language time or to drop it altogether as an encumbrance which deters the further development of the English-language audiences on which their increased spot business has been built.

The second factor has been the acquisition of foreign language stations by new interests which, for one reason or another, do not want to perpetuate the station's previous program structure. These interests usually have the resources to operate the stations at a loss, if need be, while effecting a switch to straight English time. There has been some effort to work up a protest to the FCC against this practice. But it has not made a great deal of headway, perhaps because any FCC action in the matter would imply direct intervention in a station's program affairs, and hence—O fatal syllables—censorship.

In any event, the result has been that there are now less than 150 stations throughout the country which carry foreign-language programs. The drop has actually been more drastic than this figure indicates, since the total number of hours has fallen off far more sharply than the number of outlets. Some stations once active in the foreign-language field now carry only an occasional hour or two on Sunday mornings or at other odd times. As a concrete instance there is Boston, where not a single hour of local Italian-language broadcasting is any longer to be heard from a Boston station. Aside from the 30-minute daily Italian network show fed from WOV to WMEX, the nearest outlet for Italian is WESX in Salem. Before the war, Boston stations themselves carried many hours of Italian-language broadcasting.

Comes FM

Of possible counter-acting tendencies, I can see at least two. The first lies in the numerous new AM grants being made by the commission. In New Haven, Milwaukee, San Antonio, and undoubtedly elsewhere, the new stations are concentrating much of their time on foreign-language programs. In Milwaukee, WFOX has inherited most of the foreign-language revenue cast off by WEMP when that station went solidly English. In New Haven, WNHC has benefited likewise from WELI's all-English policy. In San Antonio, KCOR's FCC application emphasized the need for more extensive Spanish-language service in that area, and the grant was made largely on that basis.

The other factor that comes to mind is the ultimate emergence of the new FM stations in urban areas. The intensified competition which must inevitably result from the addition of new stations to the spectrum in any given market may possibly generate conditions similar to those that prevailed in the early 30's, when many independents were forced to adopt specialized programming in order to stay solvent. In the face of these conditions, it may be that some of the future FM stations, and indeed some of the AM outlets now doing well enough in English alone, will rediscover in foreing-language broadcasting the revenue of rescue. And should we experience any widespread business slump, the movement will probably be accelerated.

What about the market? Are the shut gates of immigration and the inexorable figures of the actuaries causing it to disappear? Here and there, it is possible that communities have been reduced to a point below the economic minimum necessary to support a schedule of broadcasting. But in the larger urban centers, the major language groups continue to exert considerable purchasing power and to bring satisfactory rewards to the advertiser.

As to programming, it is my personal belief that one of the prime functions of foreign-language broadcasting must be to dissolve the hard sociological knots which the foreign-language communities, represent in the American body politic. English should be increasingly intermingled with foreign languages, as it is in the actual day-to-day life of the audience. Music should not be narrowly restricted to that of the nationality served by the program. The broad concepts of democracy, of racial, religious, and inter-group understanding, should be attractively constituted.

While the extinction of foreign-language broadcasting, based on the disappearance of the market, seems anything but imminent, I believe we should consider ourselves on the threshold of the transition period leading to that result. Serious attention to the broad social problems attendant upon the absorption into the American fabric of the foreign-born and their children will simultaneously keep us informed as to the exact state of the market. If we are thus forearmed, the transitional process should be painless and profitable, and the actual broadcasting will reflect an admirable concept of service and responsibility.

SEASON'S GREETINGS
FROM
OZZIE and HARRIET

Actuality Broadcasts— 'Slice-of-Life' Technique

By ROBERT HELLER
(CBS Producer)

Our program jargon needs overhauling; our techniques, too.

The increasingly indiscriminate use of the terms documentary, dramatic and actuality has produced such confusion that even so highly word-conscious a publication as VARIETY can be found now and then using one term when it seems to mean another. I do not suggest that the definitions given below should be accepted as authoritative. I find it necessary to formulate them because as a frequent, fervent practitioner and advocate of the actuality form, I insist that you know just what I mean by it—and what I do not mean. A dramatic broadcast presents actors portraying contrived characters enacting contrived situations, and may employ contrived sound and music to heighten preconceived effects. A documentary broadcast is the presentation of facts and reality. It may use any technique—dramatic, actuality or a combination of both. But an actuality broadcast presents nothing but sounds that are real and the voices of people speaking as themselves.

Now that you know exactly what I am advocating—the actuality form—first I should like to abolish a prevailing notion that it is necessarily highbrow, educational or longhair. Using the term in discussion with some of my more "commercial colleagues, I find that they are apt to dismiss it as too erudite or as "something BBC does very well, and you know how dull they can be". It is of course true that the actuality form is one the British pioneered and mastered with great ingenuity and effect. But I am afraid that my friends who shrug it away are like the character of Moliere who was suddenly so profundly impressed by the fact that what he had been speaking all his life was "prose". For, in the final analysis, such sturdy commercials as "Vox Pop" and, in a narrower sense, "We, The People" are actuality broadcasts, and it's high time their successful producers knew it.

No, Not That!

I am afraid I'll have to confess that a great number of audience-participation and quiz programs also falls under my definition of "actuality". This doesn't mean I endorse them. To me, they are a perversion of "actuality", in the sense that though they present "real" people (I sometimes wonder), they originate from places—studios, halls, theatres—which necessarily produce a synthetic set of relationships, and in the long run, by overemphasizing themes of embarrassment, overwhelming largesse or so-called self-improvement, their participants have less to do with reality than characters in a straight dramatic broadcast. "Actuality" broadcasts in the true sense cannot be produced in studios.

The kind of actuality I am arguing for has been the subject of considerable experimentation in the past few years and has found its greatest usefulness in the realms of public service. Briefly, it is a "slice-of-life" technique. It employs one of radio's most treasured and neglected resources—the remote—the magic that can take a microphone into a housewife's kitchen, onto a picket line, across the railroad tracks, into the mines and plants—in short, the remarkable device that can lift up and carry the voice of the "common man" without ever using or establishing consciousness of that overworn pseudo-poetic term. It is a technique that takes the stuffed shirt out of public issues, and presents opinion from the area where issues are experienced by millions of Americans—in their places of work and living, of amusement and suffering, where for them the basic struggles are always felt and unfolded.

To cite but one example, during the past year CBS employed this technique in its programs it produced for organized labor—"Cross Section—CIO" and "Cross Section—AFL." In the midst of the great automobile strikes, instead of presenting labor's point of view through union officials delivering abstract statistical arguments, we took our microphone to the picket line, to a strike kitchen, where the down-to-earth emotions of rank-and-file strikers articulated against the background of sizzling doughnuts and the clinking of plates and cups captured the image of the hopes and militancy of thousands of Americans convinced of the justice of their cause. On another occasion, where Kaiser was seeking to express its concern with the housing shortage, our microphone was set down on the kitchen table in a small apartment occupied by a veteran-worker and his large family. During that broadcast, the occasional sounds of small children playing in the corner of the same room said more about the urgency of the problem than any formal talk aired last year. I can cite more than one hundred other scattered examples on a great variety of issues which were equal in their effectiveness.

Today there is more "story material", more drama, more exciting listening in real people in real places than can be imagined by thousands of skilled fabricators of radio "dreaming up" stories in their most dramatic fashion. Our technicians can place our mikes at the very heart of reality. It is then our job to sift out its essence in sound, to arrange it and juxtapose it, to transform it into programs which are not only true, but as full of art as the best of our synthetic works. We have become too soft, preferring the insulation and manufactured air of our studios to the cold reality of the world outside. Today, with recording equipment and quick transport always available, we have no excuse. The world is too full of real sounds and real voices that are meaningless. In this outward direction lies greater public service, and perhaps the "something new" we in our offices have all awaited too long.

Ackerman's Canada O.O.

Harry Ackerman, Young and Rubicam radio exec, is making a swing of Canada this week for a personal o.o. of Y & R Canadian branch offices and agency activity in the Dominion.

It's Ackerman's first gander of the Y & R Canadian setup. Accompanied by his wife, he'll wind up for a few-day vacash at the Chateau Frontenac in Quebec.

HOOPER 'PUNCTURES' RATINGS

Gab Casualties Mounting, But Liberals Fight Back

By FRANK SCULLY

Troublesome Valley, Colo.

If you go over the pass from Palm Springs and head for the Mojave Descrt you soon notice two things. You can hardly hear the Sons of the Pioneers any longer and you can't hear the West Coast commentators at all. Though not 100 miles from Hollywood, you find it easier to tune in on Dallas or even Denver. This is a peculiarity of the climate, but there is another peculiarity which scems strictly an import, and that is a sponsor trend toward tuning out dissenting opinions.

Whatever side of the Great Divide you should find yourself on these days, you either get what the N. A. M. wants you to get in the matter of gab—or you get practically nothing.

Last spring there were 14 commentators who could be classed as liberal, and 25 who stuck pretty close to the old party line. Today there are 39 who talk so far to the right of Sen. Bilbo that he has to yell to hold his lincs-of communications. On the other hand, the liberals have dropped from 14 to 3, and only one of them is really giving everybody an old-fashioned piece of his mind.

Now nobody could possibly maintain that the progressive viewpoint was shellacked at the polls by a score of 35 to 1, Actually the score was 4 to 3. Anywhere else 4 to 3 is a very close score. Nobody feels particularly yeasty over winning by such a margin, and the losers hardly feel that they'd better get out of town before it's too late. But sponsors have acted as if the November elections were a complete repudiation of everything the people showed they wanted since 1933. What few have held on have, in time, admitted that the pressure was too great and, while they personally still held to a progressive point of view, after all, business is business and they were in business. So in the main they have shelved the commentators and either taken on a hillbilly band or got off the air altogether.

There Was a War

What causes things like that? Well, for one thing a war. Winning a war isn't as simple as all that. Like fighting polio, many doing the fighting go down with the very disease itself. Doctors and nurses have gone down in great numbers in infantile paralysis epidemics. So, too, have many who fought fascism ended as victims of the dreaded political plague.

The Los Angeles area has taken a worse beating in this regard than any other section of the country and to keep from being snuffed out completely it has organized the Western Council For Progressive Business, Labor and Agriculture, designed to subsidize liberal commentators who might be otherwise temporarily off the air because they had run out of sponsors, or had been dropped by them because the sponsors couldn't stand the perpetual pressure.

In a short time, Jimmy Roosevelt, Peter de Lima, Sam Balter, Bill Pennell and Averill Berman found that they had talked themselves out of jobs. The Western Council, headed by such people as Barbley Crum, Emil Corwin, Albert Dekker, Amerigo Bozzani, Jack Y. Berman, Rollin McNitt, E. Y. Harburg, Mary McCall, Mrs. Leo Spitz and Mrs. Elliott Dexter viewed this wholesale decimation with well-sustained alarm.

Gabbers on Hoax

They decided that a foundation would have to be put under these commentators, or one man's opinion wouldn't be as good as another's—because there would be only one man's opinion and we would have found that we won the war by backing into a dictatorship of public opinion. The Western Council figured that for $5,000 a week it could keep a stable of liberal commentators at least alive, and began scllling Hollywood that for a $1,200-a-year membership you could practically buy yourself a special commentator.

It began by putting Berman back on the air five nights a week and followed him in with De Lima one night a week. It worked up a roundtable of Catholic, Jewish and Protestant prelates for a Sunday program with Sam Balter as moderator.

The immediate hope was that Berman would be yanked off the air, and if he had had a commercial sponsor he would have. But being supported by the Western Council he has been kept on the air night after night and is, if possible, going stronger than ever.

Forced to retreat to a small station out of Pasadena, the future of the Western Council and its string of well rested larynxes does not look any too bright. But if the last of them goes down we can always turn to Spade Cooley's "Shame, Shame On You!"

THANKSGIVING DAY AT CHRISTMAS TIME

I am so grateful to all of you. . . . Season's Greetings to my friends near and far.

BETTY GARDE.

SEZ INDUSTRY HAS OTHER INFO

By C. E. HOOPER

A substantial part of what follows deals with the advertising business, in which every performer on a sponsored program is working. The talent contract marries the entertainer to the advertising business. It is because radio's measurements were not designed for people in show business but for the advertiser that entertainers sometimes have difficulty understanding Hooperatings.

Entertainers who are accustomed to having their offerings reviewed have no difficulty understanding annual awards based on the personal opinions of editors of VARIETY, radio editors, newspaper editors, publicity agents, etc. But in the mind of the advertiser none of these is a substitute for the vote of the listening public. The advertiser settles for the rating which is nobody's opinion, but which is based solely on the votes cast for or against the program by the listener when he tells the radio survey he is listening or not listening to the program.

Doing advertising business in radio is more complicated than in magazines or newspapers. In newspaper advertising there is one contract only. It is for newspaper space. In radio advertising one signs two contracts. One is for talent. The second is for time.

The advertiser needs one set of measurements to help him buy talent. It takes an entirely different type of measurement involving radio engineering, the U. S. Census, retail sales figures and a complicated discount scale to buy time. I am not going into the subject of time-buying here and now. Suffice it to say that such contractual considerations determine which network is bought for a program, the number of stations carrying the program, whether the program goes on day or evening, etc.

The sum-total of the considerations behind the time contract make the program available to more or fewer radio homes. But the time contract carries no assurance that anyone will listen!

The advertiser uses his talent measurements in negotiating for his attraction. The advertiser has learned that the most trustworthy gauge of what a performer can do is a record of what he has done. The Hoopcrating has for twelve years been radio's only continuous comparative measure of how one program is pulling with the listeners compared with another.

Because the talent and time contracts are negotinted separately, it is not infrequent that the price of talent goes up during renegotiation of contracts (because the higher Hooperating demonstrates greater listener popularity) when the price of time for the program actually goes down (due to purchase of fewer stations on the same network, cheaper time on the same network or a shift of the program to a lower-priced network).

The failure of agency and advertising executives in radio (many of whom have been raised in other media) to discern the basic difference between radio's and other advertising media measurements is still the cause of daily confusion among buyers and sellers of radio time from the top posts down. Instead of using the two measurements (one for talent, the other for time) jointly, which radio's basic technology dictates, they attempt to use the rating and projections based on it as a substitute for the more arduous but more precise procedure.

'Lazy' Execs

Most of these advertising agency, network and station executives shroud their ignorance of the existence of information other than ratings, their laziness or their confusion by hailing accusations of misuse, abuse, overuse or misrepresentation of ratings on each other and on the rater. Mere reference by them to other information, all readily available, would relieve most of the emotional tension, prevent most of the ulcers caused by ratings.

The calls which are used as a base for the much discussed network

(Continued on page 120)

OPERATION ULCER

By DICK MACK

Hollywood.

Come on in, son. Sit down, son, I want to have a heart-to-heart talk with you. I'm not going to waste any time telling you silly things about birds and bees and pollen. Somehow I have the feeling that time and nature will have you carrying your own weight in pollen all too soon. What I have to talk to you about is more important, much more important. I've heard an ugly rumor that you're thinking of going into the radio business. Is that true? It is! Well, sit down, I want to have a heart-to-heart talk with you, son.

I know you have no desire to take over my fur business, son. You're right, it is a smelly business, void of romance and excitement. I know also that you have no intention of accepting Uncle Morrie's offer of working your way up in his plumbing business. Who wants to work his way up drain-pipes, through sticky sinks and cesspools, although you must admit that in the latter you really start at the top. But what good is the fur business and/or the plumbing business? After all, what did I or Uncle Morrie get out of them? Nothing but a stinkin' million dollars, that's all. And of course there are so many complicated ways of charging off items when income tax time rolls around. Why get complicated, hun son? For instance, why bother about a silly item like "depreciation"? In radio, nothing depreciates but the body and the mind. Simple, isn't it?

I've known for a long time, son, that you love show business. It's so glamorous and so interesting and so exciting and so sweet and you meet so many interesting people. I've known that you had a craving for show business ever since the time that that actor on the staff of the Grossinger Country Club took sick, and you jumped into his part and brought the house down with your sterling performance as one of the pansies in "If Men Played Cards As Women Do." That was the night you convinced yourself you had talent and you darn near convinced me that you weren't my son, son.

"Now Look at Irving!"

But of all show business, why did you choose radio, son? And of all occupations in radio, why did you choose to try to become a writer and producer of comedy shows? You think it'll be lots of fun to make people laugh, eh, son? That's just what your cousin Irving thought when he dropped his law practice and decided to trade his shingle for a pencil and a stopwatch. By the way, Irving once acted in "If Men Played Cards As Women Do," too.

I know you're proud of Irving. We're all proud of Irving. He's one of the highest paid writer-producers of radio in Hollywood. He gets more than a thousand dollars a week for his work and he's written for and pointed his directing finger (fourth finger, right hand) at almost all of the biggest stars of the stage and screen. There's no use denying it; Irving is a success, a big success.

But did you notice what Irving ate while you were happily tearing your way through your steak and potatoes last night? A red pill, a white pill, and two glasses of milk. You think Irving likes milk? He hates it. Like kids hate spinach, he hates it! And he loves steak and potatoes. Like comedians love a cleaned-up dirty joke, he loves it! But he can't eat steak and potatoes and he's got to drink milk. Who says so? Irving's doctors and Irving's ulcers.

And did you notice Irving's hands when he lifted the glass of milk? For a minute I was sure he was going to have a milkshake before he got the glass to his lips. And did you notice his head? All through the meal he looked like a man watching a ping-pong game.

You remember what a calm boy Irving used to be before he became a writer and a producer? Why, in both high-school and college Irving was the best shot on the rifle team and the collegiate books show that his record for making consecutive bull's-eyes has never even been tied. But that was in those happy carefree days, B. U. (Before Ulcers). Today I wouldn't trust Irving with an unloaded cap-pistol. He might shake himself to death trying to point it.

"Only My Ulcers Are Happy"

Now what do you think made Irving a shaking shell of his former self? Why do you think doctors' eyes and fluoroscopes light up with anticipation when they see Irving coming? I'll tell it to you, like Irving told it to me, between shakes.

"Uncle Dick," he said, "Uncle Dick, I'm sick. I don't feel good half the time and the other half the time, I don't feel good either. It's the pressure. The pressure of writing and producing funny things each and every Monday night between 9 and 9:30, Eastern Standard Time. The pressure of satisfying the stars and guest stars week after week. The pressure of

(Continued on page 120)

GREETINGS

BEN GRAUER

Trammell's Status Quo Defense vs. 'Siren Calls of Super Planners'

By NILES TRAMMELL
(President, NBC)

The year of 1946 was a memorable one for us at NBC because on Nov. 15 we concluded our 20th year of network service and began our 21st. The breathtaking developments of those first 20 years make it foolhardy for any one to attempt to predict with any degree of accuracy what another year—1947—will bring.

There are a few predictions, however, which I feel I can safely make in the light of our experiences in the first 20 years.

I am confident that in 1947 radio will render still more effective service to our listeners and also to our advertisers who have made our free system of broadcasting possible. The competitive spirit of American business, nowhere more vigorous than it is in radio broadcasting, will insure that.

I am also confident that in 1947 there will still be a premium on new ideas for radio. No other medium of expression consumes its raw material so rapidly and so endlessly. The demand always outruns the supply. I am hopeful that in the year ahead we shall develop new ideas for our programs for special minority groups of listeners.

We know, of course, that by and large we are pleasing the great mass of our listeners with comedy, drama, music and news. Despite huge expenditures in time, talent and money we have not yet succeeded in raising programs of discussion, debate and pure intellectualism to the same high degree of public acceptance. The progress we have made in the first two decades leads me to believe that we shall yet succeed in popularizing such programs so that we can make the fullest possible use of our valuable facilities.

There is a third and final prediction which I can make. That is that the American people in 1947 will not be deluded into abandoning the world's best system of broadcasting for any inferior system. And any other system yet devised is inferior to ours. I am confident that our listeners will pay no heed to the siren calls of super planners who would impose their own likes and dislikes on the great mass of our listeners and the clamor of some of our critics who, in the final analysis, speak only for themselves.

'We Like It This Way'

In the past year it seems to me that the public has matured into a better awareness of our concept of advertising and broadcasting in the public interest. It seems to me that the listening public understands more clearly now that the broadcasting of any radio program which a substantial portion of the available audience wants to listen to at the time it goes on the air is an example of broadcasting in the public interest. Our public and our administrative agencies also understand now that this holds true whether the program is commercially sponsored or is supplied by the station or network.

In conclusion, I would like to repeat a few thoughts on radio advertising I have expressed on prior occasions to our advertisers and to our industry:

"Advertising in our competitive economy is not only necessary to the operation of modern industry, but it is the very keystone of the expression of the free competitive spirit which has made our standard of living. There can be no freedom without competition and no competition without freedom.

"Therefore, not only is advertising in the public interest, but it is the very expression of that interest—interest in all that is new, all that is better, all that inspires, stimulates, and drives us to make this a world of peace, of strength, of freedom, of equal opportunity for all."

Kingdon Back on WMCA For Clothes Sponsor; Keeps WOR Sunday Spot

Frank Kingdon, whose dismissal from WOR (N. Y.) along with the firing of Johannes Steel by WHN (N. Y.) aroused a storm of protests against radio's alleged preference for conservative or reactionary gabbers, has gone back to his old love, WMCA (N. Y.).

Ripley Clothes is Kingdon's new sponsor. He goes back into his old WMCA spot, 10:30-10:45 p.m., Mondays to Fridays, starting Jan. 13. Contract, for 52 weeks, was placed by Ed Bobley for Bobley Co. agency.

Kingdon was with WMCA three years before switching to WOR last summer, only to find himself without a sponsor and later without an outlet for his nightly spot. However, he still keeps his WOR Sunday morning, 15-minute commentary session for Inkograph.

CBS' 200G OUTLAY ON 'SCHOOL OF AIR'

CBS' "School of the Air" costs the network $200,000 a reason for talent and administrations, and uses up nearly $1,500,000 worth of time.

That was one of the "inside radio" disclosures made last Sunday (29) by Lyman Bryson on his "Time for Reason: About Radio" show on the net.

Greetings From
MEL BLANC
OF "THE MEL BLANC SHOW"
For Colgate Tooth Powder and The Venice Hardware Co.
For Mel Blanc

JACK KRUSCHEN
Management: M. C. LEVEE
New York and Hollywood Radio

ABC 'Town Hall' Goes Co-op; H-T Buys It in N. Y.

The biggest co-op package ever wrapped up in radio, involving a full hour of programming, was put down on the books of the ABC network last week when it decided to move "American Town Meeting" into the co-op dept.

First local sponsor for the show was slated immediately, with the New York Herald Tribune buying the forum program from the N. Y. outlet, WJZ. This part of the deal, incidentally, put the H-T into radio in a big way. Until now, the Herald Tribune has experimented with various 15-minute stanzas on New York stations, but has confined its major radio pitch to the hourly broadcasts over the indie WMCA, where the paper furnishes the news and the station the time.

"Town Meeting," which was sponsored for a while by Reader's Digest, has been a sustainer, and one of ABC's headaches. Since the Digest dropped its short-lived sponsorship, various efforts have been made to sell the show. But George V. Denny, Jr., moderator and sparkplug of "Town Meeting," as well as execs of the net, have been very particular about the type of sponsorship they would accept, with the result that the program has been a costly luxury for both.

ABC and Mutual have been battling for co-op superiority for some time, with Mutual recently claiming the lead in that field after signing up former Mayor F. H. LaGuardia of New York. Now, however, with ABC's co-op dept. under Murray Grabhorn copping an entire hour's programming, the fight between the two nets in that area has been renewed. The majority of co-op shows, on both nets, are 15-minute gab sessions, and this is the first time that a full-hour has been placed on the market cooperatively.

U. of Minn. Radio Guild Back to Prewar Level; Doing 6 Shows Weekly

Minneapolis.

Jergen Nash was elected president of Univ. of Minnesota Radio Guild as Guild revealed its membership had again reached prewar level with return of servicemen. Nash is himself a two-year veteran.

Guild, devoted to training radio prospects, now has membership of 40 active and 200 inactive and associate members. It produces six or more dramatic programs a week for Univ. station KUOM, five of them dramatizations for Minnesota School of the Air, the sixth the Guild's own show, Radio Guild Playhouse, presented weekly since 1939.

During the summer, Guild produced special series of seven plays of social significance, adapted, written, directed, produced and acted by members. Production director is Ruth Swanson, one of Guild's "graduates." Other graduates include writer Phil Gelb, actor Ogden Miles and Charles Harrell, production director for MBS.

Other officers: M. John Cole, v.p.; Ray Christensen, treasurer; Madeline Holt, secretary; Walt Richter, public relations and Virginia Hoiappa, Don Anderson and Roswell Otto, committee chairmen.

International Radio

By STEPHEN FRY

If you can think big, read on. If you can't, skip this article—but before you do please note that it is about Mrs. Dracopoulos of Piraeus. And Mrs. Dracopoulos means you.

Maybe the nearest you have come to that good woman, so far, is in a news broadcast stating that there is terrible inflation in Greece. Your reaction, and mine, to this piece of news probably was, "Too bad, the world's in an awful mess. Pass me another apple, will you, darling."

But it would be a different story if, in addition to the news headline, radio had taken you and me out shopping with Mrs. Dracopoulos in Piraeus that morning — if we had shared Mrs. D's distress at finding apples were priced at 100,000 drachma each—if we had gone home with her and figured out how to make an apple-pie out of potato peelings, and had discussed the effect of this on the children's health and on tomorrow's breakfast and consequently on how Mrs. D would vote (if she could) at the next election.

Add a headline to a woman who has no breakfast for her children, handle the sum with professional showmanship, and you have got something that will be up in the first 10 Hooperatings as well as something that will be doing a real service to this 1947 world.

By the same token Mrs. McDuffie of Glasgow and Mrs. Gale of Kansas City are alive and kicking and would like to know more of each other as well as of Mrs. D. Radio, you see, has made a polite gesture towards "one world" and has left it at that. Radio gives headlines but does not take you to meet the people who make them. Radio tells you of conflicts between countries, forgetting that countries are only people and that it is people who make conflicts and that if you go and meet the people you can find out why they are making a conflict. That's why Mrs. D means you—in this 1947 world in which distance has been abolished so that everyone is everyone else's neighbor, and in which the date of the next war is rapidly being set.

Radio is failing to tap a wonderful and unlimited source of program material. It is as though diamonds were lying around on the ground waiting for someone to come and collect them, but they are left lying there because passers-by either do no more than reverently raise their hats or else have decided that it is too expensive to design a basket in which to collect them.

And so radio passes by the idea (and the income) of one-world, leaving its listeners unaware of their neighbors' humanity.

Alternatively, and to be constructive, what could be done? The possibilities in terms of program content are obvious and unlimited. So are the possibilities in terms of cost. Therefore there are two aspects of the problem. One is the willingness to do the job, and the other is how to finance it. As for the former, let us assume that the majority are willing, since most countries have made a bow or at least a curtsey towards the idea. And radio's Big Two, America and Britain, have really bent from the knee as well as from the waist. But as regards cost there is a very real problem, because it does not matter whether your radio is financed on a commercial basis as in America, or on a license-fee basis as in Britain, or on a combination of the two as in Canada. The cost would be an almost invisible fraction of the billions now being spent on national armaments, but commercial radio will inevitably say, "We can't do it because there would be no return on our outlay." Listener-financed radio will say "But this is not our job unless you give us more money. Our listeners pay license fees to finance their own domestic service." Both these answers have a measure of validity, and let's not argue here as to whether or not they are quaintly unsophisticated.

So what is the way around the problem?

Government Sponsorship

It would seem to go something like this. The whole idea is to the advantage of everybody. People will always support a thing that they believe to be to their own advantage. So the idea should be administered by the countries themselves, which means under government sponsorship and finance. People, i.e. taxpayers, always foot the bills for everything anyway, and if you give them good and efficient service they will not resent reasonable costs. Each government would work through, and in close collaboration with, the radio and movie organizations of its own country. Obviously it would be folly not to integrate the impact of movies with that of radio, the effective service given by the two together being out of all proportion to that of either alone.

The only other thing required is a centre for mutual planning. Such a centre would have to perform a creative function as well. Quite clearly the U.N. is potentially such a centre, the only risk of which is a risk of veto.

So the key question is, "Are we, the people of this world, just quarrelsome school-kids or aren't we? Do we want to set the date of the next war or don't we?"

Ask Mrs. Dracopoulos, Mrs. McDuffie and Mrs. Gale. And let's act accordingly. But if U.N. can't or won't do it, let's do it ourselves—all of us in radio and movies the world over. And let's do it before the grass starts growing in Times Square.

So far, radio has made a great big bow towards "One World," and then has done practically nothing about it.

Saudek Upped In Revamp at ABC

Robert Saudek, for the last year, since his return from the Army, public service director for the ABC network, last week landed on top of the heap during a top-layer shakeup instituted by the new exec veepee, Robert E. Kintner.

From his one responsibility for the public service shows, Saudek was upped to responsibility for the publicity operations, which remain under Earl Mullin, and for the continuity acceptance dept. Thus Saudek is from now on responsible for the content in all ABC programming, sustaining or commercial, including advertising plugs, as well as for all material aimed at the public directly or indirectly.

Saudek's new title is director of public affairs. He will continue to head up personally the public service programming, which is one of his three divisions. Mullin's office is the second vision. And Miss Grace Johnson has been named manager of continuity acceptance, succeeding Miss Gertrude Hoffman, who resigned.

The Saudek appointment, while it's considered recognition for the job he's done as public service director, was part of a streamlining operation performed by Kintner to reduce the number of people who have to report directly to him. From now on, most of the executives will report to Kintner through veepees. Saudek, however, will report directly to Kintner.

The promotion of vice prexy Adrian Samish last week, putting him in charge of television as well as of radio programs, was part of the streamlining process. Charles ("Bud") Barry becomes director of programs, and Paul Mowrey, who has headed up television until now, reporting to president Mark Woods, takes on the title of director of television. Both of them will report to Samish.

Murray P. Grabhorn, manager of the net's owned-and-operated station, head of the cooperative dept., and top man in national spot sales, will now report to veepee Charles E. Rynd.

Veepee Robert D. Hinckley takes over the responsibility for various engineering operations, with his No. 2 man being Frank Marx, and George O. Milne next as director of technical engineering operations.

CBS' 'BREAKDOWN'

CBS produced a special "Accident Prevention Week" show last night (Tuesday), when it put on "Breakdown."

Show originated in Hollywood, with William N. Robson directing. Script was by Les Crutchfield.

Cleveland—WTAM's Tom Manning was cited for "loyalty" and "faithful devoted service" to Ohio State University by Wayne Miller, local head of OSU here in connection with Manning's 15-year-handling of the Buckeye State's football games.

What Makes Gabber Tick? Ask the Man Who is One

By DR. FRANK KINGDON

There is the mike in front of you. Somewhere out in the spaces you can't see are millions of people with radios. Your first thought is that every one of them can turn off with a flick of the finger. And your first nightmare is hearing the click-click-click of thousands of dials being set tuning you out. The clicks mount to a thunder, and you wake up in a shivering sweat. But the next night the mike will be there again, and the whole day is spent trying to find something to say and how to say it so that somebody will listen, and turn away at the end of the program saying: "We've got to hear this guy again."

The never failing wonder is that some do listen and come back for more. But that only changes the nightmare. You begin to wonder whether you can hold the crowd you've collected, and to dream about going to the mike every night making the same talk until you hear the gathering storm of voices saying: "He has nothing new to say—nothing new to say." You remember how Richard Harding Davis once said that the secret of writing is to say a new thing in the old way or an old thing in a new way, and you get tied up in the double riddle of what and how, realizing that how you say something is as decisive as what you say.

Along comes that self-confessed paragon of radio wisdom, your agent, who tells you: "Radio is show business. You may be interested in ideas or education or international peace, but that's not enough. You've got to be a showman." Then you go home and ask yourself, what is show business? Is it Fred Allen and Shakespeare, Irving Berlin and Bach, Charlie McCarthy and Shaw. But it is also a drummer selling millinery with a line of stories, Lincoln or Roosevelt putting across an election with a moving speech, a psychiatrist with a pointed beard looking impressive, a preacher soaring to eloquence, and an advertising man inventing a slogan. Show business is getting attention and holding it—Melville starting a book with the sentence, "Call me Ishmael for the glory has departed," as well as Ziegfeld parading his girls. It may be "The Iceman Cometh" or "Annie Get Your Gun." The thing that makes it show business is that enough people want to see it so that it gets a run.

Search for Corn

Then you think you have the first question answered, but when you talk about it with your guide and philosopher, your agent, he looks at you quizzically and says: "That's true enough, but remember the one ingredient all show business has to have is a touch of corn." That sends you home to think again. What is corn? It is about the sentimental appeal. It is the Stars and Stripes under a sudden spotlight in a dark theatre. It is Eliza crossing the ice or Camille coughing herself to death. But it is also Mr. Pickwick addressing his club or Mrs. Malaprop tripping over an extra syllable. It is still corn even though Mr. Pickwick becomes Jack Benny giving a treasurer's report and Mrs. Malaprop turns up as Jimmy Durante smashing pianos and the King's English with equal abandon. But there are grades of corn too. So you make up your mind that you've got to have some heart-throb, but you've got to be on your guard to make it good and not use too much of it.

With this formula neatly worked out, you go back triumphantly to your guardian, your agent, to tell him about it. But he still has the fishy eye, and comes up with his clincher: "You've also got to remember that when you talk over the radio, you're not addressing an audience, you're talking to people sitting quietly in their homes. You've got to be conversational." So back you go to your private meditation.

What is conversational? Walter Winchell is the only commentator who can compete with the big variety shows. Is he conversational? You hear the gatling gun delivery. It may be conversational in the Winchell home or the Stork Club, but not in any drawing room you know. So Ben Gross, Winchell off as a natural phenomenon occurring once in a generation. Then you think of Drew Pearson, the breathless newsboy dropping his g's on all present participles. And you can't think of any conversation you ever heard being conducted in that tempo. You run through the list—Gabriel Heatter, the emoter about dogs and hair tonics; Hans Kaltenborn, the staccato chopper of words; Lowell Thomas, the elocutionist's prize pupil; Raymond Swing, with the professorial monotone.

None of them quite fits the conversational style. Ray Swing comes nearest to it, but even your favorite commentator occasionally changes pace at a dinner table. Come to think about it, Franklin Roosevelt came nearer to the intimate, relaxed informality of conversation than anybody else, and you make note of this, but your mind does not rest satisfied by it because it only contemplates a personality who rivaled him in the use of radio to sway his countrymen was Hitler, who was as far removed from a conversational style as a police siren is far from a lullaby.

Each to His Own

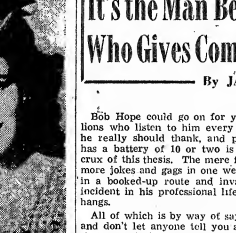
So you come to the conclusion that everybody has to do it his own way, and that your only chance lies in your way being attractive enough to enough people so that you can edge into the ratings. So you go back to your agent and sadden him with the first announcement that you are going to be yourself and he can keep his formulas for the next enquirer. The only universal truth about radio appeal is that there is no universal truth. The personal appeal is the beginning and the end of the matter.

But this still leaves you with the question: What is my personal style? One quick way to get attention is to be sensational, to hunt for facts and angles which will stab people to attention. The main trouble with this is that, once you are a sensationalist, you've got to keep on being one. This leads into the pitfall of striving for attention rather than for truth, holding a report for its effect rather than for an honest telling of it. If you practice this long enough, the partition between your memory and your imagination wears so thin that you can never be quite sure on which side you're operating. You would like to be sensational; who wouldn't? But a candid inner voice whispers, and you have to acknowledge that you haven't the stomach for it—or the knack either.

So you say: "I will talk about what interests me, and hope that it will interest enough other people so that they will listen." That gives you a point of view, an individual flavor, and you have to take your chance on it. But there always crops up the knotty question of how far you can go with your point of view and keep out of trouble with the sponsor or the station. And that's where the real struggle comes between your judgment and your conscience—the fiercest struggle of all, and the one which really decides whether you can look a mike in the eye.

The other thing you think about is what kind of audience you get at the time you talk. At 10:30 in the evening you've got people relaxed at the end of the day, and you can carry them along with a quieter and more thoughtful kind of script. But if you find yourself substituting for Winchell you know that you've got to give both script and delivery a shot in the arm. Then if you switch to 6 in the evening, you've got a lot of women listening and the few men who have just got home from work; you've tackled the job of capturing attention in the off-time when the day is hardly done and the evening not quite begun. If you add to this a Sunday morning show at 10:15, you strike still another mood, the dressing-down and breakfast coffee time with a dash of Sunday atmosphere. You have to write and deliver with thought of time and the audience.

How do you know whether you're getting across? One sign is whether your sponsor thinks you're a good investment. Another is the rating, that pesky figure which is so reliable when it shows you have a good audience and so questionable when it shows a falling off. Then, by no means least, there is your mail—the discordant echo of your listeners' responses, the bitter-sweet mirror of the mike, the moving and hilarious fragment of human reaction which is your very own, the applause and hiss of the audience you never see. But I dare not start on a radio man's mail. That, as Kipling used to say, is another story. Some day, some quiet day without a script to write or mail to answer, I'll tell you about it.



SEASON'S GREETINGS
EILEEN BARTON

Chi Radio

By BILL HUNT

Chicago.

The year 1946 proved once and for all that Chicago radio must abandon all claim to being a major network production center. Saleswise it is not far behind New York and probably will stay there. In terms of local radio the town saw its greatest year in gross billing since the inception of commercial radio more than 23 years ago, but talent wise, the Windy City has actually lived up to the prediction that it would become a ghost town.

The past 12 months witnessed the exodus of literally all the towns top actors, writers and producers. Departure of the "Ma Perkins" show for New York next week (Jan. 13) marks finis to the soap opera era that made Chicago a great network origination point 15 years ago.

Actually the departure of talent which began in dead earnest two years ago can be laid squarely at the door of top agency and network exec's utter unconcern over where shows originate. With the overwhelming majority of them being primarily salesmen rather than production experts, it's a question of getting credit for billing regardless of where the show originates, thus exhibiting very little concern for talent here. Production heads on the contrary put up the best fight that they could but just could not fight the power of their own chiefs in New York and in many cases of the sponsors themselves. It's a common sight to see Chi execs crowding the Brown Derby or the Beverly Hills hotel in Hollywood or Toots Shor's and the Barbary Room in New York since they take off for either coast at least once a month.

Predicament of one top actor who decided to stick it out in Chicago is a perfect example of the new low that radio has reached here. Rated as one of the town's top performers,

(Continued on page 118)

DEL SHARBUTT
"JACK CARSON SHOW" "LUCKY STRIKE HIT PARADE"
Radio Management: FRANK HEALY

It's the Man Behind the Typewriter Who Gives Comics Laughs Out Front

By JACK HELLMAN

Hollywood.

Bob Hope could go on for years, and probably will, thanking the millions who listen to him every Tuesday night for the memory. But who he really should thank, and probably does, is his writers. Whether he has a battery of six or two is merely incidental and unimportant to the crux of this thesis. The mere fact that he has writers, who can dream up more jokes and gags in one week than a vaude turn of years ago used up in a booked-up route and invariably made to last for years is no mere incident in his professional life. It is the peg on which his whole career hangs.

All of which is by way of saying that 1946-47 is a writers' year in radio and don't let anyone tell you any different. It's an old bromide by now that a comic is no better than his material and a bad script can kill off a good clown. It's very old but it's also very true and holds as good today as when it was first phrased.

Scan the Hooper table of shows that command the biggest audiences and in the first 15 there can always be found from seven to 10. Now let's get into some of the highest-rated exhibits of jest and drollery and see how they got that way. At this writing it was a standoff among Jack Benny, Fred Allen, Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy ("Fibber and Molly") for the Hooper leadership, and that's officially the industry's yardstick. Benny offers an excellent example for the reason of his professional longevity—after 15 years on top. Granted that there's no better showman on the air and he's not only the master of the quip but a near-perfectionist in timing, that all-important factor which produces belly laughs or egg rolls. How many times have you heard a writer moan, "He ruined my best lines."

'Who Me? Thank My Scripter'

Benny has always had the best scriveners from the days of Dave Freedman, Harry Conn, Bill Morrow, Eddie Beloin down to his present staff of Milt Josefsberg, Nat Perrin, et al.

Tell Benny he had a great show and he's big enough to say, "Thanks, but the boys gave me a great script." And any comic that doesn't is just hogging the limelight for himself and not sharing the credit with those who richly deserve it. If an exception is to be made it can rightfully be directed at Fred Allen, who while he has some help, is the main cog in his own writing machine. That statement can be made for few of the others. They may contribute a story line or polish up a gag or situation but in the main they breathe into the mike their own lines for them.

Gag writing for radio has become big business and runs a close fiscal second to the star of the show. On some programs the writing budget tops the payoff list. It wasn't so many years ago that a $500 writer was eyed with envy and it was a free prediction that the ceiling would never be raised. These prophets must surely be without honor anywhere for that figure is now where deliberations start. There are at least a dozen comedy shows in Hollywood where anywhere from $2,500 to $3,500 is charged against the program or package for the lads with dreams, files and good memories. For $800 nowadays all that is contracted for or expected are three or four gags or a two-minute spot. Even if they're not used the scribe is not penalized for, in radio, a good old try is not without its golden reward.

Most comics readily will admit the "comedy constructionists" are worth every last dollar they get and it's not purely a defense stance. They're paid well, to be sure, but where would the funny fellows be without them? Clowning is a highly specialized art and those who have survived can credit their virtuosity to a measure of success that leaves a goodly share for the lads at the typing mills. The casualty list of jesters who dropped by the wayside is a long one and it admits of small argument that they might still be around were their writers hep to the changing tide. Many a passe comic could be revived if given such a staff of writers as now toils for Benny, Hope, "The McGees" and a half dozen others.

Of the new crop of comedy shows, a measure of success or failure invariably falls to the writers. Those with good writing, such as Frank Galen's Dennis Day show, Henry Morgan, Alan Young and not more than one or two others, have managed estimable progress but those that flounder went down with the script. Peter Lind Hayes is out of night clubs to become a radio personality, but he knew he would be no better than what was put on paper for him. So the agency went out and hired Abe Burrows, one of the top craftsmen. It is still conjectural whether Burrows caught the fact of his versatility that could be made radio-worth. Two dozen writers tried it with Danny Kaye and failed. Few of the nitery set have cut it on the kilocycles.

It's a writers' year, make no mistake there. The fact that they keep comics going years on end more than justifies their fabulous fees. In most cases it's the "packaged" comic who sets the price. Who knows better than they the true value of their labors?

Tony Martin Into OG Show Vice Sinatra? Also Mulled for 'Hit Parade'

Hollywood.

Although Tony Martin is out in front for race to take over spot vacated by Frank Sinatra on the Old Gold show, the singer's agent, Nat Goldstone, is uncasy over terms made by Lennen & Mitchell agency as well as being reluctant to start Martin on the final cycle of the show unless he's carried into the fall. Martin currently is in Chicago grabbing $8,500 per week, then moves to the Copacabana in New York.

Sinatra's deal washup calls for "The Voice" to stay off the air until September, although he'll be permitted to take guest shots before that time. Still in offing is deal for Sinatra to star in a revised "Hit Parade" for Lucky Strike but not to become effective until next September. Joan Edwards' meantime drops off "Hit Parade" Jan. 18 with likelihood only top star distaff singers will be used.

Larimore Back In Radio

Earle Larimore, formerly on CBS' "This Life Is Mine" serial, is back in radio in New York after spending a year at Saranac.

In addition, Larimore is going into legit soon, being scheduled for a part in Eugene O'Neill's next play, "The Moon for the Misbegotten."

Focus on Wax, or Snip Shows With Scissors

By ADRIAN SAMISH
(Programming Veepee, ABC Network.)

The greatest innovation in radio in recent years—and what I think may well turn out to be the radio of the future—is the transcribed program of the high calibre quality of the "Bing Crosby Show." Though this subject is hardly unfamiliar to readers of VARIETY, I'd like to take this opportunity to bandy it about a bit more.

As a matter of fact, we at ABC have peered further into the crystal ball and think the day is not so far off when film will replace records and programs may be produced on a soundtrack as they are in pix.

This will undoubtedly bring forth louder wails from the corner of the "nays", who are always ready to pounce on any departure from the usual at the drop of a hat—to prove that the status should remain quo. Offhand, I can't think of anything that changes with any degree of facility except women's styles and the weather. Therefore, for purposes of clarification, I'd like to talk about transcriptions—on the side of the "ayes"—of course.

The need for excellent transcribed programs has existed for many years. Critics of radio have been jabbing at us for better quality programs. We in radio want quality just as much and strive for it daily. Transcriptions undoubtedly will make for better quality radio. They give the radio producer the same opportunity as the film and theatrical producer of being able to edit and trim the whole into a finished job before it reaches an audience. When you think of the reels of film that are made before a film director gets the exact sequence he wants, and the out-of-town tryouts given a play before it ever hits Broadway, you realize the odds against a radio producer, who works under terrific pressure to put together a live program without any of the advantages he would have in the other two media.

As they have reached mechanical perfection, transcriptions have been used more and more on all of the networks. "Request Performance" was an outstanding recorded series, and the instantaneous and enthusiastic response of our troops abroad and other listeners to these shows gave impetus to transcription series on a large scale.

It is now generally agreed that, as far as listenability goes, good transcriptions are indistinguishable from live broadcasts. And as to Hoopers—many important programs have been recorded and repeated for some time with bigger Hoopers than their live counterparts. For example, the Jack Benny show is aired twice in California, the first time at 4 in the afternoon when it starts east to be heard in New York at 7 p. m.; and the second broadcast is a transcribed version of the first and repeated at 9:30 p. m. on the Coast, with substantially the same or more listeners out there than the earlier live show.

When daylight saving time began last year, ABC inaugurated record repeats on most of our programs. Many important shows, including "America's Town Meeting of the Air" were aired on transcriptions with no noticeable listening difference. "Tom Breneman's Breakfast in Hollywood" has been transcribed for some time with no effect whatever on its rating.

Obvious Advantage

The advantage to an advertiser of being able to spot his show clear across the country at one time" is obvious. As it is now, a show heard at 9 o'clock in the east hits a very early audience on the west coast and has to be repeated. Transcriptions allow an advertiser the privilege of cashing in on the same time block coast-to-coast.

From the standpoint of the broadcasters, transcriptions permit us to tap heretofore unavailable talent. They afford top radio and screen artists the opportunity to make radio programs at their convenience, timewise. For years this has been impossible for motion picture stars, because of studio commitments, which usually leave them free for broadcasts only on weekends. Also, many of the stars feel that, by venturing into live radio, they might lower their boxoffice appeal by turning in inferior performances in an unfamiliar medium. It is obvious that a transcription with its facilities for retakes and removing fluffs, insures a more finished dramatic performance, eliminates such objections.

the God-given opportunity to delete jokes that misfire. As for those comics who depend on topical material for their witticisms, this source is usually just as timely three days later as it is at the moment—with the possible exception of California weather.

Perhaps the phoniest objection hurled at transcriptions has been the question of actors' spontaneity. "Will they respond and give their best performance, knowing that the show can be recut?" it is asked. The answer is: Definitely yes.

First of all, an actor responds, not to a listening audience, but to his director and a studio audience. By having a live studio audience—as we do in the "Bing Crosby Show," and will in any other similar type program—the problem of an actor's response is dissolved.

Secondly, of the many live shows I have directed, I know that, nine times out of 10, the dress rehearsal was better than the air performance, because the actors were more at ease. The same holds true of transcriptions. The knowledge that actors may correct their mistakes usually prevents errors, and makes for a relaxed and easy performance without first-night jitters.

As a final feeble wheeze, the "nays" and other alarmists envision the eventual disintegration of the networks. Letting all of the air out of that one requires little effort.

First of all, let's look at the networks and the vast complexities which make them work. The ability to build shows, spot them across the country in proper sequence, with the desired continuity, give them their due promotion and publicity buildup, could hardly be duplicated by an individual or anything but a tremendous organization equipped, as the networks are, to do the job.

"Suppose", say the "nays," "a sponsor would, instead of buying several hundred stations on a network for his transcribed show, buy stations individually all over the country and spin platters." Yes, let's just "suppose" for a few minutes.

In the first place, the time cost would be much more than any network would charge for an equal lineup, and it would be next to impossible to clear any set block of time with all of the stations for such a program on a non-network basis.

Most important, however, a radio show is valuable only if it has a certain continuity. Listening habits are the result of hearing the same program at the same time week after week. Unless an advertiser can cash in on large blocks of markets, as he can do only with a network, his show would reach potential customers only in dribbles. It would certainly lack audience and sales impact. Experience has shown that single programming, with no attention paid to preceding and following programs, hardly ever gets Hoopers. But block programming, or a sequence of good programs, a night of good programs, is the surest way of holding an audience. Do away with that sequence, eliminate the buildup program and followup show, as would happen without a network, and that program loses half of its value to a sponsor.

Add to these problems, those that would be involved with station relations, local promotional campaigns, the lack of being able to push the program and the product it sponsors on a national basis, all now easily handled by a network, and it would take more than a few aspirins to cure the mass headaches that would ensue for anyone who decided to deal with stations separately.

PROF. QUIZ
A. B. C.
Thursdays for Amoco
Exclusive Management
FRANKLIN H. SMALL
Hotel Abbey, New York City

BEST WISHES FROM
MEREDITH WILLSON
and the Gang on "SPARKLE TIME"
PAULENA CARTER
BEN GAGE THE SINGERS

United Nations Radio's Biggest Sales Job

By CHRISTOPHER CROSS
(In Charge of U.S. Radio at UN)

During the war, whenever anyone said to an American: "Look what an excellent job the BBC is doing," the reply would invariably and correctly be: "Well, the war is being fought in their backyard. If the battles were taking place here in the United States our radio would do just as good a job, if not better."

This is justifiable pride in United States radio which made a tremendous contribution to the Victory although the war was not fought in North America. But, while the war not fought here, the battle for peace is taking place in the United States—in New York City, the center of United States radio.

A Yearbook should be filled with happy memories. It would be easy and pleasant to fill this space with a review of the excellent cooperation we have received from many networks, stations and organizations. But there is no real need for that. Those who have given so generously of their time and creative energy to help bring the United Nations to the people already know how much we appreciate their assistance. Besides, the editors of VARIETY suggested: "Don't feel you must butter anyone up; just tell us what's on your mind, straight from the shoulder."

What we are going to say might be better described as coming straight from the heart.

We have lived among you in American radio for almost one year. And we have had an opportunity to watch your United Nations programming. Since what you do about the United Nations and how you do it affects the welfare of so many people, we feel justified in giving you our observations.

First: There are altogether too many in radio who seem puzzled when we suggest that they do something about the United Nations. They frequently ask: "Does anything special really have to be done? Who could possibly be against peace?"

We believe that anyone is against peace who does not work wholeheartedly for peace, if he has some means with which to do so. Everyone has some means. Certainly radio has extraordinary means at its command with which to work for lasting peace. We wonder if radio's contribution to the victory over the Axis could have been as great if those in command of radio had similarly asked: "Does anything special really have to be done? Who could possibly be against winning the war?"

Needed: Peacetime Morale

Radio's greatest contribution to the war effort was that it helped build a strong wartime morale. Can we not decide that radio must be as effective an instrument for the building of a healthy peacetime morale? And what will bring about a healthy peacetime morale? The people must have an understanding of the United Nations Charter and, what it means to them and their communities. The people must know what is happening from day to day in the various councils of the United Nations and how it effects them. Obviously this cannot be accomplished if coverage is limited to sensational news bulletins.

United States radio needs no advice from us on how it should do this great sales job. It is able to sell Pepsi-Cola until it really hits the spot; a variety of laxatives are made so appealing as to leave one depressed if one has the good fortune not to be constipated; and a cigaret is made to sound like God's greatest gift to mankind. Radio has indeed mastered the techniques of selling. Can we not make the search for a just and durable peace, which so intimately affects the lives of all people, vital, as exciting, as important? We are sure that American radio executives can find the techniques with which to do this great sales job of all time.

Which brings me to our second observation: Too many radio executives seem to look upon the United Nations as just another news beat. The United Nations is not just another news event to be covered only by reporter, the commentator. The United Nations is a concept that has come to us through bloodshed and persecution. It is a voice crying for peace and security for all peoples everywhere.

It's A Full-Time Job

To make crystal-clear this concept of a world without wars is radio's great challenge. How can this be done? Recently WLW held a contest to determine what its listeners thought the station could do to help create a greater interest and understanding of the United Nations. One of the contest winners told WLW: "Put one or more of your most capable persons to work full-time to organize programs which would clarify the United Nations to the people and relate its activities to the community."

There is no better advice for any station or network seeking to fulfill this momentous responsibility to the public.

Find the best minds in your stations or network and let them devote themselves to meeting radio's greatest challenge. It is not an easy job. It can't be done quickly. A series of three or six programs won't accomplish the task. It will take time and it will require the help of youth groups, the church, organized labor, industry, women's groups and other community organizations. Above all, it needs the leadership of the National Association of Broadcasters.

Judge Miller, President of the NAB, and all U. S. radio deserve congratulations for the resolution passed at their first post-war convention in Chicago which stated that: "American broadcasters pledge to the United Nations their full support and cooperation . . . We dedicate ourselves to the . . . momentous task of winning a lasting peace."

The dedications and resolutions have been passed. It's time to go to work. It's time U. S. radio applied its best efforts to making the United Nations an integral part of the lives of all Americans. What will be the profits? None — except liberty instead of enslavement; peace instead of war; in fact, life instead of death.

Performance vs. Promise—
Saga of the FCC Blue Book

By SAUL CARSON

When the Federal Communications Commission's Blue Book hit the radio industry between the eyes, last March, with its threat of "matching performance against promise," there was much consternation. This, cried the industry, was revolution. Everything was invoked against the FCC from brickbats to the First Amendment. Even Jimmy Petrillo never came in for as much abuse as the FCC did for daring to suggest that applicants for radio licenses should be asked to prove whether the promises that accompanied their original applications had been honored, even in the breach thereof. What no one thought of doing was to whisper, ever so gently, something about the need for a man going into court having clean hands, or about stones and glass houses

Now that the covers of that Blue Book are slightly bleached, it might be relevant to look into the praetices of that commission which itself made such wonderful promises. Surprisingly enough, one finds, in matching the FCC's performance against its own promises, that the latter are not promises at all but empty threats. Even a cursory examination of the FCC's record—on the achievement side—indicates that the FCC talks a blue streak of radicalism while it acts in the interests of the most conservative side of American big business. With the lone exception of its perpetual dissenter, Clifford J. Durr, the FCC is as consistent as any coffee pot that ever promised a lot of beautiful public service programming only to crowd its program with at least one spot or jingle every two minutes. The only difference is that the FCC's jingles are not as funny as some on the air, since the sound is made up chiefly of gold.

The tip off came even while the Blue Book was being written, back in the summer of 1945. It was the case of the Aviation Corp.'s bid for the radio empire then in the hands of the Crosley people. Most of the commissioners were honestly horrified at the prospect of letting a big corporation primarily interested in electric refrigerators buy such vast radio properties as Crosley's. When the big brass of AVCO took the stand and admitted they had never even heard of the Communications Act, admitted that they didn't know how much they were paying for Crosley's WLW, admitted they hadn't the slighest idea about what broadcasting was all about—it was obvious that the FCC would balk against okaying that transfer. But some of these same honest commissioners couldn't for the life of them find reasonable legal grounds for nixing that transfer. Besides, White House intimate George Allen was a director of AVCO and political executor of the interests of AVCO board chairman Victor Emanuel. Was there politics concerned? Of course not. But AVCO got its approval and, later, acquired WINS, N. Y. in addition to WLW, Cincinnati and the multifarious short-wave, television and FM licenses already possessed by the Crosley crowd.

Oughta Be A Law

To appease the dissenters on the commission, the FCC majority made a gesture. They decided that, since the commission had no authority to look into the price paid for a radio property, and since such authority should be had in the public interest — there oughta be a law. Solemnly, the FCC promised it would ask Congress for such a law. That was in the summer of 1945. The FCC must be still wandering down Washington's Pennsylvania avenue looking for the Capitol. That law was never introduced.

Along came — after the Blue Book—applications for purchase of the King-Trendle properties in Michigan by the ABC network. Along came, too, the deal between WCAU, Philadelphia, and J. David Stern, of the Philadelphia Record and Camden Courier-Post. In both cases, the price tags were undoubtedly inflationary. In the Philadelphia case, there was some astoundingly complex financing which, some people still insist despite disclaimers, amounts to a tail-wagging-the-dog act in which it's hard to tell who bought what. Both deals went through in great haste. In the Philadelphia case, there wasn't even any pretense of a hearing. Clearly, the FCC's promise of looking into prices was meaningless.

But, some say, the FCC is always careful about who buys a station if there is any doubt about the purchaser's past record. The answer is likely to be a cynical Oh Yeah! Take two New York deals, for instance. The Mester Bros. couldn't buy WOV from Arde Bulova because, allegedly, they had not been adjudged quite angelic by other Government agencies. But Generoso Pope had no difficulty buying WHOM from the Cowles interests (although the transfer had to be pushed through fast while Cliff Durr was out of the country). Now it's true there was never any charge of irregularity by a Government agency against Pope as there had been against the Mesters. But it's also true that in the New York Daily News application for an FM license, the FCC had promulgated a very high principle—that it's relevant to look into a newspaper's past editorial policy when that newspaper wants to go into broadcasting. And no one even tried to deny that, pre-

SEASON'S GREETINGS FROM
MONICA LEWIS
Adams Theatre, Newark, N. J., Jan. 9, 1947
Monica Lewis Show, Mutual Network, Friday 8:15 (EST)
SIGNATURE RECORDS—MUSIC CORP. OF AMERICA

PHIL HANNA
Jumping at Conclusions

You'll have a Happy and a Prosperous New Year.

This hurtlone of tennis fame is currently starring on The Hire's Sunday Party—full Blue Network. Just out of pictures, Phil is now drawing raves on recordings and television.

Managed by DORIS BROOKS, New York.

Pearl Harbor, the purchaser of WHOM was one of the principal pals of Italian fascism on this side of the Atlantic. Another pal was mighty FCC principle has gone by the board.

Is it a case of whose ox it is that's being gored? Possibly. For instance, the FCC has been very tough against WOKO, Albany (N. Y.) for hiding certain stock ownership over a period of years. The commission carried that case as far as the Supreme Court—and won. But in the case of WBAX, Wilkes-Barre, there were also charges of misrepresentation of financial ability. But this case dragged on four years, until John Stenger of WBAX got clearance from the same FCC.

In the case of WBAL, the Hearst station in Baltimore, the FCC has forgotten its own, explicit Blue Book charges and has not made those issues stick in the hearings currently scheduled on WBAL. Is it fair to say, then, that the FCC is no longer matching performance against promise? Well, it so happens that the FCC is doing just that very thing in the cases of WTOL, Toledo, and KONO and KMAC, San Antonio. Apparently these stations haven't the same standing as William Randolph Hearst and are to be measured by a different yardstick.

These are only a few cases. But they may be taken as illustrations. The FCC can blow hot. It can be redder than the rose. It can propound very revolutionary ideology, as it did in the Blue Book—and crown that ideology with the halo of unanimity, as it did in the Blue Book. But when it comes to action—that's something else again. Like the Supreme Court in Mr. Dooley's time, the FCC can read election returns—sometimes even before the elections are held. The Republican Party and Big Business have nothing to worry about, as far as the FCC is concerned. If the commission ever mounts the barricades, it will be on the side of the guy with the frock coat. As for the people—let them eat the Blue Book.

RADIO UNIONS DANGLE JOBS TO LANGHAM

Ray Langham, who resigned two weeks ago from CBS, where he was asst. director of programming under veepee Davidson Taylor, is reportedly being considered for an organizer's job by two radio unions.

Radio Writers Guild is reported considering Langham for the job of national exec secretary. That job has been officially vacant since the recent resignation of Dorothy Bryant, with eastern veepee Peter Lyon filling in only until the Guild's national council selects a fulltime successor to Mrs. Bryant.

Meanwhile, American Federation of Radio Artists, looking around for staff enlargement seen as necessary in the near future under the new AFRA code, is also reported interested in Langham.

Langham had helped organize technicians at CBS some eight years ago and while known to the union people as an ardent unionist, is also acceptable to various groupings inside the unions.

Time Bomb Is Ticking
Radio's and Scripters' Responsibilities Are Needs, Not Luxuries, in Year II of Atomic Era

By ARCH OBOLER

It has become the dubious custom to begin every discussion these days with a reference to the atomic bomb. In everything from a discussion of Metaphysics to the huckstering of merchandise, the atom bomb is dragged into the conversation by its reluctant isotropes. To subtitle this "Radio Writing in the Atomic Year Two," (yes, we are in our second year since that epochal New Mexican explosion) may appear to be just another attempt to add importance to the ordinary.

Arch Oboler

And yet, it is impossible to deny that the thinking and the writing of every mature writer has been profoundly affected by man's release of atomic power. Doing what is quaintly called "business" on the old typewriter stand has become increasingly difficult for those sensitive to the flow of events.

But, yet another bomb of another sort recently went off in the arts—yes—and the business of radio writing. I refer, of course, to the Federal Communications Commission's action in pointing out to radio broadcasters their responsibilities as a public service.

The result has been a reawakening, on the part of radio networks and individual radio stations, to the worth of thoughtful radio writing.

This means that when one talks about radio writing today, once more one is talking beyond the "Tortures of Soap Suds Suzie" and "John's Upstairs Wife." Once again there is a time and a place for the thoughtful, the provocative, the meaningful, the experimental. Once again there is air time for the highest function of broadcasting—the education of people to a world.

How long this condition will last, I do not know. We Americans, with our un-bombed cities and our full pantries, have the unfortunate habit of forgetting quickly.

Time For Decision

But the writer has the responsibility of seeing to it that this way of forgetfulness does not lead to catastrophe. He, as well as the entire radio industry, must choose between what is business for business's sake and his own responsibility in a civilization that sits on a time-bomb.

Let me simplify that: He must choose between the easy dollar and staying alive. For it has come to that issue, my friends. Radio has to choose between the dollar-making, minority-degrading belly-laugh and the disintegration which will also be the lot of radio when that time-bomb goes off.

Sitting on a time-bomb, then, let the radio writer play his part, not in weakening but in strengthening our defenses against the terror that lies beneath us.

Let him shun the fun-poking portrayals of any of the vices of man as violently as he would recoil to the incinerator or gasehamber for human beings — for the steps of hatred of man move downward with deceptively small treads, and he who laughs derisively at his fellow-men one day, burns him alive the next.

Affirmatively, the radio writer must look for opportunities to state his own affirmation of the dignity of all men. Those opportunities have not been easy to find in this Communication System of ours which has become a business. It has been easier, the writer knows, to air a doleful tale of love-yearning or a legend of creeping horror, for love and terror and Life Can Be Beautiful, to the accompaniment of a soap jingle, are salable things.

But I say to you, who write, that loving one's world and wanting to see people alive and moving closer to the God that is in them—those things, too, should be and must be salable in a world that has no securities other than those that we, this living generation, can bring to it

To write for tolerance and human decency, now, is not an Act of Mercy; it is an act of self-preservation.

Yes, and to ask that radio, now, turn from its dollar spin to a permanent fulfillment of its duties, is not a statement of hope, it is a statement of expectation.

For the time-bomb is ticking.

Listen to it, you radio writers and funny men who crucify for a laugh.

Listen to it, you businessmen who give freely of the precious network hours to the man with the checkbook and a stomach-pill advertisement and who dole out so parsimoniously, Saturday afternoon and half an hour before midnight, to those who come with ideas for people!

Listen to it!

The atoms of disintegration are straining.

Have the wisdom to listen.

HAPY NU YEAR
FRUM YOURS TROOLY
PAT. BUTTRAM

A Kiss for Sadie Hertz

By HAPPY FELTON

More and more every day, I read where so-called pulse-fingering critics say that audience participation has been bad for radio and has no appeal outside the studio. It's time somebody blew a kiss to the quiz fans and I'm the boy who wants to make the first overture.

The natural wit of the man on the street is slanted to his people and his people are the population of this country and, it may surprise some of you, not all of the population is in show business.

"Guess Who?" is an audience participation show. It is my current audience co-ed show and I have been on two others which qualifies my opinion when I say "Audiences are good people" and the type of audience I get at "Guess Who?" is a great one.

There have been too many people looking down their respective noses at studio audiences. Sure, they'll admit you have to play to 'em so the sponsor can hear these boffolas on the record. But they stop right there—once the program is over they belabor the audience and generally feel that the average age of their audience is slightly below zero.

Nuts to that. They ought to step down off the studio stage and meet the people. I've got more of a chance to meet the people who are loyal enough to me to fill the WOR playhouse every Saturday night. Most of us in show business worry about audiences coming and going—they really mean the difference between renewal or goodbye—but in the very next breath most of us will shout and holler that the low mentality of the audience keeps the standards of radio down. Nuts to that, too.

Still Kicking, Thanks

The other fallacy in this connection is that this type of program is finished. Let's look at the record. The audience participation shows are right in there in Hooper ratings and in consumer sales through commercials delivered on these buffoonery carnivals.

As far as publicity is concerned the audience participation show is riding the crest of the wave biting big chunks out of national publications with layouts demonstrating what goes. And why? Because the people who listen will buy magazines and write in whenever a show gets featured.

Look at Mrs. Sadie Hertz. She's been boomed in publicity to the extent of having a feature article in the Saturday Evening Post, with a reprint in Reader's Digest. And believe me—Mrs. Hertz is more than a publicity peg that the network flacks have dreamed up. She's a shot in the arm to any m.c. who uses her. Ask the boys in the business.

She's funny—she's a good sport—she's a sympathetic character to the listening audience but more important—she's just a lady who likes to go to radio shows—she's a typical fan. For my money you can fill the theatre with Mrs. Hertz duplicated three hundred times. And don't anybody say she's bad for radio—she's in there pitchin' and was long before the hinterlands "discovered" her. She and many other "regulars" constitute a measuring stick that can't be beat. They are avid letter writers—good buyers of products and they get around enough to keep the standards up there because they won't laugh at the same joke every night in the week.

There are some who might say that having to depend on Sadie Hertz is a far cry from the days when the audience was threatened by signs insisting on absolute silence. But these are the same audiences who suffered through the "Laugh"—"Applause"—placard days and they have yet to louse up a show by not knowing what was what.

The only thing that sets Sadie Hertz and her pals apart from the listening audience is a streak of liking the spotlight which a lot of people in our business have. Sadie likes fun—likes to win prizes and likes to be where she is—on the fringe of radio.

There's nothing wrong with that. Years ago, Aunt Minnie used to get at the piano in our parlor and we'd always have to coax Uncle George to sing that funny song. And maybe during a taffy pull, way back when, someone would think it was "Jim Dandy" to wind some taffy around cousin Willie's neck. That was the truth and consequences of yesterday. We've always had audience participation—radio is just the modern version.

I predict that audience participation shows will continue for many years. And will be even stronger on television than they ever were on radio. As long as people can fidgit in a chair at home while someone else takes a mild beating you'll have these programs. Just as we all love to laugh at the Chaplins and the W. C. Fields of the profession, we still chuckle when a skirt is blown at Coney Island. Take away that American trait of laughing when the other guy takes a prattfall and you've solved the problem of getting rid of participation shows.

How Hooper Rates 'Em

Jack Benny	27.5
Fibber & Molly	27.4
Bob Hope	26.2
Charlie McCarthy	26.2
Fred Allen	25.9
Lux Radio Theatre	23.8
Amos 'n' Andy	23.0
Walter Winchell	22.9
Red Skelton	22.3
Screen Guild Players	21.8
Phil Harris	21.2
Mr. D. A.	19.2
Take It-Leave It	18.2
Great Gildersleeve	17.3
Fannie Brice	16.3

PATTY BOLTON
Radios Newest Singing Sensation
"EDDIE CANTOR" SHOW
"MEET ME AT PARKY'S"
CARTOON RECORDS
Management: M.C.A.

NEW SERIES SET AS MEMORIAL TO WILLKIE

Freedom House, N. Y., which is a memorial to the late Wendell Willkie, will air a weekly radio forum for 12 Friday evenings, beginning Jan. 17. Show will air in New York over the indie WEVD, and is expected to be recorded for possible placement over other stations around the country.

Titled "Freedom House Forum," program will tee off with former Economic Stabilization Director Chester Bowles and Thomas K. Finletter, former special assistant to Sec. of State Cordell Hull.

MBS Preps for Sales Hypo

While more of its program origination is moving westward to the Coast, Mutual was reported last week about ready to put a new, more aggressive sales policy into effect in the east.

Prexy Ed Kobak is on the Coast this week, and will gander the program operation in Hollywood during a fast, five-day visit. Meanwhile however, he had put one of his trouble-shooters, E. P. H. ("Jimmie") James to work in the east to tighten up the sales operations.

P & G, Kellogg Woo Kate Smith

With the 10-year association of Kate Smith and General Foods scheduled for a windup at the end of the current broadcasting season in June, there are reports that both Procter & Gamble and Kellogg have been making feelers to the star and her manager, Ted Collins, with an eye toward '47-'48 sponsorship.

Such a deal would mean that P & G or Kellogg would grab off the noontime CBS "Kate Smith Speaks" show, in addition to her half-hour nighttime show. Both are being offered by Collins as a package deal.

Iowa Ed Claims Libel For Use of His Label

An Iowa editor named Clifford Niles thinks he's been injured, $2,000,000 worth, by a pre-election broadcast of "Mr. District Attorney" on which the villain, running for the Senate, turned out to be a murderer nabbed by "Mr. D. A."

Villian's name on show was Clifford Niles. Last name, says show's director, Ed Byron, was chosen from the name of Niles, Mich., and there was a disclaimer aired on the show. But the real Niles wants somebody—he doesn't care whether it's Byron, NBC, sponsor (Bristol Myers) or whoever—to pay him a couple of million.

P.S.—Show carries libel insurance, so if anyone pays it will be an insurance company.

SEASON'S GREETINGS FROM
ED HERLIHY
Voice of Universal Newsreel, Kraft Music Hall
One O'Clock Sunday News With Ed Herlihy
M. C. Children's Hour
Carmen Cavallaro Show—NBC

Radio Reviews

HOLLYWOOD STORY
With John Larkin, others; announcer, Dick Stark
Writer: Nancy Moore
Producer-Director: Walter Gorman
Music: Charles Paul
15 Mins.; Monday thru Sat., 11:30 a.m.
KELLOGG CO.
WJZ-ABC, N. Y.
(Kenyon & Eckhardt)

Hollywood anecdota over a musical backdrop is offered in this latest of the Kellogg radio string, and it's a neatly wrapped package for the sentimental sisters who comprise the meat of daytime radio listening.

John Larkin is pseudonymed Chris Kenyon for his role as the Hollywood gossip-hawk. He works well with a script that manages to inject a couple of current items into a quarter-hour mostly filled with a short, local-color Hollywood dramat.

In the preem show, Larkin told everyone that Helmut Dantine and his wife are no longer one, and described plans for the big "Duel in the Sun" opening at Grauman's Egyptian. Then the show segued into the drama, which is mostly just a conversation between Larkin and an old Irish peddler-gal who had visions of a former non-existent glory as a vaudeville star. There's a bit of moralizing here.

Seems no hausfrau program can be complete without a syrupy organ background. The gals couldn't differentiate between a radio show and real conversation otherwise.

Tomm.

MOMENTS MAKE THE YEAR
With Don Hollenbeck, emcee; Bill Downs, Betty Garrett, Johnny Faulk, Herbert John, Dr. Leon Goldenson, Vincent Shaeffler, Nick Fetzka, Alfred Brissenden, Capt. Philip Sarbacher, Jr., Eddie Dyer, Helen Henderson, Alan Stewart, Leon Dostert; music, Alex Semmler
Writers: Lane Blackwell, Ruth Ashton, Sylvia Berger
Director: Robert Lewis Shayon
60 Mins.; Tues. (31), 10 p.m.
Sustaining
WCBS-CBS, N. Y.

Radio has not yet learned how to comport itself in times of stress unaccompanied by a shooting war. The point was painfully apparent last Tuesday night (31) when CBS put on a full-hour documentary show which, purportedly, highlighted the big things in 1946 that should stand out as "moments" worthy of remembrance. It's not that what was done was done badly—on the contrary, the execution ranked from competent to top quality. But it's the choice of items that indicated what's the matter with radio of this type. Everything was "safe." Nothing remotely "controversial" was touched. Result: An intellectual drabness, an out-of-focus view of 1946 as the year when nothing happened — no President Truman slipping, no OPA pains, no Republican election turnover, no veterans' housing snafu, no growing pains in the United Nations, no fighting in Greece, Palestine and the East Indies. These subjects, which no self-respecting rural weekly would leave out of its year-end summary, could find no place on the year-end looksee done by the network which has so often been kudosed as outstanding for its documentaries.

So the show brought the listener two brief meaningful moments: The A-bomb test at Bikini, and a psychiatrist's view of the leading Nazis cowing and whining in their cells at Nurnberg. For the rest: There was a talking dog in Yorkshire, a miner who narrowly escaped death in Pennsylvania, a tidbit from the World Series game, and other such world-shaking events. And Betty Garrett. Because she had only 10 minutes between calls in the legiter "Call Me Mister," she was spotted in the middle. She was sock. But she'd have fitted the closing cue, since her number was "South America, Take It Away."

Cars.

Barry Gray Rides Again, Feuds Notwithstanding

Barry Gray, all-night disk jock at WOR, N. Y., who went on leave a couple of weeks ago after his latest tiff with a New York columnist—this time, Lee Mortimer of the Mirror—is back in the saddle again.

He's going to continue riding the milk route on WOR six nights a week (he's off Sunday), and in addition started last Saturday (4) with a two-hour afternoon show. In the next few weeks, with specific date undetermined as yet, he will also take the WOR Monday night at 10 slot currently occupied by the "Broadway Talks Back," show which is folding.

Gray had been auditioned by CBS for a couple of possible shows, but the network deal is off.

AFRA Pact Means 500G in Back Pay

At least $500,000 in back pay will be due to radio actors, announcers, singers and sound effects men in the next two or three weeks, as a result of the expected ending of new contract negotiations affecting members of the American Federation of Radio Artists.

Chicago announcers held out for a larger slice of salary increase, and that one tiff was responsible for the holdup in the final settlement of the terms for the various new contracts between the networks, agencies, stations, and transcriptions companies on the one hand, and AFRA on the other.

But the Chi situation was finally ironed out Friday (3), with announcers there getting a minimum basic scale of $108.90. The classification of "sustaining announcer," one of the main issues in Chicago, was wiped out, AFRA scoring a victory in that respect.

Most of the contracts, nationally as well as in the regions, make the increases retroactive to Oct. 31, although in the case of some of the Chi announcers the retroactivity clause starts operating Nov. 15.

Most of the bookkeeping showing the amounts due individual AFRA members, whether they are staff employees or freelances on shows, has been kept up to date by both networks and transcription companies, since most of the fiscal points had been agreed upon several weeks ago.

Chi Radio

Continued from page 115

actor in question used to be on 25 network shows a week plus another 10 local programs whereas, starting the first of the year, he'll be lucky to have 20% of his former shows. It's a vicious cycle that seems to get worse with each succeeding year.

Paradoxical situation is that while network radio was dying on the vine, production-wise, both network and local sales reached an all-time high during the year just passed. It saw the two highest budgeted local musicals in the town's history, both aired over WBBM (the Wayne King half-hour show sponsored by Elgin American and "Melody Lane" bankrolled by a local department store), but in spite of a $2,000 talent budget for each show, there was little if any employment opportunity for actors.

Prime example of what can be done with a Chicago originated show was the 16.1 Hooper for "The Whistler" show scripted and aired on the Coast but produced here live with local talent. It's pretty indicative of the fact that good writing and good directing can still ring the bell regardless of where the show originates, yet even this show was sold by CBS as network fare and moves to New York in the Spring.

Shelved for the time being or outrightly abandoned were the ambitious plans of the four nets which called for a new building on North Michigan avenue to house NBC, elaborate new studios in the Civic Opera House for ABC, modernization of the CBS-Wrigley Building studios, and a new television building that was to handle Mutual Chicago originations. The advent of video is about the only thing in the foreseeable future that might change the picture.

The lot of the actors, producers and writers here has been anything but a happy one during the past two years, with literally everyone of them now working for scale, having to fight for air credits and producers being forced to take acting roles in order to eke out a living while watching one network show after another depart for New York or Hollywood.

The year 1946 saw the departure of practically all the top talent including Joe Ainley, Betty Lou Gerson, Hugh Studebaker, Sara Jane Wells, Barbara Luddy, Herb Futran, Jane Webb, Gil Stratton, Jr., Bill Thompson, Pat Buttram, Percy Faith and Buddy Clark, to name just a few.

Among the shows that moved either to New York or California were the "Carnation Contented Hour," "Those Websters," "Exploring the Unknown," "Guiding Light," "Road to Life," "Backstage Wife," "Ma Perkins," and the four Carl Wester-Irna Phillips General Mills shows. The last two years also saw the cancellation of three Wrigley shows, "America in the Air," "First Line," and "Meet Your Navy," with Gene Autry, the sole Wrigley show now on the air, emanating from the Coast.

Greatest Contribution to Television Supplied So Far Through Sports

By HARRY WISMER
(Director of Sports, American Broadcasting Co.)

Television's greatest contribution thus far has been through the excitting medium of sports. Actually, great shows—such as a Fred Allen Jack Benny, Bob Hope Bing Crosby — have not been produced for video audiences. But from the sporting scene the real producer has been the athletic coach, the team manager, the student body. All television has to do is set its cameras and start grinding.

Harry Wismer

Which brings to the forefront the art of sports telecasting. The tele sports announcer of the future will have to be 100% accurate, have a thorough knowledge of the sport and be quick enough, mentally, to stay on top of the ball. The folks will be able to see as well as hear. The "color" reporter will give way to the factual reporter.

The sports announcer who develops the art of staying on top of the play will have a terrific following and will make the television screen live.

As to the sports in which all this will be possible, football leads the parade. Now already exciting and thrilling to America's sporting millions from a straight radio basis, the game will fairly live as it finds its way visually into the home.

Baseball will progress along those lines . . tennis will be adequate . . golf will be great . . watching those shots . feeling the hush of the crowd around the greens admiring the long, booming drives off the tees.. catching the anxiety on the players' faces.

One sport that will be tough is boxing. With two men at such close range, in such a small space, the camera will be ahead of the broadcaster.

The Gate

Of course, the really big problem from the standpoint of the fan will come when television—if it ever should—hurts the gate. Then look out. The cost of the rights will be sensationally high. The bankroll for two media of broadcasting might be prohibitive to the client.

Naturally the promoter, matchmaker or athletic director is going to protect his gate at all times. And if on bad days, when the crowds are down (which seems some way off due to the overall lack of seating), the price tag for rights will skyrocket.

But all in all, the future of sports on the television screen is very bright. Like any new idea or industry it takes some time to work out the bugs.

DeForest Sees Films As Best Tele Carriers

Electronic pioneer Dr. Lee De Forest predicted that films would provide the best and most economical means of television network operation in the future in a talk to the Television Broadcasters Assn. annual meeting Tuesday (7) at which he was guest of honor. Dr. De Forest was given a citation at the meeting.

The scientist also said that tele networks would probably be formed chiefly by radio linkage, and expressed doubt that the telephone company will find such use for its coaxials economically profitable. "Carrier and wide band video frequencies will, in my opinion," he said, "outspeed any economically practical cable and relay improvement."

"This brings me to my favorite thesis," he added, "that the economical eight-hour-per-day television linkage, where highest class of entertainment must be available whenever and wherever it is wanted, and at minimum expense, must be by the ever-reliable, time-honored, film-in-the-can carrier system."

Concerning color, Dr. De Forest said monochrome would dominate the art for the next several years, but the advent of color television is awaited.

Television Review

MUMMERS PARADE
With John Franklin, Peter Roberts, announcers
Producer-director: Clarence Thomas Tech. directors: Ray Bowley, John Roth
245 Mins.; Wed. (1) 10:40 a.m.
SEARS-ROEBUCK
WPTZ-Philco, Philadelphia
(Benjamin Eehleman)

That television has come a long way in the past few years was well demonstrated New Year's Day (1) with Philco's WPTZ broadcast of the famous Mummers Parade, under sponsorship of the catalog telephone order service of Sears, Roebuck.

The first television broadcast of this colorful event, historic New Year's Day feature as far as thousands of Philadelphians are concerned, was an experimental job back in 1939, over WXEL and the latest broadcast disclosed vividly how far television has come since the old days.

Clarence Thoman, special events director of the station, assisted by Ernest Walling, program manager, and announcers John Franklin and Peter Roberts coordinated their efforts in smooth style to bring this holiday feature to the eight of owners of television sets in this area.

The parade showed up on the screen remarkably well, considering weather conditions—the parade began passing in review at downtown City Hall at 10:40 a.m., and snow, accompanied by blustery winds, started to fall at about 11 o'clock. From that hour until the parade was over, at 2:45 p.m., weather conditions were far from ideal for television broadcasting.

WPTZ used two Image Orthicons for the job, one mounted on a truck in which the control room was set up and another camera on the fourth floor balcony of City Hall, looking south on Broad street. Most close-up shots came from the truck at street level, although a few were made from the upper level. The parade was radioed from City Hall location to the downtown studios three blocks away, and then relayed to the transmitter at suburban Wynnewood.

The broadcast was excellent, considering weather conditions. The show was perhaps too long for a television event, but that was inherent in the feature itself, and consequently no fault of the broadcasters. Skeen began with interview with Mayor Bernard Samuel.

Sears' visual commercials were superimposed over the Broad street parade scene, believed to be the first time that I.O.'s have been used for this purpose. Shal.

ROSE BOWL TELE POOL PLANS IN FOLDEROO

Hollywood

Eastern television stations failed to get together on television pool pictures of Rose Bowl parade and football game which Telefilms, Inc., tried to set up. Previous commitments and other complications caused folderoo of plan to pro rate cost among video outlets.

DuMont's WABD in New York alone got reels while WNBT carried pictures lensed by own crew here for shipment east.

New NBC Stations Group Sets 1st Meeting in Jan.

Members of the new NBC Stations Planning and Advisory Committee will elect a chairman and secretary at their first meeting here Jan. 22-23.

Niles Trammell, NBC prexy, will welcome the new committee, which comprises Paul W. Morency, veepee and general manager, WTIS, Hartford; Richard H. Mason, manager, WPTF, Raleigh; Milton Greenebaum, prez and general manager, WSAM, Saginaw, Mich.; H. W. Slavick, director, WMC, Memphis; John J. Gillin Jr., president, WOW, Omaha; William B. Way, manager, KVOO, Tulsa; Walter E. Waggstaff, general manager, KIDO, Boise and H. Quenton Cox, manager, KGW, Portland, Ore.

BRENEMAN'S HAT IS NOT IN THE RING

My hat . . . or bats, I mean . . . are in smart millinery salons, coast to coast. A complete line of beautiful, wearable hats for women, styled by leading Hollywood designers, now bears the Breneman name.
This is no joke, son . . . as you'll find out when your wife makes you buy her one.

Het-hoppily yours,
TOM BRENEMAN.

First But Flat, Tele Pool Enters Hall of Congress

Passing another important milestone on the highway to becoming the most powerful mass communication medium, television, using the combined facilities of NBC, CBS and DuMont, penetrated the nation's legislative halls for the first time last Friday (3) to televise the opening session of the 80th Congress. Whatever drawbacks the specific program had from the viewpoint of spectator interest, it opened another vista into video's as yet uncharted potential for public service through broad, democratic education.

Pooled broadcast, which was transmitted over the three New York stations as well as DuMont's WTTG in Washington and Philco's WPTZ in Philadelphia, did a straight reporting job on the solons' inaugural ceremonies. Using two Image Orthicons which were stationed in the rear of the House of Representatives directly opposite the Speaker's rostrum, producer Burke Crotty was given full sweep of the auditorium in covering the proceedings. Cameras regularly alternated between panning over the crowded floor and closeup shots of the various Congressmen.

Although the reporting job at hand was executed with good technique, it was apparent that nobody was prepared for the long dull stretches during the proceedings when roll calls were being taken. In the initial 70 minutes of the broadcast, one full hour was taken up by two roll calls, an event of no great excitement. In an effort to fill the breach, announcer John Batchelder's voice came on sporadically with incidental information about the traditions and lawmaking techniques of the lower House. On the whole, it was pallid stuff.

In a 15-minute period preceding the broadcast from within the House, announcers Bill Henry and Bob Cora, working in an adjoining room, brought several House leaders, including Republican leader Charles Halleck and Democratic whip Sam Rayburn, before the cameras where they made the customary ritualistic comments. Foreshadowing what was to come, this portion of the telecast likewise failed to contribute anything of value to an understanding of any of the issues before the new Congress.

Instead of just setting up cameras and recording whatever passed before them, this telecast could have achieved genuine stature by editorial preparation in advance for an on-the-spot documentary. For example, newsreel clips of the House in debate, or committees in operation, might have served as fillers during the roll call to illustrate the work required on upcoming bills. In addition, some of the crucial issues before this Congress could have been detailed through the use of charts and other visual devices. Herm.

Postwar Pains, Strikes Keep Tele From Public

By BOB STAHL

What's holding back television from the public?

Answers to that question have been bandied back and forth by both the public and tele execs since the war's end. Despite charges that competing interests have been trying to stifle the new medium through fear of what it's growth would mean to them in the way of possible competition, video execs themselves lay the snail's pace growth of the medium chiefly to one factor—the war.

Unlike other miraculous new inventions that have been promised to an eagerly-awaiting public as part of its postwar dreamworld, elusive video has been lurking around that much-cliched corner for more than 20 years. Officials of the industry, immediately after V-J Day, began once more to hold out hopes that tele would assume big business proportions before the end of 1945. Came reconversion difficulties, including material shortages and labor strifes, and all their plans of expansion were again quashed. Today tele execs have once more postponed their timetable—this time to the end of 1947.

Evidence that competing forms of entertainment and communications have also played their part in delaying tele's advent can, of course, be found. But, according to video execs who have most to lose through the perennial postponement of their industry, just as much proof can be offered to show that films, radio and legit have given tele a helpful thrust forward. If cooperation from these potential competitors that might have been forthcoming has not been demonstrated in too straightforward a manner, it's attributed to the fact that human nature, being what it is, has always been fearful and skeptical of any new invention.

Tele, of course, can't become big business until there are enough sets out on the market to lure top-coin advertisers into sponsoring video shows. And therein lies the war-effected rub. Illustrative of the way strikes, most troublesome phase of the country's postwar economy, have cut into television plans, is the case of RCA. After finally settling down to a mass-production of its new tele models, RCA took more than 10,000 orders for sets from the general public within the first two or three weeks they were on the market.

Then John L. Lewis called his United Mine Workers out of the coal pits, the nation's transportation system was tied up and RCA couldn't get delivery on many of the component parts needed. Net result to television —a further delay in their plans, leaving the 10,000 unfilled orders suspended in midair.

Color Complex

Television industry itself, of course, has had its share in stymieing the new medium, evidenced mostly by inter-industry color controversy. Reason for the sides taken by both factions in the "color now" or "color in five years" arguments are many, with both accusing the other of trying to snarl the industry via voeiferous arguments that would better have been kept from an already-confused public.

CBS, accused of trying to cloud the issue with demands for commercial color video now in an attempt to protect its radio interests, did upset the applecart in the minds of many applicants for commercial tele applicants. Proof of this is seen in the number of applications withdrawn to "wait for color."

There are several views on this subject, however. Many of these same applicants reportedly became alarmed when they discovered the tremendously high cost of constructing and operating a tele station. Regardless of their beliefs about color, the CBS arguments provided them with a smokescreen behind which they could withdraw their applications and still save face. Several of these applicants were radio broadcasters who had gone into radio on a shoestring and cleaned up. Today, they would prefer to protect their radio interests from possible tele competition and at the same time shut off their pursestrings from video experimentation. Hence, the "let George do it" sentiment.

Recent demonstration by RCA of an all-electronic color system with a converter that could be used to bring high-frequency transmissions to low-frequency sets burst the CBS balloon of obsolescence, its most pertinent argument. DuMont-television followed through with another development in all-electronic color and CBS is still pitching for its sequential standards. FCC is expected to rule on commercial color standards now for color video early this month. Regardless of the outcome, it's to be hoped that both factions then settle down to work and get television rolling forward.

Filmdom Wary

Films have probably as much to lose as radio if television ever succeeds in throwing off its swaddling clothes, and are naturally wary of it. Both Metro and 20th-Fox have withdrawn their station applications, leaving Paramount the only major company with an active interest. Film companies refuse to lease their scripts to television and most of the top stars have refused to appear on video programs because of the low pay necessarily in effect today. Per is leading the way, however, by conducting a boff publicity campaign on television on the Coast and other film companies are expected to take some stand on the medium as soon as they find out what it's all about.

Legit stars, too, have refused for the most part to do tele shows, and for the same reasons. Dramatists' Guild, however, is an enthusiastic backer of video's possibilities, as evidenced by the pact concluded last spring between the DG and NBC to showcase new legit scripts via NBC television.

Professional sports, including baseball, basketball, hockey and boxing, have already thrown their arenas open to tele cameras. Labor unions—notably the American Federation of Musicians—are emulating the film companies in sitting interestedly on the sidelines to see what this new medium is all about before entering into it, but tele so far has made out all right without them.

All signs, therefore, point to 1947 as television's first big year. Once the programming techniques have been ironed out, it will undoubtedly take its place as one of the top forms of entertainment. Video is technically near perfection and, because it's such a true reporter, holds great promises for the public, with its cultural, educational and social significance giving promise of becoming even more important than its entertainment qualities.

Anything that can be picked up by a microphone and a camera lens is a natural for television. People sitting in the comfort of their own living rooms will be brought important news events as they happen, possibly re-enacted within several moments after the occurrence by a group of specially-trained actors. Important Government officials will be seen as they deliver their messages to the people.

Television will draw people closer to the Government and the Government closer to its people. Most important of all, television will draw governments in all parts of the world closer together, thereby playing its part in the establishment of the "One World" ideology. As DuMont's Commander Mortimer Loewi has repeatedly pointed out, television, because it speaks in pictures as well as in words, can topple the Tower of Babel and skirt the existing language barriers between peoples of different races and different nationalities. Significant is the slogan adopted by the Television Broadcasters' Assn. for its amazing new medium—"Uniting All Peoples."

Hooper 'Punctures' Ratings

Continued on page 113

program Hooperatings (talent popularity ratings) are not made nationally or over a cross-section of the population as is a Gallup poll. Rather, the sampling is done deliberately in a group of 33 cities which are exceptional in that they have local service by all four networks. Because we are seeking comparative network talent popularity ratings, we have to make the measurements where all network talent can be heard. That rather than any whim of ours, determines our choice of localities to sample and keeps us out of rural and small town areas where the radio fare is extremely varied.

The cities polled are well-scattered geographically throughout the U. S. The telephone home sample has been demonstrated to produce listenership records for most network programs closely approximating cross-section samples in those same cities. It follows, therefore, that the Hooper sample is representative of conditions in four-network-service cities in the U. S. and that network program Hooperatings may be accepted as representative of comparative network program talent popularity. No better device presents itself for establishing this popularity measure on programs. Radio buyers and sellers have made great progress since the advent of the ratings by using them to effect increasing efficiency in the selection of radio talent.

A Hooperating can, in short, be interpreted as a measure of (1) program popularity, qualified by such other factors affecting its audience; (2) the time of broadcast; (3) the program preceding and following, and (4) the programs competing.

Now to size of sample. The large number of periods of the day which radio wants sampled (every 15 minute segment from 8 a.m. to 11 p.m.) combined with the frequency with which that radio wants its measurements made (during two full weeks each month) creates the biggest sampling operation which anyone ever conducted anytime, anywhere. The samples are:

Per half hour	1,380	homes called
Per hour	2,760	homes called
Per day	38,000	homes called
Per week	270,870	homes called
Per month	429,000	homes called
Per year	5,155,200	homes called

Additional Calls

That covers only the sampling done in 33 cities for the purpose of publishing network program Hooperatings. In addition, 4,340,000 calls annually are made in 42 additional cities which typically have none, one, two or three local network outlets but which do not have local four-network-service. The latter are used exclusively in the publication of city Hooperating reports which show the comparative popularity of network and local programs city-by-city. Inclusion of any interviewing from these 42 cities in our network program Hooperatings would create program ratings which would be completely without comparative significance as measures of talent popularity. (That is, availability of programs in such cities determines programs people can listen to.)

But let's get back to the 1,380 homes called per half hour. When we start calling we don't know if everybody will be listening to a program or nobody. Either result would be significant. If 100 is the rating, 1,380 homes would be called and all 1,380 would be found listening to the same program. In the case of a O.O. rating, 1,380 homes would be called and nobody found listening. The sample is the same in both cases.

In our last three week-long surveys weekly average evening set-in-use went from 29.7 to 31.9 to 32.3. If you want to translate this into homes for each 1,380 called, the average number of listeners went from 410 to 440 to 445. During the same period the persons tabulated as not listening went from 970 to 940 and then to 935. Is that significant? Well, the same sort of thing has happened each year since 1934 during this particular season. The sample looks stable.

How about low rating shows? In the last three reports "Doctors Talk It Over," a low rating program, received a 0.9, then 1.5, then 1.5. If this were a half-hour show, this would mean that the number of listeners went from 12 to 20 to 20. But of equal stabilizing influence on the result is the total which would have been tabulated as not listening. Those totals would have been 1,368 found not listening on the night of October 21st; 1,360 not listening on the night of November 4th; and 1,360 not listening on the night of November 18th. Actually, this is a quarter-hour program with half that sample. But is it stable? I'll leave it to you. At this same season one year ago the program's rating was 1.6.

During the Oct. 16, '46 broadcast of Bing Crosby we used two different samples. One sample was 1,380. Its Crosby rating was 24.0. The second sample was three times as big as the first. Its Crosby rating was 24.2.

During the Oct. 23, '46 broadcast of Bing Crosby we used four different samples. Three of the samples totalled approximately the same number of calls each: 1,381, 1,382 and 1,406. The fourth sample was the combination of the first three: 4,169 homes called. Sample A produced a rating of 18.1; sample B, 17.9; sample C, 19.1. The triple sample, a combination of A, B and C was 18.3.

During the Oct. 30, '46 broadcast of Bing Crosby we again used four different samples. The total calls this time were: 1,357, 1,386, 1353. The combined sample totalled 4,096. The ratings were as follows: 14.9, 14.8, 14.6. The combined (triple) sample produced a 14.8.

Does the radio business want to spend three times as much to obtain those fractional changes in the direction of greater accuracy in ratings? I don't think so.

The Way Out

There is a way out of the confusion. There is a way to treat Hooperatings factually and unemotionally. It involves treating radio and radio measurements as they are rather than as one might wish them to be. It involves using Hooperatings the way they are designed to be used:

A network program Hooperating is a measure of comparative network program popularity, reflecting also influence on that popularity of such factors as time of broadcast, program preceding and following, programs competing but not of network strength.

A city Hooperating is a measure of competitive program popularity within a city reflecting also influence on that popularity of such factors as time of broadcast, program preceding and following, programs competing, but not of station strength.

There are two measurements in radio which have been designed to make complete audience comparisons between programs, stations or networks. When they come into general use all factors contributing to create the total audience to a program will be reflected in one measurement. They are:

1. National Hooperatings, designed to show the combined effect of talent and network in reaching all U. S. radio homes. We will do this by actually sampling all types of U. S. radio homes. This measurement is still in the proposal stage.

2. Area Hooperatings, designed to show the combined effect of talent and station in reaching all radio homes in the station's listener coverage area. We do this by sampling all types of radio homes in all counties claimed by the station. We are currently producing Area Hooperatings.

Until such time as National Hooperatings and Area Hooperatings become generally available, it is true that the information available to the buyer of talent is more precise and better engineered than the information available to the buyer of time. This is not an excuse for him to use the popularity rating as a substitute for all the other radio records available to him.

Appraisals of radio's strength and values, in addition to the Hooperatings, should be made with the following records before one:

1. Listener coverage map.
2. Radio homes in claimed counties.
3. Retail sales in claimed counties.
4. Population and employment characteristics.
5. Time rate-card.

BILL PERRY
Tenor
"SATURDAY NIGHT SERENADE"
9:45-10:15 p.m., EST, CBS
Going on 10th Year With Pet Milk
SEASON'S GREETINGS

Operation Ulcer

Continued from page 113

satisfying the other authors who always feel that their sacred words are being maliciously mutilated. The pressure of trying to make a 40-minute script fit into a 30-minute time slot, without cutting. The pressure of proving to the censor that though the original joke may have been dirty, the switch is clean. The pressure of satisfying my soul that that is actually true. The pressure, week after week, of seeing the hilariously funny ideas I created on Sunday being cremated on Monday. When I feel like I'm living, which isn't often, I feel like I'm living in a mental incinerator. My wife is complaining that I don't come home nights any more ..my secretary is complaining about the same thing...my friends aren't complaining because I have no friends. My children are suggesting that my wife get married. Only my agent and my ulcers are happy. Excuse me, I gotta take another red pill."

So Irving threw a red pill into himself while I helped him get the glass of water to his mouth. Then he nervously pulled out a watch and said, "Holy catfish, it's late! It's already 12 o'clock." "Twelve o'clock?", I said. "It's only 8:30. Your watch must be wrong." "Oh excuse me," he said. "I was looking at my stopwatch. That's another thing that drives me crazy, my stopwatch. Oh, that pressure of getting enough 'spread,' and then when you get it, oh, that pressure of getting off the air on time, so that the announcer can spend 45 seconds telling everybody to save used fat ..the same used fat that the announcer before him and the announcer after him told everybody to save. That's what's killing me...used fat! Excuse me, I gotta take a white pill."

"To tell you the truth, Uncle Dick," Irving continued, as he wiped the beads of perspiration off his flushed face. "These days I'm only sure of one thing, my obituary. And that's the one thing I've written that I insist must be engraved on my tombstone without changes, cuts or revisions. If ever a son of yours should want to be a writer or producer of radio, for God's sake show it to him before he makes up his mind."

And so, son, here's what Irving wrote, and if you still want to be a writer and producer of comedy shows, you have my blessing and sympathy.

"Here lies the script for Solomon Grundy
Born on Sunday
Polished on Monday
Revised on Tuesday
Cut on Wednesday
Previewed on Thursday
Censored on Friday
Revised on Saturday
Broadcast on Sunday
Buried on Monday
Here lies the script for Solomon Grundy."

'Clucksters'

Continued from page 110

there trying to arrange her mental notes in order not to confuse her report to the girls of the South Pontiac Chevrolet Drivers & Widows of Pedestrians Club back home.

Another group—or sub-group, perhaps—might be the Glum Lums: honest, hard-working men who are dragged to the broadcast by their wives merely because the missus can't park the car. The Glum Lums sit more or less quietly, occasionally snarling softly at the proceedings they don't listen to even when they're home. These men are, in the main, desirable, because they occupy a seat that might be taken by the most horrendous of all Cluckster types—the dreaded, nauseating Larnyx Freak.

When a baby is born, the obstetrician spanks his fanny and the infant cries. All too frequently, however, a child comes into the world without that cry. Instead, his first sound is a laugh. Not an ordinary laugh, but one which starts at a high pitch, modulates into a whinny, descends to a deep rumble, then throbs into a bombastic shrill vibrato. This baby grows up to be a Larnyx Freak. All through his school years he disrupts classes and assemblies by throwing back his head, pounding his knees and piercing the eardrums of people within a half mile radius. There are some people who laugh at the Freak's nerve-wracking noises and he is encouraged to longer, louder and more frequent outbursts. His avocation becomes the pursuit of being heard. Despite detectives hired by some agencies to prohibit the human hyena from entering their studios, many are still slipping past the "private ears" and staking out seats where they can do the most harm. They wait until a laugh from the audience is fizzling out, then just before the comedian goes on to his next mot, the Larnyx Freak bursts into action, atomizing everything. It is to be hoped that some day all of these stomach-turning zombies can be gathered in one studio and given enough vocal chords to hang themselves.

The Backgrounders

The backgrounders are an assortment of nuisances. They are the hackers who cough up their lungs in the middle of a medical report on cigarettes; they are the sneezers who blast their nares during a soap powder pitch; they are the mumblers who mutter at the high-point of a 10-minute adaptation of "War and Peace;" they are the gaspers who suck in air when a sound man makes like Olsen & Johnson with the artillery; they are the titterers who tit when a glamour boy has to put on glasses to read his script; they are the whisperers who whisp about the movie queen's strawberry hair; they are the snorters and sniffers and nose-blowers and belchers who test their various organs when they are bored with onstage proceedings.

Finally, there are the Screaming Meemies. These are the little loused-up libidos that are usually found where a young male singer or popular screen idol of the Saturday matinee mob is lending part of his all to the airwaves. At the age where, 20-years ago, a girl would be learning to tat and make brownies, the Screamers of today travel in cosmeticized wolf packs, rushing through open studio doors with shrill cries in their ostrich throats, filling the air with the noises of an upset aviary.

So there you have the barnyard animals of radio, the slag of the studio audiences. It is unfortunate that we cannot escape them without escaping audiences altogether.

But we cannot escape audiences, because they give to us writers that 3½ minutes of noise.

ROBERT ARMBRUSTER
Exclusive Management, ART RUSH, Inc.

1946

A wonderful year for ABC!

During the past year ABC is the only network to show an increase in share of night-time audience. This is due, of course, to improved programming, which accounts for many of the awards won by ABC stars in the Motion Pjcture Daily Annual Radio Poll.

Bing Crosby
Best Male Vocalist (popular), first
Best Master of Ceremonies, first
Champion of Champions, second (tie)
Film Player Most Effective on the Air, third

Henry Morgan
Most Promising Star of Tomorrow, first
Best Comedy Show, second Best Comedian, third

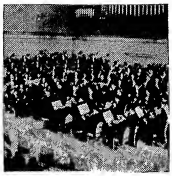
Serge Koussevitzky
Symphonic Conductor, second



Boston Symphony
Symphonic Orchestra, second

HULBURD PHOTO

John Hersey's Hiroshima Story
Best News Broadcasts of 1946 by Newspaper, Magazine and Radio Columnists and Critics, third

Theatre Guild on the Air
Dramatic Programs, second

Paul Whiteman
Musical Shows, second (tie)

Milton Cross
Studio Announcers, third (tie)

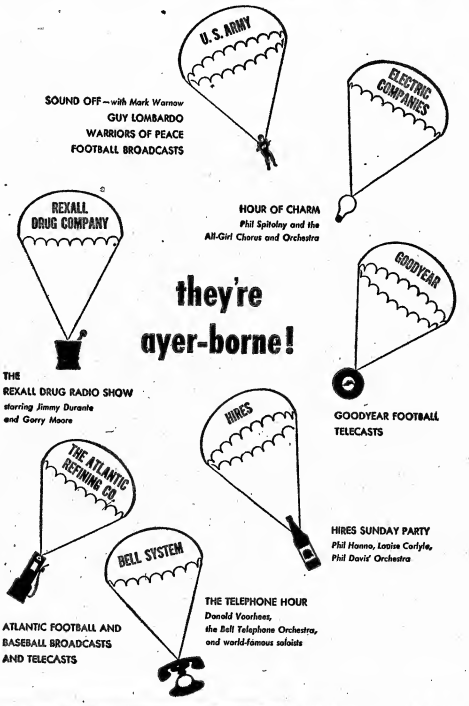
Don McNeill's Breakfast Club
Daytime Programs, second

Harry Wismer
Sportscasters, third (tie)

Tom Breneman's Breakfast in Hollywood
Daytime Programs, third

ABC American Broadcasting Company

A NETWORK OF 238 RADIO STATIONS SERVING AMERICA



n. w. ayer & son, inc.

Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, Detroit
San Francisco, Hollywood, Boston, Honolulu, London

VOX POP

(SINCE '32)

Full CBS Network Tuesdays for

LIPTON'S

Address 83 Tuscan Court, Great Neck, N. Y.

Greetings

RAY BLOCH

GREETINGS
from

JACK BENNY

AND FROM MY CAST

MARY LIVINGSTONE
PHIL HARRIS
ROCHESTER
DENNIS DAY
DON WILSON

•

FROM MY WRITERS

SAM PERRIN
MILT JOSEFSBERG
GEORGE BALZER
JOHN TACKABERRY

•

FROM MY PRODUCER

BOB BALLIN

•

AND FROM MY SPONSOR

LUCKY STRIKE
CIGARETTES

THE

DELTA RHYTHM BOYS

•

ON THE AIR

JOAN DAVIS SHOW
CBS—MONDAYS

AMOS AND ANDY RINSO
NBC—TUESDAYS

•

NOW

EXCLUSIVE

VICTOR RECORDING ARTISTS

PERSONAL MANAGEMENT PAUL KAPP
400 MADISON AVE., NEW YORK CITY and Company

ERWIN WASEY

Carnation Contented Hour
Adventures of Sherlock Holmes
Lone Journey
Barbasol Midnite Matinees
Young People's Church of the Air
Gabriel Heatter

. . . and other programs
for Kreml, Barbasol, Forhan's,
Primrose House, House of Herbs,
Harvester and Dutch Masters Cigars,
Musterole, Pertussin,
Albers Cereals, Carnation, Friskies,
Larvex, and Zonite.

NOW 25,000 WATTS OF SELLING POWER

SOON 50,000 WATTS OF SELLING POWER

THE NEW WJJD CHICAGO

A MARSHALL FIELD STATION
REPRESENTED NATIONALLY
BY AVERY-KNODEL

IT'S CLICKING!

This year DANCER-FITZGERALD-SAMPLE concentrated its show problems in the hands of show people by organizing SHOW PRODUCTIONS, Inc. SHOW PRODUCTIONS, Inc., a part of DANCER-FITZGERALD-SAMPLE, set out to accomplish these objectives:

1. TO MAKE IT EASIER FOR CREATIVE PEOPLE TO DO THEIR FINEST WORK. SHOW PRODUCTIONS, Inc., understands and appreciates the problems of creative work—and is able to cooperate with these talents in ways that lighten the load of details, appointments and conferences. This conserves creative time and frees it for the best creative results.

2. TO ENCOURAGE NEW SHOW IDEAS AND NEW TALENT. SHOW PRODUCTIONS, Inc., makes it easier for the man with an idea to reach the people in our office who have authority to pass judgment and make decisions. This helps anyone with a good idea to receive prompt hearing, clear understanding and fast action. . . . IT'S CLICKING!

SHOW PRODUCTIONS, Inc. with its headquarters in our offices at 247 Park Avenue in New York is managing the shows in New York, Chicago, Hollywood and Toronto.

DANCER-FITZGERALD-SAMPLE, INC.

Advertising

247 Park Avenue, New York 17, N. Y. ★ 221 N. LaSalle Street, Chicago 1, Illinois

Royal Bank Building, Toronto 1, Ontario, Canada

★

BEGINNING SIXTH YEAR "TAKE IT OR LEAVE IT"

PHIL BAKER

Management: WILLIAM MORRIS AGENCY

BIOW ADVERTISING AGENCY

QUESTIONS COMPILED BY MISS EDITH OLIVER, PH.D.

WWSW continues to lead!

Wins N. W. Ayer & Son award

WESTERN UNION

NABOT 61 1 EXTRA-RR NEW YORK NY 18 COPY

FRANK R SMITH
STATION WWSW - PGH

CONGRATULATIONS. AYER RADIO AWARDS JUDGES HARRY O'BRIEN, DICK DORRANCE AND MATTHEW CRAPPEL HAVE VOTED YOUR STATION FIRST PLACE UNDER FIVE THOUSAND WATTAGE CLASSIFICATION. YOUR TROPHY BEING ENGRAVED WILL BE SENT TO YOU END OF MONTH WITH CERTIFICATE OF PERFORMANCE. YOUR SPLENDID COOPERATION IN MAKING FOOTBALL BIG SUCCESS HANDSOMELY APPRECIATED BY N. W. AYER & SON. MANY THANKS FOR YOUR PARTICIPATION.

ROBERT COLLYER MANAGER RADIO DEPARTMENT

For the past ten years, N. W. Ayer & Son has used WWSW in sports coverage. In their first year of competitive prizes, we accept and proudly add to our collection of national awards the N. W. Ayer & Son Gold Cup for outstanding promotion of football broadcasts.

Pittsburghers know that WWSW always carries the ball with extensive sports, flash news and special event coverage as well as showmanship. The award is more proof of what we've been saying—WWSW is Pittsburgh's magic carpet for both listeners and advertisers.

More Listeners Per Dollar in Pittsburgh

WWSW & FM Affiliate WMOT—Pittsburgh's Only Independent & 24-Hour Station—Represented by Forjoe & Co.

CONGRATULATIONS

TO

VARIETY

FROM

SCHOLASTIC ROTO

AND ITS

MILLION TEEN-AGE READERS

DIAL 850, Sir

FOR A DIRECT WIRE TO NEW ENGLAND— that's WHDH!

New England's Fastest-Growing Independent Station!

Acceptance isn't easily won. That's why it's smart to direct your sales talks to New Englanders over their own INDEPENDENT station. The WHDH policy of better programming, to suit New England tastes, guarantees enthusiastic acceptance for advertisers.

WHDH
LEADS IN NEW ENGLAND WITH

NEWS SPORTS MUSIC

EVERY HOUR
ON THE HALF-HOUR

All news periods completely written and edited by Station's independent news staff.

Special news commentary daily by Ray Kierman, one of New England's foremost news analysts.

BASEBALL
American League Champions
Boston Red Sox
Boston Braves

FOOTBALL
Harvard and other college games
Boston Yanks professional games

HOCKEY
Boston Bruins

"MUSIC FOR BREAKFAST"
•
"CARNIVAL OF MUSIC"
•
"BACK BAY MATINEE"
•
Three of Boston's Leading Participation Shows

WHDH

Check Now for Availabilities
6 ST. JAMES AVE., BOSTON, MASS.
5000 WATTS...850 ON THE DIAL
Represented by John Blair & Company

MARX B. LOEB

NOW FREELANCING

WOULD LIKE TO TAKE THIS OPPORTUNITY TO THANK C.B.S., ITS MANAGEMENT, AND ITS PERSONNEL, FOR 8 WONDERFUL YEARS.

Current
"RADIO READER'S DIGEST"
for Hallmark
CBS

Beginning January 26th
"THE GREATEST STORY EVER TOLD"
for Goodyear
ABC

both, Rayshow, Inc., Productions
One East 54th Street
New York City

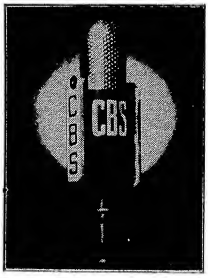
ELDRIDGE PACKHAM

Director

CHESTERFIELD SUPPER CLUB

FROM HOLLYWOOD

Irving Mansfield



Thank You(se)!

—all you great guys and gals of the 'WINNER TAKE ALL' gang . . .

for making the 3:30-4:00 spot on CBS such a happy and satisfying one every day in the week.

Thanks to our great MC—Bill Cullen—Johnny Tillman, our announcer; Mal West, our engineering wizard; Chet Kingsbury, our organist; Frank Dodge, our CBS production man; Jeannie McCarthy and Barbara Olsan, our merchandise slaves—and all the wonderful CBS folk who've helped so much to make WINNER TAKE ALL a smooth running operation.

(PS: Thanks, too, to the many agency men who've indicated in such positive terms their active interest in seeing the show go commercial.)

Sincerely,

BILL TODMAN MARK GOODSON

up-to-the-minute man

FOR ALMOST a quarter-century WOR's reputation for complete, unbiased, objective newscasting has been one of the bright stars in radio. It's men like George Carson Putnam who have helped to make it glow. What he thinks of news and how it should be handled, would make a Greeley or a Pulitzer beam and what listeners think of Putnam makes Hooper history. For instance, one of his quarter-hours pulls half as many listeners as Hooper ordinarily finds tuned to Fred Allen!

Putnam's personality has a lot to do with his popularity. His voice is as distinctive as a Cartier wrapup and resonant as a bass viol. Walter Winchell once wrote, "George Putnam is the greatest male voice in American radio." And TIME says, "No other newscaster in New York has attracted as many listeners as George Putnam."

WOR has George Carson Putnam spotted at some of its best times throughout the week. In fact, he's aired on Sunday at 11:00 A.M., when 97% of all New Yorkers, according to Crossley, are up and having breakfast. That time, by the way, is for sale – now. Why not call WOR today and find out how economically George Carson Putnam's up-to-the-minute news can make up-to-the-minute sales for your product or service? The number is PE 6-8600; the address, WOR – that power-full station at 1440 Broadway, in New York.

EDDY DUCHIN

KRAFT MUSIC HALL

NBC, Thursday, 9 P.M., E.S.T.

MUSIC CORPORATION OF AMERICA

May You All Be

"LONG FOR THIS WORLD"

AJAX CASSIDY

c/o THE WILLIAM O'MORRIS AGENCY

BUTTE, CALIF.
HUMBOLDT, CALIF.
YUBA, CALIF.
MERCED, CALIF.
MONTEREY, CALIF.
SHASTA, CALIF.
SAN LUIS OBISPO, CALIF.
LINN, ORE.
CLATSOP, ORE.
COOS, ORE.
JOSEPHINE, ORE.
DOUGLAS, ORE.
GRAYS HARBOR, WASH.
LEWIS, WASH.
COWLITZ, WASH.
THURSTON, WASH.
SHOSHONE, IDAHO.

DON LEE DELIVERS

2 TIMES the audience of Network "A"

3½ TIMES the audience of Network "B"

8¾ TIMES the audience of Network "C"

IN THESE IMPORTANT PACIFIC COAST COUNTIES
TOTAL POPULATION 605,100 (Equal to Portland PLUS Spokane PLUS Fresno)

THIS IS AN EXAMPLE OF THE TERRIFIC COVERAGE OBTAINABLE ONLY WITH THE 41 STATIONS OF THE DON LEE BROADCASTING SYSTEM — PROVED BY THE GREATEST REGIONAL SURVEY EVER MADE BY C. E. HOOPER

Mutual
DON LEE
BROADCASTING SYSTEM

The Nation's Greatest Regional Network

Harry Von Zell

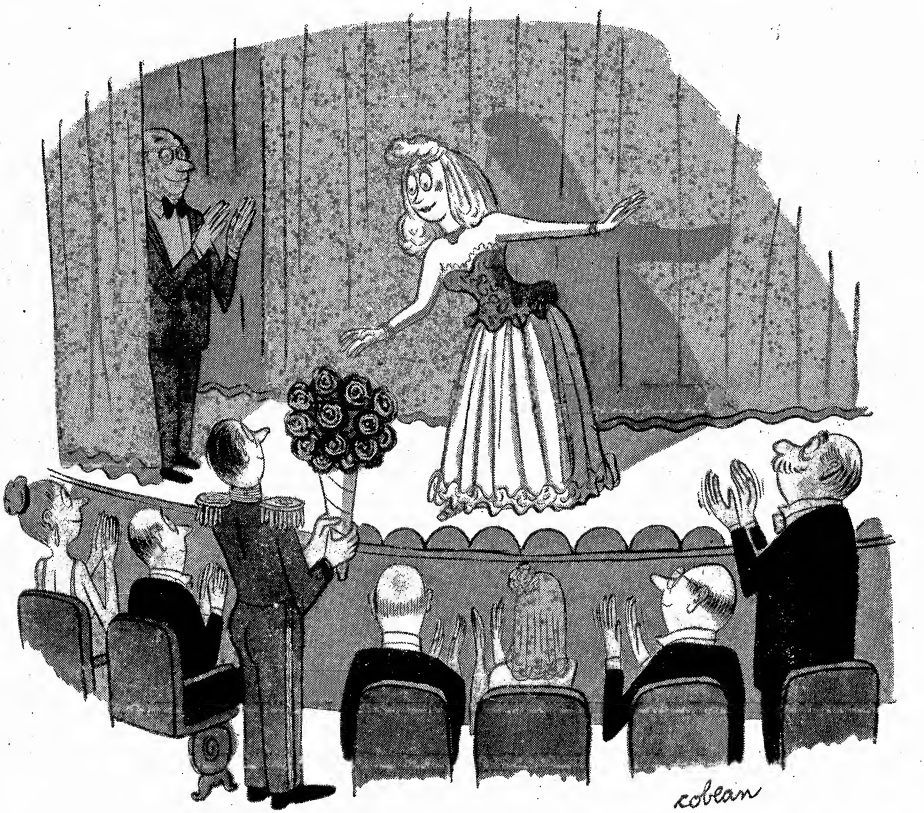
RADIO
8th Year With
EDDIE CANTOR

PICTURES
Comedy Short Series
COLUMBIA PICTURES

Schwimmer & Scott, Inc.

ADVERTISING AGENCY

CHICAGO



WHAT'S A HIT?

Whenever anyone finances a play, a motion picture, or a radio program, he does so with the expectation that it will make money.

The play and the motion picture have the objective of attracting enough people to the box office to return a profit.

The commercial radio program has the objective of attracting enough people to stores to return a profit.

It is this ability to attract customers that distinguishes the hit from the flop in all three fields of entertainment.

YOUNG & RUBICAM, INC.
ADVERTISING

New York Chicago Detroit San Francisco Hollywood Montreal Toronto Mexico City London

What the New Year and 5000 Watts mean to KQV!

With 5,000 watt operation, KQV will broadcast a sure-fire signal to 1,174,679 people within the five MV/M contour (*not 0.5) during the day, and to 1,059,302 people within the five MV/M area (*not 0.5) during the evening hours. This clear, unfailing reception will add abundantly to the enjoyment and popularity of KQV—a popularity that has grown tremendously in the past year because KQV is

Pittsburgh's Aggressive Station

*If you're interested in 0.5 MV/M coverage, write us. We have the figures.

KQV

The Station that originated "Opinion-aire"

1410 ON YOUR DIAL

Basic Mutual Network • National Representatives: WEED & CO.

"BREAK THE BANK"

THE BIGGEST MONEY
PAYING SHOW ON THE AIR
and
THE SEASON'S
MOST EXCITING SHOW
9:00 P.M., E.S.T., A.B.C., NETWORK
A WOLF ASSOCIATES PRODUCTION
FOR BRISTOL-MYERS
(SAL HEPATICA—MUM)

★ ★ ★

Available "Try 'n' Find Me"—An Exciting
5-a-Week Audience Show of Proven Merit

WOLF ASSOCIATES, INC.
420 Madison Avenue
New York, New York

Memo to: Miss Irene Roche of BBDO'S script
filing department

Attached are the scripts for one week's network radio programs

Radio Program prepared and produced by... BATTEN, BARTON, DURSTINE & OSBORN, Inc.

THE WILDROOT CO:, INC.
presents
"THE ADVENTURES OF SAM SPADE"

United States Steel Corporation presents The Theatre Guild on the Air

"THE MAN WHO CAME TO DINNER"
starring
FRED ALLEN

THE DU PONT COMPANY presents
The Cavalcade of America

GERALDINE FITZGERALD
in
"THE LADY OF THE LIGHT"

Radio Program prepared and produced by... BATTEN, BARTON, DURSTINE & OSBORN, Inc.

BROMO-SELTZER
presents
INNER SANCTUM
• • •
"BUT THE DEAD WALK ALONE"

Radio Program prepared and produced by... BATTEN, BARTON, DURSTINE & OSBORN, Inc.

THE CRESTA BLANCA WINE COMPANY
presents
"THE HOLLYWOOD PLAYERS"
Starring GREGORY PECK
in "HEAVEN CAN WAIT"

Radio Program prepared and produced by... BATTEN, BARTON, DURSTINE & OSBORN, Inc.

CREAM OF WHEAT
presents
"LET'S PRETEND"

Radio Program prepared and produced by... BATTEN, BARTON, DURSTINE & OSBORN, Inc.

ARMSTRONG'S THEATRE OF TODAY
presents
"THE MAN I MARRY"
starring
EVELYN KEYES

Radio Program prepared and produced by... BATTEN, BARTON, DURSTINE & OSBORN, Inc.

THE WILDROOT CO., INC.
presents
KING COLE TRIO TIME

Radio Program prepared and produced by... BATTEN, BARTON, DURSTINE & OSBORN, Inc.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST
presents
"THE LISTENING POST"

And this is Chiquita Banana reminding you BBDO is the leader in spots with forty-one accounts.

BBDO

BATTEN, BARTON, DURSTINE & OSBORN, INC. Advertising Agency with Offices in:
NEW YORK • BOSTON • BUFFALO • CLEVELAND • DETROIT • LOS ANGELES
PITTSBURGH • MINNEAPOLIS • CHICAGO • SAN FRANCISCO • HOLLYWOOD

AIR FEATURES

INC.

247 PARK AVENUE

NEW YORK

Greetings and continued success to

VARIETY — America's No. 1

guide to show business and radio.

TOM SHIRLEY

The Telephone Hour—NBC

Armstrong's "Theatre of Today"—CBS

"The Hallmark Program"—CBS

Drew Pearson—ABC

and good old Stan Lomax

Management: DELL PETERS

Kiernan's Corner

By WALTER KIERNAN

(American Broadcasting Company and International News Service)

When "Variety" was born, Roosevelt was president, DeForest was fooling around with a thing called a "vacuum tube" and Jack Benny was playing violin with a bow made from his own strawberry curls.

* * *

At that time Crosby didn't own a horse and Hope didn't own a joke. The Cherry Sisters had a network but they weren't on it . . . they were behind it.

* * *

A "sponsor" was a nervous godfather at a christening, "commercial" was the hotel opposite the railroad station and "a rating" was a British sailor.

* * *

Sarah Bernhardt was starting another farewell tour and it was freely predicted that none would ever draw like Caruso . . . especially any little guy in a bow tie.

* * *

And "Variety" has been with us all the way . . . from John Bunny to Bugs Bunny . . . from "The Great Train Robbery" to that thing Mike Jacobs staged last summer.

* * *

And it's my guess that if men finally succeed in blowing themselves off the earth with the atom the plate on "Variety's" press will read "Sock Finish for World!"

You Better Learn the Lingo, Paddy, Because Even Your Old Man Is In Show Business Now...

We know not many of you get up early enough to hear Hi Jinx on WNBC every morning at 8:30—so we'd just like to thank you this way for all the things all the people in show business have taught us.

JINX FALKENBURG PADDY FALKENBURG-McCRARY TEX McCRARY

ROBERT Q. LEWIS

SENDS BEST WISHES FOR

A Record Breaking

NEW YEAR

Sherman & Marquette, Inc.

ADVERTISING

CHICAGO • NEW YORK • HOLLYWOOD

EASY ACES

Transcriptions
FREDRIC W. ZIV COMPANY
Cincinnati, Ohio

Our story is simple and to the point. We are proud of our Station, the work we have accomplished here in the six years of our existence, the honors that have been bestowed upon us by radio editors and others for our programming and public service. Considering this record, our know-how, and the fact that our market is one of the largest in the country, we are certain we can serve you to your complete satisfaction.

WPAT

7 Church Street, Paterson 1, N. J.
ARMORY 4-3400 PENNSYLVANIA 6-2945

6th Year

~YOUR~ HIT PARADE

~GIRL~

Joan Edwards

Singing to You on Saturday Nights from

Hollywood

CBS

MCA ARTISTS, LTD.

VICTOR BORGE

VICTOR BORGE SHOW
9:30 Monday Night
WNBC—NBC

CONCERTS
★
COLUMBIA RECORDS

WE LOVE VARIETY!!!

SIGNED—
The Fellers and Gals from LENNEN & MITCHELL
and the Stars they put on the air—and the advertisers who sponsor them
• • •
OLD GOLD CIGARETTES
MURIEL CIGARS
BRIGGS PIPE MIXTURE
RUPPERT BEER AND ALE
TIDE WATER ASSOCIATED OIL COMPANY

Elliott Lewis
Frank Sinatra
Martha Tilton
Stan Lomax
Wm. Holmes
Ted Sherdeman
The Pied Pipers
Phil Lennen
Opie Cates
Ann Gillmore
John A. Loveton
Boston Blackie
Red Barber
Connie Desmond
Parkyakarkus
Sheldon Leonard
Mervin Miller
Bert Wilson

LENNEN & MITCHELL, Inc. · Advertising · 17 East 45th Street, New York 17, N. Y. · 308 N. Rodeo Drive, Beverly Hills, California

RING OUT, WILD BELLS

—by ALFRED TENNYSON—

Ring out, wild bells, to the wild sky,
The flying cloud, the frosty light:
The year is dying in the night;
Ring out, wild bells, and let him die.

Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring, happy bells, across the snow:
The year is going, let him go;
Ring out the false, ring in the true.

Ring out the grief that saps the mind,
For those that here we see no more;
Ring out the feud of rich and poor,
Ring in redress to all mankind.

Ring out a slowly dying cause,
And ancient forms of party strife;
Ring in the nobler modes of life,
With sweeter manners, purer laws.

Ring out the want, the care, the sin,
The faithless coldness of the times;
Ring out, ring out my mournful rhymes,
But ring the fuller minstrel in.

Ring out false pride in place and blood,
The civic slander and the spite;
Ring in the love of truth and right,
Ring in the common love of good.

Ring out old shapes of foul disease;
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace.

Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be.

Free Speech Mike
GUARDIAN OF AMERICAN FREEDOM

WJR

50,000-WATT CBS AFFILIATE ★ REPRESENTED BY PETRY
THE GOODWILL STATION, INC., FISHER BLDG., DETROIT
G. A. RICHARDS, PRES. ★ OWEN F. URIDGE, VICE-PRES. & GEN. MGR.

RADIO

VARIETY says . . . "Olsen's line of gab is fast and funny, and as emcee he manages to infuse the show with a clambake spirit in which anything goes."

RECORDS

THE BILLBOARD says . . . " 'Let's Play House,' with Johnny Olsen and Bette Buckner going back vocally to their childhood days, make the dittying count." (Apollo No. 1013) Also, in Swedish Dialect, "The Smorgasbord Song" Victor No. 25-1055.

JOHNNY OLSEN

TELEVISION

THE BILLBOARD says . . . "Zip and zany emsee, Johnny Olsen, was in rare shape and with his fast patter proved himself, as usual, a topnotch video entertainer."

THEATRE

THE EVENING TRIBUNE, LAWRENCE, MASS. says . . . "The jam-packed Warner Theatre, which has echoed to the laughter provoked by the best comics in vaudeville, never had a more engaging entertainer than Johnny Olsen, nor a more receptive audience."

"LADIES BE SEATED" - - "OLSEN RUMPUS ROOM"

Both on ABC Coast-to-Coast and TELEVISION

Thanks to "QUAKER OATS" (Aunt Jemima) Our Sponsor—and My Gal PENNY

WARD WILSON BERT LEE MARTY GLICKMAN

HEARD TOGETHER ON

"Warm-Up Time"
"Sports Extra"
"Take A Tip From Me"

WHN NEW YORK'S STATION FOR SPORTS

New Year's Greetings

FROM THE

QUIZ KIDS

CELEBRATING THEIR 7th YEAR on the ALKA-SELTZER Program

★

LOUIS G. COWAN, INC. Creator and Owner

250 WEST 57th STREET, NEW YORK, NEW YORK • 8 SOUTH MICHIGAN AVENUE, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

JAMES PARKS Exclusive Radio Representative

333 N. MICHIGAN AVENUE, CHICAGO, ILL. • 12511 HORTENSE STREET, NORTH HOLLYWOOD, CALIF

QUIZ KIDS PROGRAM IS BROADCAST SUNDAYS 4:00 P.M. (EST) COAST-TO-COAST NBC NETWORK

★ ★ ★

Now . . . 6 NETWORK PROGRAMS SELLING Miles Laboratories Products:

LUM AND ABNER . . . . 6 YEARS OLD
NEWS OF THE WORLD . . . . 6 YEARS OLD
NEWSPAPER OF THE AIR . . . 11 YEARS OLD
QUEEN FOR A DAY . . . . FIRST YEAR
HISTORICAL ALMANAC OF THE AIR . . . . 4 YEARS OLD

New! ROY ROGERS Saturday Night Roundup!

★

Produced by . . . . WADE ADVERTISING AGENCY

General Advertising Counsel

CHICAGO • LOS ANGELES

ALKA-SELTZER . . . ONE-A-DAY (BRAND) VITAMINS

"CAN YOU TOP THIS?"

SENATOR FORD • PETER DONALD • JOE LAURIE, JR. • WARD WILSON • HARRY HERSHFIELD

"PALMOLIVE"
NBC

ED. J. WEBER
Gen'l Mgr.
156 W. 44th St., New York 18, N. Y.

"KIRKMAN"
WOR

Season's Greetings

ROY BARGY

Musical Conductor and Arranger

For

JIMMY DURANTE
GARRY MOORE
RADIO PROGRAM FOR

REXALL
On CBS Every Friday Evening

Management: WM. McCAFFREY

Thanks Santa For A Swell Year

SEASON'S GREETINGS TO ALL

HERB SHRINER

DIRECTION
WM. MORRIS AGENCY

PROMOTION
SID BAKAL

Continued Success

to

VARIETY

DANNY THOMAS

the music
of
JOHN GART
composer-conductor

WOR-MUTUAL

Gabriel Heater's "A Brighter Tomorrow," "The Carrington Playhouse"

WCBS

"Columbia Workshop," "Richard Lawless"

WNBC

"Playhouse of Favorites," "The House in the Country"

WORLD TRANSCRIPTIONS

MGM, Columbia, RKO Spots

JIMMY BLADE

AND HIS

MUSIC

WMAQ
6:00-6:15 P.M.
Monday Thru Friday
For
Chicago Motor Club
146TH WEEK

° ° °

JIMMY BLADE

AND HIS

MUSIC

RONDO RECORDS

CANADIAN CAPERS
THE DOLL DANCE
AFTER YOU'VE GONE
—ANDALUCIA
12TH ST. RAG
WAITING FOR THE
ROBERT E. LEE

AMERICA'S TOP HEADLINE SINGING GROUP

RCA VICTOR
FAVORITES

DEEP RIVER BOYS

Zanzibar, N. Y. C.

Bill Robinson Rhythm Revue

R.C.A. Victor Records

Radio Guest Stars — Philco Hall of Fame — Hobby Lobby — Kate Smith Show — Jack Smith Show

Associated Program Service — Lang Worth Feature Programs — N.B.C. Thesaurus and Their Nation-Wide Associated Radio Stations

All Major Theatres

Personal Direction
ED KIRKEBY
2908 R.K.O. Bldg.
New York 20, N. Y.

PHIL DAVIS

"HIRES TO YA'"
FOR SECOND YEAR
HIRES SUNDAY PARTY
ABC, COAST-TO-COAST

BOB BURNS

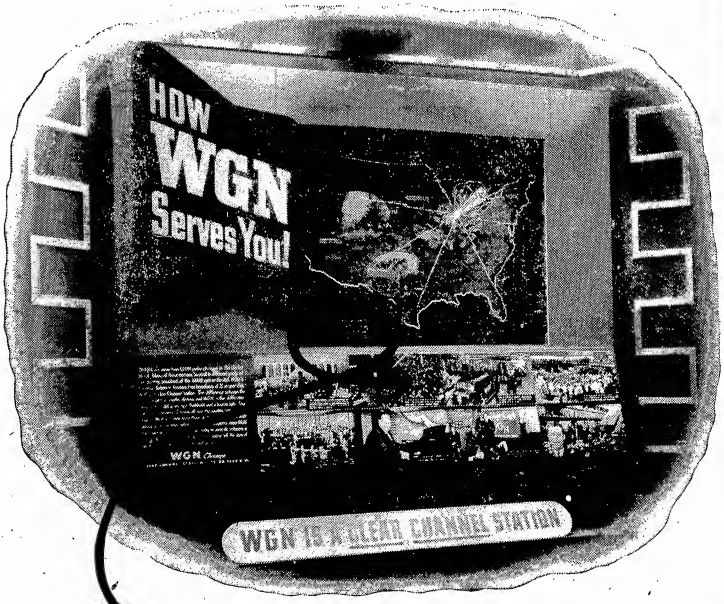
Boy! What a Hooper I'd Have, If People Could
Just Tear Themselves Away From Their Radios
Long Enough to Answer the Phone.

COAST TO COAST N. B. C. EVERY SUNDAY EVENING

P. S.: If You Want to Wish Me a Happy New Year, Just Pray That I Can Keep My Swell Gang With Me on the Show

Happy New Year! Everybody!

JERRY COLONNA



"American radio belongs to the American people and we consider it a sacred trust."

COLONEL ROBERT R. McCORMICK

A Clear Channel Station . . . . . Serving the Middle West

WGN

CHICAGO 11 ILLINOIS
50,000 Watts
720 On Your Dial

MUTUAL BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Eastern Sales Office: 220 East 42nd Street, New York 17, N. Y.
West Coast Representatives: Keenan and Eickelberg
235 Montgomery St., San Francisco 4 • 411 W. Fifth St., Los Angeles 13

GREETINGS

Beryl Vaughan

know the ropes

● It looks complex but if you know the ropes it's simple. Weed and Company men know the ropes and know the people.

WEED AND COMPANY

RADIO STATION REPRESENTATIVES
New York • Boston • Chicago • Atlanta
Detroit • San Francisco • Hollywood

CBS, WED.

FOR

CAMPBELL SOUPS

8 P.M., E.S.T.

Management
STEMPEL-OLENICK AGCY.
Hollywood

CONGRATULATIONS

TO

VARIETY

ON ITS 41ST ANNIVERSARY

JACK CARSON

Season's Greetings and Happy Consequences

Ralph Edwards

Truth Or Consequences
For DUZ
Every Saturday
8:00-8:30 p.m. PST
NBC, Coast-to-Coast

GREETINGS

Mildred Fenton

Season's Greetings

JACK MILLER

MUSICAL DIRECTOR

•

"KATE SMITH SINGS"

ALDRICH FAMILY

MOLLE MYSTERY THEATRE

HALLMARK READER'S DIGEST

GUY LOMBARDO

AND HIS ROYAL CANADIANS

Currently At The

ROOSEVELT HOTEL

NEW YORK

DECCA RECORDS

ON THE AIR

For U. S. Army Recruiting

Monday, 9:30 p.m., EST, on Mutual Network

Exclusive Management

MUSIC CORPORATION OF AMERICA

I'm speaking for JACK CARSON,

For HILDEGARDE – and me,

For CAMPBELL'S SOUPS and ROBERT TROUT–

"Good Luck, VARIETY!"

● THE JACK CARSON SHOW – WEDNESDAY NIGHTS AT 8 EST (REPEAT BROADCAST AT 9 PCT)

● THE CAMPBELL ROOM...STARRING HILDEGARDE–SUNDAY NIGHTS AT 9 EST

● ROBERT TROUT WITH THE NEWS TILL NOW – MON. THRU FRI. – 6:45-7:00 PM EST

Greetings

To my many friends

AL GOODMAN

PRUDENTIAL FAMILY HOUR

FRED ALLEN SHOW

. . .

Recording Exclusively For

R.C.A. VICTOR

BEST WISHES

from

IRNA PHILLIPS

AND

CARL WESTER

hundreds of sick children think Santa is a Blonde

Santa Claus is a blonde, with up-swept hair and a microphone . . . but no whiskers.

You've been taught differently?

So have we . . . but we know four children's hospitals whose young patients you'll find hard to convince otherwise. To them, Santa Claus is Ruth Lyons, that wonderful woman on the radio who visited them again this year.

We wish you could have seen the beautiful, shining tree—heard the squeals as truckloads of toys were distributed—watched these tots, pain and suffering forgotten, singing and laughing . . . it would have been apparent why they were confused. We think maybe you'd understand, too, why the doctors and nurses—and countless listeners at home—blinked back joyful tears.

The generosity of Ruth's loyal "Morning Matinee" listeners made these Christmas parties possible. Each year they eagerly respond to the program's annual drive for children's Christmas funds. Contributors of one dollar or more were sent a booklet, "Seein' Is Believin' ", and thirty thousand copies weren't enough to meet the demand. More than $33,000 was received, and every cent above the cost of the books went to lighten the suffering and pain of patients of children's hospitals in Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Louisville and New York.

"Morning Matinee" is but one of the many WLW-originated programs designed to provide top entertainment for the thousands of listeners who depend upon our clear channel facilities. To serve an area in which 9.5% of all the people in the United States live, makes satisfactory programming a serious and difficult responsibility . . . one which we have dedicated our resources and efforts to fulfill.

WLW
The Nation's Station

CROSLEY BROADCASTING CORPORATION

STANDARD BRANDS, Inc.
TENDERLEAF TEA and SHEFFORD CHEESE
THROUGH
J. WALTER THOMPSON, CO.

Present
Every Sunday Night at 8:30
Via WNBC

THE FRED ALLEN SHOW
STARRING
FRED ALLEN
Featuring
PORTLAND HOFFA
MINERVA PIOUS • KENNY DELMAR
PARKER FENNELY • PETER DONALD Commercials by KENNY DELMAR
Vocals by the DE MARCO SISTERS
Music by AL GOODMAN
Management—WILLIAM MORRIS AGENCY

JOKES BY NAT HIKEN
ROBERT MEISKOPF
HARRY BAILEY
TERRY RYAN
and
FRED ALLEN

"He profits most who serves best" —SHELDON

It was on the night of March 22, 1922, that "The Voice of The South" first spoke . . .

"This is radiophone broadcasting station WSB speaking to you from atop The Journal Building in downtown Atlanta, Georgia."

Informed in advance of the miracle, "radio bugs, of the area sat themselves down to their wire wrapped boxes, donned earphones . . . and commenced a ritual that was to become a sectional habit—listening to WSB.

WSB was the first radio station of the South. It was Dixie's first to broadcast a church service and an agricultural program, first in the Southeast to become affiliated with a national network, first to set up a Frequency Modulation station, and has now been licensed for experimental Facsimile.

Service to its community has earned for WSB a listener-preference uninterrupted since its original broadcast of nearly twenty-five years ago.

WSB
THE VOICE OF THE SOUTH
ATLANTA

750 K. C. • 50,000 WATTS • CLEAR CHANNEL • AFFILIATED WITH NBC REPRESENTED NATIONALLY BY EDWARD PETRY & CO.

IT'S GREAT TO SING WITH KATE!

FOUR CHICKS AND CHUCK

Thank You
TED COLLINS

Arrangements by JACK ALLISON

FRED WARING
and his
PENNSYLVANIANS

NBC – MONDAY THRU FRIDAY – 11 A.M., EST

Celebrating 25 Years of

RADIO ACTIVITY

WIP
IT'S MUTUAL!

WIP-FM • PHILADELPHIA'S PIONEER VOICE
REPRESENTED NATIONALLY—GEO. P. HOLLINGBERY CO.

ANY UNSUNG HEROES TODAY?

Baltimore, Maryland — Each Thursday night on WFBR's Scholastic Scrapbook, a watch is given to the unsung scholastic sports hero of the previous week. Donation is made by Charles McCormick, nationally famous for employee-management relations and a civic leader in Baltimore. Another timely idea by WFBR's forward thinking Program Board. Scholastic Scrapbook is open for smart sponsorship. It pays to advertise on Radio Station WFBR. Ask the Blair man or write WFBR, Baltimore.

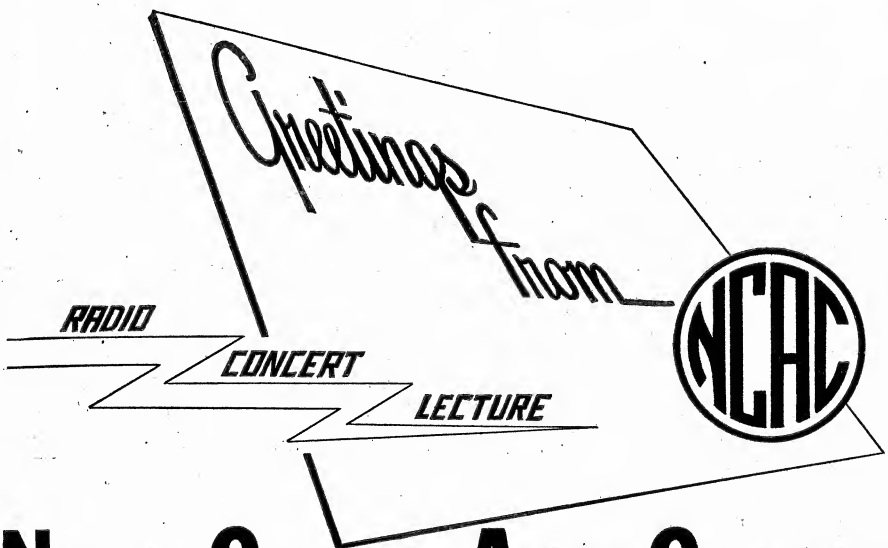
1. 2. 3.
ed cashman
HOLLYWOOD

A salute to VARIETY and to the talented members of the casts of "Pepper Young's Family," "When a Girl Marries," and "Rosemary."
ELAINE CARRINGTON.

ED COOPER
CHICAGO
WGN

GREETINGS
CHICAGO RADIO COUNCIL
STATION WBEZ F.M.—44.3 m.c.
GEORGE JENNINGS
Director

CHICAGO LOLA AMECHE RADIO
JUNIOR JUNCTION
GEO. BARNES OCTET



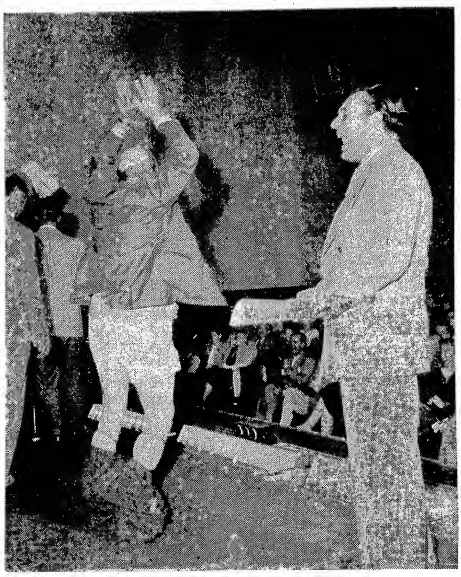
NATIONAL CONCERT AND ARTISTS CORPORATION

NEW YORK ● CHICAGO ● HOLLYWOOD

A FABULOUS OUTFIT

RAYMOND R. MORGAN COMPANY
6362 HOLLYWOOD BLVD.
HOLLYWOOD

MEN OF DISTINCTION...



APPEAR ON

"PEOPLE ARE FUNNY"

NBC — FRIDAYS
FOR
RALEIGH CIGARETTES
STARRING
ART LINKLETTER

(Chosen 2nd to Bing as best emcee on the air in recent poll of all Radio and Picture Editors)

JOHN GUEDEL RADIO PRODUCTIONS
HOLLYWOOD

INCOMPARABLE
Hildegarde

Mgt. LOU CLAYTON
UNITED REXALL DRUG CO.
Friday—(CBS—9:30 p.m., EST
M-G-M—"This Time for Keeps"
"It Happened in Brooklyn"

THE VOICES OF MARLIN BLADES
SATTLER'S DEPT STORE
JINGLES
that don't
JANGLE
RADIO'S MOST COMPLETE, EFFECTIVE JINGLE SERVICE
YOUR Jingle Sung - or - Written, Packaged, Produced:
'LANNY & GINGER' GREY
545-5th AVE., N. Y. C. - AT. 9-4021
ADAMS CLOVERBERMAN'S GUM
ADAM HATS, ETC., ETC.

THERE'S PLENTY OF BUSINESS IN
DAYTON, OHIO
Get Your Share By Using...
WING The Dayton Station
WEED & CO. National Representatives

HOLIDAY GREETINGS

BERNICE WINTERS
INGENUE

ALDRICH FAMILY
GUIDING LIGHT
PERRY MASON
PEPPER YOUNG'S FAMILY
TEEN AGE TIME
DOROTHY DIX

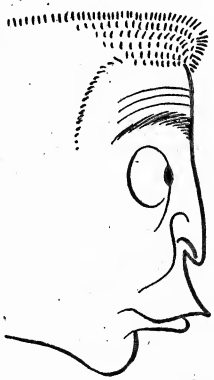
LExington 2-1100

DAVE BACAL
CBS — WBBM
CHICAGO, ILL

SEASON'S GREETINGS
JACK BRICKHOUSE

GREETINGS
RALPH GINSBURGH
AND HIS
PALMER HOUSE ENSEMBLE
WGN — MUTUAL

GREETINGS
THE KING'S JESTERS
CBS — CHICAGO



GARRY MOORE

Sponsored by REXALL DRUGGISTS
Wet-Nursed by PHIL COHAN
Serenaded by ROY BARGY
Announced by HOWARD PETRIE
Sung for by SUZANNE ELLERS
Written for by ELON PACKARD
STANLEY DAVIS
LES WHITE
BUD PEARSON

Bewildered by

JAMES DURANTE

Thanks to—

DON AMECHE DANNY THOMAS FRANCES LANGFORD

PHIL RAPP JERRY SEELEN

For Making Me Look Good as Producer of the

NEW DRENE SHOW

SUNDAY N.B.C.

AND

Thanks to ABE LASTFOGEL, BOB BRAUN, GEORGE GRUSKIN and ANN ROSENTHAL of the William Morris Office for Their Helpful Cooperation

Carlton W. Alsop

Thanks for Another Wonderful Year

THE SPORTSMEN

JACK BENNY

MEL BLANC

JUDY CANOVA

JACK HALEY

PHIL HARRIS

GINNY SIMMS

Management ART RUSH, INC.
JACK STEWART

Suite 116, NBC Bldg., Hollywood Hillside 5161

Congratulations

to VARIETY

on its

41st Anniversary

Foote, Cone & Belding

Advertising

New York • Chicago • Los Angeles • San Francisco • Hollywood • London

EDGAR BERGEN

CHARLIE McCARTHY

MORTIMER SNERD

NOW IN THEIR TENTH SEASON....

THE

CHASE AND SANBORN

HOUR

SUNDAYS...OVER NBC

Soon....

in

WALT DISNEY'S

"FUN AND FANCY-FREE"

Season's Greetings....

TO VARIETY

from

NICK CARTER

DR. I. Q.

JUDY AND JANE

CURTAIN TIME

and all other Grant Radio Productions

Grant Advertising, Inc.

CHICAGO • DALLAS • NEW YORK • HOLLYWOOD • DETROIT
WESLACO • MIAMI • HAVANA • MEXICO CITY • MONTERREY
CARACAS • RIO DE JANIERO • SAO PAULO • BUENOS AIRES
LONDON • TORONTO • SHANGHAI

"I'll Be Seeing You"

JOHN McCORMICK

MATINEE AT MIDNIGHT

CBS – CHICAGO

16TH YEAR IN RADIO

EDDIE CANTOR

"I Love To Spend Each Thursday With You"

SONGS

MARGARET WHITING

CAST

HARRY VON ZELL

MUSIC

EDGAR "COOKIE" FAIRCHILD

THURSDAY NIGHTS, 10:30 EST, NBC

WRITERS

DAVID SCHWARTZ

IRVING ELINSON

JOHN RAPP

NORMAN PAUL

PRODUCER

MANNING OSTROFF

SPONSOR

PABST BLUE RIBBON BEER

ADVERTISING AGENCY

WARWICK & LEGLER

REPRESENTED BY

WILLIAM MORRIS AGENCY

YOUNG AMERICA'S FAVORITE RECORDING ARTIST

MARGARET WHITING

APPEARING ON THE

EDDIE CANTOR SHOW

FOR

PABST BLUE RIBBON

EVERY THURSDAY ON N.B.C.

•

RECORDING FOR CAPITOL RECORDS

•

AGENCY
WILLIAM MORRIS

PERSONAL MANAGEMENT
BILL BURTON

CHEERS TO

VARIETY

LINDSAY MacHARRIE

DIRECTOR-PRODUCER

"WE, THE PEOPLE"

For Gulf Oil Companies and Your Neighborhood Good Gulf Dealer

Congratulations---

DINAH

Columbia Recording Artist

THE FORD SHOW

Starring

DINAH SHORE

CBS Wednesday Evenings for the Ford, Mercury and Lincoln Dealers

9.30 P.M., EST—8.30 P.M., CST— 7.30 P.M., MST—6.30 P.M., PCT

GINNY SIMMS

2ND YEAR

FOR

BORDEN'S

FRIDAY, CBS

Exclusive Management—M.C.A. ARTISTS, LTD.

LYN MURRAY

RADIO

- YOUR HIT PARADE
- SOUND OFF
- INTERNATIONAL HARVESTER

RECORDS

LONESOME TRAIN—DECCA
JO STAFFORD—CAPITOL
MARK WARNOW—M-G-M
THE MAGIC WORKSHOP—COSMO
DISC OF THE MONTH

TRANSCRIPTION

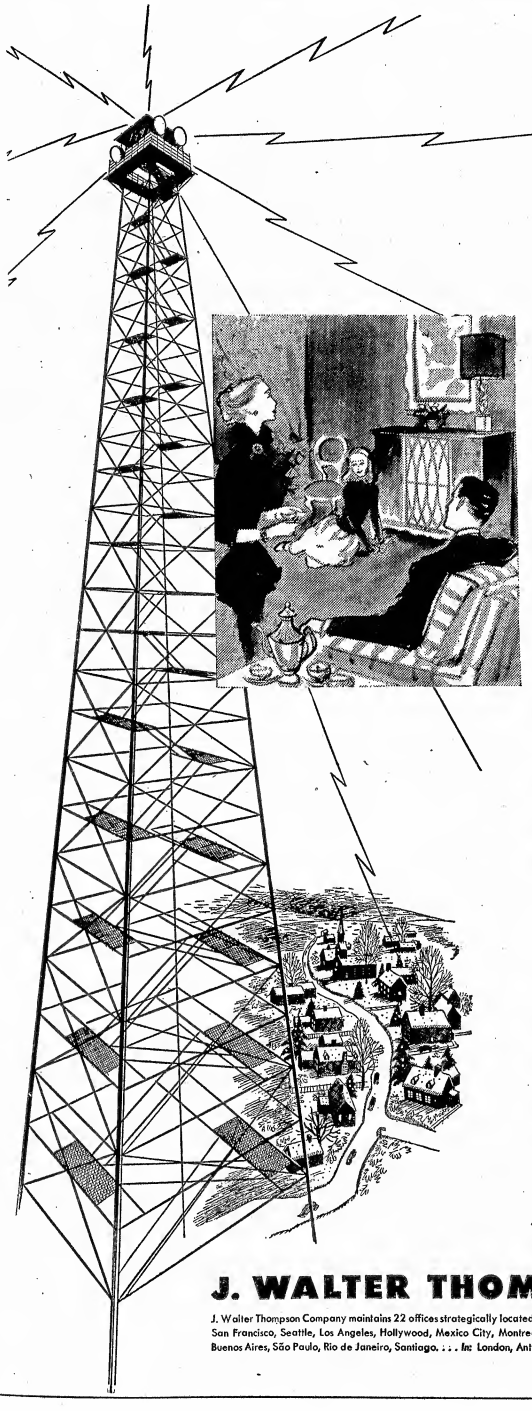
REPUBLIC STEEL

BROADWAY

FINIAN'S RAINBOW

Management
WMA

WALLY JORDAN
SAMMY WEISBORD



RADIO

Fred Allen Standard Brands Incorporated

Edgar Bergen Standard Brands Incorporated

Breakfast Club Swift & Company

Dinah Shore Ford, Mercury and Lincoln Dealers

Information Please The Parker Pen Company

Kraft Music Hall Kraft Foods Company

Lux Radio Theatre Lever Brothers Company

My True Story Libby, McNeill & Libby

News with Ned Calmer The Parker Pen Company

News with Bill Henry Johns-Manville Corporation

One Man's Family Standard Brands Incorporated

RCA Victor Show Radio Corporation of America

William L. Shirer The J. B. Williams Company

Tennessee Jed Ward Baking Company

TELEVISION

Hour Glass Standard Brands Incorporated

Face to Face Standard Brands Incorporated

Parade of Sports Ford Motor Company

Elgin Time Elgin National Watch Company

. . . and successful radio programs and announcement campaigns for 35 advertisers over 450 stations from coast to coast.

J. WALTER THOMPSON COMPANY

J. Walter Thompson Company maintains 22 offices strategically located throughout the world. . . . In North America: New York, Chicago, Detroit, San Francisco, Seattle, Los Angeles, Hollywood, Mexico City, Montreal, Toronto, Latin-American Division in New York. . . . In South America: Buenos Aires, São Paulo, Rio de Janeiro, Santiago. . . . In: London, Antwerp, Johannesburg, Capetown, Bombay, Calcutta, Sydney, Melbourne.

GEORGE AND GRACIE

"The People Who Live in the Burns House"

CELEBRATING

THEIR 15TH ANNIVERSARY ON THE AIR

MAXWELL HOUSE COFFEE TIME

WITH

BILL GOODWIN and MEREDITH WILLSON

OVER NBC . . . THURSDAY NIGHTS

WRITTEN BY PAUL HENNING AND KEITH FOWLER

Congratulations, Variety, on 41 Great Years—and '46 Was a Great Year for Me, Too

Thanks to:

"SONG OF NORWAY"—120th WK.

"PASSPORT TO ROMANCE," 26 WEEKS, Mutual Network, Coast-to-Coast

REPUBLIC STEEL Presents

"SONGS AMERICA LOVES"

Larry Brooks

Exclusive Direction: WILLIAM MORRIS AGENCY, INC.

Best wishes from . . . .

WDSU

NEW ORLEANS

1280 On Dial . . . 24 Hours Daily . . .

- New Orleans' only 24-Hour Radio Station.
- 5,000 Watts delivering 20,000 Watts in the populated areas of South Louisiana and the Gulf Coast.
- Accents local programming!
- Carries BOTH Associated and United Press News Service, assuring listeners complete news coverage around the clock.
- ABC Affiliate.
- F. M. Conditional Grant.

• • •

"New Orleans' Most Interesting Radio Station"
—JOHN BLAIR, Representative.

UNITED STATES STEEL'S THEATRE GUILD ON THE AIR

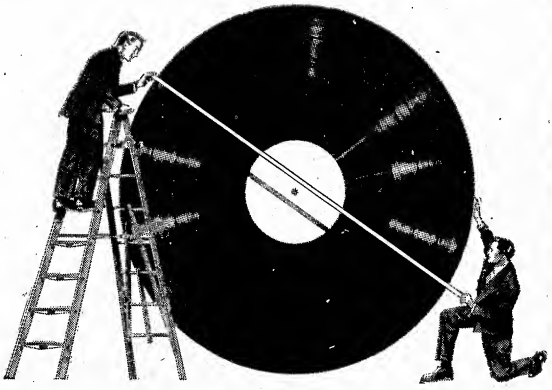
Every Star...every member of the staff of United States Steel's Theatre Guild on the Air congratulates Variety on its 41st birthday!

Theatre Guild on the Air

[Sunday Night's Biggest Broadcast—greater than ever and still growing!

American Broadcasting Company Network

USS STEEL UNITED STATES STEEL



How to measure the best

For transcriptions
For high-speed processing
For vinylite pressings
For phonograph records

. . . there are two reasons why Muzak rates tops with so many leading agencies, transcribed show producers and radio stations:

1. Fastest service in the world

2. Finest quality obtainable

Try Muzak . . . and see if any other service measures up to Muzak standards!

Unexcelled in modern facilities and master craftsmanship, Muzak is equipped to supply both Vertical and Lateral Cut transcriptions . . . reference recordings . . . line recordings for supplemental radio coverage.

Send us your "acetate" masters for top-speed, top-quality processing and pressing. We use only gold sputtering, high-speed plating, and press exclusively from highest grade Vinylite resin.

Next time . . . make it Muzak. A plus for AM, a must for FM!

Muzak* TRANSCRIPTION DIVISION

Licensed under U. S. Patents of Western Electric Co., Inc.

*Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

STUDIO and RECORDING FACILITIES • PROCESSING and PRESSING PLANT

NEW YORK
151 West 46th St.
BRyant 9-1247

CHICAGO
La Salle Wacker Bldg.
Central 5275

NEW YORK
250 West 54th St.
COlumbus 5-8552

SERVING TWO GREAT CALIFORNIA COMMUNITIES

KYA

SAN FRANCISCO

KLAC

LOS ANGELES

National Representative
ADAM J. YOUNG, JR., INC.
New York Chicago

GREETINGS

SHERMAN MARKS

CHICAGO DIRECTOR OF
THE WHISTLER

1924 1947

DEAN OF NBC DIRECTORS

PAUL DUMONT

AUTHOR — PRODUCER — DIRECTOR

"How soon hath time, the subtle thief of youth, stol'n on his wine my three and twentieth year."

DON BERNARD

PRODUCER-DIRECTOR

HOLLYWOOD

GREETINGS FROM CHICAGO

HELEN MALONE

BRENDA RICE IN BACHELOR'S CHILDREN

DIANA BLANCHARD IN WOMAN IN WHITE

SEASON'S GREETINGS

FROM YOUR

TOASTMASTER

DON McNEILL

BREAKFAST CLUB

14th YEAR

SWIFT & CO.-PHILCO CORP.-KAY DAUMIT

COAST TO COAST

MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY, 8:00 - 9:00 A. M., C. S. T.

Season's Greetings

From

AUNT FANNY

FRAN ALLISON

HAPPY NEW YEAR

From

SAM COWLING

BREAKFAST CLUB

Looking Forward to The Next Twenty Years!

AN OPEN LETTER . . .

In 1926, CFRB started operation in Toronto. Those were the pioneering days of radio!

And now, twenty years later, the same call-letters "CFRB" are familiar in almost every city and hamlet and farm throughout Ontario.

During these years, the history of the station has been the history of radio itself. We are pleased to look back on a record which shows CFRB as an independent, unsubsidized station in the lead at every stage of broadcasting development . . . in quality and power of signal, in programming policy, in service to the whole community!

Knowledge of this influence gives us a strong sense of our responsibility to the advertisers we serve as well as to the people of this community. It has prompted even greater vigilance in standards of programming. It has fostered our recognition of the varied interests among the different groups we serve.

We look forward with confidence to the next twenty years. We renew our pledge to carry on towards the greatest good of the community as a whole. We have plans which will protect our share of audience and increase our contributions to the public service. We will keep CFRB "Ontario's favourite radio station" . . . first for information, first for entertainment, first for inspiration!

Harry Sedgwick
President

FACTS FOR ADVERTISERS:

CFRB consistently broadcasts the biggest share of top-rated programmes to the largest audience of Ontario listeners over the widest coverage area, of any station operating in Toronto.

CFRB offers a weekly circulation of 79% of the radio homes in Ontario . . . BBM survey.

Popularity plus coverage has kept CFRB the Number One advertising buy in Canada's Number One market!

CFRB Where your favourites are!

Talks About Radio

By PAUL DENIS

"Hi 'ya, Paul. Hear ya' doing a radio-television column for the Post."

"Right Joe."

"What's the idea walkin' out on vaudeville? Not good enough for ya' any more?"

"No," I protested. "Just that there's more opportunities in radio."

"Raddio? Ya' kiddin'? It's through. Nothin' but sound. Gives ya' tired eardrums. Gets on ya' noives. How long ya' think housewives gonna' listen to that misery stuff? Now, when they're cleanin', they don't mind listenin' to something, ANYTHING. But, when they get them modernistic kitchens — everythin' done by push-buttons—then they'll get fussy, and they'll want REAL entertainment. Then, watch vaudeville come back . . ."

"Maybe, then they'll want to watch television," I suggested.

"Nah! Television ain't worth the price of a set. It ain't as clear as the newsreels, and it ain't as sharp as a technicolor movie. And it ain't as exciting as a good live vaudeville show. It just ain't tops in anything . . ."

* * *

Here's Barney, an old vaudeville pal. "Hear you wrote a book," he says.

"Right," I admits. "And it's about radio, movies. You know, all about getting into show business."

"You kidding! The kind of book somebody ought to write is 'How to Get OUT of Show Business'."

"Barney, I'll save that angle for a followup book," I says.

"Think I'm talking through my noggin? Ever hear of 78-year-old acrobats still waiting for that last half in Fall River, Mass.? Or 55-year old dames still looking for ingenue parts? Or movie stars who haven't been in a movie in 20 years? Or vaudeville producers who haven't produced even a shadow on stage since the White Rats? Listen, nobody ever quits show business. They just lay off."

"Maybe I ought to write a book," I insists, "on 'How to Know When You're Through.' Or, 'Are You Laying Off, or Just Plain Retired?' Maybe, Barney, I ought . . ."

"Listen, Paul," he interrupts. "Now I'm one guy who knows the score. Twenty years on the Pantages and Orpheum time. Long time. Listen, for old time's sake, loan me a fiver. Just for a week, and I'll leave it for you at the NVA Club."

I gave him the fiver.

"Would you believe it?" he says, turning gay. "I can whistle 'There's No Business Like Show Business' through closed teeth. I've been practicing it for months. With this fiver, I can hold on till Thursday. Then, I'll get that weekend at the Concord Hotel I hear a lot of agents cover the shows up there."

* * *

It's Pat, a cafe comic for years. And he's standing with a bunch of radio actors in Colbee's, looking very dignified. "Pat!" I exclaimed, "What are you doing here?"

"Lknay," he says quietly, and adds loudly, for all to hear, "How are you, Mr. Denis? How did you like that audition platter?"

Away from the crowd, he lets his hair down. "Yep, I quit cafes. Couldn't stand the late hours. Getting too old, I guess. And my two kids are old enough to want to know what kind of work I do. It will sound

(Continued on page 174)

BEST WISHES, WISHES THAT IS

KENNY DELMAR

GREETINGS FROM

OLAN SOULE

STARRING IN

"GRAND MARQUEE"

NBC – CHICAGO

SEASON'S GREETINGS

VIRGINIA PAYNE

MA PERKINS

IN

"MA PERKINS"

13TH YEAR

CHICAGO RADIO

ELEANORE TERRY

SEASON'S GREETINGS AND BEST WISHES

KAY CAMPBELL

RITA ASCOT

MYRON WALLACE

PAUL BARNES

—o—

DON HERBERT

DUTTON-LIPPOLD

PRESS REPRESENTATIVES

CHICAGO

JACK OWENS

ONE AND ONLY CRUISING CROONER

AUTHOR OF "CYNTHIA'S IN LOVE" AND "THE MISTLETOE SONG"

SINGING STAR

DON McNEILL'S BREAKFAST CLUB – A.B.C.

Aussie Radio's Heavy Coin Giveaway Due For Folderoo in '47

By ERIC GORRICK

Sydney.

Past span was a grand one for the fans financially. Aussie radio—from soapers to oilers,—became the "Good Fairy" to listeners via audience shows, in the home quiz setups, and other modes of giving coinage away in bid to gain fan coverage from the other fellow. It was alright for the fans; costly to the sponsors, and it looks right now that many major commercial units will quit kidding themselves that coin giveaways makes for easy product selling.

That idea went out right early in 1946. The fans will take all and give little. It takes a lot of cakes of soap or tins of oil to make up for that giveaway dough, not to mention air time and production costs, plus the highly important fact which so many sellers overlook, that the spending power of the people is lower in the postwar era now with us. And it's going to be less in the year ahead, according to many high-ranking financial experts contacted by VARIETY plus keen showmen, plus the men who have been in radio since it started away back in the crystal set days.

Frankly, many say, Aussie radio made a fool of itself in the past year. Figuring is that the lesson has been learned and there'll be no coin kidding in the future.

Exit The Golden Egg Goose

Commercial radio laid loads of eggs in '46. Many of them were sterile. For '47 it looks as though the old goose just can't lay another egg.

Now the commercials have got to start selling all over again, and this time minus coin handouts.

Fans, and there's millions of 'em here keen to cop free-flowing coin, have been doing a spot of figuring. They want to know how the big sponsors can give away so much coin. Now they're starting to ask why the price of certain products can't be reduced. And until they are reduced the fans won't buy. They'll take coin for nix, but they won't give it for product like they used to do in the wartime span when coin was so plentiful that a guy would gladly pay $3 for a 30-cent bottle of beer—and come back for more.

Those days are over. The goose has quit. The same guy today pays 30 cents for a bottle of beer—and looks for change.

Cinemas Had It

Radio will probably take a lesson from the cinemas in '47. It isn't a hard lesson. It cost cinema operators plenty until they woke up.

Some years ago, as the film industry well remembers, giveaway nights were featured in a few cinemas. Began with buttons for wear

(Continued on page 176)

JOHN J. ANTHONY

SEASON'S GREETINGS

ALEX DREIER

LOOK TO THE MIDWEST

FOR

TELEVISION

GREETINGS TO VARIETY

ON ITS 41st ANNIVERSARY

Good Music Leads A City

Half a million families . . . leaders of thought . . . people of taste . . . listeners to WQXR . . . are pace-setters in New York. This vast audience—a city within a city—finds WQXR a source of entertainment, news and relaxation. It tunes to WQXR for 62% of its radio listening time; 38,000 families pay $1 a year each for WQXR's Monthly Program Guide.

These families are selective in the programs they prefer, in the products they buy. Over 80 sponsors now sell this important above-average income market. To improve New York sales, spearhead your advertising with WQXR . . . "New York's Most Beloved Radio Station"...famed for good music and the news bulletins of The New York Times.

WQXR

AND FM STATION WQXQ

Radio Stations of The New York Times

Talks About Radio

Continued from page 176

good for them to be able to say, 'Our dad's a radio artist'."

"Well, radio's better," I agreed.

"Sure. And did you notice the new rug? Cost me $300. Like the gray hair? Makes for dignity, doesn't it? And notice my new, conservative clothes? Taking diction lessons, too, but don't let the guys at Lindy's find out. You know, when you meet those agency guys and those sponsors, you've got to talk like you were born in Scarsdale and got your first headache wearing crystal set earphones."

"Radio's too dignified, eh?"

"Yeah. No belly laughs in it. Everyone's on guard. Everyone's pretending they just came from a course at the New School for Social Something, or they just had a private hearing of Norman Corwin's new drama in blank verse, or something. Look at them! Don't they look as if they just drove in from Rye? They got that suburban eager-beaver-with-culture personality."

"Pat, you're exaggerating!" I said.

"Now what would they do, those radio actors, if somebody grabbed away their scripts and yelled, 'Okay, now, entertain the guests!'"

* * *

I'm reading the trade papers. "It says here that NAB's own survey indicates 21% of people interviewed had serious objection to too many commercials on the radio."

"Really?" says Helen, my wife, as she watched our year-old son fumble around with the radio dials.

"Yes. And it says one third interviewed said they'd prefer radio shows without advertising."

"Really?" says the wife, busy showing the baby how to turn the radio dials on and off.

"There are so many surveys," I says, "and it's really complicated . . ."

"Complicated?" she asks. "You think so? Now watch me teach our baby to turn the radio dials. Notice that I'm showing him how to turn the dials OFF as well as on. As long as he learns a radio can be turned off as well as on, he'll never have to grow up to be a frustrated listener-in."

* * *

She's an old lady who's been in this country for 30 years, but still can't speak English. She enjoys the radio,—that is, the music. Everything else, for her, is a stage wait until the next music.

"When is the man going to come for the money?" she asks.

I assure her, as always, "In this country, they don't ask for money for the music. They just sell you the radio box, and you repair it and buy new tubes for inside. That's all."

"I'm older than you are," she says. "I know!"

"Listen," I say, getting exasperated. "Nobody came around for pay for your phonograph, did they?"

"Hah!" she explains triumphantly, "But you have to pay for new records!"

"Yes." I admit, "but radio's different."

"Nobody gives anything for nothing," she insists.

"Those people who talk all the time are paid by companies to ask you to buy something. Like soap, food, perfume. When you buy their product, they make profits and then they're glad to pay for the musicians to play for your radio box . . ."

"But I don't buy their goods. I don't understand English. When they find that out, won't they want me to pay a tax? In Europe . . ."

"No, they won't," I interrupt. But she insists, "I've lived longer than you. Nothing is free. I know. Wait and see!"

MINERVA PIOUS

(MRS. NUSSBAUM)

N U !

AT HOME SUNDAY EVENINGS "ALLEN'S ALLEY"

William H. Weintraub & Company, Inc. Advertising

30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York

*The five shows:

"Crime Photographer" for Anchor Hocking Glass Corp.
9:30-10 pm Thursdays . . . entire CBS network

"Quick As A Flash" for Helbros Watch Company
6:30-6 pm Sundays . . . entire Mutual network

"Drew Pearson" for Frank H. Lee Company
7-7:15 pm Sundays . . . entire ABC network

"Monday Morning Headlines" for Seeman Brothers (Air-Wick)
7:15-7:30 pm Sundays . . . entire ABC network

"Crime Cases of Warden Lawes" for Trimount Clothing Co.
1-1:15 pm Sundays . . . 120 Mutual stations

Based on November-December, 1946 Hooper Ratings

Spot radio, too, for Air-Wick, Multi-Facet Diamonds and Pratt's Fresh Frozen Foods

KEN ROBERTS
Presiding Officer

RAY BLOCH
Musical Director

GENE WANG
Writer

GENE CLARK
Engineer

CY HARRICE
Announcer

THE HELBROS WATCH COMPANY
THE WILLIAM WEINTRAUB ADVERTISING AGENCY

PROCKTER and LEWIS
Producer

RICHARD LEWIS
Director

Tony Biddle, Jack Kelly To Unload WIBG Stock To Station Partners

Philadelphia.

John B. (Jack) Kelly and Anthony (Tony) J. Drexel Biddle, Jr. are getting ready to unload their stock holdings in WIBG, and are now negotiating on the sale with Paul Harron and Joseph Lang, their radio station business partners.

Biddle, wartime minister in London to governments in exile, and Kelly, former Democratic city committee chairman and now a Fairmount Park Commissioner, hold large blocks of stock in the property and were among organizers of the station.

No sale price was mentioned. Harron and Lang now control the station, one of the most profitable in Philly. Biddle recently returned to this country from Europe, and reportedly made the trip to sign papers in connection with the deal.

Regarding purchase price, reports along Radio Row had the total in six figures. The amount, it was said, was determined by the same financial group which surveyed and set the price for the sale of WCAU to the Philadelphia Record six months ago.

Reason for Kelly pulling out, it was said, is to give him more time to devote to his interests in the Atlantic City race track and his brick business. Kelly also has controlling interest in a wired-music enterprise in this city.

Aussie Radio

Continued from page 172

by the kids of favorite western stars. Buttons cost a few cents per hundred.

Then one showman decided to give away a bottle of perfume. The opposition showman figured he could give away two bottles of perfume. And so it grew from a button to a suite of furniture, autos and houses, costing a fortune that never came back via the boxoffice.

Commercial radio, meaning the Big Shots playing the giveaway stunts just to spite each other, can take a real lesson from showmen who woke to the menace before it was too late.

Today, instead of giving away merchandise, showmen are selling films: It looks as though commercial radio will be forced to set its own house in order before 1947 is very far advanced. It's got to nix giveaways—or else.

Minor sponsors are yelling right now about being unable to pace with the majors on coin giveaways. They threaten to pull out of radio for good and all unless present tactics are changed pronto. The little man has got a lot of friends in political circles and he's going to play his marbles rightly to see that nobody figures him for a sucker.

BEST WISHES

DONALD VOORHEES

BELL TELEPHONE HOUR

IN THE CENTER OF THE UTAH MARKET

KDYL
SALT LAKE CITY
UTAH'S NBC STATION

JOHN BLAIR & CO., NATIONAL REPRESENTATIVE

"THIS WAS THE ARMY" . . . MR. JONES ★

This is the first of a series of messages to put this type of trade advertising to fuller constructive use — for the advancement of the entertainment industry by bettering the opportunities of its lesser-known but highly talented members.

Ezra Stone
NBC — NEW YORK

Here are eight men you might like to know more about.
They are men of outstanding and varied abilities.
Some of them you undoubtedly know but it may not have occurred to you that they are back in show business . . . after prolonged engagements at GI business.
Some may be entirely new faces to you but all possess talents for which you search at various times.
All of them are not "At Liberty." Most of them lost no time in swinging back into civilian action. But for bigger and better assignments all of them are deservingly available.

RICHARD S. BURDICK
Writer-director; radio, stage
2780 Filbert Street
San Francisco 23, Calif.

Here is a talented writer who's versatile. (Too many writers are just mediocre in various fields.) Successfully marketed everything from lowdown nite-club material, complete with special songs and lyrics, to upper case radio scripts for COLUMBIA WORKSHOP.

Has written over 1,000 broadcasts embracing every type; dramatics, variety, documentary, comedy, musical, produced on all major networks.

Has equal punch with advertising copy, musical jingles, short stories. Just finished his first screen treatment of a yarn for TIM WHELAN, RKO Producer-director.

Enlisted in the Army just about the time Mr. Stimson was scouring the War Department attic for that gold fish bowl. There he wrote and directed the first original full-length musical comedy of World War II.

He was then ordered to create dialogue sequences for both the stage and screen versions of "This Is The Army," followed in rapid succession with "At Your Service," "Bonds Away" and "You Bet Your Life."

Currently Production Manager of station KSFO in San Francisco but does plenty of national free-lance work on the side. Remember the name RICHARD S. BURDICK. You'll see and hear it often.

LEWIS FISHER
Radio producer, announcer
256 East 57th Street
New York, N. Y.
PLaza 5-2649
(AFRA)

He left a staff announcing job on WCAU in Philadelphia in 1940 to swab decks for the Navy. His rise from Midshipman to Lieutenant-Commander is typical of his drive and capabilities.

He pitched and tossed on the first Murmansk convoy runs; got into the African invasions and then transferred to the Pacific in time for the hot Kamikaze stuff.

His executive efficiency as a top signal officer earned him a promotion as Flag Secretary to the Admiral commanding the 16th Cruiser Division.

His live distinguished voice has repeatedly spelled the Paramount Newsreel as a narrator. He's also been well received in sundry free lance radio chores.

It took the Navy, a beautiful wife and considerable fortitude to resist the temptation of locating permanently in Philadelphia. Instead of resuming his old WCAU job (CBS key affiliate) he took a staff assignment at WINS and hung out his shingle for free lance work.

This guy is so dynamic he even found an apartment in Manhattan!

JERRY JAROSLOW
Actor (character juvenile) variety entertainer
274 State Street
Brooklyn 2, N. Y.
CUmberland 6-8114
(AEA-AGVA)

A very funny fellow on a night club floor, musical or revue stage. Has been said he's a young Bobby Clark, Groucho Marx, Frank Morgan and Danny Kaye rolled into one. But he rolls his own . . . into the nearest aisle.

Appeared in several intimate revues: "Tidbits of '46," "Fun With Music," "Keynotes of Unity" . . . and will gladly forgive you for not remembering them.

Has had his share of straight and comedy roles in sundry stock ventures, particularly outstanding in the Hollywood Actor's Lab. production of Irwin Shaw's, "The Shy and Lonely."

In the Army he was engaged in "This Is The Army," "At Your Service," "Flying Varieties" and a number of Training Films for the First Motion Picture Unit. Without prejudice to his talent, he also had numerous tours of CQ, KP and guard duty.

Jaroslow is currently emceeing and entertaining in a New York basement bistro where business is worse than the liquor. (Such a thing is possible!)

He calls the spot: "The well of loneliness!"

HEINY KRINSKY
Composer, Lyricist, arranger
860 30th Street
Oakland, Calif.
(AFM)

They "laughed when he sat down at the piano" . . . and they always will because here's a man with a sense of humor that runs literally to his finger tips.

From his self-imposed hermitage in the San Francisco Bay area he has supplied top nite club and variety entertainers with topnotch special song material.

Also has several foot lockers of fine commercial tunes that he knocks out for laughs. For a livelihood he takes routine singing acts and writes, arrangs, orchestrates and rehearses their material until they're show stoppers.

In the early days he wrote all the special "fight" songs for St. Mary's on a retainer basis. More than one sport writer estimating the strength of St. Mary's teams, has scored a big "assist" for the moral support of the Krinsky songs and cheers.

In service the Army routine didn't interfere too much with his way of life; just his wardrobe.

A prolific writer, and good, he was invaluable in "Bonds Away" and as Musical Director for "You Bet Your Life."

Currently working on a light operetta set in the wonderful hills of Northern California . . . celebrated for its Golden Gate and other structures from the Warner Brothers pictures of the same names.

DAVID LELAND
Stage manager, actor, technical director
60 West 85th Street
New York, N. Y.
TRafalgar 4-9522
(AEA)

It's not an act. The guy really prefers stage-managing to acting; the most thankless job in the theatre but he gets a boot out of it. Performers salute him as a buddy, not a cop.

His pre-war days found him acting and stage-managing for the Denver Federal Theatre, Berkshire Playhouse and a subway circuit company of "Pal Joey."

Like all of us, he got caught in the GI mill and was sent to a photography school and then to Buckley Field to learn how to be an armorer. The Army finally gave up. It was Leland's most successful campaign.

It got him his chance to act and stage manage two large GI shows with casts of about a hundred, "Bonds Away" and "You Bet Your Life."

They played one-night stands in both professional and GI houses. Then came a William Morris kind of jump, and he was playing one-nighters again thru the Philippines, Okinawa, Ie Shima, Japan and Korea, stage managing still another big GI show that traveled by air.

Past season he staged-managed at Brattleboro, Vermont, and also at Yardley, Pa., where he became Technical Director and collaborated on the set designs.

Currently teaching ex-GI's at the Alviene Academy of the Theatre. He's a good man.
Get hold of him.

SYDNEY ROBIN
Composer, Lyricist
211 N. Keystone
Burbank, Calif.
(ASCAP-AFM)

A song writer, musician, comedian, character! While everybody else was trying for "Gin!" he slipped his songs into scores of several Universal, Columbia, Republic and Monogram pictures.

Partial list of his song credits includes "Undecided," "Flying Home," "Sorrento," "East of the Rockies," "My Baby Said Yes," "Button Shoes," "That's My Home," "Vout Cowboy," "If It's Love You Want Baby That's Me" and "No One To Cry To." Has had recordings under every major label and by every big timer including Bing Crosby, Andrews Sisters, Tommy Dorsey, Woody Herman, Ella Mae Morse, etc.

After Pearl Harbor, he claims, his poor vision got him into a hell of a mess. He walked into an Army Recruiting booth and enlisted.

He thought it was a Nedick's Hot Dog stand.

For the Army he wrote the title song for a six-man entertainment unit called, "Six Jerks In A Jeep." It was then bought by Universal Pictures for an Andrews Sisters picture and the title originally suggested by Sara Seegar Stone was then borrowed and paraphrased by everyone from Carol Landis to (Major) Maurice Evans. (Billing priority optional.)

Appeared as the more moronic selectee in both the stage and screen version of "This Is The Army."

LEONARD STOCKER
Actor-Singer, Character comedian
216 East 67th Street
New York, N. Y.
REgent 7-5962
(AEA-AGVA)

His character comedy singing and acting talents were first displayed in New York, as Mr. Blint in "Rosalinda."

He's been spotlighted in operetta and musical comedy repertoires of the Paper Mill Playhouse, Robin Hood Dell, and The Watergate in Washington.

Camouflage Branch of the Aviation Engineers of AAF and the War Finance Division of the Treasury Department bigdealed to get him for leading comedy roles in "You Bet Your Life" and "Bonds Away." He will be remembered by several hundred thousand GI's who "caught" him in "YBYL," as the Latrine Orderly, who when asked by an inspecting officer why his PFC chevron was not sewed on his shirt replied. "You see Sir, when they issued it to me, I told them what they could do with it!"

Army made a skilled cryptographer of him and sent him to Okinawa where he found living and working conditions, a cinch after one night stands with large musical companies.

This season his services were simultaneously sought by "Finnian's Rainbow," "Call Me Mister" (road company) the ill-fated and "Sweet Bye & Bye."

Because he's a better actor than cutie he chose the last mentioned. That's the only reason he's now "at Liberty," pro tem.

JOSEPH TOMES
Actor, narrator, announcer
610 West 115th Street
New York, N. Y.
LExington 2-1100
(AEA-AFRA-SAG)

His outstanding features are his faultless comedy sense, his superb resonant voice and his impressive height (6'4").

First appeared in New York as "Gregory" in Laurence Olivier's then-unappreciated production of "Romeo and Juliet" Several seasons of summer stock and Los Angeles Federal Theatre, playing leads and supporting roles, comedy and dramatic, in modern and costume pieces.

Radio and television stations WGXAO, KWID, KGFJ, KFI, have all used his acting, announcing and narrating talents.

Columbia Pictures mugged him in "Shadows in the Night." So did two AAF training films.

Saw 37 months milltary service, a good hunk of it in the Philippines and Japan, with the 5th Air Force. His efficiency and dependability wou for him a Staff Sergeancy. For awhile Tomes was even top kick of his outfit.

But don't hold that against him, for even then he was only acting a jawbone 1st Sergeant.

Currently featured as regular narrator and actor on NBC's "Voice of the Army."

★ MR. JONES . . . THE MAN OR WOMAN WHO BUYS TALENT

Kent Taylor

AS

STEVEN KNIGHT

CRIMINOLOGIST

for SPIFFY

THE INVISIBLE COLLAR

"STAY-DOWN"

A product of

CREST SPECIALTY Not Inc.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

A complete promotion, sales and merchandising package

PRODUCED BY

KUTTNER and KUTTNER

advertising

646 N. MICHIGAN AVE. -:- CHICAGO 11

ANOTHER ZIV HIT

PRESENTING THE INCOMPARABLE MUSIC OF Wayne King

THE WALTZ KING

IN THE

"Wayne King Show"

with • WAYNE KING AND HIS ORCHESTRA

• NANCY EVANS • LARRY DOUGLAS

• FRANKLYN MACCORMACK

PRODUCED BY

FREDERIC W. ZIV COMPANY

1529 MADISON ROAD • CINCINNATI, OHIO

NEW YORK • CHICAGO • HOLLYWOOD

ON DUTY 24 HOURS A DAY—SERVING

NORTH JERSEY—AMERICA'S FOURTH LARGEST MARKET

for:

26 national & regional advertisers

48 retail advertisers

at a cost of:

less per listener—in North Jersey—America's 4th Largest Market—than any other station including all 50,000 watters!

*Do you realize this market contains over 3½ million people more than these 14 cities combined: Kansas City, Indianapolis, Rochester, Denver, Atlanta, Toledo, Omaha, Syracuse, Richmond, Hartford, Des Moines, Spokane, Fort Wayne, Dallas.

WAAT

NEWARK, N.J.

ASK FOR DOLLAR NEW JERSEY'S BEST RADIO BUY

CIRCLING THE KILOCYCLES

Ludington, Mich.—Joseph Michaels, formerly announcer, sportscaster and special eventer at WOLS, Florence, S. C., now here with WKLA.

Albany, N. Y.—Albany's first FM station, WROW, is expected to go on the air next March, under a final authorization granted by FCC to the Hudson Valley Broadcasting Co. The outlet will operate on 590 kilocycles, one kilowatt night power, and five kilowatt day, with unlimited hours.

St. Louis—The local Board of Police Comissioners is negotiating with the Southwestern Bell Telephone Co., for conversion of the police radio system to FM. Conversion would be part of the department's economy program. It is estimated that the switch to FM will cut the cost of operating the system which included 206 radio-equipped cars, of which 49 have two-way sets, from $90,000 to $30,000. The cost of the FM equipment needed is approximately $150,000.

Kansas City—Phil Evans, director of farm service for KWBC, was re-elected president of the Farmers' Club recently. Group includes businessmen who own farms or have close intcrests in farming.

Pittsburgh—Sumner Granby, KOV announcer, is quitting radio to go into business. He's heading for Los Angeles this week to become a manufacturers' representative for jewelry covering the coast territory.

Pittsburgh—WWSW, town's only indie station, was accoladed by N. W. Ayer & Sons last week, being singled out by agency for No. 1 job of football promotion during the last season for all broadcasting outfits operating under 5,000 watts. Another local to get a nod from the Ayer outfit was Bill Sutherland, of KDKA, voted best of the between-period announcers for Eastern college games.

San Antonio—Louis J. Riklin, account exec for WOAI, has been named San Antonio's Outstanding Young Man of 1946 in the annual Junior of Chamber of Commerce Competition.

Pittsburgh—Al Rogers, singing cowboy recently with the Roy Rogers Rodeo, has landed a commercial on WJAS. It's a 15-minute program every Monday, Wednesday and Friday morning at 11:30.

Richmond—WRVA is attracting lots of attention in the area with its "Virginia Sings" show, broadcast Tuesday at 9:30 p. m. Program originates at WRVA theatre, and includes contribs from glee clubs, choruses, and other vocal groups from churches, schools, colleges and other organizations.

Fort Worth—James E. Rennie has been named manager of KWBC here. Station will operate, daytime with 250 watts on 970 kilocycles.

Toledo—William Myers, formerly of the announcing staff, has been named publicity director of WSPD, Toledo, replacing Jimmy Cochran, who has left the station.

Seattle—Delores Vance now handling publicity at KOMO, local NBC outlet, was formerly with Seattle Times.

Phoenix.—KPHO here teed off its initial local news program with Larry Jones, upped from continuity department, taking over as news editor.

There are 6,468,256 consumers in Worcester's 75 mile radius — 4,974,868 in Boston's — 4,681,726 in Springfield's.

WTAG WORCESTER

A JOB TO DO?

THE WRITER TO DO IT IS

GEORGE TABER

CBS CHICAGO

A SPECIALIST IN WRITING

News With a Human Touch

COMMENTARIES

DRAMATIC NARRATION

It's Easy to Be a Radio Comic—People Laugh at the Funniest Things!

ART PAUL

Original Comedy Material

Always Working, Because He Writes the Funniest Things!

140 West 46th Street

New York

LO. 5-9537

A European Tragedy

Creative Talent Seems To Have Been Wiped Out By Hitler's Legions, And Indications Are It Will Take Years To Replace

By JOSEF ISRAELS II

Vienna.

To an observer of the various phases of show biz, and of culture and the creative arts in general in continental Europe since the end of the war, it is increasingly apparent that Hitler won his fight against culture. As in the eugenic field, where Nazi extermination policies won out in abasing the "inferior" eastern and Semitic races for one or more generations to come while strengthening the Germans, creative talent of all kinds seems to have been wiped off the face of Europe, including Germany.

Cultural officials in the Allied Military Governments had hoped and expected to find a new generation of actors, writers, composers, painters and other artists, perhaps buried but ready to express themselves as soon as the paralyzing hand of Nazi-thought control was lifted. The fact is that in Middle Europe (i.e., Germany, Austria, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Poland and Rumania in particular), which in the past exported so many brilliant talents to New York and Hollywood, not a single newcomer of genuine world promise has come to light in the year and a half since the shooting stopped. Maybe the talent's there. But over here managers and pic producers are looking toward what seems to be the world's richest talent reservoir in the U.S. to replenish Europe. This is one vital factor which showmen must consider in planning European phases of amusement biz for the next few years. Another, equally vital, is the state of mind the Nazis left behind them in the young and middle generations who must be the principal show-buying public for the next two decades.

The fact is that pitifully little has been accomplished in "reeducation" of the middle European people who lived, willingly or not, under the Nazi yoke for periods ranging from seven years downward. Mental attitudes vary, from active and aggressive heritages of Naziism and a promise to make Hitler's spirit march again, to a simple disbelief of everything and lack of confidence in all forms of government and information. It is the latter conditioning, an ingrown cynicism that will count the most against acceptance of democratic ideas and knowledge of what the world outside the Hitler mental vacuum has been doing throughout the Nazi years. In considering content and possible acceptance of plays and pictures in the coming years, when continental income again begins to assume importance in the world amusement industry, Americans will

Selectivity

Already, in centers like Vienna, Berlin and other large cities where Army cultural authorities have brought a fairly wide selection of Yank plays and films, a growing selectivity, on the matter of theme has become evident. The days of 1945, when picture houses could pack them in with anything from Hollywood, have already passed. Now they want to laugh and be entertained. The customers are beginning to shun message pix from the U.S. just as they passed up the heavier-handed versions from Berlin and Moscow before Yank product came into the situation in any quantity.

For illustration think of the mental conditioning and background of the great mass of middle Europeans whose present age is about from 16 to 25. These are the generation who will make up the core of Europe's business and cultural life for the next decade or more. But they have passed nearly all of their intelligent life (starting in 1934 in Germany; 1939 elsewhere) inside a magnificiently organized Goebbels cultural vacuum. Only what was sifted through the propaganda machinery in Berlin and considered suitable for slave peoples filtered through. It is a mistake to think that all German propaganda was poorly done or heavy-handed. Much of it was intelligently constructed, subtly presented and, best of all, from the Nazi viewpoint, ladled into consumers who did not have then, and are only beginning to have now, any basis for comparative judgment of what they were told. It must be remembered that Americans had some chance to form their own conclusions through a freer press and radio than has operated anywhere in the Nazi lands from 1934 to 1945. If we tell a German of the middle or younger generation today (who remembers little or nothing of a pre-Hitler world) what was wrong with Naziism and why we fought a war to wipe it out, he is inclined to say, "Well, maybe it's true. But why should I believe you any more than I believed Goebbels?"

We can point to the concentration camp pictures, the Nuremburg trials (which first became a laughing stock and then set Goering up as an honored martyr) and a million other pieces of what seem convincing evidence. The German had just as convincing a batch of evidence that all Jews should be exterminated, that all Russians are savage beasts and that Poles are inferior people. What's more he forms a lot of judgments by the physical conditions in which he himself lives. Therefore, he shrugs and says: "Well, under Hitler we ate, didn't we? Under Hitler there were no unemployed. What Goebbels told us about the Russians was true, wasn't it? They did rape and pillage and kill ruthlessly."

It's hard to answer these things. It's no use saying that the Russians had good cause for feeling as they did. That's no answer to a person who has no believable evidence that what we say about German atrocities is true. His own house was robbed, his own sister raped, his own wristwatch stolen. His own brother-in-law, a Sudet German, was perhaps forcibly expelled from Czechoslovakia after the war. Why should be believe a lot of propaganda from people he was conditioned to hate and fear?

This state of mind ties closely to the fact that in the former fountainheads of creative intellect like Berlin, Vienna, Budapest, Heidelberg or Prague new talent that possesses anything fit to electrify the show world has yet to make its appearance. People who were so thoroughly conditioned to think as Hitler wanted them to think will take a lot of reconditioning before they can produce anything in the acting, writing or composing line that will seriously interest the free world without. The background of this is tragic and not especially to be blamed on the younger people in today's show business. They were unfortunate enough to be brought up at a time when they had to conform or pay penalties ranging from loss of success to loss of life.

Intellectuals Into Crematorium

There are individuals who show promise. But it will take living and working and creating in a free world for a few years to make of them anything the democratic show world will want. The older people who knuckled under and lived with a measure of success under the Nazis are harder to evaluate. They still populate the stages and the studios largely because there are no others professionally experienced enough to take leads. But the cream of Europe's intellectual life went into the crematoriums. First the Jews, who, though they held no monopoly on talent or enterprise, numbered a heavy percentage of the best in show biz, as in science and learning. Many fortunately made it to New York or Hollywood, and their contributions to the U.S. and the world are too lengthy and well known to reevaluate here. Then the better, thinking people of all racial origins went to the concentration camps and the gas chambers. It must not be thought that Jews were Hitler's only mass victims. It was likely that anyone of mature intellectual achievement would know enough to appreciate what was wrong with the Nazis. At the same time these people of genuine achievement were being killed off at the top, thousands of punk Nazi stooges were being shoved ahead in large and small spots. They could sing the Horst Wessel song louder or lick more boots than their competitors. They succeeded without reference to talent. That generation of wardheelers, actors, directors and writers has nothing to offer today even if new regimes could forgive their Naziism. The net result has been to set back the stage, film and radio industries in middle Europe by many years.

Thus it is that while theatre and film activities are rushing and even prosperous in Germany and Austria, its present basis cannot be viewed as more than temporary. It is existing on the inbred appetite for good entertainment being fed by imports from the Allied countries, plus presentation of old favorites banned for racial or political reasons during the Nazi times. But this occupational impetus must of necessity die out in not too long a time. There will always be room for good plays and good pix from the States. But Europe's amusement industry needs most of all a strong infusion of new native talent. If it's even half as good as in the past, it will be plenty good enough to restore a self respect in home production and feed the Americans with new ideas and new faces as well. But if this talent exists in a presently visible generation, this writer hasn't detected it in a year and a half of postwar living in the big centers of arts and culture. It looks from this viewpoint like a long wait for a new generation to come along with something worthwhile to sell.

Mexico Views the New Year With Mixed Feelings; New Rule a Factor

By DOUGLAS L. GRAHAME

Mexico City.

Mexico's amusement biz faces 1947 with more mixed feelings than it has in any New Year since 1941. It has high hopes and jitters, the former entertained mostly by leaders of the industry. Some even expect 1946 to be topped.

Legit impresarios aren't so sure. But longhair showmen, among others, are more or less confident of worthwhile b.o., at least, in 1947. Not so many pic producers are agreed about 1947. Opinion in these circles is that important recovery of their division hinges upon large and sustained supplies of cash and reasonable freedom from labor grief. Radio, though, sees very big things in the new year, which, according to the way it looks now, will witness the debut of Mexico's first television station chain.

Most of the split opinions are based on the new government, which took over Dec. 1, when President Miguel Aleman assumed office for his six-year term. Amusement biz anticipated 1941 with about the same jitters and sureness, only less intensely, than it is now looking at 1947. Six years ago, the war was on, the U. S. in it, and rather popular opinion was that Hitler would really make it. There was much glumness about the future for amusement biz. But it turned out that some divisions of it, particularly films, radio, niteries, longhair and vaudeville got far more benefits than they expected. Boom, more money for more people and the land's biggest spending spree, plus more U. S. tourists and visitors tossing around jack on a grander scale than ever, perked things up. It also brought back legit, so that the unprecedented top of $10 (Mex.) ($2.50 U. S.), became common and the hitherto unheard of one of $6 (Mex.) ($1.50) became standard.

Apart from much hope and some doubt about what the new president will do or not do, 1947 has a peculiar significance for the amusement biz, because, of course, it is tied in with the life of Mexico. This new year has, unavoidably, inherited monetary inflation that became so acute in 1946 that Miguel Navvaro, top economist and chief of the Ministry of Finance's financial studies division, called it "one of the worst calamities that has befallen Mexico in the past 10 years . . . the general population is being suffocated by the stifling atmosphere of this monetary inflation."

Pix Did Best in 1946

Cinemas did the best biz in their history in 1940. Estimated gross of $125,000,000 (Mex.) (25c to the Mexican dollar) was done for the year by cinemas of the Federal District, a 2,000,000-population community. Several frontline cinemas here, after making $4 (Mex.) standard, got better than good trade at $5, toward the end of 1946. Exhibitors generally figure 1947 being kind to them. While some Mexican pix did very well, most of the record 1946 biz was carried by U. S. and some British pix, especially "The Seventh Veil," "The Wicked Lady" and "The Man in Grey." For some time, all three commanded the new high $5 (Mex.) price. "Leave Her to Heaven" (20th-Fox) was a shining example of an American pic commanding that price for some time.

The film trade is eagerly awaiting President Aleman's action on the petition producers and exhibitors presented to aid their divisions of the biz, in line with his promise to Mexican pic leaders that he intends to do all he can to help the Mexican film industry. Producers ask a government-backed bank, to the capitalization of which they will contribute, to adequately finance and control production geared to home and foreign demand, and stressing quality. Exhibitors back the move the producers made in the fall for a law demanding that all of Mexico's 1,245 cinemas devote 26 weeks a year to Mexican pix. On their own, the exhibitors ask a 50% tax slash, while they play Mexican films, and federalization of the cinema impost, now high, thanks to municipal and state levies. Suggestion is that this tax be national like those on mining and gasoline production, with the national treasury giving municipalities and states a share in it.

Number of local cinemas will be hiked to nearly 100, with 17 new houses opening in 1947. Proportionate increase in cinemas is expected for key provincial cities. Ten more cinemas should be about finished by the end of 1947. That depends on the supplies situation, particularly cement, of which there has been an acute shortage for some time, though builders of the 17 cinemas that are nearing completion have been able to surmount that difficulty thus far.

Outlook for Mexican picture production is spotty. Currently it is depressed because: (1) of the big private banks cutting off credits, due to slow repaying of huge loans, result of some costly productions flopping, and (2) the general restriction of credit as part of the banks' cooperation with the government program to curb inflation, over budgetting in production, and too much random shooting. Optimists are confident that fewer and better pix will turn the trick. Others are none too sure, pointing to 50 frozen films, kept from exhibition, they say, by keener U. S., British and other foreign competition, plus plain poor quality and film labor strife. For 1946 production is figured at about 60, only five less than 1945, despite the depression. However, it seems generally agreed that 30 or 40 at most, will be the 1947 total due to the quality-stressing policy.

Niteries

Niteries, which sliced a juicy melon in 1946, easily runner up to the cinema gross, are confident that the new year will be no lemon. They see a continuance of many people with lots of money who are glad to spend it, among tourists and natives. The town has more cafes than it ever had, a striking fact when it is considered that but eight years ago there was only one truly modern nitery. There are now more than 30 that can make that claim, plus a flock of second stringers. Spots below that rating are very numerous.

Radio went more places in 1946, and that trend is counted upon to more than continue in the New Year. Some radiomen see Mexico's regular radio audience enjoyed the best commercial biz in 1946 in their history, which began in 1930 with the opening here of XEW, now the republic's biggest station, as a 5,000-watter.

approaching 5,000,000 by the end of 1947. Stations

Television looks like an established fact for Mexico in the new year, with the start of a video station chain, topped by a 50,000-watter here and with a station of lesser power in five key provincial cities. Television was winningly introduced to Mexico by RCA's shows during the first inter-American radio broadcasting meet here in early October.

Revue-vaude did so well that customers became accustomed to a $5 (Mex.) top, large lift from the standard of $2 of yesteryear. Another frontline theatre, the Tivoli, was opened here, making three in this field. In other times, not so long ago, the two frontline houses had all they could do to exist. One, the Lirico, at one time was putting on a show, eight acts, for 25 centavos (5c U. S.). Tone and presentation of this branch of Mexican show biz has much improved. More U. S. performers are finding better employment in these theatres.

American Film Distribs Find Innumerable Difficulties Of Psychological and Material Nature In France

Exchange Control Board Is Big Factor Along With Currency Restrictions

By MAXIME DE BEIX

Paris.

American film distribs here, though able to reopen their agencies on the pre-war basis, find themselves confronted with innumerable material and psychological difficulties. For one thing, the country's economy has been disrupted, resulting in a policy of strict dirigism replacing that of free enterprise, with constant threat of nationalization. As would inevitably follow, the currency has been so affected that foreign transactions are subject to the okay of an exchange control board, meaning that revenue from American imports, after a long freeze, can only be transferred back in dollars at an official rate, which means accepting a loss if the proceeds are not to be kept here in francs.

About 400 theatres had been destroyed, of which about 200 have been rehabilitated. There is a considerable shortage of both equipment and raw stock, and exchange restrictions make imports here scarce enough to affect dubbing and printing. The administration, which before the war was satisfied with general supervision of the industry's activity, is now so intricately mixing in every phase that operations are endlessly complicated, while influence used by local picture financing interests and labor unions attempting to keep opposition out of the market make every American gesture a target for open criticism or covert exploitation of the anti-American attitude which party politics are fostering on the masses. This explains why American picture interests here, spearheaded by Harold L. Smith, of the Motion Picture Assn., and backed by the State Dept. through the American Embassy, must wage a perpetual battle, at the same time being extremely tactful to avoid causing reactions that would only make matters worse in the effort to retain and rehabilitate the French market. Smith himself has considerable French experience and has developed invaluable local contacts. Alexander Stein, Columbia's French chieftain, as prexy of the American distribs association is in close contact with all French official agencies, and Etienne Descombey, Universal's head for France, is on the Censor Board.

Operating in France cannot be estimated only in terms of dollars and cents with revenue contingent on exchange. Paris remains a convenient turntable for Continental distribution, and even if it has lost some of its former glamor, it is still the pivot of Western Europe. All American interests are benefiting by the uphill fight which, in the face of business and political opposition, has been successfully waged by the picture men to bring back their pictures on French screens, despite material and technical difficulties affecting release schedules. Also, there is a natural tendency of the public to receive native product more easily than imports, even if well-dubbed, especially when imports have been stopped for a long time. New stars have to be publicized from the ground up, and audiences have to be re-educated. The sensation created at the Cannes Film Festival by "Lost Weekend" has been exploited fully in all phases by Paramount, and Metro has managed to play "Mrs. Miniver at the same time in the two biggest Paris theatres, Rex and Gaumont Palace, which formerly didn't play day-and-date. During the year starting July 1, 1946, all majors are releasing about 15 dubbed features each, besides playing some original versions with French subtitles of pictures not included in the dubbing schedules. This will happily counteract the poor impression created here when imports were not permitted and salvaged oldies had to be played to cover expenses. The new crop of pictures have not been played long enough yet to decide on probable total gross under the new conditions, nor on type of pictures most suitable for the market. Technicolor and detective stories are a sure bet, but pictures like Par's "Going My Way" and 20th-Fox's "How Green Was My Valley" got raves. American pictures are back in a big way and getting a considerable share of the playing time left open by the quota.

It is also yet too early to decide on how the 16m will pay. Metro and Universal were first in the field with about 10 features each. There are nearly 1,200 permanent theatres equipped with 16m, and 12,000 spots giving one itinerant 16m show weekly. Sale is mostly done by mail to cut overhead distribution cost, and the law compels all contracts to be on percentage, but permits a minimum guarantee. The minimum is all the distrib can expect to receive.

American shorts are doing very well, especially since the local ones are weak. Exhibs would be inclined to try and boost their bills by playing them with a local feature, but American distribs naturally prefer to play them with their own product. French animated cartoons are poor, and American cartoons are in constant demand. March of Time is distributed by 20th-Fox, but M. of T. local rep, Gilbert Comte, has to clip them to one reel due to exhibs' desire to limit the bills footage.

Fox Movietone Newsreel is the best one here, with the local reels showing a lot of trivia. Metro has the sanction to produce its own reel and will start releasing it in the spring.

All dubbing is compulsorily done here. Besides technical difficulties resulting from hard-to-replace equipment, there is a shortage of actors. Also, the difficulty to obtain raw stock, without the possibility of transferring dollars to pay for it, means that irrespective of whether or not provided for in the contract, the parent company is in most cases called upon to supply and ship it.

The current personnel setup of the majors is as follows: Lacy W. Kastner, with considerable European experience, is continental rep for Columbia, and Alexander Stein his French territory chieftain. David L. Lewis supervises Metro, with French territory under Henry Lartigue, who has extensive contacts with all phases of the local amusement industry. John B. Nathan arrived recently from South America to take over Paramount from Robert Schless, who had to resign on account of illness. He is aided by Henri Michaud, and has the French territory under Henri Klarsfeld. F. L. Harley, who already was in Paris, is back as head of 20th-Fox, aided by Bob Krier; the French territory is handled by E. Balk and E. Lafon. Vladimir Lissim runs RKO with Marcel Gentel as French manager. Harry Novak reps Universal for the Continent, with Etienne Descombey for France. United Artists is under William B. Levy, with Georges Rouvier for France. Joe Hummel, for Warner Bros., is the only European rep who includes South Africa in his territory, normally including North Africa only in the other companies. Jacques Salberg runs his French exchange.

Theatre Acquisition Hurdles

No company here runs theatres, except Paramount, which has showcases in Paris and Brussels, also in provincial Lille and Rheims. Besides legal difficulties, any current attempt by an American organization to buy other theatres here would be likely to result in an explosion of anti-American publicity because theatre purchases would be considered as a means for foreign propaganda.

Co-production here as a means of getting export returns from local product in foreign exchange has been tried. Universal has Paul Graetz producing "Diable au Corps." RKO has a tieup with local Pathe and is making "Silence Is Golden," directed by Rene Clair and starring Maurice Chevalier. Columbia is to get product from Gregor Rabinovitch. But production here is abnormally hard due to disrupted economy. Purchase of local product in lieu of co-production is made difficult by the exchange control board, which insists on payment in dollars, as instanced in the case of Metro's attempt to get a green light on the intended deal for "Bataille du Rail." British interests, as instanced by Globe Productions, are also currently trying to produce here.

The local picture industry is currently in the throes of a period of readjustment from which it will emerge in a shape of which the only sure thing is that it will not be the former system of free enterprise. Like the press, it is classified as educational, and as such under close official supervision. Nobody can open shop freely in any branch of the industry, and a special license must be obtained. A 10% interest in an enterprise related to pictures cannot be bought by a foreigner without a special permit. The purge which followed the war and considerably changed the personnel set up by the industry, as well as the action of labor unions, results in practically unlimited interference of the administration in all phases, with party politics an important factor. However, which ever way the political weathercock turns, nationalization of the whole industry seems unlikely though demanded by the more rabid element which may be appeased by keeping some sections under government operation, as, for instance, in the fight by the public domain to retain the Siritzky chain of theatres.

Though some ambitious projects are blueprinted, such as building large Riviera studios, all existing production facilities consist of a total 44 stages, all sorely in need of modern equipment. On these, during the last year, 80 features and 40 shorts have been produced. Cost of production is rising quickly, and a B feature now comes to about $200,000. A fair budget comes to about $350,000, top so far being about $800,000 for Marcel Carne's "Doors of Night," to which foreign rights have been bought by Sir Alexander Korda. Postwar production has so far been scattered between numerous indies but the increase in cost and the tightening of bank credits has concentrated production, with Pathe, Gaumont and Andre Paulve (Discina) topping both production and distribution activities. French production is likely to get considerable help from a group of powerful commercial banks that have blueprinted an organization of the loan and mortgage type for pictures. They would pool about $3,000,000 and advance money on local and foreign distribution returns of finished product, thus permitting producers a quicker turnover. Also help theatre owners to finance remodeling.

The French are very anxious to expand their export business, especially in countries with appreciated currency, which explains why the government is viewing favorably such concentrations as Jean Sefert's South American organization. But the requirements of the exchange control board frequently restrict transactions. The quality of the product, which was extremely low when there was no foreign opposition on French screens, is improving, but still holds few likely entries for American distribution.

Grosses for France and French North Africa totaled slightly over a lush $70,000,000 for the last year, with 4,800 theatres in the territory. Admission scales are regulated by ukases. On Oct. 1, 1946, they were tilted from an average 20c to 32c and in the Paris deluxers from a 50c top to 80c.

The Rank-Gaumont distribution tieup facilitated the introduction of British pictures on French screens but is somewhat slowed by the return of American product, though "Brief Encounter" got raves. A Franco-Italian agreement to facilitate reciprocal picture trade is skedded. "Citta Aperta" was well received. Swiss productions, "Last Chance" and "Marie Louise," did lush business. Contrary to what might be expected from the political trend, Soviet pictures are not getting big time, except in nabes, in red locations. American pictures were badly needed, and despite allegations from the opposition, are not glutting the market.

The French, through lack of international information, have a grossly exaggerated idea of the quality of their product. This patriotic constriction of the hatband is fostered by a press whose international reporting does not far exceed pilfering American mags, with an occasional distortion of VARIETY. They are practically unaware of the production activities of such countries as Mexico, Central Europe and the east. They commonly believe that, in fear of their obtaining world supremacy, Hollywood is constantly on the watch to snatch local scripts and talent, not so much to use it as to snafu eventual French opposition. Only a strong educational campaign could set them right with true perspective. Eric Johnston's gesture limiting American exports of the majors, after the signing of the Washington agreement, to 120 pictures this year was both timely and tactful, uct. They are practically unaware of the production

Two things are charting the course of the currently reshaping French industry: one is purely political, the other is the country's economic rehabilitation, which will take years and pending which no really free flow of trade or currency can reasonably be expected. Until then, no heavy money returns can be anticipated from this market, its real value being that of a strategic beachhead to keep Western Europe open for better times to come. At that, American reps here due to prevalent anti-American feeling, will have to use considerable tact and caution.

THE SPIRIT OF THE DEAL, OR HONOR AMONG MEN

By ERNEST TURNBULL

(Managing Director, Hoyts Theatres, Australia)

Sydney.

"Another important film deal has been finalized . . ."

That introductory phrase has a familiar ring to producers, distributors and theatre managements, contracts make up the pattern of our industry.

It's safe to say that more Australian contracts will be negotiated in 1947 than in any previous year. Distributors and theatre men will spend a great deal of their time framing terms and conditions governing the release of product in metropolitan, suburban and country situations.

Writing the contract, however, is just the starting point. Every time a contract is signed, at least two parties are obligated to honor it—to carry out the terms and conditions to the fullest extent of its clauses.

One of the troubles of our industry in the somewhat distant past was that too many contracts fell apart and ended up in a sticky legal mess. When that happens you can bet somebody's reputation goes west with it. I've heard it said that ours is the only industry where the toughest negotiations go on after the deal has been signed.

Unfortunately, there's more than a grain of truth in this, and as an Australian with some international experience, I think that the peace and well-being as well as the progress of the film industry in 1947 will largely depend on our facing this vital problem.

We've got a lot of hard work to do in 1947. Wartime leeway to make up, theatres to be facelifted, personnel to be trained, public relations to be geared up—every phase of our business that had to be neglected through war exigencies now requires our entire physical and mental energies.

These things can't wait, because treading on our heels are powerful competitive enterprises—some old adversaries temporarily driven underground by war, others brand new and the more dangerous because we can't assess the strength of their appeal to the public.

So, as I see it, the producer, the distributor and the showman have a fulltime task without having to fight over the working-out of contracts. Once the deal is made, both parties should be free to give their entire attention to the marketing and presentation of the product on the most intensive scale.

There's only one satisfactory way to do this. Distributors and theatremen must get their personal relationships back onto the good old-fashioned basis of mutual trust. If that sounds Utopian, then may I remind that in my experience, the great majority of the deals that stayed fast were those negotiated between people who trusted each other.

We've got to live with each other in harmony, or get out and make room for those who know how. Deals between producer, distributor and exhibitor must be worked out, lived with, in good faith and mutual understanding.

Big or Little—No Difference

Big, or little, it makes no difference. Unless a contract provides a fair and proper return for both parties, then the signatories are only fooling themselves and wasting precious time and property. The road to hell is paved with good intentions, and if we look back along the road traveled by our industry we can see the wreckage of bad deals made in a murky atmosphere of distrust. Almost before the ink dried, documents have been rushed round to legal departments to find out how certain onerous clauses could be sidestepped.

This gets us right back to the spirit of the deal. Can we in 1947 resolve to negotiate only those deals which both sides honestly believe themselves truly capable of carrying out, without evasion or equivocation? And I mean carry out, not merely to the strict letter of the contract, but to the full generous spirit of the agreement.

This world is fast becoming a small community. There was a time when the showmen of one country knew nothing of, or cared little, about the relationships or the way business was conducted between distributors and exhibitors in another country. Now it's different. The news of a raw deal or a tough sales tussle in one country is quickly flashed to the four corners of the earth. Sometimes, even before a piece of product is shipped away, overseas trading interests have worked themselves into an aggressive frame of mind.

Now it's true that personalities enter into this industry more than most. From star to house manager, it's the personality that counts. And as personalities, we men associated with the film industry, are judged by a tribunal of our contemporaries. That judgment lasts a lifetime, and beyond. It is made up in part by persons overseas to whom you have never spoken, and by persons who in your view do not know you. But their judgment is formidable and unavoidable.

That is why I say the deals negotiated for 1947 should be fired by the ambition to cherish a decent respect for the opinions of our contemporaries. As individuals we know that is an indispensable foundation to the solid durable satisfactions of life.

I hope this doesn't sound too much like preaching. Frankly, it would have been far easier and more pleasant to dish up a flock of platitudes about this industry entering its golden age.

The customary thing is to wish everybody the best of everything and to express the hope that all will be well in the new year. Just why New Year should produce miracles for the convenience of our business merely by wishing and hoping, is something we prefer not to face up to.

But it is for the very reason that I have supreme faith in our industry, sincerely believing humanity needs what we alone can offer, that I say these things. Let us first put our own house in order. Let us capture the spirit of "good will among men" and keep it in our hearts for 365 days in the year. Let that spirit be written into our business deals and honored in the same open-hearted manner that we associate with Xmas and New Year. Then will the partnership of producer, distributor and exhibitor become a mighty inspirational force in the onward march of civilization.

London's Last of the Boom Legit Years?

As 1946 Faded, Indications Pointed Strongly to Fainter Tinkling At the Till

By ERNEST BETTS

London.

It may well have been the last of the boom years. That patch of gold known as the West End theatre has been brightly shining for six years. It has been easy money for managers. People packed the theatres because there was no fun to be had anywhere else, nothing to buy and not much to drink; the cupboard was bare.

But at the end of 1946 that golden patch began to show a slight tarnish, and the shrewdest showman would think twice before shaking hands on a boxoffice certainty. It is possible to shop for other things besides theatre tickets, and the customers are doing so.

As the year went out to a fainter tinkling of cash—there was a terrible slump quite recently—we can at least congratulate ourselves on some deeds of high enterprise in the dramatic field. Culturally and commercially much has gone on, and much is brewing. Yet in the middle of it all there's a paradox. Knowledgeable guys from New York's show world will step off the Queen Elizabeth, do the round of shows in London, and say: "You're doing some marvelous things here compared to the New York theatre." But knowledgeable guys from the patch of gold in London, returning from America, unload the same set of phrases: "They're doing some marvelous things over there compared to the London theatre."

The air of the London theatre may not be sweet as roses but neither does it smell to high heaven. It has been as good a year as any we have had since 1940, and in many ways a great deal better.

Above all, it has shown that there is a vast public awaiting the best things the drama can give it. Where the theatre has answered a spiritual or intellectual need, it has succeeded. After the deep gashes of the war, customers are cultivating their souls. In music, ballet, plays and books there has been a cultural renaissance.

Heading this movement has been the Old Vic, as giddy in its success here as in New York. No team in London has had so sensation a theatrical season as that headed by Laurence Olivier and Ralph Richardson. Olivier has undoubtedly increased his stature by his wonderful performance as King Lear, by his Oedipus and Richard III, and Ralph Richardson's excellent production and "Cyrano de Bergerac" rounds off a season as brilliant in artistry as anything seen in London for a generation.

Old Vic's Danger

With Olivier forming his own company with Vivien Leigh, his visit to Australia and film commitments, the future of the Old Vic hangs in the balance. Meanwhile, a young Vic has been started for the training of recruits, and though the stars will have to be found, it is not likely that the parent company will fail.

While the main dish has been the Old Vic, there has been a good deal of intellectual refreshment from smaller, almost unheard-of theatres in and outside London. The rise of the smaller theatres has been surprising and their influence considerable. The risks undertaken with longhair plays and dramatic experiments have not always been justified commercially, but they have produced a policy of enlightenment, and in numbers of cases shows have been saved from extinction by the coffers of the Arts Council of Great Britain (formerly the Council for the Encouragement of Music and the Arts). While the Arts Council fosters a few flops as a matter of course, some good plays would never get a hearing at all but for their assistance, and many a classy commercial management is glad to say: "After you, gentlemen!" when the Council bows in a doubtful proposition.

Twin theatres that have established a leadership in the little theatre movement have been the Embassy at Swiss Cottage and the Lyric, Hammersmith, where the company of Four operates. The Embassy has shot into eminence with plays of such excitement and character that four of them have been transferred to the West End. This theatre is run by an actor-manager born in the grease paint, Anthony Hawtrey, son of the illustrious Charles Hawtrey. His success there is a personal one, the reward of knowledge and industry.

The Lyric, Hammersmith, has jogged along with a series of good and ever-so productions which recently leaped to glory and the discovery of a new star. This was in the brilliant intellectual skirmish, "The Eagle With Two Heads," by Jean Cocteau, which switched the headlines to a new actress of high tragic qualities, Eileen Herlie. Miss Herlie promptly got a contract from Sir Alexander Korda and an established place in the theatre.

Midget Theatres

In corners of the town where no thespian ever trod, a host of midget theatres has gamely fought—the 20th Century, the Torch, the New Lindsey and others, dramatic tea parlors fired with ideals and unquenchable zeal; somehow, living on. The New Lindsey found a big hit in "Pick-Up Girl," which was seen by Queen Mary, was censored and uncensored and even-so fetched up at the Prince of Wales' theatre under the banner of Moss Empires. While still doing a roaring trade, it was transferred to the newly-opened Casino, but in the midst of its crackerjack trade it had to close down; no other theatre could be found for it.

On the same lines of spiritual uplift and damnation to commerce, the Arts Theatre club has proceeded, theatre of a few hundred seats and unconquerable enterprise. It was this theatre which celebrated the 90th birthday of George Bernard Shaw and plans to put on a nine-hour production of his "Back to Methuselah" in the new year. How profitable the longhair trade can be is proved by the success of Jean Paul Sartre's "Vicious Circle," whose trio of lovers in Hell could have drawn the town for many weeks longer than the scheduled season.

In the West End proper, and sometimes improper, "Clutterbuck," "The Winslow Boy," "But For the Grace of God," "Is Your Honeymoon Really Necessary?" (recently withdrawn after a run of two-and-a-half years), "Lady Windermere's Fan" and "Piccadilly Hayride" have been the long-distance champions. Topping them all is Ivor Novello's "Perchance to Dream," and the surprise of them all, "No Room at the Inn," which many thought was not in the mood of the time but has proved to be the most stubborn success.

Except for the failure of "Can-Can" it has been a lucky year for Jack Hylton, whose "Follow the Girls" at His Majesty's has survived many changes of cast and shows no sign of withdrawal.

Amid all these variations of the theatrical barometer, the Hermione Gingold-Henry Kendall revue, "Sweets and Lovest," continues its career of uninterrupted naughtiness with uninterrupted success. It has been a phenomenon in town. It is a reminder of how little new talent has been born during the year. Its author, Alan Melville, is a wag of the highest class who brings a stinging wit and a brilliant sense of burlesque to the theatre. He's regarded as the only first-rate British revue writer since Noel Coward and the late Herbert Farjeon. In the legitimate field one has discovered, after a good many years, that Ronald Chetwynd-Hayes is a playwright. His "The Guinea Pig" and "The Gleam," plays of social significance, are among the better things now reaping the reward of brains and imagination.

Lacking New Names

If there is any lesson to be learned from the past 12 months it is that we are deplorably lackling in new names and in the stimulus they would give to the stage in its most perilous transition time. After we have named Eileen Herlie, and a newcomer of 17, Daphne Slater, who has been picked to play Juliet at next year's Shakespeare Festival at Stratford, we're stumped. Of course, there is always Sid Field, but he has been so prominently during the past year that he is practically a veteran, and though Terry Thomas and Robert Lamouret, the ventriloquist, in the same "Piccadilly Hayride" show have hit prominence, they have not yet proved that they are in the top flight.

In variety this shortage is particularly noticeable, most of the stars having topped the bill in London for the last 20 years or more. In writers, too, we are deficient, a state of things put down by writers to the managements, and by managements to the writers. It is deep, nevertheless, that the theatre is waiting for the dramatist who will respond to the current need for thoughtful plays which reflect the appalling muddle of the time and indicate some way of confronting it. Criticism of the play which reopened Theatre Royal Drury Lane concentrated mainly on the fact that it gave us nothing new. But while there is nothing new under the sun, the playwrights of 1947 must be told that there are new ways of putting it, that there is a play in Ernest Bevin, in a good detective murder, in a newspaper headline. Someone has already complained that Laurence Olivier has not been seen in an ordinary man's trousers for 10 years, and that we are sick of Shakespeare, Shaw, Chekhov and Wilde. This is probably as true of anything said about the West End stage in the past year, and it shows which way the wind is blowing.

American Film Comedies, Musicals Aid Germany Forget Its Current Misery

Berlin.

A study of German reactions to Hollywood pix reveals, contrary to generally accepted opinion, that their popularity is strictly limited to certain types of films. The study is based on U. S. films presented as mass fare for Reich consumption, primary purpose of which is entertainment, and secondarily, "reorientation"—much-abused word referring to current efforts to undo the heavy tinting of Nazism which permeates present-day German thinking.

To appreciate reactions it must be remembered that pix were produced for Americans with different language, customs, entertainment and cultural standards. No doubt but that the German, living under occupation by four great powers, has a sharpened cultural sense. Mr. Average German is frustrated and dissatisfied, hungry and cold. He looks for escapist entertainment. He finds release in embittered criticism, but couches it in an undertone because he is afraid of reprisals.

Even the best Hollywood films are handicapped by the language barrier and for this reason most Germans prefer second-rate German to superior U. S. film. For example, "Abe Lincoln in Illinois," didn't go down very well because of lengthy dialog which most German audiences cannot follow.

Unfriendly reaction is also due to types and quality of the films shown. Certain types, popular in the U. S., are completely alien to the German public. Though the quality of Yank pix selected for showing in Germany is definitely above average by American standards, krauts believe Germany is a dumping ground for Hollywood flops or films too old to be shown Stateswisc.

Newsreels, produced here under joint American-British auspices, enjoy the greatest favor here in the 768 film theatres now in operation in the U. S. zone.

Full-Length Features

Regarding full-length features, all sources indicate that light comedies are the most popular with the Germans, both from point of view of boxoffice and audience reaction. They appeal because they offer a few hours of escape from the drabness and misery of life in present-day Germany.

Four out of the seven pix with the greatest drawing power, in the province of Wuerttemberg-Baden, were musicals or comedies such as "Gold Rush," "You Were Never Lovelier," "It Started with Eve" and "Seven Sweethearts." On the other hand, certain comedies, such as "My Sister Eileen" didn't click because of the involved action and dialog.

Biographicals such as "Abraham Lincoln," "Madame Curie," "Young Tom Edison" and "Dr. Ehrlich" showed up as having terrific drawing power but would have been better liked had synchronization been on a higher scale. In a public-opinion survey "Curie" was named by anonymous ballot the most popular U. S. film seen since the occupation. "Going My Way" was a double-barreled hit, particularly in Catholic Bavaria, where actors and film directors acclaimed it as being the best American film.

War films, particularly "The Sullivans," clicked fairly well but the war aspects were not the thing which made them click. It was rather the various aspects of American family life which made the adult audiences happy. As for the German youth, their militaristic background makes them take like fish to water on war films. This type of picture should be avoided and

(Continued on page 182)

M-G to Extend 16m Service To Philippine Airlines

Manila.

Metro's Philippine office, following conferences with officials of Philippine airlines, is considering exhibiting 16m. pictures aboard passenger transports in flight. This kind of service has already been successfully inaugurated by Metro on flights between the U. S. and England and throughout France.

Special equipment for these aerial screenings is expected soon to be available from projector manufacturers in the U. S.

Aussie's Big '47 Film Plans

Sydney.

Present local production plans aim to make Sydney the second city of the Pacific wherein films are concerned.

Two pix made in 1946 are the keynotes to this plan. Columbia's "Smithy" and Ealing's "The Overlanders." Their boxoffice success throughout Australia, especially the latter, has been amazing Down Under showmen, who, presently, are yelling for more Antipodes product.

J. Arthur Rank, 50-50 partner with Norman B. Rydge in Greater Union Theatres, British Empire Films, Cinesound - Pagewood studios, plus kindred other setups here, will shoot the works in 1947 to set Aussie pic production off at a fast tempo, with the latest in technical equipment, technicians, star power and writing talent.

Aussie boxoffices sang a merry tune for British pix during the past year. Most popular British actor was James Mason;

World Markets Clamor for Good Goods; and That Goes for Aussie In Relation to All Types of Pix

By NORMAN B. RYDGE
(Chairman, Greater Union Theatres)

Sydney.

What everyone would like to know is—what does the future hold for us? To gaze correctly would be more than an art, a science or a gift. It would be a blessing to our industry. It would enable it to give the public the pictures it wants. Talking about pictures—let me say this. Those entrusted with production will have to face up to a stern reality. In the past, making films with formula stories may have been a satisfactory profit-making enterprise in the lush peak war periods. But with the world's return to normal spending, a different outlook faces us.

Norman B. Rydge

I would like to urge betterment in Hollywood. In the past we have suffered some extraordinarily bad pictures on our screens. Lack of imagination has made some film practically of "quickie" standard. Australia has the theatres, the manpower, the organizations ready to sell and present film. We have proved that Australia can gross top money, with top features. Keep them coming to us, we will maintain the pressure.

But try as we do, we must confess our inability to get big money with little pictures. The public finds them out too quickly.

Besides, in a world where competition is springing up rapidly as a postwar feature, the industry has to realize that maintain and must have the right product with which to fight. That competition is not trifling. Night sports, day sports, new styles of entertainment are coming along increasingly and we must have good fare with which to keep on attracting patrons. Otherwise they will regard our industry as inferior and desert us for other things. Our prestige is built, after all—like that of any other trading concern — on the type of material sold. To find and keep inducing a rich market we must continue to present worthy product. Loss of prestige means our dwindling into a second-rate business, and that kind of enterprise doesn't keep on taking big money.

You can start at home in Hollywood. Don't just say in reply that "Hollywood" will get out of it. Australian publicity men are smart and resourceful. They know the angles, put over all the stunts they know. But that doesn't help if the picture won't stand up to it. After the first rush, the business falls away if the picture won't hold the customers and give them the fair return of entertainment they've been led to expect.

No, the picture is the basis of our industry. Its basis is production. Cut out the "corn"—throw away the stereotyped formulas. Keep the material crisp, interesting, entertaining.

As for cycles—the only one I want to see is a cycle of good pic-

(Continued on page 184)

1947 Likely to Provide All-Time Peak For U. S. Show Biz in Latin America

By RAY JOSEPHS

With travel restrictions off, coin abundant and European competition not yet apparent to any worthwhile degree, Latino entertainment biz situation now looms as one of the healthiest in the international field, with 1947 likely to provide an all time high.

Ray Josephs

Every aspect has shown the trend: pix, radio, legit and concert. And while things are not as colossal as some of the hands-across-the-border optimists were predicting in the heyday of Pan-American romancing, more important development has been the solid and steady growth in both directions.

There's no longer any doubt that the Good Neighbor countries will return to Europe for their cues as in the pre-war days. For while pro-U. S. sentiment as this correspondent observed it in Mexico and Central America during recent months is definitely down from its wartime top, Latinos are certain their future lies with Uncle Sam, not the Continent.

Fact that the inter-American setup has become a two-way street with the Latins coming here in increasing numbers as well as Yanquis heading south has also had a tremendous effect in overcoming the touchiness that resulted from the feeling that hemisphere operations were one way—with the south-of-the-Rio Grande countries on the short end.

Two major trends are emphasizing the two-way aspect. Latins coming to the U. S. since war's end, especially those in pix and concert fields, have found the warmth of their reception undiminished. Secondly, the whole movement southward has taken more of a genuine cooperative trend. Latter has been especially noteworthy in the film field with more and more U. S. majors actively interested in Mexican and Argentine pix production and in theatre building and distribution in almost every country.

U. S. Doors Still Open

"We thought that when the war ended we'd be forgotten" is a remark many Latins have made. "Yet we find that we're still doing as well as ever, despite new developments in other foreign fields. That's the best proof that wartime cooperation has been built on a permanent and firm basis."

In only one Latin country—Argentina—have official headaches continued to plague show biz, although Chile and Peru have threatened to furnish new worries. President Juan D. Peron in Buenos Aires, operating through his wife, the former Evita Duarte, a one-time radio actress who has the top say in everything regarding films, radio and allied fields, has not only renewed the old fight to take a p.c. of all revenue collected in the country as taxable, but has been battling to subject everything regarding show biz under official control. Argentine courts did rule against the p.c. rule, but Peron now has his Supreme Court on trial and therefore isn't likely to be held by any of its decisions.

Additionally Argentine government has cracked down on every other aspect of the entertainment industry, particularly anything that smacks of pro-democratic or pro-U.S. ideas.

Chile which recently signed a new trade pact bringing her closer than ever to the Argentine orbit is thought by Latin observers to have taken her lead from Peron. Argentine boss is seeking to enlarge his influence throughout South America. Claim is that the freeze on U. S. pix company coin is necessary to maintain currency exchange, an argument which has a certain validity but which obviously smacks of a hold up.

On the other hand most Latin countries have had no need for such action. If anything, they have an excess of dollar credits built up during the war. Much of the cash—estimated at between four and five billions—has been sitting in U. S. banks awaiting an opportunity to be used to buy vitally needed goods and machines. But since little has been available for export due to slacked production caused by strikes and the tremendous demands of the home market, Latins have been able to buy only small quantities.

As a result inflation has been skyrocketing in Latin America. About the only thing the Latins can get enough of from the U.S. are pix, concert and theatre personalities. All three have consequently done extremely well. Additionally in the film field, the quality of Hollywood product has been greatly bettered so far as Latins are concerned, Latins were never very strong for wartime pix in any case, and many with Latin backgrounds were so bad that they drew howls instead of applause. In contrast, pix such as RKO's "Cornered" and the Hitchcock "Notorious," former set in Buenos Aires and latter in Rio, are cited as examples of pix where the Latin aspect was both authentic and vital and the stories and production also top grade. Metro's "Holiday in Mexico" also was strong in Latin America.

Question of dubbing, while still much debated, seems to indicate that if done well it will be highly acceptable. Metro, which has been a strong defender of dubbed product, has reported that, contrary to general opinion, the Spanish-dialoged versions do as well in first runs in the key situations as they do in subsequent runs. Dubbed versions, additionally, have much longer playing time in the subsequents and first runs in secondary cities, and can match the increasingly bettered Argentine and Mexican-mades.

Another strong development in the past year—and one likely to show even sharper increases during 1947—has been the export of U.S. 16m pix for minor locations. This correspondent visited many of the interior cities of Argentina, Uruguay and Chile when such films were first shown by the John Hay Whitney office during the war and found that many of those who viewed them had rarely, if ever, seen U. S. or any films previously. Number of major producers who volunteered prints for the Co-Ordinator's office in the time also found that rather than serve as competition, showings developed new trade.

Metro, Warners and others have set up foreign sales networks for the narrow-gauge films in many Latin situations. WB, which is concentrating on the Latin field, is using 18 features selected by a poll of foreign branch managers in addition to a like number of shorts which will be combined in a one-feature-one-short package for distribution. In many cases these are shown in sheds, tents, or to al fresco audiences.

Aside from pix another major Latin development has been the increasing Latin interest in U.S. legit, concert and other entertainment fields. Typical has been the strong biz done in B. A., Rio and Mexico City, the three top Latin capitals by local translations of Broadway and classic U. S. hits. Argentine version of Norman Krasna's "My Dear Ruth" ran more than eight months in Buenos Aires, No. 1 hit of the past season. In Rio half a dozen legit productions were translations, running the range from O'Neill's "Desire Under the Elms" to "Gaslight."

Closing of the Copacabana, Urca and Atlantico Casinos meant that top bands, acts and similiar attractions were no longer able to go to Brazil but it's expected these restrictions may be lifted shortly.

Shopping in Aussie Also

By SIR BENJAMIN J. FULLER
(Fuller's Theatre Circuit)

Melbourne.

To coin a much-used cliche, "The honeymoon is over," as far as show business in Australia is concerned. Nevertheless, show business still has its compensations.

Time was, and not so long ago, when if one had advertised a screening of a set of magic lantern slides in a theatre heretofore accustomed to super-duper features, there would have been a queue at 9 o'clock in the morning, waiting to purchase tickets. And where customers, when shopping for first run films to see, used to ask, "Who's in it?", now they say, "What, him again?" Not that business is not there for the asking, but the asking has to be comprehensively 100%. In the main, business is somewhat behind the war years but still most satisfactory.

The diminution in the number of A features among the Big Eight will have its effects, but with British producers so active and becoming increasingly prolific and improving product, along with American independents increasing their output, much of the shortage will be made up. In addition there's an occasional internationally attractive feature from such countries as Denmark, France, Russia, Italy, Sweden, etc., so that most theatres will not run short of some sort of screenable material.

Legit company of "Life With Father" has at long last struck these shores and is doing turnaway business. It's expected to run until at least next May. Vaudeville is stronger than ever so all's right with the world. Yes, it's a screwy business but I love it, and let a newcomer enter it and he's soon tarred with the same brush.

Argentine Studios Seen Turning Out 100 Pictures in 1947 Season

Buenos Aires.

When Argentina's films critics decided to hand out Oscars for 1945, about the middle of the current year, they voted San Miguel Studios' "La Dama Duende" ("The Ghost Lady") the best picture of the year. The production also rated four prizes: for best direction, to Luis Saslavsky; best adaptation of a legit plot to the screen, to Maria Teresa Leon and Rafael Alberti; best musical score, to Julian Bautista, maestro; best decoration and sets, to Gori Munoz.

This year all the signs point to the Oscars going to AAA for its production of "Donde Mueren las Palabras" "(Where Words End"), which has been getting accolades from France and Sweden, where it has recently been exhibited. Now from Hollywood comes the announcement that Metro has decided to sign up Hugo Fregonese, young Argentine director, who was responsible for the AAA production. Fregonese received his first pic training in Hollywood and told the press that his agreement with Metro will allow him to return to Buenos Aires early in 1947 to make "La Gran Tentacion" for ALFAR, a new production unit, but subsequently he would like to settle definitely in Hollywood.

Fregonese and Carlos Hugo Christensen are Argentina's two youngest directors, the "blue eyed boys" of an industry which seems to lack any promising young directorial material. At any rate, in the last couple of years the only newcomer on the way up seems to be Daniel Tinayre, a Franco-Argentine who recently married actress Mirtha Legrand. Tinayre got his first training in France, with Paramount.

According to present, estimates Argentine studios will turn out 100 pix in 1947. San Miguel Studios has anticipated other studios by publishing a list of 20 forthcoming productions for 1947. Argentina Sono Film is blueprinting another score of pix, Lumiton places its estimate at 18. AAA, which has never made more than two or three pix a year before this, is planning on production of no less than six, to be rolled at the old Baires studios, until their own studios at Florencio Varela are completed.

New Producing Cos.

The new production companies, created in the last 18 months, are Atica, Sur, PYAA, Oeste Films of Chivilcoy and two units in formation, to which no name has been given as yet.

For the last five years practically no front-line stars have emerged on the Argentine pic horizon, and the public must be longing for some new faces to supplement those of Elisa Galve, Mirtha Legrand, Delia Garces, Maria Duval, Zully Moreno and Silvana Roth, who revolve before them in interminable succession. On the "heavier" side, they see Mecha Ortiz, Amelia Bence, Rosa Rosen, Elsa O'Connor and Tilde Thamar, with only an occasional picture by their great favorite Libertad Lamarque, and of course Nini Marshall for comic relief.

During 1946, two starlets have come up out of the depths of anonymity in Susanita Freyre, who has an elfin charm and decided exuberance to recommend her, but not much acting experience as yet. The latest comer is Olga Zubarry, who mushroomed to stardom almost overnight, as a result of Mirtha Legrand's refusing the lead in "The Naked Angel." She has been given unprecedented ballyhoo, but from the acting point of view she has only her evident determination to succeed to recommend her.

Local studios have been luckier in discovering good male acting talent. Andres Mejuto came to the fore in "La Dama Duende" and did some scene stealing from Luis Angel Diosdado, another good - looking Spaniard. Marcial Manent, another actor from Spain, via experience in French films, gave an excellent performance as Schubert in "Inspiracion," and is slated for stellar honors in his next picture.

U. S. Film Comedies

Continued from page 131

probably will be in the future so far as this market is concerned.

Pix which have consistently drawn unfavorable comment are the trick films such as "All That Money Can Buy," "Tales of Manhattan," "Here Comes Mr. Jordan," and "Flesh and Fantasy." The brilliant imaginative situations in these films, so popular in the States, are utterly foreign to the German mentality and they only stir up ridicule and actual revulsion.

About a third of the film theatres in the U. S. zone are showing old German pix, with objectionable angles carefully deleted. They outdraw the Hollywood pictures. However, of all non-German pix, American are by far the most popular. Recently in Berlin a public opinion survey was made on celluloid. American product headed the list, British followed, with relatively few favoring Russian and French.

German-dubbed films are soon to be provided in larger number. About 50 will be distributed annually in the Yank zone. As soon as contract is signed with Disney Studios, Walt Disney pix will be screened. Hollywood product will gain in popularity as fast as the audiences get accustomed to actors.

The White Hope

But by and large, the white hope of the film industry in present-day Germany is the German-made product. The art is slowest to recover in spite of fact that this country always excelled in the cinema. War-damaged production facilities and want of essential commodities such as capital and actors have held up recovery. Germany's "Hollywood" at Babelsberg, near Berlin, where UFA's chief studios are located, was stripped almost clean by marauders, and only a few of the production units are in action. In the U. S. sector of Berlin, two UFA studios, relatively undamaged, are still attempting at this late date to move into production but here again recovery is almost impossible due to shortages in food for employees, coal for the buildings and celluloid for the cameras—the common affliction of all of the country. [illegible]

'Art' Goes Over, B.O. NG in Italy

Rome.

From the viewpoint of "art", the past year has been a good one for the Italian stage. From the point of view of finances, however, it could hardly have been worse.

Many important new foreign plays, banned or unavailable during the war, were staged with considerable success. There was a long spell of "existentialism" which filled theatres in Rome and Milan with followers and detractors of Camus, Sartre and Anhouil. O'Neill was represented throughout the year with great success. Still, most Italian stage companies are bankrupt, and many stars are going over to pix rather than stick it out.

Main reason for this is the heavy amusement tax levied by the government, about 30% of b.o. take. Then, the cost of living and transportation of personnel and equipment has risen out of proportion with the increase in ticket prices. And, finally, the government has withdrawn not only all subsidies to theatre companies, but also the normal facilitations in transportation, taxes, etc., which companies enjoyed before the war. Unless a way to re-finance stock companies is found, next season will see a marked decrease in the tone of Italian stage productions. [illegible]

ITALY TURNED OUT 100 FILMS IN 1946

Rome.

The year just ending was a very special year for the Italian picture industry, emerging from four years of war with most of its equipment and facilities destroyed.

In 12 months Italian studios turned out over 100 films, topping all prewar records. True, most of these were lemons, but some hits, such as "Open City," "Paisa" and "Eugenie Grandet," were also turned out. And the important fact was that the industry got on its feet through private financing, with none of the old government subsidies, and gave work to large masses of technicians and skilled laborers who would otherwise have been an added burden on the semi-bankrupt national economy.

The past year also saw the first postwar edition of the International Film Festival at Venice, as well as several minor film festivals throughout the country. Italian films were exported, and met with success. A new development in films in Italy was also the beginning of producing agreements between foreign and Italian interests. Several British and French pictures were shot in Italy, and Columbia also made an agreement to the same effect with an Italian company.

No new names have emerged among actors or directors, but the number of new people in the industry makes it quite likely that there will be many new stars around next year. [illegible]

Singapore Black Market Loaded With Film Rolls; Malaya Documentary Set

Manila, Dec. 20.

Ten thousand rolls of photographic film have been smuggled into Singapore during the last few months, according to reports reaching Manila, and a large quantity of film rolls smuggled from Hongkong and Manila is on the market.

These rolls are made in the United States. The smugglers sell them to black marketeers for $2.50. They are resold to the public for $3.50, though the correct price is about 90c.

Meanwhile, after nearly a year's work in the jungles of North Malaya, shooting thousands of feet of film for a 40-minute documentary record of the rehabilitation of Malaya since the Japanese surrender, the last two members of the Crown Film Unit have left Singapore. They are Ralph Elton, unit director of a nucleus of four Englishmen and nine Malayans, and Denny Densham, cameraman. Their departure closes Crown Film's operations in Malaya.

While in London they will help in the editing and cutting of their post-war Malayan saga, which is woven variously around the Sultan of Perak; a force of 136 officers who interpret the British attitude and who merge into the British military administration; a Danish rubber planter who watches the beginning of the revival of industry; an ordinary Chinese citizen, a Malay peasant, and many other lesser characters, as well as Japanese prisoners of war and political figures. [illegible]

Budapest Show Biz Gets Hypo Via Stabilized Currency; Pix Still Ain't

Budapest.

Biggest fact in Hungarian show-biz today is the revolution in national economy brought about by last August's stabilization of the currency. This converted Budapest from a fiscally crazy town where an American could sell his dollars for trillions of pengoes, into Europe's most expensive city. Solidifying of currency has made revival of show-biz possible, and theatres are again thriving, though barren of little new ideas or class productions.

But the Magyar picture industry is thoroughly kaput. Studios which turned out as many as 100 features in a prewar year (mostly quickies) are completely shut down. Reason is that with only 20% of the country's 700 prewar houses still usable, and these in hands of political parties, mainly Communists (latter have 160 film theatres), even quickies can't pay. Hungarian is one of Europe's least exportable languages. Markets, except for minor Hungarian colonies in the U. S. are altogether within the small country itself.

Most noticeable fact in Budapest's thriving night life is that Americans are no longer the money kings. Up to August GIs and Yank diplomats were paid in dollars. Three bucks would buy a big evening for two with champagne and lavish tips to the gypsy musicians. The exceptionally beautiful local dames swarmed after the screaming eagles. Then American wives and families arrived and the dough picture changed simultaneously. Now dollars sell in black market only at a small advantage over the legal exchange rate. Lots of the Americans married local gals who wanted a trip to the states or the protection of U. S. passports.

But the nightlife spenders of today are again Hungarians and an assortment of Balkan nationalities with wads of assorted currencies much stronger than the scrip dollars to which the Yanks are now restricted. A high-class dinner with a cocktail, good wine and a brandy will set one back $6 to $10 a head. A meal in a Jack and Charlie style restaurant might run $20. The Americans stick pretty close to home or visit the bars where a slug of local cognac sells for 50c. GIs sit alone and ogle the dolls while the latter case the swarthy money men from Rumania and Carpatho-Russia.

Run-Down Legit

Budapest legit houses are about as run-down (quite aside from war damage) as any in Europe. Productions are, in general, equally sleazy in both mounting and creative worth. The opera is first-class and boasts some talent that would be at home in La Scala or the Met. But the dramatic theatre is down at the heels for both talent and ideas.

Town's current hit is "Janika." This is a low comedy of the "Abie's Irish Rose" genre by Istvan Bekeffi and Adorjan Stella, latter one of town's best-known playwrights and critics. Sloppily set and costumed, it's about an actress (Ida Turay) who swindles her errant husband by playing her own 13-year-old son and the old man for a sucker. Turay is buxom and plays the role for plenty of sex appeal. But no U. S. audience would go for her in a kid's short pants and heavy eye makeup.

Jon Sardy, a local Sinatra with broad shoulders and matinee idol face, is a draw at this one and patronizingly tosses a couple of songs to the customers between doses of heaviest sort of hack situation comedy. It's a wow here doing SRO biz. With just the right cast, particularly in the boy-actress double bit, it could conceivably go on Broadway, as did "Abie." But it would be a very long shot indeed.

Budapest's musical hit of the moment is "Three Girls." Veteran comic Latabar makes this one palatable, but with business that wouldn't go in any other language or milieu. Rest of cast, sets and clothes look like something salvaged from Koster and Bial's. In a smaller vein is a revival of "Who's My Poppa," a sort of burlesque French farce with music for which Stella did the book some years ago.

On the serious side, National theatre put on Hemingway's "Fifth Column." Papers and public don't like it much, particularly so long after Spanish Civil War problems. Francisca Gaal, who had a brief prewar Hollywood career opens this week in "Claudia," unreviewed at this writing. Recent version of O'Neill's "Desire Under the Elms" was also NSG. Lily Kertay registered a solid but intellectual hit in "No War in Troy," an oldie from the French classics.

Despite fair to solid business in legit houses, managers claim they lose money on anything short of a smasheroo. Taxes are heavy—up to 53% on some classes of admissions. Legit prices run to 20 forints (about $2) top and are fixed by law. A star with a draw can get 600 forints a day. Average salary for a second lead runs around 200 forints (under $20) a day. In the case of opera and National theatre, state subsidies help out.

Managers also point out dangers of being in showbiz at all these days. Despite their actual slight minority in government, the Reds dominate with the Russian occupation army to back them up. A criticism panning a show on idealistic grounds aside from dramatic worth can cost a manager more than a poor b.o. There's still a sizable traffic in political denunciations and many top theatrical figures are in jail or exile for Nazi collaboration or "orientation to the West."

Hollywood Hankering

On Budapest's film front a visiting American is inevitably asked endless questions about the many talented Hungarians in New York and Hollywood. Molnar, the Korda brothers, Gabriel Pascal, Ladislas Bus-Fekete, Ernest Vajda, Alexander Ince, S. Z. Sakall and lots of others are the envy and hope of the very great majority of show people who practically without exception would like to emigrate to the U. S.—and have very little chance to do so.

Latter fact is particularly true because so few can work in English. Outside of a couple of opera singers who have been booked for second string American appearances this winter, the only export yet arranged is for Valeria Hidvegy, a young and relatively inexperienced blonde from the local stage. She's been signed by Pascal for London and Hollywood, despite limited English.

Three studios with total of seven large and fully equipped sound stages are ready for work in the Budapest area. However there's been only one production started since the war's end. That was a dual language job for German and Magyar release with Francisca Gaal, Theo Lingen, Hans Moser and other Viennese imports. Shooting, under producer-director Akos Ratony, who was a former assistant of Korda in London and on the Coast, was about a third finished when peak inflation period plus poor income outlook made completion impossible. Backers withdrew and players went home to Vienna.

Ratony, set for a London reunion with the Kordas in December, hopes to take the sets and completed negative to Vienna studios and complete it. Ratony, who used to turn out as many as 84 prewar Hungarian quickies a year to resounding profits, explained that with present small number of houses available, plus political dangers and heavy taxation, shootings are not likely to be worth while for a long time to come. After admission taxes (over 50%) and other government cuts are skimmed off pix grosses, there's less than 15% left for the producer.

Possibility is foreseen that Russians through their Sovexportfilm distribution and production outfit may try some Hungarian language shooting or at least do some synchronizing of German and Russian sound tracks of Magyar consumption. Meanwhile only a very small part of the hundreds of oldies in Budapest vaults are showable under currently strict and narrow interpretations of political laws. Almost every pix is sure to have some player, director or writer associated with it who's on the collaborationist blacklist or unacceptable to the Reds.

Hardly any new U. S. product has yet reached Budapest though present MPEA conferences in Paris are expected to get some action for Hollywood-hungry Hungarians. Few Hollywood pix that have filtered in have met with big takes. 20th-Fox's "The Sullivans" (incidentally NSG in Germany) went big here. Bette Davis, Ginger Rogers and Jeanette MacDonald retain big popularity here, as does the late Leslie Howard who was born in Hungary. But only 16 postwar U. S. titles have hit Budapest screens so far. Current bills include Nelson Eddy in "Phantom of the Opera" and Ginger Rogers in "Tom Dick and Harry"—both solid hits.

Budapest is enjoying a dizzy boom in night life. Famous "Arizona Bar" is still the showiest spot in town with a big band and glass dance floor, plus show. Casanova packs them in with a striptease by Deri Sari, former legit actress.

Derby Bar, annex of the same place, features a pair of lads who would be sock in any small room in the states. George Magyar and George Fejer (Fejer's brother runs the Mayflower hotel, N. Y.) are at piano and drums. These boys have a seemingly limitless repertoire in six languages, including practically everything standard as well as a flock of boff individual routines. Their nine years of association was interrupted by stays in Dachau, but they are good as ever.

London Legit Producers Well-Geared On Financing Where Formerly 'Outside' Money Played an Important Factor

By HARRY REGENSBERG

London.

It's phenomenal the way prominent men in prominent industries are always anxious to crash show business. And it's invaribly the hard-boiled tycoons who are the easiest suckers.

In former years these were a great help to mushroom promoters. And though they usually finished up on the wrong side of the ledger, they were still ready to listen to the next promotion. But some of these backers, having profited in their first ventures, have been investing ever since, more often disastrously.

Present-day show promoters have been making so much money that they no longer need any outside backing. But there are still some who still hanker after a bankroll, with ready investors at their beck and call.

There's quite a list of big "outside" business men whose sideline is show biz. Jack Hylton, one of the foremost of the British show producers, used to have quite a miscellaneous collection of these backers. His most intriguing was an elderly gent, said to be a farmer, who invested in several Hylton ventures, including "The Merry Widow" and "Peter Pan," which have proved annual revenue-yielding propositions to him for years. He is often to be seen around the West End, with his small black bag, looking more like a farmer than a person connected with this glamorous business.

Hylton has made such a lot of money in the last few years that he no longer needs any outside backers. Most of his support comes from the People's Entertainment Society, which is a play-producing outfit of the Co-operative Society, which has unrestricted millions. It is also in a position to organize its own parties from its members all over the country, arranging for visits to the West End, providing transportation, meals, and, when necessary, hotel accommodations.

Hylton is still loyal to his old backers, one especially being C. J. Lytle, American advertising man, who in the old days used to back Laddie Cliff and Stanley Lupino musical ventures. Although he has sworn off investing in show biz, it's understood he still puts up some coin now and again.

Arnold Self-Sustaining

Tom Arnold is another show producer who no longer needs outside support. But in former years his most important backer used to be Cecil Moore, head of Littlewoods, football-pool promoters, and chain store owners.

New company, owning three West End theatres and ready to buy more, is Edmar Productions, which hides identity of Eddie Horan and Marianne Davis, both Americans, former musical comedy scorer and latter cabaret artist. All the backing they need is provided by Sir John Leigh, multi-millionaire real estater. Company's present holdings comprise the Saville, Duchess and Duke of York's theatres.

Emile Littler has all the money he wants for his ventures, but for his big shows he's still backed by Eagle Star Assurance Co.; Charles Gulliver, who formerly controlled the London Theatres of Variety, till he sold out some years ago to Ostrer Bros.; his brother, Prince Littler, and S. H. Newsome, big theatre and provincial revue operator.

Bernard Delfont, who controls many interests, has as his biggest backer Eddie Hall, formerly racing motorist, and now garage proprietor. In his earlier days, he was also backed by Mecca Cafes and Hyams Bros., picture theatre operators. But latter have now switched to Lew and Leslie Grade, who, despite their monicker, are Delfont's brothers. The Grades mostly confine their activities to provincial revue producing and agency biz, in all of which the Hyams freres have an interest.

Lee Ephraim's backers are the Littlers and Alfred E. Bundy, head of United Kingdom Advertising Co., who provide him with all the money he needs.

Most recent arrival to the industry is John McCormick, who used to promote show biz in the sticks. He has now blossomed forth as a regular West Ender, with enough backing to acquire the Strand theatre for $600,000. His angels are Gordon Stewart, head of Stewart & Arden, one of the biggest auto-distributing companies in England, and Alfred Shipman, of Shipman & King, millionaire picture theatre owners.

Henry Sherek, who has carved himself a very important niche in the West End legit field since returning from the services, gets most of his support from Stewart Cruick-Shanks (head of Howard & Wyndham theatres), and in a smaller way from Jack Bloom, local antique dealer, and Claude Langdon, who operates the Hammersmith Palais de Danse. Sherek also has an arrangement with the Theatre Arts Council, a semi-Government concern, whereby he can produce plays which are immune from theatre tax. This way, he has a surplus of something like $100,000 with which to play. Most of his ventures have proven successful, with backers literally lining up on the doorstep.

Tennent and TAC

H. M. Tennent, Ltd., biggest legit purveyor in the West End, is another company not in need of outside backing. In the olden days, its main support used to be John McLean, a prominent Scottish bookmaking firm. But these days it can well stand on its own.

One of its important sources of revenue is its association with the TAC, having produced several plays in conjunction with this body. It now enjoys a surplus of $220,000. Tennent, however, lost $72,000 in operating the Lyric, Hammersmith, producing arty plays in conjunction with TAC.

Firth Shephard, with so many successes to his credit, has little use for outside coin. But when in need of big money he can always call upon a city insurance man, closely identified with Lloyd's, and Horace Fletcher, director of Hilbery, Chaplin & Co., big real-estaters.

Charles B. Cochran's latest bankroll to promote his present revue, "Big Ben," at the Adelphi, which is reputed to have cost $60,000, is a mystery in the biz. But actually his backers are outside the theatre. They are Sir Harold Boulton and Sir Louis Sterling, who is retired from the disk biz. Cochran has already gotten back his production cost.

Linnit & Dunfee is another concern that gets any help it needs from inside the biz, with most of its shows being done in association with H. M. Tennent, Ltd.

Show biz seems to have a big attraction for dress manufacturers. Most important one is Charles Clore, operator of Richards, string of gown shops, who recently disposed of the London Casino to Emile Littler and Tom Arnold for $1,040,000. He is also freeholder of the Prince of Wales' theatre, the lessee of which is General Theatres Corp. And he has recently acquired interest in the Piccadilly theatre.

Another dress manufacturer who has fallen for show biz is Lou Cooper. He owns the Whitehall theatre, which he has leased to stripper Phyllis Dixey, and is on the lookout for more theatres. Freddy Stark is still another in the same business gone theatre-minded. He has just purchased the small arty Lindsey theatre, off the beaten track, which became famous overnight due to its having staged the phenomenal click, "Pick-Up Girl," now acquired by Tom Arnold.

Also having acquired a yen for the biz is G. T. Smith, chemist. His first venture was an interest in "Is Your Honeymoon Really Necessary?" which at this writing is in its third year in the West End. Play is understood to have netted $800,000.

Latest entry into the show biz field is Peter Dearing. Finally there is Sol Harris, Glasgow shirt manufacturer, always ready to dip his hand into his pocket for any show biz project.

Perkins Heads Par Execs On Junket to Ireland

London.

James E. Perkins, new managing director of Paramount Pictures in Great Britain, accompanied by his wife; F. E. Hutchirson, Par's head of sales in Britain, and Tony Reddin, director, off to Ireland where they'll meet leading trade and civic officials.

Junket is part of a tour which has taken Par's contingent to all parts of the United Kingdom to enable them to meet exhibitors and trade personalities for purpose of furthering biz.

SOCK CONCERT SEASON IN '46 FOR ARGENTINA

Buenos Aires.

Argentina enjoyed a sock concert season during 1946, only snag towards the end being the musicians' strike.

Lack of concert halls and suitable theatres for concert series is a great drawback to development of the country's concert biz, and it is hoped that the government decision to build an auditorium with a seating capacity of 20,000 or more will go far towards easing this situation.

Fridolin Undecided On Paris Offer; May First Do English Revue in Canada

Montreal.

Gratien Gelinas (Fridolin), French Canada's leading legit figure, has received an offer to bring his entire revue over to Paris but acceptance of the offer is being held up due to the fact that Fridolin may decide to do an all-English revue on this side first. Whether he'll do the English show or go abroad will be decided within the next few days.

All details of the French proposition haven't been finalized yet, but according to Fridolin he'd go across on some kind of a guarantee deal. Fridolin is wary because the French Government has placed on embargo on the exporting of francs. He'd go to France for a limited engagement of a month or six weeks.

Fridolin's latest revue, "Fridolinons," which was a potpourri of the best sketches of his previous revues, recently concluded engagements in Montreal and Quebec, to huge box-offices. In Montreal, show garnered an average of $20,000 per week for nine weeks at the 1,400-seater Monument National at $2.40 top.

If That $80,000,000 British Film Market Is Worth Having It's Worth Studying

And Not by U. S. 'Experts' Who Spend a Fast Fortnight Surveying London

By MAURICE COWAN

London.

Entering the Empire for the first Royal Command film performance ever to take place in England, I ventured to remark to an eminent British producer that we expected this would be an annual event. And then proceeded to say "one year a British film, one year American." To which the producer replied, with cynical laughter—"American! It will take them years to catch up with us."

"I don't know," I murmured humbly, "they've got one or two fair picture makers—Willie Wyler, Frank Capra, George Stevens, Garson Kanin—they might get cracking any day now."

His reply was lost in a welter of congratulations showered on him by sycophantic admirers for one of his recent films that may well cost his backers a small fortune. And left to myself I mumbled the names of John Ford, John Huston, Robert Riskin, Burgess Meredith, Anatole Litvak, Doug Fairbanks, Jr., and Robert Montgomery. I wanted to tell this omniscient producer that sooner or later I expect these men to lay about them, and to bring Hollywood again in touch with reality.

Let's face facts frankly. For the time being many of our producers have acquired an outsize arrogance born of some of Hollywood's vagaries. They have seen their pictures favored by British picturegoers. Gone are the days when a British film would empty a cinema or cause a near riot. Today British films are grossing as much, or more, than Hollywood's product. Whether some of the films will earn their negative cost is another matter but that is mainly a headache for Arthur Rank and Sir Alex Korda.

But at the moment that can be little consolation to a Hollywood that sees its takings here shrinking. The fact remains that the once-farcical British motion picture industry is a force to be reckoned with in the British Empire, and, if Rank plays his cards well, it is destined to find its place on the screens of America. One temporary consoling factor for Hollywood: physical limitations and the unnatural slowness of our producers curtail the number of pictures we turn out. But reconditioning, reconstruction and re-equipping will give considerable additional studio space, and Rank must be learning by now that making a normal picture needn't take six months or a year. Eye-opener has been "So Well Remembered," joint RKO-Rank venture with an American director and producer which took 70 days at Denham. This may well be the forerunner of the right and most successful type of cooperation.

Don't for one moment believe that the British press or public has become nationalistic and anti-American. We could fill this column with British pictures the press slammed and the public adored, and with films the press praised and the public scorned. The critics here are as little loved by British companies as they are by American. "We are not boxoffice tipsters," say the scribes, and their bouquets and brickbats are bestowed as they think fit on any work, irrespective of country or origin. They have been more chivalrous to some of Hollywood's efforts than New York critics have been.

True there is a small arty coterie who believes the merit of a film to be in inverse ratio to its boxoffice success. It's a noisy little clique who British adjectives on the obscure and uncommercial, but although they may be quoted abroad they count for little in the sum total.

Reasonable Request

Naturally when an American producer employs a British background we, at least, demand accuracy, and we are apt to see red when our intelligences are brutally insulted. I argued this very point with Arthur Loew in New York 15 years ago. I maintained that a company spending a million dollars (a lot of money then) on a picture could well afford an extra thousand or two for expert advice. He agreed. He said his company would do that, but even Metro cannot claim a clean sheet. Hollywood doesn't realize how quickly the British go native over there. Visiting the Walter Wanger set some years ago—he was making "Eternally Yours"—he asked me to check a menu for a British restaurant scene. The items were typical Brown Derby or Lindy's. In answer to my agonized query he told me David Niven had written it, and when I taxed the latter, he confessed that he thought it a true English bill of fare. A minor incident, perhaps, but significant of much. The remedy is easy, and Hollywood can afford it.

To return to our main problem—why British audiences prefer the average British to the average Hollywood picture. They are tired of the U. S. product. It is monotonous and unreal. It seems divorced from fact and fiction. Hollywood producers are worried, rightly so, when they see dwindling returns from this country, but what do they do about it? They send experts over who make "exhaustive surveys" in a fortnight. They come to the conclusion that (I quote), "England has suffered so much by way of damage and privation during and since the war, that to most English moviegoers today, an average American picture is unbelievable." So far so good. Then comes an elaboration.

"Whereas the average Englishman of means today is trying to buy a very small car, American-made films show a luxurious crop of big gas-eaters . . . By the same token, most Britishers today are going in clothes that are little better than worn-out garments. So when they see pictures of American actors in snappy new suits, actresses in beautiful new gowns, even children in fancy sportswear, they cannot accept it as being true."

There's only one reply to this—boloney.

Audiences here don't care a tinker's cuss how big the cars are, or how the hero of heroine is dressed. They're amused when a typist wears mink and has a penthouse on her weekly salary, but they don't give a rap. They pay their money to see "Easy to Wed" with all its millionaire luxury because it is entertainment. They queue for "Blue Skies" with its night club finery because it is a good picture. They nix scores of pictures set in luxury or poverty because they're bad pictures. It isn't your opulence and ostentation, or even (on the screen) your bad manners, that keeps folk out of the cinema. We accept your way of life. It may in the long run be bad for America that we do so, but that is a question for Washington and the conscience of Hollywood. If it's good entertainment, according to our standards, we pay for it.

But for some reason, doubtless due to many factors including the easy-going at the boxoffice, your average export is not comparable with the average British picture. True Hollywood turns out about 10 times the number we do, but almost every British producer tries to take an adult point of view. He sometimes over-rates the I. Q. of his audience, but that's more pardonable than treating them as half-witted children. What Hollywood needs most is a gust of fresh air from the outside world and an infusion of new young blood. It also needs to make a few sensible mistakes as it once had the courage to do.

What of the future? With all our boasting and boosting here is a significant fact. According to the latest report of the Films Council (year ended Sept. 30, 1945) exhibitors failed in 1,014 cases to show the percentage of British feature films demanded by the Quota Act. In the previous year it was 977. When one deducts the three big circuits, approximately 1,200 theatres, it is evident that a fair percentage of independent exhibitors were shy of British product. This means that Hollywood has been receiving more money than it should have had according to British law. But these conditions will not remain unaltered.

The quota situation is a thorny problem, and even though Rank may throw in all his weight and influence with the American companies against a new Quota Act (present one expires March 31, 1948), our prophecy is that the new Act will be less favorable to Hollywood than the present. Hollywood producers, if wise, will base their future plans on this premise.

If they want to retain their hold on the British market they should eliminate B pictures and concentrate on raising the mental level of their product. Good entertainment needn't be stupid entertainment. In addition to exchanging stars, an interchange of producers would be particularly beneficial to Hollywood. If a market is worth having, and we know $80,000,000 a year is, then that market is worth studying in all its aspects, especially from the customer's point of view. But not by "experts" who spend a fortnight over here.

World Markets

Continued from page 181

tures — an endless chain of them coming off the conveyor belts.

Imagination and enterprise will do it. You have the stars, the technicians. Hollywood has a fine reputation for good pictures when it tries. Keep out the poor ones. Every now and then someone says there'll be no more "B" pictures—Hollywood is going to give us nothing but "A" material. The problem isn't solved by retitling "B" features into "A's."

There does seem to me to be a lack of contact between producers and patrons. I feel that production must find what consumption can take, what it needs, what it pays for. That link is vital. If a production outfit goes on making pictures without ascertaining what are their sales possibilities, or if they are acceptable or otherwise, we stay in the same stew.

Why British Pix Click

British pictures are achieving great success in Australia. I think the reason is obvious. They continue to offer something different. It is just that which keeps bringing patrons along.

Every executive in the picture industry realizes that bad pictures are bad advertisement, good pictures lift us up. My plea is for a scientific elimination of the weak ones, in a serious attempt to keep the entire industry at top, all the time, no matter where the pictures are made.

This is not to say that American studios haven't tried. They have all turned out magnificent hits, worthy of the highest praise. They have spent enormous sums, at other times, on classic flops. Other pictures have shown lamentable lack of vision in their conception; the over-use of themes and stars is too painful a story.

The truth is that those who fail the motion picture industry do it an injury. They cannot be regarded as permanent and must make way for those who can assist us and take us higher. It is the law of business, and those principles apply as much to our undertakings as to anything else. If ours is a specialized business, then specialists must continue to be found. It is unprofitable for any business to retain those who are passe in it.

The world markets are clamouring for good goods. To supply anything less is to fail to grasp the greatest opportunity ever afforded to us. The masses are hungry for real entertainment and if we can't give it to them, they'll go somewhere else.

At the dawn of 1947, as I write, Australia is stepping into film production, too. It is not being done on just a national basis, but with a standard we feel will be comparable with what is being done overseas.

Recently Australia turned out some films—"Smith" and "The Overlanders" to mention two. They have really grossed big money in Australia and are expected to do well overseas. Neither of these could be called formula stories, their themes were certainly attractive to picturegoers. The boxoffice proved that.

Let's give better theatres, better maintenance, smarter showmanship and unexcelled management, and service that will make our patrons happier. Let's cultivate more exhibitor-distributor friendship; let's resolve to evolve with the times. We can start by using 1947 as a stepping stone to that continued march forward.

Motion Picture Appetites Abroad Now Fully Satisfied

By J. H. SEIDELMAN
(President, Universal-Int'l Films)

The keen desire for American motion pictures in countries deprived of such entertainment during the war years has been more or less filled. Hungry appetites of motion picture audiences have been completely satisfied. In the first 12 to 18 months following liberation, no questions were asked, no story was too poor, and no artist was too unknown; all that was wanted was American motion pictures, and the industry provided that from bulging film vaults that had been awaiting the day for doors to be opened and screens to be shining again.

The boom days are now over. The insatiable appetites for just American pictures no longer exist. Audiences are again restless, selective, critical and full of knowledge of what is good and bad in motion picture entertainment. Through standard publicity channels, through old and new magazines, through the re-birth of free newspapers and free publicity, all audiences are now right up to date and up to the minute on Hollywood product, Hollywood personalities and so-called boxoffice winners. No longer will they accept nor queue up for just a motion picture because it is American, or because it is Technicolor, or because it has not been seen before. They know in advance, as our audiences here now know the great and non-great, the good and the weak, and shop accordingly.

Most American motion picture companies are again operating in every country of the world. True, there are restrictions of one kind or another, some serious and others purely of an nuisance type. These so-called Government restrictions are really the result of pressure groups composed of local interests and local producers. These local groups still believe that the opening of the doors to free enterprise and American pictures will cause them to lose the advantages which they usurped for themselves during a period when Americans could not operate in the territories. These local interests are blind to the fact that open competition in motion picture business is the healthiest basis upon which to build an industry. The more good pictures that are made and shown, the more eager are motion picture audiences for new product and new adventures on the screen.

It is only those in this business who are short-sighted enough to believe in monopolies and restricted markets, who will bring ruin to the markets in which they operate. The appetites for new and better entertainment in most countries will never be completely filled, and the public will never be satisfied. The American way of free enterprise for all, is the only answer to a thriving motion picture business in any part of the world.

French Rebuilding Radio Structure And Prepping for Video Expansion

Paris.

The French radio-video picture looks bright despite the confused political and economic setup. There is a bottleneck in materials on the production end, but otherwise a general improvement is in sight, with enthusiasm for the future pretty high.

French Radio is strictly non-commercial and entirely run from Paris by a government agency under Vladimir Porche, son of the late playwright Francois Porche. Two different programs are aired from Paris, called Parisienne and Nationale, latter relayed by provincial stations in process of rehabilitation.

Technically the reclamation job, after the Germans had left the country stripped of equipment, has been carried out creditably, and against heavy odds due to lack of equipment and particularly tubes. The agency's appropriation is about $16,000,000 yearly, the government getting some revenue from the $2.50 yearly tax paid by owners of radio sets, of which 4,500,000 are registered. It's understood that there are a good many tax evaders.

Though the agency is under government control, through the Ministry of Information, it is no pork barrel, nor is it used to any considerable extent for propaganda purposes by any one political party. Political patronage picks a few plums in the programming section which is the weakest point of the outfit. Since no sponsor insists on booking expensive talent, there is a tendency to fill in with a lot of second raters, and accept poor scripts.

An effort is being made to give good longhair music, and besides transmitting concerts the outfit has its own orchestra of 90. Airing of plays gives legit a boost. On audience participation broadcasts, the perennial Saint-Granier is still the most popular emcee. Considerable use is made of the disk library. American material is used an average hour a day, with regular retransmissions of "Voice of America." American recorded music is also used, supplemented by live performers when some are available in France as in the case of Bernard Hilda who gets on the air twice a week.

Radio for Propaganda

For political reasons the Algiers station, which can reach Russia, has discontinued relaying American material. However poor their variety material may be, the French are very anxious to use their radio as a means of international influence, with the accent on longhair music and educational talks.

A North American department, under Robert Lange, is blueprinting an ambitious project of cooperation with American radio, which would considerably bolster the local schedules and permit the French to reach American audiences. Ruth Thomas, formerly on WNBC sound staff, is here working on scripts, another American aide to Lange being Charles Lewyn, formerly with CBS. It is hoped that arrangements now skedded will materialize about February.

American broadcasts here would help considerably in the good work American pictures are doing in making the French a little more receptive to American ideas than they have shown themselves of late. There is no probability of French radio being reopened to commercials. Stations most easily reaching French audiences from the outside are Radio Monaco, Radio Luxembourg and Radio Andorra. Latter's wartime operators and owners, Jacques Tremoulet and Etienne Lafont, have lately been sentenced to death for Nazi activities, but did not appear in court.

Very Few Sets

Even if comparatively unimportant in the international radio setup, France is making an effort to toe the line for the time television will develop. There are very few sets here, most of them within a 50-mile range of the Paris Eiffel tower transmitter. The reported 1,000 sets compare poorly with the reported 12,000 in America and the whopping 25,000 in England. But they evidence the interest the French are taking in the matter since a considerable proportion are homemade from material hard to find.

It's understood that, for fear of having to pay a tax, some video set owners do not report them. Evidence of the keenness of the French for television is to be seen in their broadcasting video programs for two hours every afternoon and twice a week in the evening.

Russia and England, the only two other European countries with video broadcasts, could do it more easily than the French whose equipment was raided by the Germans and who were left without any radar surplus. They are very short of tubes, and though they have good engineers, are very short of skilled labor. Currently they work in one poorly reclaimed studio, but it is hoped to have five properly equipped studios within the year. Also provincial stations are skedded, first to be opened in Lyons.

At present the hard working television personnel numbers less than 100 men, doubling in many jobs. To interest others, film directors and technicians are frequently invited to visit the studio. Current programs include about one-half of televised film.

★

GABRIEL PASCAL PRODUCTIONS

★

PYGMALION

MAJOR BARBARA

CAESAR and CLEOPATRA

★

forthcoming productions

THE DEVIL'S DISCIPLE

THE SHOWING UP OF BLANCO POSNET

SAINT JOAN

HAROLD FIELDING

LONDON

SEASON 1946-7

presenting

LARRY ADLER • BENIAMINO GIGLI • RINA GIGLI

ANDRE KOSTELANETZ • LILY PONS

LIVERPOOL PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA • JEANETTE MacDONALD

GRACE MOORE • MALCUZYNSKI

DR. MALCOLM SARGENT • RICHARD TAUBER

AND OTHER LEADING CONCERT ARTISTS OF THE WORLD

500 CONCERTS A YEAR

HAROLD FIELDING acknowledges the courtesy (in England) of JACK HYLTON, Ltd. for Beniamino and Rina Gigli—HAROLD HOLT, Ltd. for Malcuzynski (in America) of COLUMBIA CONCERTS for Larry Adler and JAMES A. DAVIDSON and The MORRIS OFFICE for Andre Kostelanetz, Lily Pons, Jeanette MacDonald and Grace Moore.

129 LOCATIONS Throughout the BRITISH ISLES

FIELDING HOUSE 53 & 54 HAYMARKET LONDON S.W. 1

Telephone: WHITEHALL 4041 (ten lines) Cables: CONCERTS—LONDON

No. 1 BRITISH
POP SONG HIT
"PRIMROSE HILL"
AMERICAN RIGHTS HANDED TO
BOURNE, INC., NEW YORK

No. 1 BRITISH
ORCHESTRAL SUCCESS
CLIVE RICHARDSON'S
"LONDON FANTASIA"
AMERICAN RIGHTS HANDED TO
CHAPPELL & CO., INC.,
NEW YORK

GREETINGS
TO ALL MY FRIENDS
IN AMERICA

LAWRENCE WRIGHT

LAWRENCE WRIGHT MUSIC CO., LTD.
WRIGHT HOUSE, DENMARK STREET, CHARING CROSS ROAD
LONDON, W.C.2.
ENGLAND

No. 1 BRITISH
MUSICAL SHOW
"OLD CHELSEA"
INCLUDING THE WORLD-FAMOUS BALLAD
"MY HEART AND I"
COMPOSED, RECORDED AND BROADCAST BY RICHARD TAUBER

No. 1 BRITISH
BALLAD SUCCESS
"DEAREST OF ALL"
RECORDED BY
RICHARD TAUBER
JOHN McHUGH
MURIEL BARRON
BILLY THORBURN

Season's Greetings

From YALE MUSIC CORPORATION, LTD.

133a Charing Cross Road, London, W. C. 2.

Presenting the "YALE" Line-up of Song Hits!

"GO HOME"

Your Mother Wants You

"I WANT THE WORLD TO KNOW"

"MISER - MISER"

"YOU HAVEN'T CHANGED"

"I Love You

MORE AND MORE AND MORE"

"Have You Seen

MY LITTLE BLUE UMBRELLA"

P. S.

CARL AND ROGER YALE SEND BEST WISHES
TO ALL THEIR FRIENDS IN THE U.S.A.

BRITISH LION
FILM CORPORATION LTD
have scheduled for distribution in the United Kingdom in 1947, a large and powerful programme of big British productions . . . productions which will be greater in every aspect than any ever offered before by this Company.
These films are being made under the banner of the new London Film Productions' organisation, which includes some of the foremost independent producers and directors in England. They will star world-famous screen personalities and will be unequalled in box-office power.
BRITISH LION FILM CORPORATION LTD. are also sole distributors in GREAT BRITAIN and EIRE of
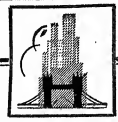
REPUBLIC PICTURES
REPUBLIC PICTURES

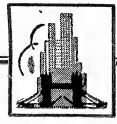


TWO CITIES FILMS

with Managing Director F. Del Giudice in charge of production have produced 25 films from 1937-1946 including Laurence Olivier's "HENRY V"; Noel Coward's "IN WHICH WE SERVE," "BLITHE SPIRIT," "THIS HAPPY BREED"; Anatole de Grunwald's "JOHNNY IN THE CLOUDS"; Carol Reed's "THE WAY AHEAD"; W. P. Lipscomb's "BEWARE OF PITY"; Compton Mackenzie's "CARNIVAL"; Thorold Dickinson's "MEN OF TWO WORLDS"; George Brown-Peter Ustinov's "SCHOOL FOR SECRETS" * 1946 Productions, James Mason, Robert Newton in Carol Reed's production "ODD MAN OUT"; Margaret Lockwood, Dennis Price, Cecil Parker in William Sistrom's production "HUNGRY HILL"; Michael Redgrave and Rosamund John in the Boulting Brothers production "FAME IS THE SPUR"; John Mills, Joan Greenwood in Eric Ambler's production "THE OCTOBER MAN" * 1947 Productions will include Thorold Dickinson's production "SECRET PEOPLE"; George Brown-Peter Ustinov's production "VICE VERSA"; Paul Soskin's production "PRECIOUS BANE"; Margaret Lockwood in "MARY OF MAGDALA"; Burgess Meredith in "CREWE."

TWO CITIES FILMS, LTD.

Head Office:
15, Hanover Square
London, W. 1., England



Production Office:
Denham Studios
Denham, Middlesex, England

GREETINGS

TO ALL MY FRIENDS

BRIAN DESMOND HURST

DIRECTOR OF

"THEIRS IS THE GLORY"

AND DAPHNE DU MAURIER'S

"HUNGRY HILL"

SEASON'S GREETINGS FROM

HARRY ROY AND HIS ORCHESTRA

APPEARING NIGHTLY AT THE

ASTOR

Always Extends Hearty Welcome to All His American Friends

Exclusively Recording for AMERICAN DECCA CO.

GREETINGS TO ALL MY FRIENDS IN AMERICA

NOT FORGETTING THE WATER-RATS

DAVE APOLLON

CHARLES CHAPLIN

SAM DOWNING

CHARLES DUDLEY

BEN LYON

ADOLPHE MENJOU

CHIC YORK

BUD FLANAGAN

COLISEUM THEATRE
LONDON, ENGLAND

THE
HOUSE OF FELDMAN

SENDS CORDIAL GREETINGS TO ALL ITS MANY GOOD FRIENDS IN U.S.A. AND CANADA, WITH THE SPECIAL WISH THAT 1947 MAY PROVE A RECORD YEAR FOR ALL OF THEM.

• • •

OUR MR. JOHNNY FIRMAN WISHES TO EXTEND SINCERE THANKS FOR MANY KINDNESSES RECEIVED DURING HIS RECENT VISIT TO U.S.A.

• • •

B. FELDMAN & CO., LTD.

125-127-129 SHAFTESBURY AVENUE

LONDON, W.C.2. ENGLAND

HEARTY GREETINGS FOR THE NEW YEAR

TO

ALL OUR AMERICAN FRIENDS

1783 — 1946

ESPECIALLY TO

SAM FOX PUBLISHING CO., NEW YORK

SHAPIRO, BERNSTEIN & CO., INC., NEW YORK

FORSTER MUSIC PUBLISHER, INC., CHICAGO

TELEGRAMS
ACADEMY, RATH, LONDON

KEITH PROWSE & CO., LTD.
MUSIC PUBLISHERS
42/43 Poland Street
LONDON, W.1.

CABLES
STALLS, LONDON
(Code: Western Union & Letter Edition)

WILL COLLINS

Theatrical and Vaudeville Exchange, Ltd.

Directors: WILL COLLINS, REG. DAVIS

Triumph House, 189, Regent Street, London, W. 1.

Regent 7328-7329-7320

Representatives

R. KORALEK (Circus) — GEO. HILLMAN (Variety) — LESLIE BLOOM (Productions)

GREETINGS TO ALL OUR FRIENDS IN AMERICA

(NAT)

MILLS AND BOBBIE

"RADIO'S RARE PAIR"

Happy New Year to All Our Friends in America

Sole Representatives:—
CHARLES TUCKER'S ENTERPRISES, LTD.
17, Shaftesbury Avenue, London, W. 1.

"THE COMPOSER and THE VOICE"

Britain's Greatest Musical Attraction

"THE GIPSY"

"IT'S A PITY TO SAY GOODNIGHT"

"COMING HOME"

"THREE BEAUTIFUL WORDS"

"MURDER"

"I'LL CLOSE MY EYES"

"SAFE IN MY ARMS"

"THE WILLOW TREE"

"MY MAN DIDN'T COME BACK"

BILLY REID and DOROTHY SQUIRES

Representatives: LEW and LESLIE GRADE, LTD.

"ASTORIA HOUSE," 62, Shaftesbury Avenue, London, W. 1.

GREETINGS TO ALL

MY AMERICAN FRIENDS

REG CONNELLY

CAMPBELL, CONNELLY & CO., LTD.
10 DENMARK STREET
LONDON ENGLAND

M.P.M. ENTERTAINMENTS CORP., LTD.

199 PICCADILLY, LONDON, W. 1.

Sends

SEASONAL GREETINGS

To All Their

AMERICAN FRIENDS

General Managers:

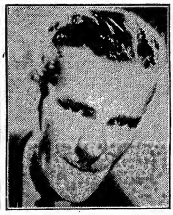
CHARLES MUNYARD and FRED MARLOW

GREAT BRITAIN'S LEADING 'MUSIC MAKERS'

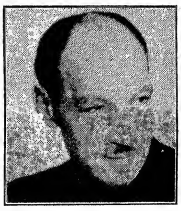
SEND THEIR SEASON'S GREETINGS AND BEST WISHES FOR 1947

OSCAR RABIN

HARRY DAVIS



GEORGE EVANS



TEDDY FOSTER

RONNIE MUNRO

EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT

R·D·S

R.D.S. PRODUCTIONS, LTD.
28-30 GLOUCESTER MANSIONS
CAMBRIDGE CIRCUS, LONDON, W.C.2
ENGLAND

Director: BERNARD RABIN
BOOKING - MANAGEMENT - PUBLICITY
FOR BRITAIN'S BEST BANDS

GREETINGS

TO ALL MY FRIENDS IN AMERICA

JACK BUCHANAN

Permanent Address
GARRICK THEATRE
LONDON, W. C. 2

Maurice J. Wilson

Grand National Pictures Ltd.

London

Extends greetings to all his
American friends

RIO DE JANEIRO • PARIS • NEW YORK • MONTREAL • MILAN • MEXICO CITY • MADRID • LONDON • HOLLYWOOD • HAVANA • CHICAGO • BUENOS AIRES • AMSTERDAM • BARCELONA • BOGOTA • BRUSSELS • ZURICH • TORONTO • SYDNEY • STOCKHOLM • SANTIAGO DE CHILE • SAN PAULO

THE WORLD IS SINGING WITH A "SOUTHERN" ACCENT — AND THE THEME IS "PEACE ON EARTH AND GOODWILL TO ALL MEN"

SOUTHERN MUSIC PUBLISHING CO. LTD.
LATIN-AMERICAN MUSIC PUBLISHING CO. LTD.
LIBER-SOUTHERN LTD.

DENMARK STREET • LONDON, W.C.2. • ENGLAND

GENERAL MANAGER AND DIRECTOR
DAVID TOFF

SEASON'S
GREETINGS
1947

FROM ENGLAND
TO AMERICANS

BY AN AMERICAN
IN LONDON

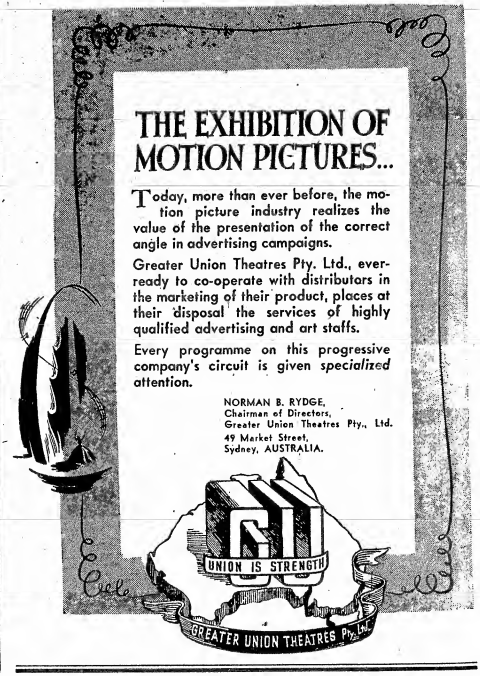
LEE EPHRAIM

CURRENT LONDON ATTRACTIONS
SAVILLE AND PHOENIX THEATRES



GREETINGS FROM

RITA CAVE

Personal Service for Producers and Artists

EAGLE HOUSE,
JERMYN STREET,
LONDON, S. W. 1.

gave you...

NOTORIOUS GENTLEMAN

watch for....

I SEE A DARK STRANGER
GREEN FOR DANGER
CAPTAIN BOYCOTT (in production)

INDIVIDUAL PICTURES LTD.

LONDON, ENGLAND

SEASON'S GREETINGS

FROM

WESLEY RUGGLES

★

In Preparation
A SID FIELD STORY

Artistes Under Contract
SID FIELD
KAY KENDALL PETULA CLARK

ART STRAUSS AND SONNY MILLER

ANNOUNCE WITH PRIDE

THE 1ST BIRTHDAY OF

THE STRAUSS MILLER MUSIC CO.

WHO in their 1st YEAR have had the following OUTSTANDING HITS:

WHEN THE GANG MEET AGAIN

I'LL DANCE AT YOUR WEDDING

THERE'S A HARVEST MOON TONIGHT

AND No. 1 in the current HIT PARADE

SWEETHEART We'll Never Grow Old

COMPLIMENTS OF THE SEASON To All Our AMERICAN FRIENDS

STRAUSS-MILLER MUS. CO. 8, GREEK STREET, LONDON, W.1.

CINEGUILD

ANTHONY HAVELOCK-ALLAN
RONALD NEAME
DAVID LEAN

● BRIEF ENCOUNTER
● completed

● GREAT EXPECTATIONS
● completed

● TAKE MY LIFE
● completed

● BLANCHE FURY
● in preparation

FIRTH SHEPHARD

General Manager
STANLEY FRENCH

PRESENTS

Production Manager
LAURENCE GREEN

London's Greatest Hits

"FIFTY-FIFTY"

HARRY GREEN
IAN MACLEAN
CAMERON HALL
DAVID LANGTON
BERYL BAXTER
FRANK PETTINGELL

STRAND THEATRE

359 Performances to Date

"THE SHEPHARD SHOW"

Arthur RISCOE
Richard HEARNE
Monsewer EDDIE GRAY
Douglas BYNG
Marie BURKE

Ronald Boyer & Jeanne Ravel
John Blore and His B.B.C. Orchestra

PRINCES THEATRE

147 Performances to Date

"LADY FREDERICK"

CORAL BROWNE
ANTHONY IRELAND
PHYLLIS DARE
EVELYN ROBERTS
EDWIN STYLES

SAVOY THEATRE

64 Performances to Date

FORTHCOMING PRODUCTIONS

"LIFE WITH FATHER"

"PEACE COMES TO PECKHAM" by R. F. Delderfield

"THE DAY IS GONE" by W. Chetham Strode

"ANGEL ON HORSEBACK" by Doris Langley-Moore

OFFICES — GLOUCESTER HOUSE, 19 CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

TELEPHONES: ABBEY 6292-3

CABLES: SHEPSHOW, LONDON

Greetings from

SID FIELD

To His Friends in the U. S. A., Especially To

MARY CHASE
HEDDA HOPPER
BOB HOPE
ADOLPHE MENJOU
IRVING BERLIN
PAT O'BRIEN

Prince of Wales Theatre,
London, W. 1.

CABLE ADDRESS:
SHOWBOX
WESTCENT
LONDON

TOM ARNOLD

AT

125, SHAFTESBURY AVENUE, LONDON, ENGLAND

ASSOCIATED WITH

THE LONDON PALACE THEATRE · THE LONDON CASINO THEATRE · THE LONDON DUKE OF YORK'S THEATRE

CURRENTLY PRESENTING

IVOR NOVELLO'S PERCHANCE TO DREAM
LONDON HIPPODROME

TOM ARNOLD'S ICE REVUE
STOLL THEATRE LONDON

AND

TWENTY-FIVE PRODUCTIONS

PLAYING OVER

THE MAIN PROVINCIAL CIRCUITS

STOLL THEATRES CORPORATION, LTD.

ASSOCIATED THEATRE PROPERTIES (London) LTD.

Chairman and Managing Director . . . PRINCE LITTLER

TELEGRAMS: OSWASTOLL
LESQUARE, LONDON

STOLL OFFICES
LONDON COLISEUM
LONDON, W. C. 2

TELEPHONE
TEMPLE BAR 1500

NEW YEAR GREETINGS

TO ALL OUR AMERICAN FRIENDS

FROM

NOEL GAY AND HUGH CHARLES

WE CAN'T SAY MORE THAN

BLESS YOU

THE RECORD-BREAKING NO. 1 SONG HIT OF 1946

Vide Press (Variety): 20 Weeks Top of British Best Sheet Sellers

NOT FORGETTING

ASHBY DE LA ZOUCHE AND I FALL IN LOVE WITH YOU EV'RY DAY

CASTLE ABBEY

COMING UP

WHEN YOU PLAY WITH FIRE
WE TALK ABOUT YOU EV'RY NIGHT

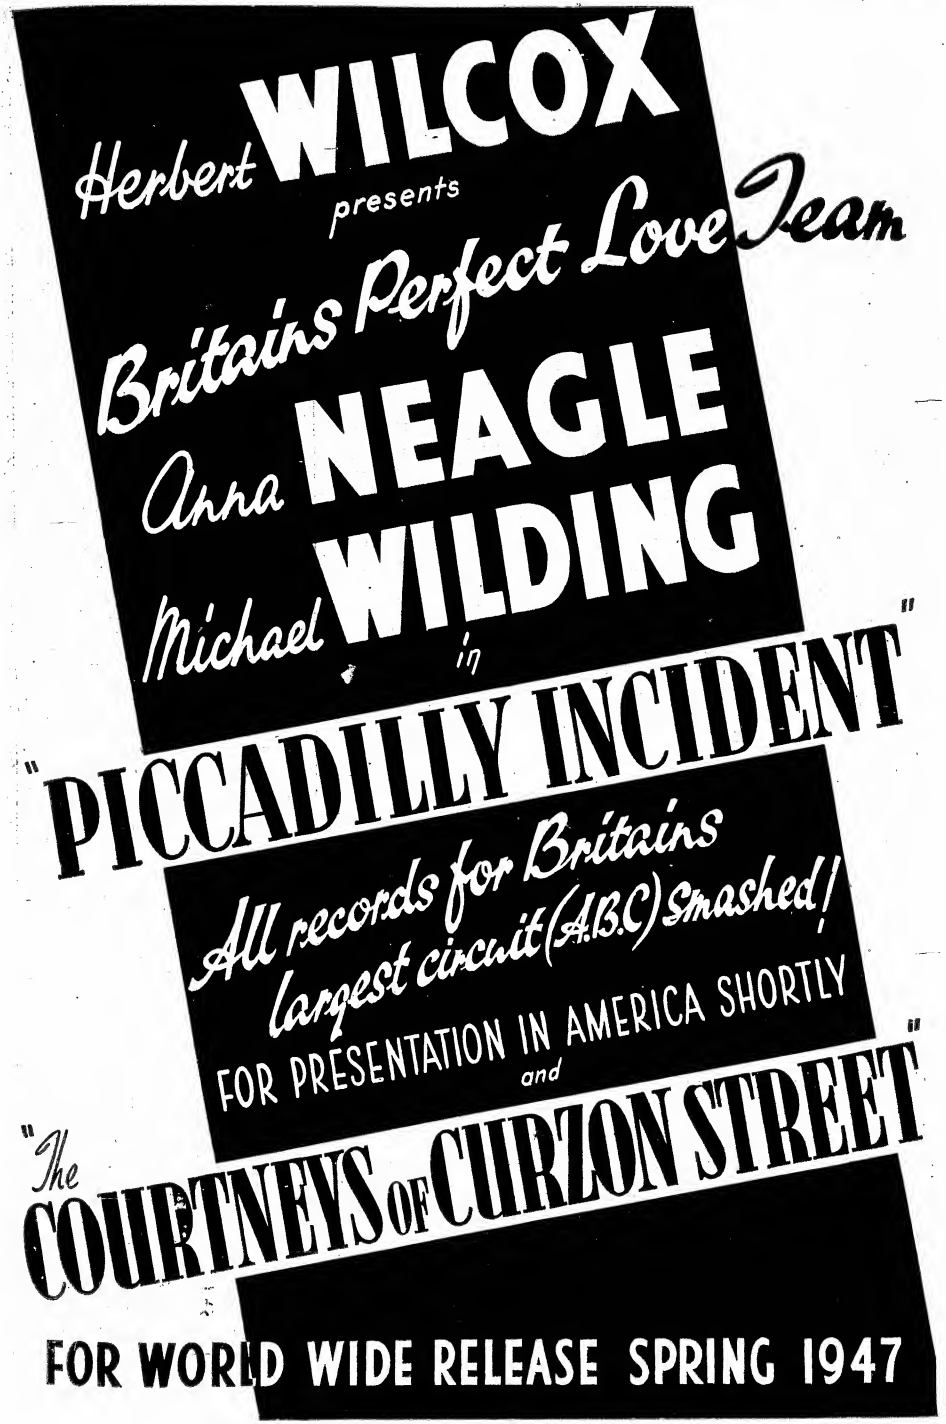
TO COME

FUZZY WUZZY
I'M GONNA LASSO A DREAM
SERENADE TO LOVE
I WAS DANCING IN HEAVEN LAST NIGHT
LONELY SENORITA

THE NOEL GAY AND CLOVER MUSIC Co., Ltd.

24 Denmark Street
London, W. C. 2
England

Cables
Noelgay, London
Telephone
Temple Bar 3941



Herbert WILCOX
presents
Britains Perfect Love Team
Anna NEAGLE
Michael WILDING
in
"PICCADILLY INCIDENT"
All records for Britains largest circuit (A.B.C) Smashed!
FOR PRESENTATION IN AMERICA SHORTLY
and
"The COURTNEYS OF CURZON STREET"
FOR WORLD WIDE RELEASE SPRING 1947

The Season's Greetings

FROM

Jack Hylton

COVENT GARDEN

SAN CARLO OPERA CO.

CONCERT TOURS

BENIAMINO GIGLI

MAURICE CHEVALIER

BALLET DES CHAMPS ELYSEE

HIS MAJESTY'S THEATRE OFFICES
LONDON, S. W. 1

"FOLLOW THE GIRLS"
HIS MAJESTY'S

"RED RIDING HOOD"
ADELPHI THEATRE

"NO ROOM AT THE INN"
WINTER GARDEN

"PETER PAN"
SCALA THEATRE

"ROMANY LOVE"
OPERA HOUSE, MANCHESTER

GREETINGS

"SONG OF NORWAY"
(By arrangement with Chappell & Co., & Edwin Lester)
PALACE THEATRE, LONDON

"THE NIGHT AND THE LAUGHTER"
Bud Flanagan in the World's Largest Musical Show
AT THE LONDON COLISEUM

"RED MILL"
(By arrangement with Chappell & Co., & Edwin Lester)
Opened Christmas Season in Glasgow
TOUR WITH LONDON TO FOLLOW

RUTH DRAPER
London Season and Provincial Tours

FIVE RESIDENT PANTOMIMES
London Birmingham Coventry Manchester Plymouth

THE PALACE THEATRE and THE CASINO THEATRE
Two of London's Largest Musical Comedy Theatres, both controlled by Tom Arnold and Emile Littler

EMILE LITTLER

31 ST. MARTIN'S LANE, LONDON, and PANTOMIME HOUSE, BIRMINGHAM 1

EUROPE'S LEADING AGENCY

REPRESENTING THE WORLD'S GREATEST ATTRACTIONS

FOSTERS'
AGENCY
(Established 1888)

HARRY FOSTER LESLIE A. MACDONNELL

Piccadilly House, Piccadilly Circus, London S. W. 1, England

Phones: Regent 5367/9 Cables: "Confirmation London"

THE SEASON'S GREETINGS...

FROM CHAPPELL & CO., LTD.

IRVING BERLIN, LTD.

EDWIN H. MORRIS CO., LTD.

VICTORIA MUSIC CO., LTD.

STERLING MUSIC CO., LTD.

NEW WORLD PUBLISHING CO., LTD.

BRADBURY WOOD, LTD.

ENGLAND'S MUSIC CENTRE

AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND

J. C. WILLIAMSON THEATRES, LTD.

AND

J. & N. TAIT

THESE WORLD FAMOUS ORGANISATIONS ARE STILL THE PREDOMINANT THEATRICAL AND CONCERT MANAGERS OF THE SOUTHERN HEMISPHERE . . .

CURRENT SUCCESSES . . .

• NEW YORK OFFICE:
Miss Dorothy Stewart
157 East 38th Street
New York, N. Y.
Telephone:
MUrray Hill 5-3300

• STAGE:—
"KISS AND TELL"
Record Breaking Comedy
52 Weeks of Comedy Theatre
Melbourne, Victoria

• CONCERT:—
GRACIE FIELDS
Australian and New Zealand Tour
All Profits
($450,000 Dollars)
Given to War Charities

• AUSTRALIAN ADDRESS:
J. C. Williamson Theatres, Ltd.
Theatre Royal, Sydney, N.S.W.
His Majesty's, Melbourne, Vic.
Cable Address All Over World:
"STOFEL"

NEW YEAR'S GREETINGS TO ALL MY FRIENDS — MUSICAL AND PRESS

CARROLL GIBBONS

COLUMBIA RECORDS

SAVOY HOTEL — LONDON

JOE LOSS

and his Orchestra

IN THE MOOD

BRITAIN'S BIGGEST BAND BOX OFFICE ATTRACTION!

GREETINGS AND SALUTATIONS TO ALL MY FRIENDS ACROSS THE WATER

SOLELY REPRESENTED BY FOSTERS' AGENCY, Piccadilly House, London, Eng.

SINCERE GOOD WISHES FOR 1947 TO ALL OUR FRIENDS IN AMERICA

FROM

Francis, Day & Hunter, Ltd.

FREDERICK DAY—JOHN ABBOTT—EDDIE DAY

PUBLISHERS OF BRITISH AND AMERICAN SONG SUCCESSES

TIVOLI CIRCUIT AUSTRALIA, Pty. Limited

DAVID N. MARTIN, Managing Director

CURRENT ATTRACTIONS:

TIVOLI THEATRE, MELBOURNE

"ATOMIC BLONDES"

Featuring:

CLIFFORD and MARION, Designed for Humour

THE APPLETONS — Sensational Adagio Dancers

C. RAY SMITH — Puppeteer

JAN RUBINI, Violinist, Conductor, Composer

TIVOLI THEATRE, SYDNEY

England's Foremost Comedian

TOMMY TRINDER

Every Australasian Theatrical Record Broken!

All Communications—Box 3910, G.P.O., Sydney—Cablegrams "Celeb" Sydney or Melbourne

MINERVA THEATRE, SYDNEY

Sub-lessees: Pan Australasian Theatres Pty., Ltd.

WHITEHALL PRODUCTIONS

Present

"LIFE WITH FATHER"

By HOWARD LINDSAY & RUSSELL CROUSE

A HAPPY NEW YEAR

HERMIONE GINGOLD

"SWEETEST and LOWEST"

(3rd Edition of "SWEET and LOW")

AMBASSADORS' THEATRE

LONDON, W. C. 2

LONDON CONFIRMS THE VERDICT OF THE WORLD!

BERNARD DELFONT

PRESENTS

By Arrangement With

WILLIAM MORRIS OFFICE
(Nat Kalcheim-Ben Holzman-Sam Sacks)

FOSTERS AGENCY, LTD.
(Harry Foster, London)

DANTE The Magician

"SIM SALA BIM"

3rd LONDON WEST END SEASON

(THE ALHAMBRA – WINTER GARDEN – DRURY LANE)

NOW—GARRICK THEATRE

THE SUNDAY TIMES, DECEMBER 15, 1946

ABANDON HOPE . . .

By JAMES AGATE

"Sim-Sala-Bim." Garrick.

"PEOPLE who jump to conclusions," said Philip Guedalla, "rarely alight on them." The art of the illusionist consists in the power to induce saltation. In realizing that whereas it might be difficult to deceive a child watching with his nurse, there is nothing so collectively humbuggable as an audience of grown-ups. One of the most pathetic hallucinations of the common man is his belief in the evidence of his senses. I remember many years ago being on a jury and listening to two of Manchester's most respected citizens giving evidence. One swore that the hansom cab was being madly driven down Parker's, the confectioner's, side of St. Ann's Square; the other that it was proceeding at a leisurely pace up Marks', the grocer's, side of that Square. It was inconceivable that either was consciously lying. The conjurer takes full advantage of the common man's inability to describe accurately what he sees. "Watch me carefully," he says. "I take up this glass of water and put down this match box." The audience watches and assents not realizing that what the conjurer actually does is to take up the match box and put down the glass.

I once had the honor of dining with the president of a famous illusionists' club known as the Magic Circle. I asked him point-blank whether the essence of magic was not this—that the conjurer persuades the audience to believe that he is performing a postulated thing whereas he is in fact doing something totally different. I said: "You pass one apparently solid metal ring through another apparently equally solid. You then throw both rings to me sitting in the front row, and after examination I am prepared to testify that the rings are as you have described them. Wherefore one or two things must be. Either there is in one or both of the rings a device so cunningly contrived that I cannot find it or them but which you can manipulate so quickly that my eye cannot follow. Either that, or you do not in fact pass one ring through the other but merely lead me to suppose that you do. I don't ask you to tell me which of these two proceedings you adopt. What I want to know is: Am I right in saying there can be no third alternative?" The smiling great-nephew of Theophile Gautier, that magician in words said, "Try this port. I don't think it will spoil the cigar you have been wearing behind your ear for the last hour."

"Oh, while I live," said Hazlitt, "let me not see how Cato painted or how Caesar combed! . . . Let me not overlook the fellow who holds the candle for the moon in the scene between Lorenzo and Jessica! Spare me this insight into secrets I am not bound to know." My attitude to the conjurer's art is quite un-Hazlittean. Most small boys have wanted to be an engine driver, though my ambition stopped at being a fireman. Now that I approach second childhood I should like nothing better than to be fireman at a theatre where Dante is performing. I should consider leaning up against scenery and wearing a brass helmet a cheap price to pay for knowing how the young woman who vanishes into thin air is made to vanish, and whether she is the same young woman who ten seconds later is lowered from the gallery in a padlocked trunk. Let me be more precise. My inquest into these deep and hidden things begins with the demand to know not how they are done, but whether. And never, never shall I know. It occurs to me that this might be the place for an essay on the loyalty of conjurers' assistants. But this would be divagation, and as readers of this column know, Agate does not divagate.

I do, however, permit myself to express my thanks for an evening of infinite entertainment in the form of a story familiar in this country, but which may possibly not have penetrated this great artist's native country of Denmark. The yarn is about Queen Anne, who, having witnessed a conjuring entertainment, sent for the magician and said, "We ourselves have some holding in your art." And putting the royal hand in the royal bosom she produced two armchairs and a sideboard.

To be more serious, let that be said of Dante's conjuring which was said by the first of dramatic critics of the Indian Jugglers. "It is the utmost stretch of human ingenuity, which nothing but the bending the faculties of body and mind to it from the tenderest infancy with incessant, ever-anxious application up to manhood, can accomplish or make even a slight approach to. Man, thou art a wonderful animal. . . ." Let me continue in the apostrophic vein Dante, thou art not only a wonderful but a witty animal! So much so that I present thee with this suggestion, that the brilliancy of thy patter, worthy of the best in my craft, entitles thee to call thy great spectacle not "Sim-Sala-Bim" but Sim-George-Augustus-Sala-Bim."

NOTE: Brooklyn Readers and Variety Writers May Have This Translated in Boston—Dante

MOI-YA-MILLER—14 Years With "Sim-Sala-Bim"

NEW YEAR'S GREETINGS TO MY FRIENDS ALL OVER THE WORLD

BERNARD DELFONT LIMITED Astoria House, 62 Shaftesbury Avenue, London

NEW YEAR'S GREETINGS TO ALL OUR FRIENDS
IN AMERICA

DUCHESS PRODUCTIONS, LTD.
LONDON, ENG.

Managing Agents:
DUCHESS THEATRE
DUKE OF YORK'S THEATRE
SAVILLE THEATRE

Directors:
MARIANNE DAVIS
LEIGH STAFFORD
EDWARD HORAN

SEASON'S GREETINGS
from
K & P PRODUCTIONS
Good Health and Good Luck
LEON KIMBERLEY and HELEN PAGE

Miss Page is in America now. She can be contacted at the "Variety" office, New York.

45, Chandos Place, LONDON, W. C. 2. England

OLIVELLI'S
Famous in Last 15 Years as
THE SHOW PEOPLE'S RENDEZVOUS
SEND NEW YEAR'S GREETINGS
TO ALL OUR FRIENDS
HOPE TO SEE MORE OF YOU THIS YEAR
35, Store Street
London, W. C. 1.

MR. and MRS. SIDNEY FISHER
Send Greetings
To Their Friends All Over the World
Glad to Welcome Our Old Customers
Now Working in England
HOPE TO SEE YOU SOON
Still TAILORING to the Best People in the Show World
75-77 Shaftesbury Avenue
London, W. 1, England

ABP Takes Over Anglo-American

Deal by Associated British Picture Corp. to acquire Anglo-American Film Co. from Lou Jackson, company's head, with something over $1,000,000 passing hands has been closed. Terms of pact call for Jackson becoming chief producer for ABPC among other things.

Transaction insures Associated British Cinemas, ABPC theatre affiliate, of the product of British National with whom Jackson had exclusive distribution deal in U. K. ABC chain of 600 theatres, controlled by Warner Bros., usually plays some 13 British films under quota requirements and 42 American pix. British National is good for nine films yearly and practically solves ABC's quota problem. Circuit plays no pix of J. Arthur Rank, chief British film producer.

Play Abroad

L'Aigle a Deux Tetes
(The Double-Headed Eagle)

Paris.

Jacques Robertot production of three-act play by Jean Cocteau. Directed by Cocteau. Stars Edwige Feuillere and Jean Marais. Sets by Andre Beaurenaire; costumes, Christian Bergal; music, Georges Auric. At Theatre Heberlot, Paris.

The Queen	Edwige Feuillere
Stanislas	Jean Marais
Earl of Feehn	Jacques Varennes
Edith de Berg	Silvia Monfort
Felix de Willenstein	Georges Marny
Tony	Georges Aminel

The Paris production, directed by Jean Cocteau himself and acted by an ideal cast, is an unmistakable smash. It is constantly sold out in advance for a week, the maximum allowed here.

As is increasingly the case now, the play has been done elsewhere before Paris. It was produced in London first; has been played in Brussels, Liege, and Lyons, France, as well as U. S. (where Tallulah Bankhead is now trying it out). As to the American production, Cocteau doesn't consider the queen's part as really suitable for Tallulah Bankhead's type. He also strongly objects to the use of the English translation which comes from London, when he had one specially prepared for America. Using the London script, he claims, is a trick to get royalties, and eventually a cut on a screen version, and only distance and legal difficulties prevent him from doing something about it.

The play is set in some Bavarian-like state, middle of last century, and seems inspired by the case of the unfortunate king Louis II of Bavaria, altered to a femme part. It introduces Edwige Feuillere as a widowed queen deprived of political power by her mother-in-law and leading a frustrated life ever since her husband died, spending her time building castles and patronizing art.

When a young anarchist, looking like her late husband, breaks into her bedroom at night to kill her, she shelters him from the police. The second act turns to a love duo. Climax comes when the young man thinks she has betrayed him, when he was ready to face arrest to permit her to regain her throne, resulting in a scene of reciprocal denunciation which causes him to poison himself before stabbing her, with death slow enough to permit them to realize that they never ceased to love each other.

Edwige Feuillere is a natural in the part of the queen. She scores in the long first-act scene in which she has what amounts to a monolog when trying to get the silent young anarchist to say a word, and again in the second act. Versatility she displays in the third act is virtuoso stuff.

She is extremely well supported by Jean Marais as the obdurate young peasant poet. Jacques Varennes is excellent as the wily minister of police. As the queen's treacherous lady in waiting, Silvia Monfort is suitably obnoxious. George Marny as the queen's equerry, and George Aminel doing a blackface as the queen's deaf and dumb trusty servant, acquit themselves creditably in secondary parts.

This mixture of romantic love and court intrigue is set first in the queen's bedroom, and later in her library. Both sets are good. So is the lighting. Though not primarily a costume play, the period costumes by Berard are very effective. Edwige Feuillere appearance in the first act in a white full court costume with blue ribbon elicits gasps.

Music comes only at the close when the queen, just about to be killed, steps to a window overlooking her guard and an appropriate royal march by Georges Aurie is heard offstage.

Film rights have been signed to Paul Graetz, who produces here for Universal. Director's chore will be handled by Cocteau himself.

Maxi.

U.S. Okays $2,500,000 For 4 Filipino Stations

Manila.

Four powerful radio stations as aid to air navigation will be built in the Philippines at focal points of the Islands, it was officially announced today. The project will cost $2,500,000 and will be financed by the civil aeronautics authority of the U. S. government as authorized in the Philippine Rehabilitation Act.

These stations will be located in Laoag (Ilocos Norte), Manila, Cebu and Davao, more or less on a straight line from north to south of the Philippine archipelago.

Meanwhile, it was learned, Pres. Roxas is considering the establishment of a radio station and an emergency landing field on Ibayat island, off Batanes north of Luzon island, to link Batanes with the mainland by direct radio.

Wider Distrib Seen In U.S. for Foreign Films Via English Dubbings

Confined for the most part to "art" houses in the larger cities, foreign films may soon have virgin distribution fields opened to them through the medium of dubbed English versions, according to James J. Mage, owner of the Cinephone circuit with houses throughout France, Belgium and England. Forming his own distrib company in New York known as Mage Films, he'll shortly release 10 of the "best" pix of Belgium, Sweden and France all of which will be dubbed into English.

Dubbing the film in various European capitals where he has set up synchronization studios, Mage expressed the hope that by dubbing in English dialog the resulting product can be introduced as a second feature on American screens thereby offering film fan an interesting balanced double bill. He pointed out that such dual fare could prove a greater b.o. draw than a double feature with low budget B pix.

Feeling there is a rising curiosity in the U. S. for the outside world and its ways of life, Mage declared, "the war with millions of Americans in Europe and the fact that the U. S. has become a permanent home for the United Nations has created a new film market" and added that his "ultimate aim is to make the foreign and particularly the French film as popular in the U. S. as the American is in Europe."

In U.S. on Talent Quest

Jerome Medrano, operator of the Cirque Medrano, Paris, arrived in New York Christmas Day on the S.S. Wisconsin after a 14-day trip. Medrano will eye talent for his spot while in this country.

Greetings to All My American Friends
From
HARRY LOWE
AGENCY
Suite 26, Gloucester Mansions
Cambridge Circus, London, W. C. 2
Temple Bar 0376
Cablegrams: "Lowe," London

JACK MARKS
Sends All Friends
NEW YEAR'S GREETINGS
And Still Meets All Boats Coming Into Southampton

SYDNEY BOX

•

MURIEL BOX

Writing and Producing at

Gainsborough Pictures (1928) Ltd., London, England

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF MUSIC IN INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

By JOHN G. PAINE
(General Manager, ASCAP)

This year marks the 41st Anniversary of VARIETY—and also the 32d Anniversary of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. Both ASCAP and VARIETY have reached maturity, and in that attainment many changes have taken place within the entertainment field.

In music the most significant development has been the recent recognition by our Government that American music is a powerful propaganda medium for democracy. This recognition was given by the formation of a cultural department under the supervision of Assistant Secretary of State William Benton; it was also demonstrated by the readiness of our government to play an active part in the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

In October ASCAP was host to the Confederation Internationale des Societes d'Auteurs et Compositeurs. This group, representing more than 100,000 intellectually creative people in some 30 countries, met for the first time at the invitation of the Society in the Library of Congress in Washington, D. C. This gave the people of the American Society an opportunity to learn at first hand how distinguished representatives from Europe and South America regard the creative artist. For the delegates, it was an opportunity to observe and learn something about the American people. It was a mutually satisfactory experience.

ASCAP members discovered that in Europe and South America the creative man and woman is considered a national asset. He is encouraged and protected not only through the organizations and his fellow creators, but more significantly by his own government. Copyright of course has a longer tradition in foreign countries. The works created by a man's mind are considered a reflection of the national life and are therefore given every possible protection.

Legal Variances

For this reason, the delegates to the special congress were unable to understand our own United States copyright act, which exempts the payment of fees any public performances taking place by means of coin-operated mechanical instruments. In passing resolutions regarding copyright, the International Confederation called the attention of the American government to this provision and recommended ". . . the abolition of such exemption which grants a privelege to users to the serious detriment of legitimate rights of authors and composers throughout the world." We in this country have always been somewhat behind the times in the use of propaganda on behalf of our own philosophy of government, and it is still a revelation to many that our music truly represents us.

This was brought home to me quite clearly at a luncheon I had with the late Dr. Eduardo Marquina. Dr. Marquina was one of the most famous Spanish poets and playwrights, and had one of the keenest insights into human beings that I have ever encountered. He said to me: "Until I came to America I always thought that American music was imitative, and not an expression of American culture. Because America to me was what I learned of it through the cinema, it seemed that life in the United States was grandios and exciting; whereas the music was direct and simple. However, when I came to these shores I saw that life here was not much different than it was anywhere else in the world. It was a simple, cordial, free, social relationship that existed everywhere in America, and your music—like your legitimate theatre—is a perfect delineation of this type of life. It is a full and complete expression of your culture. The cinema is not." This, I believe, clearly indicates how important it is for us to promote the widest possible use of our American music.

The United Nations is working diligently toward a goal of lasting peace, but we can never hope to attain that goal without first attaining a common understanding. This understanding will only come through emotional, and not intellectual, media.

For many years the United States practiced so-called dollar diplomacy in South America, and the only result of this activity was to instill a distrust and fear within the hearts of our neighbors of our mechanical and productive genius. To most South Americans who have not had the opportunity to visit us and get to know us, we are an unemotional, materialistic people, whose only influence within their nation would be destruction of their ancient cultures.

We, of course, know this is not true. And it is, therefore, our obligation to correct this misrepresentation of our people. We can only hope to do this by demonstrating through out art forms, as well as our diplomatic channels, that we are the same kind of human beings that are to be found throughout the world, that we are emotional, that we have spiritual values, and that our tremendous productivity springs from our emotional and spiritual life, just as much as it does from our productive genius.

While the delegates were in Washington, we took them on a trip to Mount Vernon. It was a perfect day in which to visit this ancestral home of the Father of our Country. The delegates expressed keen appreciation of this trip. Mlle. Baugnidt, the general secretary of the Confederation, remarked: "The delegates are amazed to find that one of America's leading national shrines was centered in the lovely Washington home overlooking the Potomac." Here was no Versailles, no Sans Souci, no elaborate rococo palace, but rather the home of a country gentleman who lived quietly on the land which he loved. Probably no other single factor impressed the delegates more strongly with the essence of American sentiment.

It is this American sentiment which permeates our music in every form. It is just as true of our popular music as it is of the more serious form. It is clearly expressed in our native folk music, and in the tremendous repertoire of religious music which has been written. Through our State Department, through our participation in the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, we are on the high road of understanding among the nations of the world, and American music is going to play a major role in accomplishing this understanding.

Plugging Along

By MOSE GUMBLE

I'd like to take a little time off to tell you about songplugging. The boys in our profession today are "contact men" but I am still a songplugger. Many is the time that I took the long trek to Coney Island—starting early in the morning so that I could be there in time to catch the artists and orchestras at rehearsal. Today a quick trip to Philadelphia takes less time (and is more comfortable).

Travel was less strenuous when the scene shifted and the centre of night life moved to the Bowery. It was possible to take a cab (a hansom cab, of course) downtown without it being to great a strain on the expense account. But a pair of comfortable shoes was still the best method. There were no "20c the first quarter of a mile and 5c each quarter of a mile thereafter" cabs to hop in and out of. If you wanted to get from Sans Souci on 13th street down to the Atlantic Garden, on the Bowery, you generally walked, but it wasn't too tough. Then, as now, you tried to convince orchestra leaders that your song had what the public wanted and you enjoyed the honor minus of it. Then, as now, you had to sit and sit until the leaders got an opportunity to get around to your table. It was a little trying at times, but that's part of the trials and tribulations of the songpluger.

Then came vaudeville. That was the golden era for songpluggers and the boys ran into all of the stars listed such names as Nora Bayes, Marie Cahill, Lottie Gilson who have since passed on, and so many other wonderful stars. A song sung by any of these personalities was an assured hit—not only in New York but throughout the country, for their bookings took them on nationwide tours.

That was a break for the plugger and his song, and it is also another of the reasons that the really good standards are the old time numbers. The songs heard steadily as the top tunes for almost a year became part of the life of the people. They were not like the hits we have now which are heard today and gone tomorrow.

Then came the radio which brought in an entirely new approach and revolutionized the music business to such a great extent that the millions of listeners could decide what was to be a song hit overnight.

It's been a great life and it has all been beautiful—from the time way back when I started at Coney Island—right up to now when I am classed with "good old standards." And I hope I'll be plugging along as a "standard" and loving it for many years to come.

Latin Stance on Performances

By WALLY DOWNEY
(ASCAP's Latin-American Consultant)

The main object of the Latin-American music performing rights societies is to enter into reciprocal agreements with other countries whereby the members are credited on actual performances.

There is no problem in regards to the question of balance of trade as, due to phonograph records and the use of American music in motion pictures, it is a matter of statistics based on actual performances that American music represents a large percentage of music played in Latin America.

However, in view of this condition, the Latin-American societies feel that some steps should be taken to credit their members on actual performances when and wherever possible. In their own countries it is possible to tabulate credits on actual performances mainly due to protective legislation and also plus the fact that, in accordance with their respective populations, the number of uses of music is limited.

Our good neighbors of the south, when visiting the U.S.A., invariably select one of their own compositions on a jukebox and then raise the question as to why there are no credits of payments for the use of their music on these jukeboxes. To date the only answer is in the copyright act of the U. S. which does not permit the collection of performance fees from that field of music.

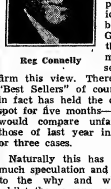
British Muz-Biz

'The Party's Over,' As in America, But Lack of BBC Program Cooperation Also Figures

By REG CONNELLY

London.

During my last trip to the States, one of your top music men, whose opinions are usually sage and always worth contemplating, summed up the slide in popular sheet music sales with the remark "The party's over," and whether or not it applies in America, volume of business in Great Britain the past six months would seem to confirm this view. There have been "Best Sellers" of course—one song in fact has held the coveted No. 1 spot for five months—but the totals would compare unfavorably with those of last year in all but two or three cases.



Reg Connelly

Naturally this has given rise to much speculation and conjecture as to the why and wherefore, and whilst the reasons contributing are many and varied—alibis for poor music business have ever been pretty colorful—the one factor that most publishers and writers blame, is the indifferent quality of radio dance band programs. These programs, like the "sustaining" shows in America, served as a medium for introducing new talent, dance tunes and, sorting out the good from the not so good.

It is a pity, at a time when we can offer bouquets to the BBC for their general treatment of serious music, dramatic plays, etc., one must throw them a brickbat for the handling, timing and presentation of dance programs. Certainly, 9 o'clock in the morning would not seem a suitable time to catch the listener "in the mood" to pay attention to the merits of the band or the items played, yet this is typical of the spots offered to top bands. Those few that had the good luck to become built up immediately in the days when broadcasting offered better facilities, like Henry Hall, Billy Cotton, Ivy Benson, etc., being in demand for theatre engagements, are rarely heard on the radio these days and nights. And as the new policy does little or nothing to create new star names, the outlook is indeed bleak.

Old time dance programs became more popular than ever during this year, with many publishers of Gay Nineties tunes cashing in on the demand. This has led to performances rather than sales, however. It also helped to fame one Harry Davidson, hitherto obscure, but built into a national favorite through the radio feature "Those Were the Days."

Filmusical Impetus

With the decline of listener interest in radio dance programs, the assistance intelligent handling of good songs in musical films has given is shown by the quick response to tunes from films like "London Town," "Holiday in Mexico" and "Johnny Story," to mention a few. While this in itself is insufficient to put songs over—it can help them to a flying start and records and radio take it from there. At such a time it's pardonable to indulge in a little "wistful thinking," for to paraphrase an old Harry Woods song, "Ooh, ooh, ooh- what a little jukebox could do, ooh, ooh"! With the boxes sprinkled liberally all over these islands, publishers and writers would be a degree freer from the utter dependency on radio, for developing song popularity. For it has been proved time and again that the interpretations of such top recording artists as Crosby, Sinatra, Como, Ink Spots, Mills Bros., Andrews Sisters, etc., have been the means of starting songs to success. Likewise, great songs have done great service in establishing these artists as favorites with the public

Invariably with the "Request Record" radio programs, the inquiries are for Perry Como singing "Till the End of Time" or the Ink Spots record of "Bless You." The jukeboxes could also bring new names and new fashions to the public attention. Cugat, for example, is known chiefly through the medium of his films, but the success of local leader Edmundo Ros with Latin-American rhythms, is evidence of an interest in this music, which opportunities of listening to crack U. S. Latin outfits would undoubtedly develop. Significant in this connection is the current popularity

(Continued on page 220)

Newcomer Team and Vet Berlin Highlights of 1946 Music Biz

By ABEL GREEN

To borrow from Metro's catchphrase, 1946 was the year of a couple of yearlings—Benny Benjamin and George Weiss—and one perennial, Irving Berlin, who parlayed himself into a one-man music business. Between the fertile scores from "Annie Get Your Gun" (legit) and "Blue Skies" (Paramount), not to mention "White Christmas," it was Berlin 10-to-1.

The rest of the music business is being reminded, for the first time since Pearl Harbor, that it's no longer a case of printing 'em and having it sell like nylons. For the simple reason you can now get nylons and lots of other things. When they couldn't buy household goods, wearing apparel, normal luxury items, and the like, they bought sheet music by the bale. Stockrooms full of old orchestrations and folios, which had been gathering dust, suddenly became hot commodities. Jack Robbins—before he ixited his longtime Metro link—shipped one $2,300 order of this sort of stale music (old Savino pianoforte folios, antiquated Rudy Wiedoeft saxophone solos, and the like) to a music house in Hawaii. That was the kind of found money which makes any business unusual.

But since the spring the music biz has fallen off to just normally good. That's the keynote of almost everything else in show business. "New Year's eve every night" no longer obtains. The folks are saving for the deep-freeze, the new car, refrigerator, new suits, etc. Besides which, the free-and-easy wartime-lush buck just ain't no more.

Which makes the Berlin saga the more remarkable. And likewise the clicks of the two yearlings with their three big hits of 1946—"Rumors Are Flying," "Surrender" and "Oh, What It Seemed to Be" (with Frankie Carle as collaborator), plus "See What a Kiss Can Do" and "That Christmas Feeling," in the also-ran category.

Biggest Trade News

The big trade news was Jack Robbins' bow-out from Metro's music combine as g.m. and 26% partner in Robbins, Feist and Miller Music Corps., for which he got $500,000 net, or $673,000, including taxes. The vet music man has since formed Robbins & Sons, bought the Hamilton S. Gordon, Inc., catalog; missed out in taking over the century-old B. F. Wood Music Co, of Boston (set for $75,000, the estate at the last minute deciding not to sell to anybody), and is gradually getting back into activity.

There were the usual amount of shifting music deals of one sort or another.

Robbins' split from Metro inspired a Robbins-Connelly Music Co. with Reg Connelly of London, but that's still in the talk stage. Leeds Music (Lou Levy) set up a wholly operated London company with Peter Maurice. Irving Berlin, Ltd., was founded in England (via Louis Dreyfus of Chappell), with "Blue Skies" as the teeoff score. Levy's Leeds Music also added Sprague-Coleman and other catalogs, and after getting tilted to a 1,000-point availability rating in ASCAP, got cut to 750. Irving Berlin's break with Saul H. Bornstein (Bourne Music) caused him to ask for uppage from 4,000 to 4,750 points. He finally got it, whereupon Max Dreyfus asked ditto for his T. B. Harms firm. He got it. Herman Starr, on behalf of his Warner Bros. group, also asked boosts. Jury still out.

Jonie Taps, still loyal to Louis Bernstein, his old boss, brought Columbia Pictures and Decca Records together with Shapiro-Bernstein to form a subsidiary Mood Music, for pix songs, utilizing the Doris Fisher-Alan Roberts tunes as the premiere publications.

Bob Stephens exited Decca and formed his own music publishing company. Max Dreyfus continued setting up publishing partnership subsids for his favorite tunesmiths, including an outfit for Harold Arlen and Johnny Mercer and another for Arthur Schwartz and Ira Gershwin, the latter teeing off with their "Park Avenue" score. Meantime Rodgers & Hammerstein's Williamson Music (also Dreyfus-affiliated) boomed on its "Carousel" and "Oklahoma!" scores and is constantly adding to the catalog.

Song Highlights

Click of "To Each His Own," by Ray Evans and Jay Livingston—Paramount's "comfort station composers," so-called because only paper-thin walls separated their hot little office from the Paramount studio's men's room—focused the spotlight anew on the pre-selling values of a pop song in relation to a film. "To Each His Own," largely credited to Eddy Howard's plugging assist, also hypoed the Par pic of the same name.

That's why Abe Olman, new g.m. for Robbins-Feist-Miller, will commute at least four times yearly to the Metro studio in order to coordinate M-G film-selling with songplugging. Berlin's "Blue Skies" film (Par) is another vivid current example of hit song potency for important boxoffice values.

And to prove you can't keep a good song down, playwright Maxwell Anderson, who fashioned the "September Song" lyric when it was interpolated into "Knickerbocker Holiday" many Broadway seasons back, finds this Kurt Weill tune an outstander. Walter Huston, who created the stage role, is largely credited for its hitdom because of an old Brunswick recording he made. (Company is now owned by Decca.)

Biofilmusicals

From the then-I-wrote filmusical biogs the cycle shifted to the then-I-sang, "The Jolson Story" tieing up a $130,000 synchronization package into a boxoffice boff. This still doesn't compare with the $250,000 Berlin got for his "Blue Skies" package against 12¼% of the gross. Al Jolson, of course, also has a percentage deal with Columbia for his biopic, as has producer-columnist Sidney Skolsky, who long nurtured the Jolson pic idea.

Jerome Kern lived to see "Till the Clouds Roll By" (Metro) and Richard Rodgers will get to see "My Heart Stood Still" (saga of Rodgers and the late Lorenz Hart; Gene Kelly and Sinatra are mentioned for the Rodgers & Hart roles.) Cole Porter saw himself screen-glorified in "Night and Day"; and the passing of Vincent Youmans, Harry Von Tilzer and Jimmy Walker this year—and Gus Edwards the year before—revived ideas anew of scenarizing their careers. Metro is also set to film the saga of Grace and (the late) Gus Kahn. Other mortalities of the year were Ira Schuster, Carrie Jacobs-Bond, Albert Gumble, Brian Hooker, Jack Rosenberg, Charles Wakefield Cadman, and the above-mentioned Salabert.

Record Business

The record business prophesied $10,000,000 in Tin Pan Alley gold, with a like amount seen from ASCAP annually. It may yet come to pass, but it didn't materialize in '46, since the Society parred its 1945 $7,000,000 divvy, whereas an anticipated 400,000,000 annual disk turn over parred to 350,000,000 platters only.

None the less the disk business is big business. Capitol Records' expansion program through an $8,000,000 Wall St. underwriting put that company to the fore. Its progressively good warnings also impressed.

Decca, of course, was an outstander with fancy net profits of $1,346,227 for the first nine months of '46, or double the previous year. Decca's 60c quarterly dividend is double the 30c paid in 1945.

Metro's invasion of the record field naturally has Decca with its Judy Garland, Columbia with Sinatra and Cugat, and so on down the line, nervous. Already Jimmy Dorsey exited Decca for MGM Records, and it's figured other realignments are inevitable.

Columbia lost Kate Smith to MGM but added Dinah Shore for five years, away from RCA Victor. Latter's Eli Oberstein, after first snaring Betty Hutton for Victor, let her go back to Capitol where she wanted to be, because of affection for prexy Buddy deSylva of the outfit, but Perry Como renewed with RCA for five years.

Crosby sales accounted for 28-30% of the Decca output.

"Annie Get Your Gun" got 44 different recordings, and the prolific "Night and Day" score got 185 different waxings of the Cole Porter tunes in one form or another, symphonic or swing, vocal or albumed. But Decca's "Oklahoma!" album at $5, with more than 500,000 sales, is still the outstander to date.

Frankie Carle's 7,000,000 disks for Columbia may be the No. 1 bandseller, but Perry Como still holds the laurels as the best recording hit-maker, viz., "If You Were the Only Girl In the World" and "Prisoner of Love," both oldies revived by him. He sold close to 10,000,00 disks in '46, which puts him in Crosby's class as a record salesman.

Other disk sidelights included a move to get the full 2c statutory royalty from the phonograph platter manufacturers, instead of the time-honored cutrate royalties of 1¼c. per 35c disk, 1½c if it sells at 50c and 2c if retailing at 75c. With the disk companies upping mostly to 60c and 75c, the publishers held the line for a time in their demand for the full 2s, but when the Warner Bros. group gave in to RCA-Victor it became status quo again.

Meantime jukeboxes found themselves 25-40% off in recent months and the 10c (three for 25c) idea to hypo income cropped up. Next month's coin-machine manufacturers convention in Chicago will further spotlight the double-jitney, one-arm musical bandits.

Foreign disk sales seem upbeating, with 20,000,000 non-Yank platters sold. It's 7% of RCA Victor's business alone. Accent is on Latin music plus sizeable sprinklings of French, Russian, Jewish.

Decca, incidentally, is aiming for 10,000,000 record production monthly, with albums to take a major slice thereof. Prexy Jack Kapp also added a distinguished Southern California educator as advisor on the company's proposed extension of its educational records, in keeping with the potential upbeat of 16m film for classrooms.

Columbia, meantime, has its new Los Angeles plant geared for 50,000,000 platter production per annum.

ASCAP

The war's end saw general manager John G. Paine flitting all over Europe and South America, cementing foreign relations anew on behalf of ASCAP. Several juicy plums were snagged away from BMI and the first Confederation of International Composers & Authors; this fall, saw songsmiths from all over the world going to Washington, thence New York and Hollywood, for conclave and fetes.

This international amity didn't halt the Mexican Songwriters Society asking for a better publishers' payoff or the Brazilian Performing Rights Society airing its gripe on the poor payoff in Yanqui dollalres.

The Alien Property Custodian did a big wartime business in rights to foreign music (also pix, plays, etc.) but with war's end the Austrian, French and German performing rights societies sued ASCAP for $392,958 in blocked (accumulated) royalties. This was finally alleviated when ASCAP agreed to exchange coin long overdue.

With war's end too, the Italian publishers, always prolific, deluged U. S. firms with their scripts and, even more so, fought for the Italian publication rights to American hits.

The Songwriters Protective Assn. meantime has been planning royalty and other income advancements. The songsmiths presented them to the publishers who, after going through the motions of fainting, left themselves a backdoor for future negotiation. That's on the agenda for 1947. As a matter of fact some firms already are giving writers sliding royalty scales of 3c, 4c and 5c on sheet music sales, as the graph moves up. The idea of not freezing mss., or tieing in songs in foreign package sales, synchronization rights, etc., long were deemed equitable by many publishers. Irving Berlin, as a publisher-writer, threw his lot with the tunesmiths which naturally gave them additional ammunition.

Future copyright deals will be so set up that none of the wrangling over expired valuable oldies ("Sweet Rosie O'Grady," "I'm Always Chasing Rainbows," "Melancholy Baby," to name but a few which have figured in the courts) will be obviated.

A sample of how valuable are certain copyright renewals is the $25,000 paid the George M. Cohan estate for his "Over There" renewal. The great value of synchronization rights is evidenced by the $10,000 paid Mills Music by Metro for Jimmy McHugh and Dorothy Fields' "I Can't Give You Anything But Love" for "My Secret Heart." And Irving Caesar is guaranteed $6,000 a year minimum for the next 28 years from Herman Starr (Warner Bros.) on those of his copyrights in the Harms-Remick-Witmark catalog as they become renewable.

On the Coast, the Screen Composers Guild has been mulling joining the Screen Writers Guild because they supposedly were getting chilled in their ASCAP rating. Screen Composers, borrowing a thought from the American Authors Authority, also seeks to control its scores after the pix companies have made use thereof in film releasing.

Television

Television is starting to loom importantly for ASCAP but the Metro group remains the lone big holdout on reserving these rights unto itself. Santly-Joy just okayed its video licensing to the Society, which now has about 80% representation of its members for television. ASCAP, in turn, asked Loew's for a larger seat tax on its chain of theatres but the picture company rebuffed the Society.

Records also intrigue the picture companies. Besides MGM there has been sporadic talk about David O. Selznick founding a Vanguard disk label; 20th-Fox has been mentioned as going into the field; also Paramount whose dicker with Cosmo never materialized.

While 20th-Fox looks set to take over Jack Robbins' 26% in the Big Three Music Corp. (Robbins, Feist and Miller), 20th will not be partnered with Metro in the record business.

Hoagy Carmichael's "The Stardust Road," autobiog, spotlighted him anew, although "Buttermilk Sky," out of a Walter Wanger (U) film, "Canyon Passage," has him right up on top again, especially in the jukes. Tune is so closely identified with Carmichael's style and recording that even the trade forgets Jack Brooks collaborated with him. Just as few know that two other fellers actually wrote the saucy "Huggin' and Chalkin'," because Carmichael's Capitol platter so impressed his style. The songsmith-actor has become quite a screen personality, too, of late, segueing from "Canyon" to an important role in Sam Goldwyn's current film outstander, "The Best Years of Our Lives."

Novelty song vogue included "Chiquita Bananas"; and a couple of pops which had a limited excitement, "Onezy Twozy" and "Pickle In the Middle, Mustard On Top," both out of Jack Benny's radio program.

Longhair or "middle-brow" music, as Sigmund Romberg calls it—and proved it on his concert tours—got new hypo. Phil Spitalny's sensational $10,000 to $14,000 one-night grosses in concert proved that. The Iturbi-Melchior specialties in Metro pix and on the radio further helped; with result Hollywood is eyeing operatic scores more and more. In addition, virtuosos like Yehudi Menuhin did film soundtracks like "The Magic Bow" (Paganini saga, for a British film producer); Isaac Stern recorded the "Humoresque" (WB) violining; Artur Rubinstein pianoforted for Republic; Iturbi for Columbia's "A Song to Remember"; Heifetz to come, etc.

More Sidelights

What would a music year be without a suit by Ira Arnstein who, strangely enough, scored a curious legal point in one of his manifold suits, this time against Cole Porter.

Mose Gumble hit his 70th birthday, and is still actively "plugging along" for Remick.

Three Victor Herbert revivals—"Red Mill," "Sweethearts" and "Gypsy Lady," latter taken to London by Jack Hylton—also hit the jackpot again.

Johnny Burke and Jimmy Van Heusen now collect $75,000 apiece from Paramount for seven scores they have to do (chiefly for Bing Crosby).

Song-of-the-Month was another new 1946 idea.

Trucking strike and paper shortages were stymies to the music business when it was in better shape to fulfill orders than when labor peace came and business eased off. None the less, business is good if the trade would forget that 1945 went 15½% higher than ever and, of course, the war years were phenomenal.

The Music Publishers Contact Employees, fancy tag for the songpluggers' union, took exception to Nick Kenny's songplugging activities, alleging the columnist-songsmith's N. Y. Mirror connections gave him undue advantage, but "Uncle Nick" agreed to stick to his birthday greetings and patty poems. Herman Starr, head of WB's music interests, however, had his own gripe about the MPCE and resigned.

On the subject of pluggers, Lester Santly and Georgie Joy, in setting up its subsidiary Oxford Music, gave Tommy Valando, their prof. mgr., a piece of the new firm. Berlin's Dave Dreyer is another slated to go into business for himself eventually.

Top '46 Best Sheet Music Sellers

All Through the Day	T. B. Harms
Coffee Song	Valiant
Day By Day	Barton
Doctor, Lawyer, Indian Chief	Burke-Van Heusen
Doin' What Comes Naturally	Berlin
Five Minutes More	Melrose
Full Moon, Empty Arms	Barton
Gal in Calico	Remick
Gypsy	Leeds
I Don't Know Enough About You	Campbell-Porgie
I Don't Know Why	Feist
If You Were the Only Girl	Mutual
It Might As Well Be Spring	Williamson
For Sentimental Reasons	Duchess
Laughing On the Outside	BMI
Let It Snow	Morris
Oh What It Seemed To Be	Santly-Joy
Ol Buttermilk Sky	Burke-Van Heusen
Old Lamplighter	Shapiro-Bernstein
One-zy Two-zy	Martin
Personality	Burke-Van Heusen
Prisoner of Love	Mayfair
Rumors Are Flying	Oxford
September Song	Crawford
Sioux City Sue	Morris
South America Take It Away	Witmark
Surrender	Santly-Joy
They Say It's Wonderful	Berlin
Things We Did Last Summer	Morris
To Each His Own	Paramount
You Won't Be Satisfied	Mutual
Whole World Singing My Song	Robbins
White Christmas	Berlin
Winter Wonderland	BVC

Possible 350,000,000 Disks Pressed In 1946 to Put Biz Near Top of Amus. Industry

There has been much said during the year about the business done by recording manufacturers during 1946. Whatever has been predicted is far short of what actually has occurred. During 1946 it is possible that the recording industry took a position at the very top of the entertainment heap in total revenue.

This is the opinion of responsible people with a finger in several entertainment pies. It's their belief that the 33 pressing plants at present operating between both coasts turned out enough production to compile billings that surpass the income of the entire radio industry from time sales. That's a large statement, but they stand by it adamantly.

There is absolutely no simple method of accurately determining total record sales during the past year. The Big Four—RCA-Victor, Columbia, Decca and Capitol alone accounted for approximately 300,000,000 disks, not to mention the hundreds of independents spread throughout the country and led by Mercury, Majestic, Cosmo, National, etc. There's no doubt that the combined production of these outfits added another 30 to 50,000,000. From there on the total sales for the year by all companies is anybody's guess.

And 1947 figures to be even bigger, for which the major companies are already girding themselves. Columbia's new plant in Hollywood is expected to get going this month, and the same company's Kings Mill, O., plant still has quite a bit of idle capacity. RCA is planning a new plant at Canonsburg, Pa. M-G-M, Metro's subsid, is due to get started this year, and so on. Couple this with the fact that postwar record-buying has not really begun as yet since radio manufacturers still are not, for various reasons, marketing combination radio sets in very great numbers.

VARIETY carried a prediction more than a year ago that a postwar annual total of 300,000,000 to 600,000,000 records was entirely possible. At the moment, even that seems slightly shortsighted. At the time it was made tradespeople laughed.

1946 Sales Monthly By Singers

Realize, too, that the 1946 sales were compiled mostly by singers, albums of all types and the tremendous boom in kiddie material, and with longhair disks. Name bands were a very poor last, with one or two exceptions, in the overall scheme of things. Singers, from Bing Crosby, Perry Como, Frank Sinatra, Dinah Shore, Peggy Lee, Tony Martin, Margaret Whiting and a long list of others still are in the most complete control of sales of popular songs. Only one band broke through that lineup, that led by Frankie Carle, who dispose of approximately 7,000,000 Columbia platters. In pointing that out, it's not to be inferred that other name leaders didn't hit reasonable earnings statements, but those that did did so on the basis of back catalogs, not current material. And even then, the major companies did not have enough production room to fill such back orders. Tommy Dorsey's "Opus No. 1," for example, is said to have requests for approximately 750,000 disks piled up at Victor.

What was really tremendous, however, during the year was the demand for albums of all types. For some time, Decca had a long headstart on rivals in this field, but, as time went on, RCA and Columbia began to catch up. An idea of the business available in this field is the recent response to Columbia's announcement of a Harry James album containing eight of the sides which helped boost him before the war to the top of the band heap. Before this book hit the sales stalls, Columbia had orders for 300,000 copies—or 1,200,000 records. And that's only among the majors. There are dozens of kiddie and other type albums being marketed by firms one never knew existed.

While all this scrambling has been going on for production, the major companies, with the possible exception of Capitol and RCA-Victor, have not seriously turned their attention to the building of new talent. They obviously are content with sales stemming from almost the same faces who were available during the past couple of years, fighting among themselves to protect what they have or snag some from a rival company. Not to mention constantly riding herd on talent lists against the raiding attempts by the new M-G-M outfit.

Refusal of most of the majors to divert part of their production to new talent is regrettable. Because there is no other way for it to break through. Indies can't do it. Latter have been operating almost from the beginning with talents formerly connected with the majors, but who for various reasons were cast adrift. The indies can do nothing else. To experiment with new talent is to risk bankruptcy. Most haven't the financial backing to mark time until a performer can be built into a good sales position. They must depend on what they have to keep going. (Even then, if one of these names comes up strongly there's always some major ready to grab him off. And the artist, of course, must take advantage of it—witness RCA-Victor's acquisition of Tony Martin from Mercury.)

All in all, the record business has become quite an industry since the days in the '30s when all companies couldn't manage a total combined sale of 50,000,000 disks. And it'll be some time yet before sound on tape, wire, or other methods puts a halter on it and backs it into a stall.

$232,000,000 In '46 From Jukes

From its humble beginning some 60 years ago, when Thomas A. Edison invented the phonograph, the phonograph has gone through transitions which have made it a garish, gaudy, mechanical monster squeaking its raucous music at the drop of a jit. From 1906, the first recorded date for the appearance of an automatic phonograph, the public's taste successively passed through the period where its nickels were clutched by the coin-operated piano and concerted organ, down early in the last decade came the forerunner of the modern diskbox.

In August, 1940, VARIETY in a national survey, estimated the national annual return of the diskbox at a conservative $150,000,000. Some 25,000 instruments were reported to have been located in the New York metropolitan area alone. Now the gross has rocketed to a point which some authorities place in the neighborhood of $232,000,000 gleaned this year from about 280,000 machines in the U. S. alone.

The Dreyfus Case

By ARTHUR SCHWARTZ

He published his first song over 50 years ago, and that means he has met a lot of songwriters. The greats among them, and they include Victor Herbert, Rudolf Friml, Sigmund Romberg, Jerome Kern, Cole Porter . . . well, you take it from there . . . and don't leave out George Gershwin, Richard Rodgers and Vincent Youmans. They would all say, I am sure that Max Dreyfus was and is an anomoly in the show business world. Why? Because he has published thousands of the world's most famous songs without ever feeling once that any of them would positively be a hit. "The public makes the hits," he will say. "I can only say what I like, but I'm one person. I can be wrong."

In the super-ballyhooed, hypoed, onsaganeeded bellum we think of as show business that kind of fellow should get nowhere. Composers are temperamental — remember? — must be nursed, built up, flattered, inspired. Max Dreyfus has his own way of flattering. It's a little disconcerting at first, but you get used to it. You play him a song you think will shake the world. You sing it as if it were the Marseillaise or the Liebestod. He listens most attentively, and if the song really strikes him, he might give you a "very nice, very nice." Hardly audible. If he isn't bowled over completely, his reaction is likely to be "Nice."

Why did all the big boys go to him, seek his advice, come back to him after he turned their first works down? Can't say quite, except that he is a thorough musician, a gentleman of culture, a patron of the theatre—and he never raises his voice.

(Continued on page 220)

Doggone Those Over-Arrangements, Especially With Dogie Ballads

A Plea for Plain Songs of the Plainsmen, or Why Ives and Acuff Shine

By LLOYD LEWIS

Chicago.

Just in case the radio industry should be aching to know my decision, I am hereby offering it one last chance to stop me from taking my health portable and dropping it into the prairie river that runs past my door.

It can at least save one drowning and retain one listener if it will begin slapping the hands of all arrangers, production geniuses, and big thinkers who start putting High Mass into simple, melodic numbers, and who crowd great choruses in on the sponsor to sing a simple song that is meant for one voice alone.

This malpractice has been growing in radio, year by year, and reached the point the other evening where an ambitious group, calling themselves The King's Jesters, smothered a beautiful old western song, "The Red River Valley," in so muffled yet massive a series of fancy bellows that all meaning as well as melody disappeared. That song is the quiet and plaintive attempt of a cowhand to persuade a girl from the east not to forget him when she gets home—a genuinely natural western verse set to a singularly appropriate tune. The melody is a thin and haunting line as all lonesome strains should be, yet this choral group gave it all the ornate variations and ponderous rumblings of a mob scene from Romberg.

This passion of the arranger to over-arrange, of the agencies to impose masses of artists, and of the studios to gravitate ever toward grandeur is understandable—businessmen in the arts usually tend to confuse size with art—and the professional in any line is apt to show off his technique at the expense of common sense and taste.

Anybody in show business is familiar with the musical which is a smash success on rehearsal when one lone piano is guiding the singers, and a colossal flop on opening night when an over-staffed band, eager to claim its share of the spotlight, tops the singers in noise and drowns all melody in a flood of contradictional antics.

Oscar Hammerstein, II's "Knights of Song" some years ago was a surefire hit at rehearsal at the St. Louis Municipal Opera. The Gilbert & Sullivan songs were limpid, clear and commanding as sung on a bare stage with a piano accompaniment.

Yet when the show was opened and thrones of bandsmen took over, the melodies were swamped, the spell was gone—and so were the crowds. Compare that with Hammerstein and Rodgers' "Oklahoma!" where the band is always subordinate to the tune and only cuts loose when it is supposed to—in those songs where massed cowhands and farm girls whoop things up in community style.

Radio studios in their handling of western songs have apparently not yet learned the simple truth about that kind of entertainment, namely that a true cowboy ballad is conceived in loneliness and done in solo while riding around a sleeping herd. But Ives success is, at bottom, due to his recognition of this fact. His voice is a remarkable one, but characterization is the great thing about him. He knows just as Carl Sandburg knows and John A. Lomax, the discoverer of the cowboy song, has always known, that the ballad is not for choruses, nor for the artificially slickened voice, nor for Tin Pan Alley.

For Example

Ives has that hallmark of the complete artist, the ability to make listeners forget him and, more important, themselves. Audiences will always give the bottom of their hearts to the performer who ignores them entirely and profoundly.

Compare Ives' and John McCormack's rendition of "The Foggy, Foggy Dew" on records and you will see the difference between art and technique, the genuine and the superficial, the real and the unreal. For that matter, compare Walter Huston's record of "September Song" with that of Bing Crosby—Huston, with no voice at all, makes it a great song. Bing with a fine voice merely moons it without the faintest conception of the ballad story it tells. To Crosby it is just another in an endless series of profitable groanings.

John A. Lomax, with as little voice as Huston, could do with "Home On the Range" what John Charles Thomas could never do—take the listener out on the plains and make him feel what the lonesome rider felt. The one trained voice and relative ability that can become as authentic in ballads as the naturalistic Ives, Sandburg and Lomax is Paul Robeson's. I have never heard so much honesty uttered in song since as once when he and Ives took turns singing ballads at each other with not more than half a dozen listeners sitting by.

Roy Acuff on records and radio is one of the few mountaineer performers of ballads not to be touched by Tin Pan Alley. Lomax, who should know, rates him as sincere and authentic. If a chorus joins in, Acuff has the unerring ability to keep it down, hold it and the fiddles below the solo voice which sings the story.

That, of course, is the basic fault with the professionals who make such a botch of performing ballads on stage, screen and radio—they do not understand that a ballad is one man's story. They still think a ballad is 75 Student Princes leaning over the footlights to tell Kathie in glee club style that they love her, Kathie meanwhile standing 50 feet behind them unnoticed.

Radio ought to send all its ballad singers, all its arrangers, and all its vice-presidents in charge of production, down to Dallas, Texas, and learn from John Lomax, that 80-year-old master-singer of ballads, that a cowboy song must always be sung as if it were not being sung to people, but to cattle.

Pity the Poor Diskbox

Springfield, Mass.

A proposal that an annual fee of $10 be levied against operators of places using diskboxes was offered last night (6) to the city council. City has never taxed its 500 juke boxes, and the proposal was one of a series of revenue producing levies drawn up by a special aldermanic committee.

Group would also ask a $5 tap from each distributor.

Charges of Bribery Against Unnamed BBC Officials By British Tin Pan Alley

London.

Charges of bribery leveled at unnamed BBC officials in Parliament recently achieved two things. They brought to a head a long-nurtured irritation on the part of leading dance band musicians over the maladministration of the BBC's popular music airings, and they diverted attention from the fundamental failings of the corporation by drawing an overstuffed red herring across the tracks.

The result has been that the much-kicked variety dept. once more takes the rap while the more blameworthy seniors duck for cover. Wing-Commander Cooper, M.P., the self-appointed prosecutor in the current mess, also further fogged the issues by adding allegations that ex-service performers were not getting their slice of radio cake. In point of fact the BBC is, if anything, over-conscientious in its obligations to all and sundry who imagine themselves possessors of radio talent, whereas too many put an over-high rating on their own abilities.

The best hope of the outcome of the shindy is some new and better deal for dance bands. But with the present disdainful attitude of the planning executive and the general direction to the question, it is a forlorn hope.

What is really required is a major shake-out of the overcrowded administration, and a replacement of its key men in the chairborne brigade by individuals with a better understanding of radio and less concern for personal prestige. But from the wrong direction that the affair seems likely to take, it is only in the field of dance music that there is much probability of changes, and these will be trivial.

Brushoff To Dance Bands

The fact is that the BBC hierarchy really regards dance music as unworthy of a place on the air and is completely disinterested in and ignorant of its performance, presentation and personnel. What goes out is included only as a half-hearted concession to a public demand.

In defense of this attitude, it is claimed that, in the past year, the public interest in dance music has declined and that evidence of this is provided by the figures culled by the BBC Listener Research Bureau. Nevertheless, the listenership to dance music remains comparatively higher than the listenership to classical music where reasonable comparisons are possible and there has been a surfeit of longhair music on the ether since the inauguration of the so-called Third Program.

Dance musicians argue contrariwise that, if there has been any falling off in the popularity of their particular kind of stock, it is a decrease in the output of the BBC as opposed to dance music as a whole. Dance band fans, they claim, are seeking satisfaction elsewhere — in jazz concerts, one night stands and, most of all, in the programs of AFN, Munich-Stuttgart, and Frankfurt. These stations have a larger listenership in Britain than BBC officials are willing to admit—especially the two-hour disk stint, "Midnight in Munich."

Musicians get $12 per session for airings—a session consisting of three hours rehearsal plus the broadcast. Extra rehearsal time rates $3 per man for a three-hour period.

Nothing is laid on the line in normal dances and broadcasts for either orchestrations or presentation. The leader must supply his own music. Leaders with star sidemen in their orchestras often have to pay them out of their own pockets, as the BBC does not cover the cost to the leader of the broadcast. Moreover, without financial aid for arrangements, he must frequently turn to the publishers for subsidized scores of the plugs to help pay out. The BBC is anxious to eliminate this practice but unwilling to shoulder the cost of the musical arranging.

Again, the leader buying his own orchestrations cannot afford to gear them solely to radio. They must serve a multiple purpose—radio,

(Continued on page 220)

Thar's Mother Lode in Twangy Music Strains

Hollywood.

Lookee, lookee, what's a-gallopin' down upon us again, frisky as a tumbleweed. Yep, the western song. Not only back and bold as ever, but threatening to move right in among the pops.

The prairie-plaint seemed to have ducked down a gopher hole during much of the war period. Pearl Harbor time found "Deep in the Heart of Texas" pouring out of almost every tonsil, but thereafter, for some inexplicable reason, the oatune did a fast fade. It was heard from once, in a mighty roar when Al Dexter's "Lay That Pistol Down" spiraled into coast-to-coast consciousness, but only lately has it really resurged, led off with "Sioux City Sue" crying as a sheer western ditty and emerging finally into the general category of popularity.

Definitely nowadays when an oatune becomes strong in its own field, the pop singers and orchs grab it for straight renditions, which not only attests to the consideration given it on its own merit, but also is a dent on strength of pop ditties currently.

Cowband Ballad

Presently reigning as king of the cactus chants is "Adobe Hacienda," which Southern Music Co. bought from Louise Massey in 1942 and finally dragged down off a shelf when firm noticed pulsating throb of biz being done by oatunes. Whether the ditty meriting delayed lix stretch on the shelf or not, it caught on almost immediately after two odd-label recordings of it started selling; these waxings, Jack McLean for Coast Records, and Esquire Trio on Rhapsody label, went like wildfire in the west, so Southern made the ditty its No. 1 plug, ignoring the pops on its roster, and now the piece is getting serious play in bands' books and from pop recording artists.

Robbins' Oaters

Robbins Music also has seen what can be done with an oatune when the spurs and boots are stripped off and straight attention lent it. Firm's "I Tipped My Hat and Slowly Rode Away" created a stir when Buddy Sagar disked it for Victor and Stu Davis warbled it for Sonora, so Robbins induced Perry Como to give it another ride on Victor. Immediately six other pop purrers followed suit.

Miller Music found that the life of "If You're Ever Down in Texas" was by no means exhausted when given innings by the sagebrush crooners, but further scored when Phil Harris, The Charioteers and Johnny Mercer went to work on it. And Feist's "Oh, Why Did I Ever Leave Wyoming" has been recorded by Kay Kyser and Jack Smith. Decca last month exalted "By the Old Corral" by having Dick Haymes give it serious treatment, backed by Victor Young's big orch.

Spurred Argument

And champions and addicts of the western song right today are quick to remind it dubious that essentially many tunes high in popularity are actually oatunes, merely masquerading as pops. What else, they ask, is "Ole Buttermilk Sky"?

The recording companies are becoming more conscious of sales possibilities inherent in almost any western ditty, and from the preeminent Bing Crosby on down, almost all artists now are willing to chirp about the corral and Old Paint, assured that a big public will snap up the stuff.

Capitol Records now has the Dinning Sisters back on an oatune diet, where trio started before aspiring to ballads and novelties. And as far as the popularity of the music generally is concerned, ballroom operators along the Pacific slope explain that by and large during the past year, the sagebrush melodies of Bob Wills and Spade Cooley have earned them more velvet than any of the lustre-lit name bands.

Songwriting Class

Philadelphia, Jan. 7.

Gentle art of song writing has invaded the American schoolroom.

Frank Capano, head of Tin Pan Alley Music, Inc., has organized a class in song-writing for the nearby Woodbury (N. J.) Parent-Teachers Assn.

Time Seen Curer of Current Band Ills As the Business Seeks Its Offbeat B.O.

By BERNIE WOODS

What's wrong with the band business?

For the past several months that's been the $64 question after a long wartime and postwar period of spectacularly good business. And if any group of people has ever talked itself into a panic, those involved in the merchandising and operation of bands have certainly done so. The downward curve of the boxoffice graph has been too sudden, too sharp. They've been scared silly.

There are a lot of reasons why such a panic should have developed in the band field. But none is strong enough to justify the sort of talk kicking around lately — that the name band business has hit a slump from which it will take a long time to recover, if ever.

What is needed most is time, the healer of many ills. At the moment, the industry is caught in the web of an economic condition that's pretty much nationwide. Actually, there's no more bothering the band business than is upsetting any other field of selling to the public. The public isn't buying at current prices, that's all, and this is the peculiar condition for which the band business itself is completely responsible — when it comes to buying something else, neither their pocketbooks nor their spirit can afford at the moment, you have a partial answer to the slump.

By the word "spirit" is meant that the 1945 and 1946 trend of performance by too many name bands in the so-called "swing" field are largely responsible for what has been happening at the b.o. As Variety pointed last year, the band business, before it can shift into the postwar high gear of sales and popularity, must await the righting of economic and living conditions. There is too much, for too many wage-earners in the age brackets that produce band followers, to worry about in so far as actually existing is concerned for them to be thinking about demonstrating allegiance to one band or another. They need every ounce of energy and pieces to live and work. In the midwest, in Pennsylvania and surrounding states, where lies the best band territory, strikes have been rampant. Both those involved in this condition and the population affected by it, which means virtually the entire country, are therefore too depressed mentally to look kindly on jump music.

Too Much Music

As a result, the average swing band has been putting forth too much music for this type of public to absorb easily. It takes real physical energy to react to and enjoy a "beat" band for those whose normal inclinations run in that direction. And, lulled by that mental slump, too many just cannot develop that strength.

Therefore, a fair portion of the blame for the slump can be placed on a good many jump band maestros. They have let arrangers run away with them. They feature music that even make those wince whose job it is to follow trends. Melody is a thing of the past. It all has degenerated into a question of who can produce the trickiest writing, which often is coupled to brase passages laid out in such a way that heightens the effect of the latter and seems, at least, to increase the noise decibels. And the public isn't taking to it too kindly.

That this is so is proven by the trend toward the close of this year toward sweet bands. Unexpectedly, the trade found that the bands doing the best business in metropolitan centers, and many times on one-night stands, were the Guy Lombardos, Sammy Kayes, Blue Barrons, et al. In some spots, such as the Totem Pole Ballroom, Auburndale, Mass., the management found that a local band featuring plain, unembroidered dance music outdrew such names as Harry James. The condition launched a hue and cry that the bounce band had finally become itself from public favor. Nothing could be further from the truth.

There's no question but that sweet music is enjoying a stronger b.o. best. But it will never completely smother or even hold down for any length of time the livelier style of the jump band. As soon as conditions are righted and things again become in some measure, equal to what they were prewar, the natural exuberance of music followers will lift the so-called jump band right back into full stride. And the new stride should cover a great deal more ground than it ever had in the past.

New Names

Another thing that the band world must await to be reawakened is some new names. And right now, due to the aforementioned reasons for the slump of established names, a new name hasn't a prayer of succeeding. However, since the start of the war and the resultant freezing in position of Tommy Dorsey, Harry James, Jimmy Dorsey, and all the other top outfits, a new generation has grown up that will be ripe when the time comes to select and boost up the b.o. ladder a completely new crop of stars.

And when that happens It should be accomplished with a goodly amount of new musicians. At that moment, virtually every top band now in existence is staffed by faces that have long been familiar. They move from one band to another. Many have been in service. They are all pretty tired (and you can take that any way you choose), their playing is uninspired. There's no enthusiasm among them, and without it how can they hope to instill enthusiasm for what they are doing in listeners? Listen to any recording produced prewar by almost any "B" or "C" class band, and compare them with some of the current disks being turned out by "A" bands, and you'll quickly understand.

Hawaii Opening Up As Band Date, But Brief Runs Not Practical

Hollywood.

Hawaiian situation finally is opening up for bands, with Music Corp. of America having closed a deal for Royal Hawaiian hotel, Honolulu, to take on series of orchestras as regular policy. Joe Reichman opens, current at St. Francis, San Francisco, will open an eight-week stand Jan. 28. Blair and Dean, ballroom team, are on same bill.

Since the war few Yank combos have appeared in the islands, due to fact transportation costs usually did not warrant bands making brief engagements.

When Hub Goes For Hillbilly Airs Bet They're In!

By GEORGE GILBERT

Some 15% of all major disk pressings today are devoted to folk tunes, mountain ballads and cowboy laments. Even staid New England has begun to unbend and give homegrown, down-to-earth music the nod. In 1946 Boston alone bought over 500,000 platters in this category.

Some of the bigger pubs have set up branches to handle such music but few have met with success, according to Bob Miller, prexy of the publishing house that bears his name and which specializes in such music.

But they go about it wrong, says Miller. They don't understand the market. Their sales technique is built on the principle of creating artificial "hits" by means of drives and high-pressure publicity campaigns. This won't sell a hillbilly number. In the first place a "hit song" never reaches the true hit class until it sells on both Broadway and Main Street, the "hit" ever became a hit unless it did that, Miller points out.

A publisher with high-powered contactmen may push a song up to the 500,000 mark but it'll never exceed that, and then, too, a tune of that type has a short life. Take the case of "There's a Star Spangled Banner Waving Somewhere," Miller's biggest hit, with sales topping 1,700,000 copies. Written in 1944 by Miller and Paul Roberts, it's a melancholy saga of the past war and parlayed Eddy Arnold into fame who first recorded it, into top-money brackets because, Miller says, "the backbone of America is simplicity."

"Banner" was a simple ascent with a mournful lyric. "Banner," incidentally, won some sort of distinction for being a number which the publisher requested a "Hit Parade" not to play. Irate because of the rapid tempo at which the tune was being played, Miller told Lucky Strike to do the number slower or not at all. At first, dance arrangements would have killed the song, Miller said.

Intima'e Feeling Needed

"A writer must have an intimate feeling for the people he's aiming his song at," Miller observes. "It's the simple songs that sell. Most pop tunes of today are written for the top bands to play. The music is apt to be hard for the man on Main Street to tinkle on the living room piano. He only buys the simple melodies. Most songs have too many fancy chords for the average sheet music buyer. Today a lot of people sing because they're afraid. In this atomic age they seek an escape in church music and plain, down to earth melodies such as hillbilly and cowboy tunes. And the difference between a hillbilly song and a cowboy number is only a ten-gallon hat."

Hillbillies love to make heroes out of the oldtime desperadoes, as in the case of Jesse James. They swear by the songs as historical fact. Writers and composers express the times for these people. Miller set the late Woody Guthrie and other earlier reflected the unrest through the south and the farm belt by writing his "Seven Cent Cotton, Forty Cent Meat—(that is the hell can a poor man eat)" It said, when the farmer was "whipped," to the tune of 3,600,000 disks. John Dillinger is another bad man who was set to music.

Pioneer among the hillbilly song collectors is Frank Walker now general manager of M-G-M records. Years ago Walker dug up folk music by journeying into the hills with an oldtime recording outfit and got the real stuff. The old folk melodies stemmed from the men of the soil—from late working, hard-drinking frontiersmen of a bygone era. They're part of Americana as evidenced by the lyrics, which glossed over the seamy side of life in some instances and called its shots in others

Today universal acceptance of hillbilly strains can partially be attributed to the large-scale troop movements during the war which aided in popularizing the music of the soil. But it's a w.k. fact that hillbilly tunes have always sold well no matter how bad the country's economic conditions. During the bad depression years hill tunes saved a number of disk labels from bankruptcy.

The Peatman Annual Survey of Song Hits with the Largest Radio Audiences

(Dec. 27, 1945, through Dec. 26, 1946)

The 35 song hits with the largest audiences are listed below in order of the total Audience Coverage Index points received in the ACI Surveys during the year. (Songs in stage or film productions are indicated. Songs currently active are marked with an asterisk. Songs whose activity began in the fall of 1945 are referred to in the footnotes.)

Rank	Total AC* Points	Number of weeks in ACI Survey	Song title	Production	Publisher
1.	32,301	31	They Say It's Wonderful	Annie Get Your Gun	Berlin
2.	30,290	19	Symphony[1]		Chappell
3.	29,023	25	Oh, What It Seemed to Be		Santly-Joy
4.	27,566	24	Day By Day		Bartlin
5.	25,703	28	All Through the Day	Centennial Summer	Williamson
6.	25,398	18	Let It Snow, Let It Snow, Let It Snow*[2]		E. H. Morris
7.	24,346	24	I'm Always Chasing Rainbows[3]	Dolly Sisters	Miller
8.	24,293	16	I Can't Begin to Tell You[4]	Dolly Sisters	Bregman-Vocco-Conn
9.	23,870	16	Aren't You Glad You're You[5]	Bells of St. Mary's	Burke-Van Heusen
10.	23,053	26	The Gypsy		Leeds
11.	22,180	27	To Each His Own		Paramount
12.	21,027	47	Blue Skies[6]	Blue Skies	Berlin
13.	20,514	30	I Got the Sun in the Morning	Annie Get Your Gun	Berlin
14.	20,049	28	Some Sunday Morning	San Antonio	Harms
15.	19,084	20	Five Minutes More		Melrose
16.	18,924	31	I Don't Know Enough About You		Campbell-Porgie
17.	18,535	23	Shoo Fly Pie and Apple Pan Dowdy		Capitol
18.	18,158	19	Personality	Road to Utopia	Burke-Van Heusen
19.	17,516	14	Ole Buttermilk Sky*	Canyon Passage	Burke-Van Heusen
20.	17,495	23	Laughing On the Outside		Broadcast Music
21.	17,391	22	You Won't Be Satisfied		Mutual
22.	17,336	22	South America, Take It Away	Call Me Mister	Witmark
23.	16,629	25	Sioux City Sue		E. H. Morris
24.	16,335	19	You Keep Coming Back Like a Song*	Blue Skies	Berlin
25.	16,546	20	Doctor, Lawyer, Indian Chief	Stork Club	Melrose
26.	16,207	24	I Don't Know Why		Feist
27.	16,059	15	It Might As Well Be Spring[6]	State Fair	Williamson
28.	16,048	24	Surrender		Santly-Joy
29.	15,793	27	In Love in Vain	Centennial Summer	T. B. Harms
30.	14,793	27	If You Were the Only Girl		Mutual
31.	14,563	15	The Whole World Is Singing My Song*		Robbins
32.	14,184	22	Seems Like Old Times		Feist
33.	14,062	16	Come to Baby, Do[7]		Leeds
34.	13,618	27	Come Rain or Come Shine	St. Louis Woman	Crawford
35.	13,374	19	Rumors Are Flying*		Oxford

[1] Also on Peatman Survey for 8 weeks in 1945 with 8,132 ACI points.
[2] Four weeks in 1945 with 4,644 ACI points; also again currently active.
[3] Eight weeks in 1945 with 3,686 ACI points.
[4] Ten weeks in 1945 with 10,092 ACI points.
[5] Five weeks in 1945 with 2,784 ACI points.
[6] Eleven weeks in 1945 with 17,014 ACI points
[7] Six weeks in 1945 with 4,930 ACI points.

Blues for Coast Indie Diskers; Little Labels Waning Not Waxing

By AL SCHARPER, JR.

Hollywood.

The new year dawned with none too roseate a hue for the sprawling independent disk labels which dot this region. The small boys know the chips are down and they are facing a real fight to survive. Last spring, a checkup by VARIETY revealed that more than 125 different waxeries were licensed here by the American Federation of Musicians; today, actually there are fewer than 50 left in the field.

It is difficult to term many "out of business," because they protest they are very much alive. However, when they have ceased recording and merely are trying to peddle old platters and what masters they may possess, they at least are fading.

Within the last six months, two of the indies which had been blasting away most energetically—ARA and Bel-Tone—went bankrupt. Fran-Tone frankly folded; within recent weeks Musicians' Local 47 declared unfair half a dozen labels, including Pan-American, Paramount, Paragon, Preview and Bar, for defaulting on money owed musikers for disking.

Pressing Switch

Though the problems the indies are facing seem to many rather mountainous, a good dozen have made their presence felt across nation. When indies can pay for materials they can get them now, but pressing facilities on the Coast go begging. The big squeeze was three years ago when the indies starting popping here; at that time there were only 28 presses available, now the total exceeds 300. However, production costs have risen 18% in that time, even though it still is 1c per platter cheaper to produce here than in the east.

The indies are still stabbing, hoping to get that one big winner. But too many have found their bankrolls too skimpy and consequently can't afford to wait three months before distribs start paying off. And because of heated rivalries the odd-labels have never been able to form a cooperative, which would cut costs. Every effort made to organize them has failed.

The smarter indies have learned that their best bets are westerns. After many efforts to do bigger things, Four Star Records now admits that it has been kept in biz by an oatuner, Tex Tyler, who has sold more than 300,000 disks in the past year. And it was with just such fare that the plattery entered the industry. However, the indies are viewing with alarm the covetous eyes the Big Four have started slanting toward their corner. Capitol has been girding to make a real dent with sagebrush songsters; quietly Cap has lined up Jimmy Wakely, Wally Fowler, Jack Guthrie, Tex Ritter, Merle Travis, Wesley Tuttle, Tex Williams and Cliff Stone, and this coming year will really put on the pressure. Columbia is loading up here also.

'Big One' Blues

Ever since Exclusive "made" itself a year and a half ago with Joe Liggins' "Honeydripper," which is still selling after going far beyond the 500,000 mark, each of the smallies has sweated for "that big one." Jack Riley's Cadet label almost had it last spring with Slim Gaillard's "Cement Mixer," but he lacked national distribution, and when his item scored here, the majors swept the country with versions of their own, none of which ever touched the original for qualtiy.

Now another indie, Black & White, after several years of holding grimly on, has at long last come up with a gold-mine in Jack McVea's rendition of "Open the Door, Richard." It will make the diskery, and probably also McVea. Among the other more active outfits here are Keynote and Aladdin, which jog along with their race-records; there also is Jewel, operated by ex-bandleader Ben Pollack, who kept himself going last year by grabbing off some solid sales of Boyd Raeburn orch waxings.

Though not headquartered on the Coast, Mercury and Majestic are doing more and more recording here. Former, faced with loss of its prime seller, Tony Martin, to RCA-Victor, now is trying to build up its hillbilly and western departments, realizing the potentialities of those fields.

There has been talk among the indies of inaugurating a scheme of borrowing each others' contractees, which probably would be helpful and is at least novel. However, despite many overtures, only one deal actually has been cooked up. Four Star let its platter property, Ray Herbeck band, cut four sides for University Records, with understanding Four Star can choose any talent under U label for a similar stint.

This, then, being the year of decision for the odd-labels finds them perplexed and very concerned over fact that though record sales continue to mount, by and large, the indie sales lessen proportionately. In past years the boys lulled themselves with idle chatter that as soon as they could improve the material quality of their disks, the skies would be the limit; now they find that although they very readily can, if they wish, improve the quality of their output, but that it really doesn't help.

Many of the indies here have squawked that one or more of the majors continually is trying to crowd them out of retail stores, but no charge ever has been made to stick; the complaints seem to have been merely expressions of discontent and alibis at their own inability to get product on sales shelves. Dealers aren't loathe to stock platters for which there is public demand; and the majors assuredly aren't stupid enough to violate Federal law by muscling small-time rivals out of opportunities.

Brit. Muz-Biz

Continued from page 216

of "The Green Cockatoo," a very catchy new samba, written by a local composer, Harold Geller. Indications are that composers are attempting these Latin type tunes with more and more enthusiasm—the beguine is already an established popular rhythm—and with the Continental countries once more extending a welcome, there is also the opportunity of assimilating some of the languous rhythms of southern lands.

Jukeboxes

Another welcome effect of jukeboxes would be increased sales of records, although general feeling in the record industry is, but for material and labor shortages, records would be selling in far greater numbers anyhow. As it is, sales are patchy and often sharply contrasted. The emphasis in popularity is definitely on the American record favorites, both vocalists and bands, but this I am certain, is mainly due to the inability of new talent to overcome the obstacles and develop to stardom quickly through the radio medium. Potential stars are available just as surely as in the theatre or in films, but frankly it is unlikeliy they will become topliners with ineffective and irregular radio appearances. What happens is they get popular to a degree, but fail to make the top grade. Maybe in a little while, the films as a medium will offer deserving new musical stars the chance radio at present denies them. And it cannot be too soon for publishers and writers, for their best and worthiest efforts would certainly be in quicker and keener demand by the public if introduced to them by local favorites of calibre likely to develop international popularity, such as Anne Shelton, Issy Bonn, Paula Green and the Joe Loss and Ted Heath bands. Plans are already afoot whereby recordings by some of these artists will shortly be released in the American market.

It must be remembered that the things the British music industry lacks are not lacking in America, but nevertheless there, too, you have had a drastic falling off in music sales. Just where are all the causes contributing to this sales setback it would be well nigh impossible to determine, but certainly if here in England some of the evils are curbed—which bad business may accomplish to some extent—and if at the same time, in the interests of writers and publishers alike, better treatment and co-operation in radio programs were secured, one could be reasonably confident of the downward trend being definitely checked in 1947.

BBC-Music

Continued from page 218

gigs, stage and recordings. Radio is inevitably the loser.

Tyro Spielers

Presentation too often consists of the appearance of a junior announcer without interest or knowledge of the subject, a few minutes ahead of air time, who scribbles out some mildly facetious notes on the list of items to be played. What eventuates can be readily imagined. Nor are these superior young men and women beyond voicing their contempt in their spiels. One such even went so far as to add to an announcement of a jump number that he personally "could not bear" such things. He remained unrebuked by his dept.

In defence of low fees, the BBC points to the publicity value of broadcasts. But under the present conditions, it is doubtful whether a band gains any kudos as a result of badly presented short-term engagements.

The rumpus raised by the bribery allegation is really only the booster charge to the rocket that the dance band industry can now send up if it is sufficiently united and determined. There exists at least an opportunity to force the BBC radically to alter its attitude. But although musicians are agreed on the principles involved and the need for action, petty rivalry between leaders may keep them apart. There is, moreover, a schism between the band leaders of the old school, who are entrepreneurs rather than accomplished musicians, and the younger leaders who are mainly instrumentalists of individual talent. One of the real difficulties to a satisfactory solution is the BBC's genuine shortage of funds for programs, due in part to the cost of the new longhair Third Program. This development is the brainchild of Director General Haley. Despite a vociferous welcome from press and critics, the Third remains a service with a distinct minority appeal. In fact so low a rating is it clocking that deliberate attempts appear to be being made to exaggerate the figures. A recent article in a London daily, dubbing the Third "a triumph" stated that it was pulling in more listeners than the major comedy programs on the other services. This is open to question.

Top-rating comedy shows carry listenerships of between 6,000,000 and 12,000,000 sets. The Third has yet to offer an attraction that grosses 3,000,000. It averages about 1,000,000.

Dreyfus Case

Continued from page 218

Besides, he loves to laugh. Loving to laugh brought him a series of laughmakers over the years who profited much from his patronage. Oscar Levant wasn't exactly discovered by Dreyfus, but he was mightily encouraged in the beginning days. Irving Caesar, who inherited the rich package of his father's Yiddish stories, blossomed in Dreyfus' fold. But no matter how loudly Irving bellowed when he tried out his songs on the Boss, he knew in advance he would get no super-colossals as response.

When I first played songs for Dreyfus, I saved up my 10 best. He listened attentively and then said: "Schwartz, what did you do before you started songwriting?" I told him I practised law for over four years. "Take my advice," he said, "go back and practise law." I was heartbroken. But six months later I brought him the score of "The Little Show." Wiman & Weatherly had asked me who the best publisher of show music was. There could only be one answer.

Rodgers and Hart played the score of their first "Garrick Gaieties" for the Boss. He thought it a bit too sophisticated. They got it published elsewhere. But they came back the following year and stayed back.

Why this allegiance? You'd really have to know the man to tell why. Honesty, integrity—sure he has them—but others have, too. I think the greatest songwriters of our generation sought him out because he respected talent and taste above all other qualities, and because he would move mountains to get opportunities for the boys he believed in. He's in his 70s right now. Works as hard as ever, is looking as hard as ever for the new Gershwins and Cole Porters—and you can bet that when they appear on the scene, the scene will be Max Dreyfus' office.

Top Standards of 1946

[The 25 standards with the largest radio audiences are listed below in order of the total ACI points, Dec. 27, 1945, through Dec. 26, 1946.]

Total ACI Points	No. Weeks in ACI Survey	Song Title	Publisher
11,378	32	Night and Day	Harms
10,983	35	Begin the Beguine	Harms
7,466	26	All the Things You Are	Chappell
7,102	27	Star Dust	Mills
6,704	25	Tea For Two	Harms
5,692	25	Always	Berlin
5,447	17	Embraceable You	Harms
4,836	16	Man I Love	Harms
4,203	15	Make Believe	T. B. Harms
4,164	14	On the Sunny Side of the Street	Shapiro-Bernstein
4,133	13	Great Day	Miller
4,103	15	Where or When	T. B. Harms
3,987	13	Temptation	Robbins
3,895	17	Somebody Loves Me	Harms
3,637	13	Smoke Gets In Your Eyes	T. B. Harms
3,608	13	Tico Tico	Chas. K. Harris
3,513	11	Hallelujah	Harms
2,827	18	Just One of Those Things	Harms
2,703	9	It Had To be You	Remick
2,680	9	Summertime	Chappell
2,574	10	I Got Rhythm	New World
2,534	7	Why Do I Love You?	T. B. Harms
2,453	9	Dancing In the Dark	Harms
2,436	3	Santa Claus Is Coming to Town	Feist
2,221	11	Lover	Famous

No Matter How Thin You Slice It, Moppet Disk Trade Has Gold for All

By MIKE CONNOLLY

Hollywood.

Growth of the moppet platter biz, with an unprecedented flood of the kiddie records on the market during the past holiday season, has diskery heads plotting public relations campaigns to make them best sellers year 'round. Pickin's are particularly good at Christmas, of course, but the recording guys have plans to make the public conscious that they're a good buy at any time.

Hundreds of them hit the stands during the past year, with everybody from Ingrid Bergman to Spike Jones in the act. Decca, which believes in the star system, has the corner on names, with Miss Bergman's "Pied Piper of Hamelin," Donald Crisp's "The Children's Hour," the Bing Crosby-Orson Welles "Happy Prince," Loretta Young's "The Littlest Angel," Fredric March's "The Selfish Giant," Cliff Edwards' "Pinocchio," Frank Luther's "Peter and the Wolf," "Mother Goose Songs" and others, Kenny Baker's "Babes in Toyland," Ginger Rogers' "Alice in Wonderland," Thomas Mitchell's "Treasure Island," Ronald Colman's "Christmas Carol," Walter Huston's "Rip Van Winkle," Charles Laughton's "Moby Dick" and "Mr. Pickwick's Christmas," Edna Best's "Cinderella," John Nesbitt's "Christmas Gift," Fred Waring's "Night Before Christmas," and more coming up.

On Victor, there's Jones' "Kiddies' Nutcracker Suite," Uncle Mac's "Nursery Rhymes," Paul Wing's "Five Hundred Hats of Bartholomew Cubbins" and "Unsuccessful Elf," Gudrun Thorne-Thomsen's "The Farmer's Bride" and "Sheep and the Pig," John and Lucy Allison's "Songs of the Zoo," Walt Disney's "Snow White" and "Three Little Pigs," Vaughn de Leath's "Rock-a-Bye Parade," Madge Tucker's "Singing Games," Sterling Holloway's "Peter and the Wolf," Charles Coburn's "Fun with Shakespeare," Dame May Whitty's "Rapunzel," and others.

Columbia has Uncle Bill Adams' "Jack and the Beanstalk," Gene Kelly's "Nursery Songs," "Peter Rabbit" and "The King Who Wouldn't Dance" (from "Anchors Aweigh"), Basil Rathbone's "Treasure Island," "Robin Hood," "Christmas Carol," etc.

Although the Big Three would seem to have the corner on names, Capitol, Musicraft and other indies aren't too short in that dept. Capitol's offerings, for instance, are Margaret O'Brien's "Goldilocks and the Three Bears" and "Stories for Children," Tex Ritter's "Children's Songs and Stories," Pinto Colvig's "Bozo at the Circus," Billy May's "Rusty in Orchestraville," Harold Peary's "Great Gildersleeve's Children's Stories," Fibber McGee and Molly's "Night Before Christmas," and others.

Musicraft has Eddie Cantor's "Tweedle Dee and Tweedle Dum," Earl Rogers' "Hansel and Gretel," "Mother Goose Songs," and "Happy Times Tunes," Crane Calder's "Robin Hood," the Artie Shaw-Harry Von Zell "Pied Piper of Hamelin," and Milton Cross' "Peter and the Wolf," "Sorcerer's Apprentice," "Peer Gynt" and "Nutcracker Suite."

Manor has Lew Lehr's "Fairy Tales, Signature has Victor Jory's "Story of Celeste," Gold Seal has the Quiz Kids in their radio routine of questions and answers, National has David Kurlan's "Luke, the Singing Duck," Little Folks Favorites has disks by Bebe Daniels, Gene Raymond, Virginia Payne ("Ma Perkins"), and Betty Jaynes and Bill Roberts, Keynote has Howard Da Sylva's "Alice in Wonderland," Cosmo has Jory's "Tubby the Tuba," Majestic has Lew Ayres' "Bible Stories for Children," and Belda has Marvin Miller's "Lonesome Octopus."

Others Ride Gravy Train

Other companies on the moppet train are Black and White, Bel-Tone, Sonora, Harmonia, Master Phonostory, Simmel - Messervey, Graphic and Sacred. Artists include Jerry Marlowe, Lon Clark, Eddie Brown, Mary McConnell, Earle Ross, Paul Creston, Keener Hays, Martha Blair Fox, El Colmans and Christine Harrison. Importance placed by recording execs in the kid stuff is underlined by the fact that many of the labels mentioned are usually associated with other musical fields. Black and White, for example, is a jazz outfit; still they have kid items in their catalog.

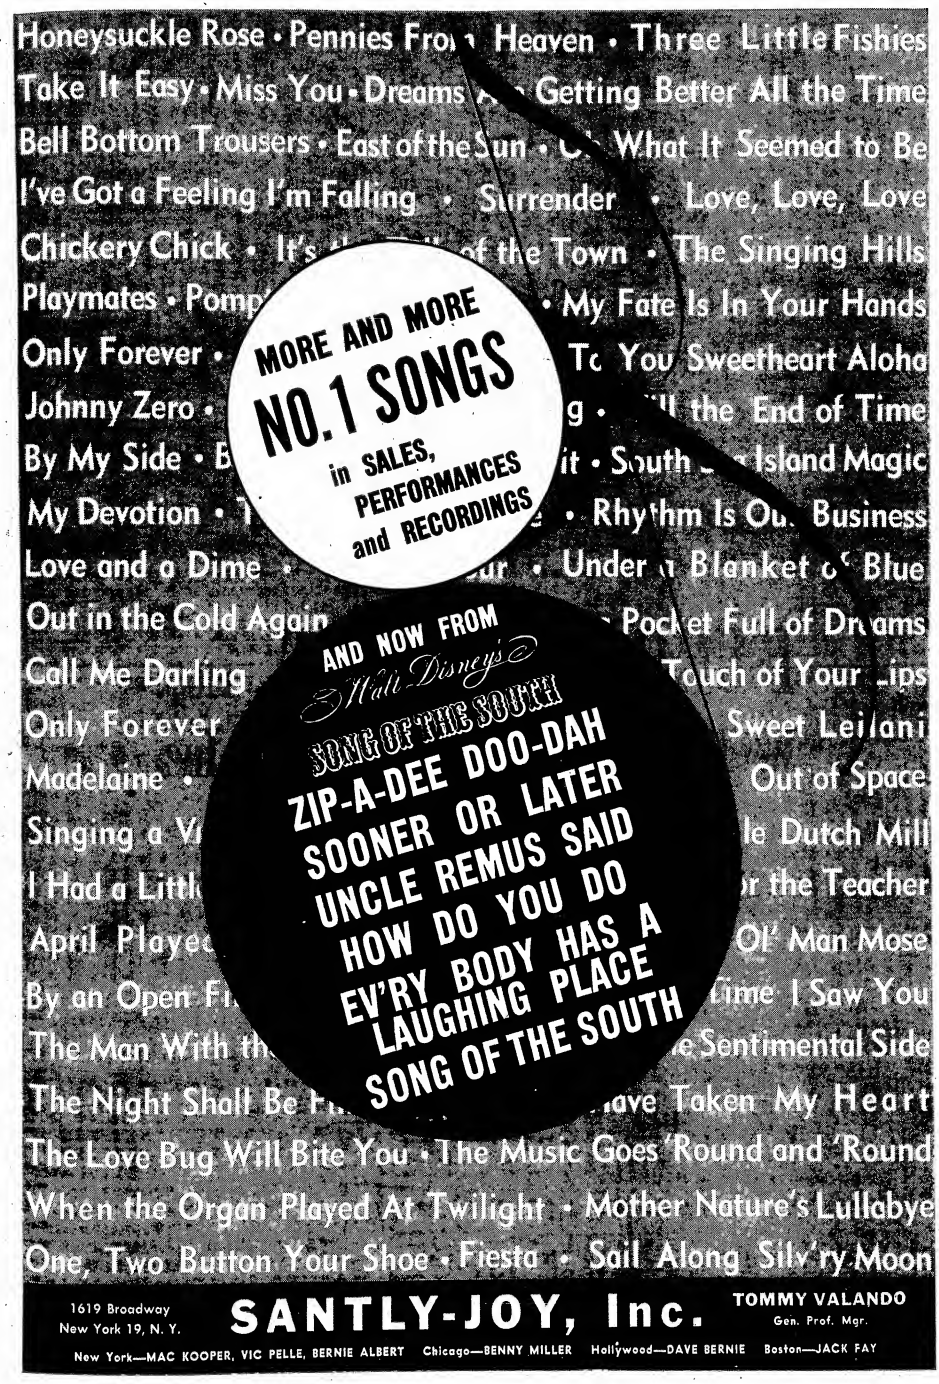
Odd angle proved by buyers during the past season is that platters don't necessarily have to have a name star to be best sellers. Capitol's "Bozo" and "Rusty" albums sold as well in many stores as those by names, with kids going for the bright colors and unusual sound effects (calliope in "Bozo," etc.).

Records made from plastics are big factors, too, with those platters made of the non-breakable material enjoying big sales. Thing that surprised most retailers this time, however, was the intelligent approach to child psychology evidence by platteries in the scope of material furnished.

Platteries also surprised the storekeepers by handing out some nifty sales promotion deals—a notable one being one outfit's plug for its product that stressed how modern parents can escape the drudgery of reading stories over and over again to kids, who love to hear the same old yarns time and again, even though they know the endings by heart. Records are the answer, according to the broadsides from the recorder.

Phonograph sales people like the records too — because the more machines are broken by kids, the more new ones will have to be bought.

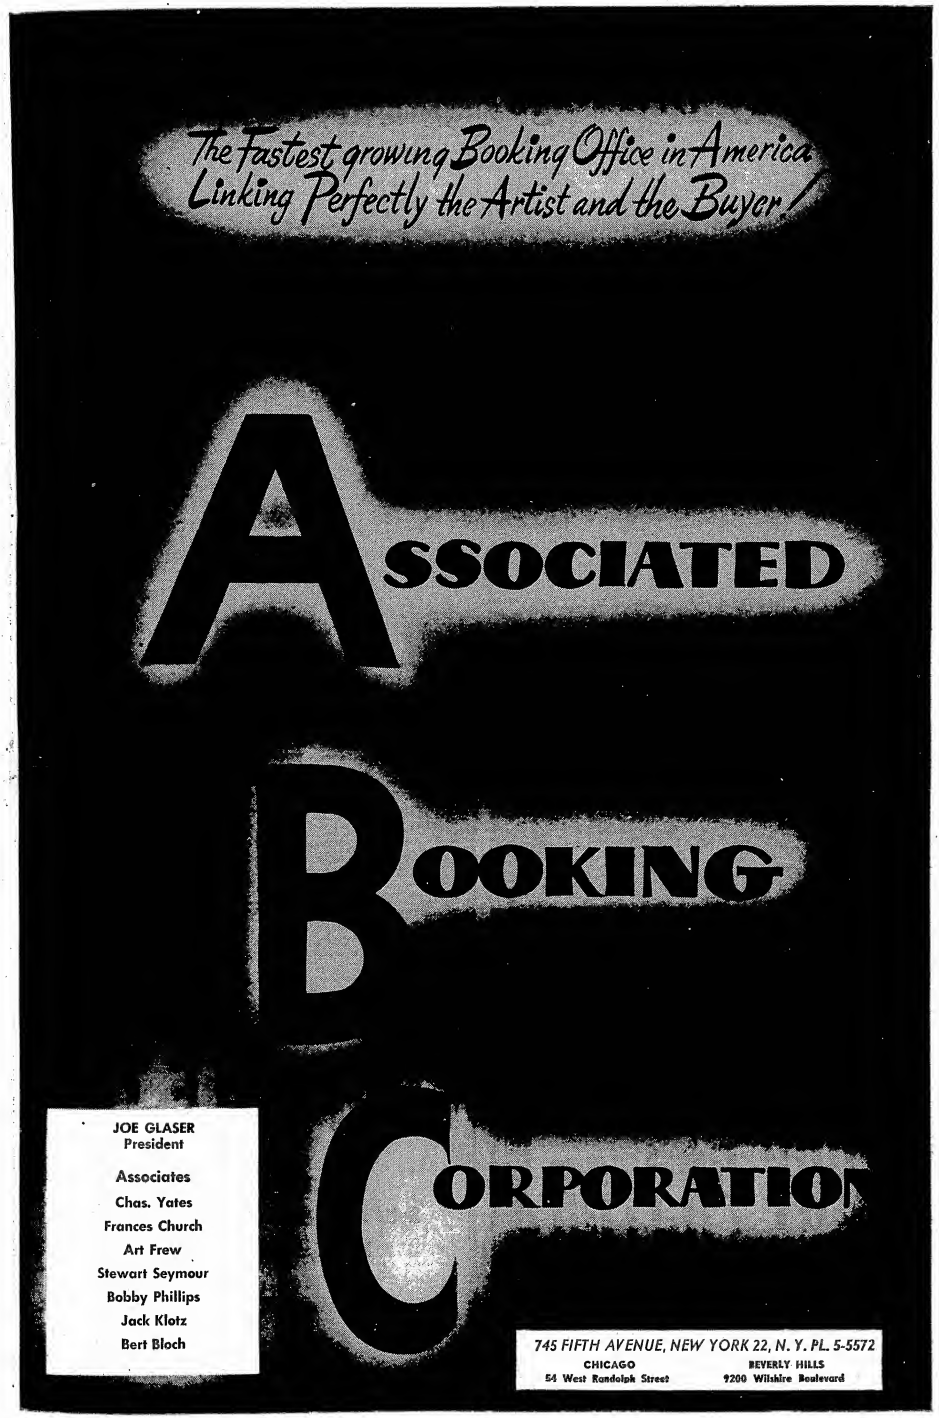
The field, incidentally, if it keeps going like it is, is a wide open one for any writers with ideas. That there's a dearth of material is proven by duplications on various labels. Keynote and Decca both have "Alice in Wonderland," Columbia and Decca have "Treasure Island," Columbia and Musicraft have "Robin Hood," Columbia and Decca have "Christmas Carol," Columbia, Capitol and Musicraft have "Hansel and Gretel," Decca and Musicraft have "Pied Piper of Hamelin," Decca and Musicraft have "Mother Goose," and Decca, Musicraft and Victor have "Peter and the Wolf."



Honeysuckle Rose • Pennies From Heaven • Three Little Fishies
Take It Easy • Miss You • Dreams • Getting Better All the Time
Bell Bottom Trousers • East of the Sun • What It Seemed to Be
I've Got a Feeling I'm Falling • Surrender • Love, Love, Love
Chickery Chick • It's • of the Town • The Singing Hills
Playmates • Pomp • My Fate Is In Your Hands
Only Forever • To You Sweetheart Aloha
Johnny Zero • g • the End of Time
By My Side • B it • South Island Magic
My Devotion • • Rhythm Is Our Business
Love and a Dime • ur • Under a Blanket of Blue
Out in the Cold Again Pocket Full of Dreams
Call Me Darling Touch of Your Lips
Only Forever Sweet Leilani
Madelaine • Out of Space
Singing a V le Dutch Mill
I Had a Littl r the Teacher
April Playe Ol' Man Mose
By an Open F Time I Saw You
The Man With th e Sentimental Side
The Night Shall Be F ave Taken My Heart
The Love Bug Will Bite You • The Music Goes 'Round and 'Round
When the Organ Played At Twilight • Mother Nature's Lullabye
One, Two Button Your Shoe • Fiesta • Sail Along Silv'ry Moon
MORE AND MORE
NO. 1 SONGS
in SALES, PERFORMANCES and RECORDINGS
AND NOW FROM
Walt Disney's
SONG OF THE SOUTH
ZIP-A-DEE DOO-DAH
SOONER OR LATER
UNCLE REMUS SAID
HOW DO YOU DO
EV'RY BODY HAS A LAUGHING PLACE
SONG OF THE SOUTH
1619 Broadway
New York 19, N. Y.
SANTLY-JOY, Inc.
TOMMY VALANDO
Gen. Prof. Mgr.
New York—MAC KOOPER, VIC PELLE, BERNIE ALBERT Chicago—BENNY MILLER Hollywood—DAVE BERNIE Boston—JACK FAY

DECCA RECORDS, INC.

WORLD BROADCASTING SYSTEM Inc.



The Fastest growing Booking Office in America
Linking Perfectly the Artist and the Buyer!
ASSOCIATED BOOKING CORPORATION
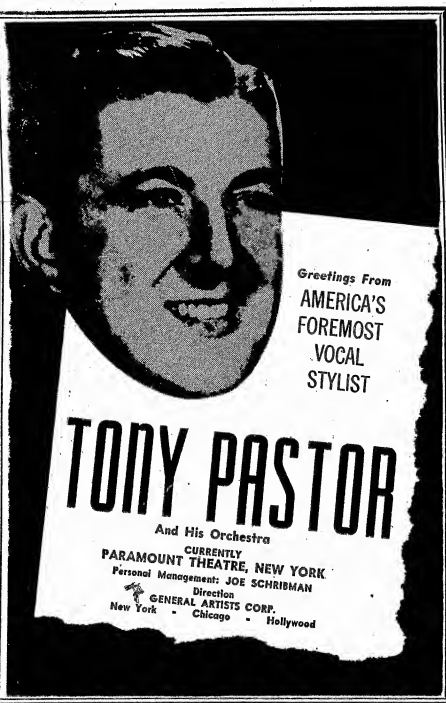
JOE GLASER
President
Associates
Chas. Yates
Frances Church
Art Frew
Stewart Seymour
Bobby Phillips
Jack Klotz
Bert Bloch
745 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 22, N. Y. PL. 5-5572
CHICAGO
54 West Randolph Street
BEVERLY HILLS
9200 Wilshire Boulevard

Holiday Greetings

Johnny Mercer



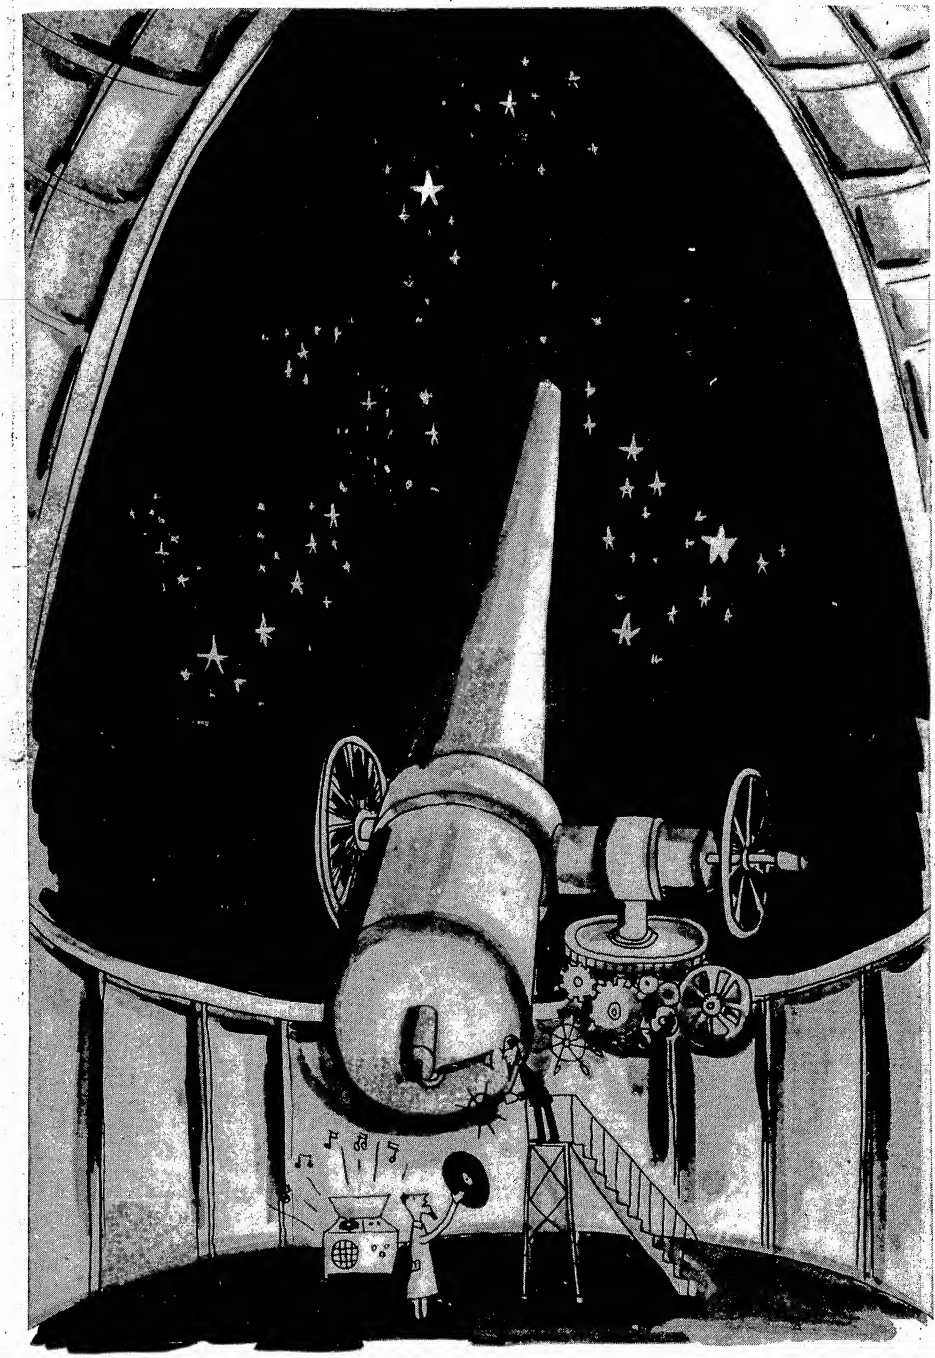
KING COLE TRIO

ON THE AIR
WILDROOT CREAM OIL
5:45 P.M., EST — EVERY SATURDAY
N.B.C., COAST TO COAST

Exclusive CAPITOL RECORDS

Personal Management
CARLOS GASTEL

GENERAL ARTISTS CORP.



"Seems like us astronomers see the stars nowadays on COLUMBIA RECORDS"

LOUANNE HOGAN
SONNY BURKE
ARTIE SHAW
EDDIE CANTOR
DIZZY GILLESPIE
PHIL BRITO
WALTER GROSS
GORDON MacRAE
MIGUELITO VALDES
RILEY SHEPARD
SLAM STEWART
TEDDY WALTERS
DUKE ELLINGTON
HARRY "The Hipster" GIBSON
TEDDY WILSON
KITTY KALLEN
SARAH VAUGHAN
GEORGIE AULD
ORRIN TUCKER
MEL TORMÉ and HIS MEL-TONES
DAVE DENNEY
AN OPEN LETTER TO Musicraft RECORD BUYERS
There has been a good deal of exciting talk in the trade in recent months about the progress of Musicraft Records, much of it being generously extravagant and unfounded. We would like to check off with you some of the facts—and ignore the fiction.
√ It is true that we have new top management, new financial and technical resources!
√ It is true that we now operate our own three fully integrated plants!
√ It is true that we are supporting Musicraft Records with an extensive consumer advertising program!
√ It is true that many internationally known artists now record for the Musicraft label!
√ It is true that Musicraft has revised its sales policies to conform with those of the acknowledged leaders in the industry.
√ It is true that Musicraft's classical catalog—matched by only two other companies—is being and will continue to be enlarged!
In short, we are determined to make secure for Musicraft a top place in the phonograph record industry. We have the resources, the facilities and the imagination—plus the will to do it! We are not making any promises—we are just asking that from now on you keep your eyes on Musicraft!
Musicraft Records Inc.
245 East 23rd Street • New York City
Musicraft RECORDS
New York — Hollywood

The Poet of the Piano

Carmen Cavallaro

AND HIS ORCHESTRA

JUST CONCLUDED
MARK HOPKINS HOTEL
SAN FRANCISCO

Currently
ON TOUR
HEADING EAST

ON THE AIR 2nd YEAR FOR SHEAFFER PEN
N.B.C.—COAST TO COAST SUNDAYS

Opening Feb. 6th
BILTMORE HOTEL, N. Y.
Later in the Season
N. Y. PARAMOUNT

CURRENT WARNER BROS. RELEASE
"THE TIME, THE PLACE, AND THE GIRL"

DECCA RECORDS

EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT MUSIC CORPORATION OF AMERICA

Season's Greetings

WITH SINCEREST WISHES

FOR

A Happy New Year

Jack Bregman

Lou Vocco

Chester Conn

BREGMAN, VOCCO and CONN, Inc. TRIANGLE MUSIC CORP.

NEW YORK • CHICAGO • HOLLYWOOD

Artistry in Rhythm

HITS THE TOP

Stan

KENTON

AND HIS ORCHESTRA

WITH

JUNE CHRISTY

Recording Exclusively

CAPITOL RECORDS

"ARTISTRY IN RHYTHM"

ALBUM

Personal Management

CARLOS GASTEL

GENERAL ARTISTS CORP.

MAKING MUSIC MELLOW

MEL TORME

MAKING RECORDS FOR

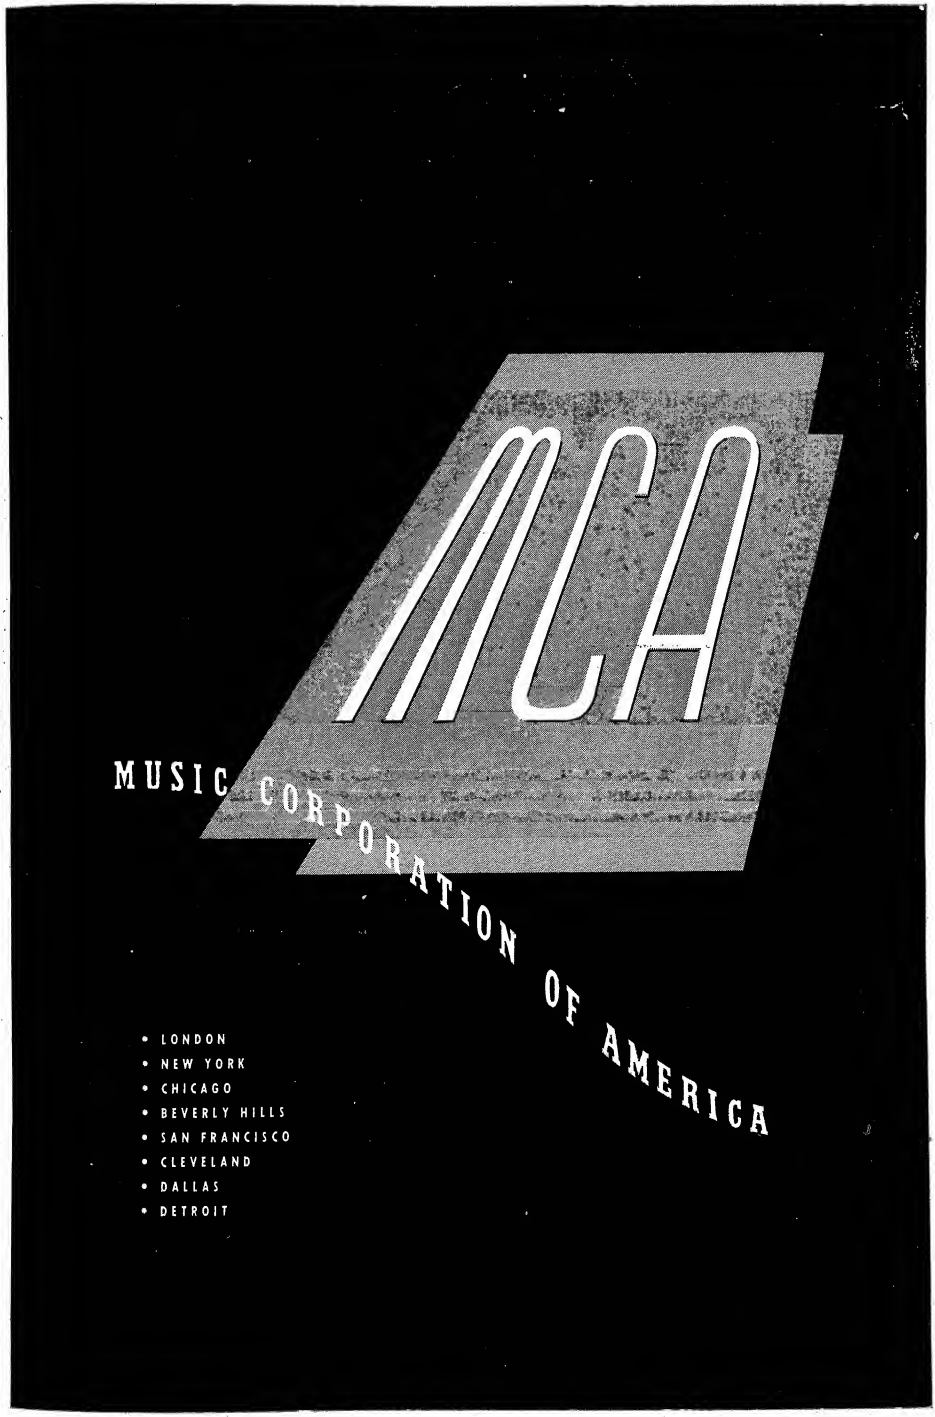
MUSICRAFT

Opening COPACABANA, New York, May 5

Personal Management

CARLOS GASTEL

8745 Sunset Blvd., Hollywood



MCA
MUSIC CORPORATION OF AMERICA
• LONDON
• NEW YORK
• CHICAGO
• BEVERLY HILLS
• SAN FRANCISCO
• CLEVELAND
• DALLAS
• DETROIT

IT'S SMOOTH

IT'S

GEORGE OLSEN

and

HIS MUSIC

MAJESTIC RECORDS

And of Course MCA

Starting the New Year—
With the New Hits!

from
REMICK MUSIC CORP.
Featured in the Warner Bros. Picture
"THE TIME, THE PLACE AND THE GIRL"
A GAL IN CALICO
•
THROUGH A THOUSAND DREAMS
•
JOHNNY WHITE
Prof. Mgr

from
HARMS, INC.
The Captivating New Song
LOVE IS A RANDOM THING
•
BEN BORNSTEIN
Prof. Mgr

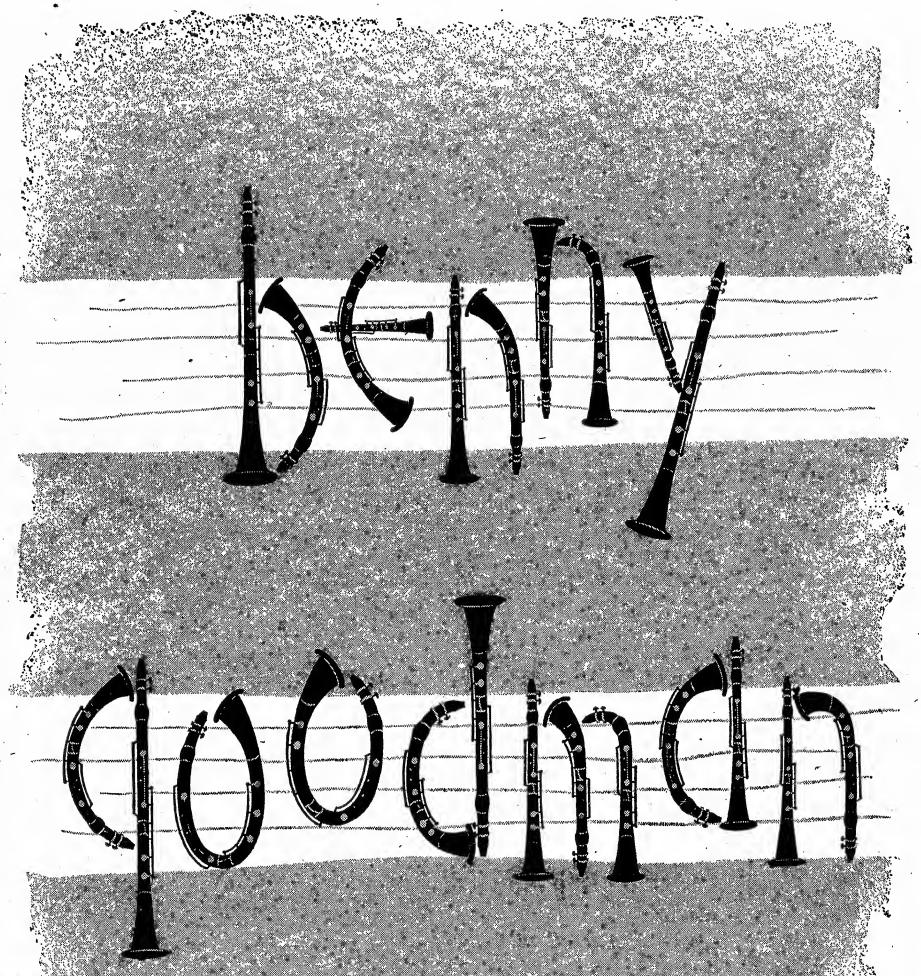
from
M. WITMARK & SONS
Featured in the Warner Bros. Picture
"THE TIME, THE PLACE AND THE GIRL"
OH, BUT I DO
•
A RAINY NIGHT IN RIO
•
NORMAN FOLEY
Prof. Mgr

and these standard Gershwin favorites
from
NEW WORLD MUSIC CORP.
LOVE IS SWEEPING THE COUNTRY
•
MINE
•
MOSE GUMBLE, Director of Standard Exploitation

from
ADVANCED MUSIC CORP.
The New Sunny Skylar Ballad
TOO MANY TIMES
•
BEN BLOOM
Prof. Mgr

MUSIC PUBLISHERS HOLDING CORP.

RCA Bldg.—Rockefeller Center
New York 20, N. Y.



N. B. C. Mobilgas Program—Mondays 9:30-10:00 P. M. E. S. T.

Columbia Records

Personal Management
MARK HANNA

SOUTHERN MUSIC PUBLISHING CO., Inc.

PEER INTERNATIONAL CORP.

MELODY LANE PUBLICATIONS, Inc.

CHARLES K. HARRIS MUSIC PUBLISHING CO., Inc.

LA SALLE MUSIC PUBLISHERS, Inc.

Offices Located at

NEW YORK	TORONTO	LONDON	MADRID	RIO DE JANEIRO
CHICAGO	MONTREAL	PARIS	BARCELONA	BUENOS AIRES
HOLLYWOOD	MEXICO CITY	STOCKHOLM	MELBOURNE	SANTIAGO
DENVER	HAVANA	AMSTERDAM	SAO PAULO	BOGOTA

RALPH S. PEER
President

"THE GOLDEN TOUCH"

Frankie CARLE

HIS PIANO AND HIS ORCHESTRA

Direction—

GAC GENERAL ARTISTS CORPORATION

THOMAS G. ROCKWELL, President

NEW YORK • CHICAGO • HOLLYWOOD • CINCINNATI • LONDON

JOHN SEBASTIAN

HARMONICA VIRTUOSO

FEBRUARY RELEASE

VICTOR ALBUM NO. P 166

"HARMONICA CLASSICS"

With Russ Case and His Orchestra

Management: MCA ARTISTS LTD. AGENCY

THE SINGING SENSATION OF 1946

PEGGY LEE

CURRENTLY FEATURED

BING CROSBY-PHILCO

RADIO SHOW

ABC—COAST TO COAST

Recording for

CAPITOL RECORDS

Personal Management CARLOS GASTEL

DUKE ELLINGTON

Season's Greetings

JULIAN T. ABELES

745 Fifth Avenue, New York

Chappell & Co., Inc.

T. B. Harms Company

Crawford Music Corp.

Williamson Music, Inc.

Gershwin Publishing Corporation

When Looking for GREAT STANDARD SONGS
Look To MILLS MUSIC

Featured in Top-Budget Film Productions

From Paramount's "The Perfect Marriage"
STAR DUST

From 20th Century-Fox's "Margie"
MARGIE

From M-G-M's "The Secret Heart"
I Can't Give You Anything But Love

From the Chas. R. Rogers Production—United Artists Release "The Fabulous Dorseys"
I'm Gettin' Sentimental Over You

From Columbia's "The Jolson Story"
Rock-a-Bye Your Baby With a Dixie Melody

From 20th Century-Fox's Forthcoming Picture "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now"
Goodbye, My Lady Love
What's the Use of Dreaming

From Columbia's "Singing in the Corn"
Ma, He's Making Eyes at Me!

Featured on Outstanding New Records

Tex Beneke (Victor No. 20-2016) • Dick Haymes (Decca No. 23750)
STAR DUST

20 New Recordings—On All Labels and Transcriptions
MARGIE

Woody Herman's Columbia Record No. 37197
Stars Fell On Alabama
Backed With
Sidewalks of Cuba

Bing Crosby and Russ Morgan on Decca No. 23745
Does Your Heart Beat for Me?

Bing Crosby (Decca No. 23655) • Frank Sinatra (Columbia)
Sweet Lorraine

Bing Crosby (Decca No. 18866) • Three Suns (Majestic No. 1042) Perry Como (Victor No. 20-1917)
Girl of My Dreams

National Record's New Discovery—Jack Carroll on No. 9022
Oh Gee, Oh Gosh, Oh Golly, I'm in Love

To Mention a Partial Listing from the GREAT CATALOG OF MILLS—Immortal Songs the World Is Forever Singing — By the Country's Greatest Songwriters

THE SHEIK OF ARABY
MARY LOU
AIN'T MISBEHAVIN'
SOPHISTICATED LADY
HANDS ACROSS THE TABLE
IT MUST BE TRUE
TONIGHT YOU BELONG TO ME

I SURRENDER DEAR
WHEN YOU'RE SMILING
LET A SMILE BE YOUR UMBRELLA
CARRY ME BACK TO THE LONE PRAIRIE
WHO'S SORRY NOW?
NOBODY'S SWEETHEART
DON'T WORRY 'BOUT ME

HOME
DINAH
JEALOUS
BUGLE CALL RAG
FOR ME AND MY GAL
PAVANNE
MOONGLOW

STORMY WEATHER
DIZZY FINGERS
KITTEN ON THE KEYS
WHEN IT'S SLEEPY TIME DOWN SOUTH
DIGA DIGA DOO
MY HONEY'S LOVIN' ARMS

For All the Songs to Fit All the Occasions

MILLS MUSIC, Inc. JACK MILLS, Pres. IRVING MILLS, Vice-Pres. 1619 Broadway, New York 19, N.Y.

"This, a Jerome Kern tribute, is the best effort yet released by Musicraft. Outfit is to be congratulated for excellent quality of waxing, Walter Gross' work and the timeliness of releases, on vinolyte, of the late Kern's best works. Gross, an excellent pianist, adds, if that's possible, to the beauty of the Kern compositions with his clean-cut playing. It's pure nostalgia from "Showboat," "Very Warm for May," "Sunny," "Roberta," and "Sweet Adeline." Not only Gross, but the sidesmen, from the harps and fiddles to the rhythm and brass, play beautifully! Highly recommended! Such piano!"

—June 5th, BARRY GRAY, 'Variety'.

BING CROSBY AND WALTER GROSS LEAD THE ALBUM LIST

"Walter Gross, the radio and recording pianist, with assistance from Bob Haggart, bass, and Bunny Shawker, drums, runs through 8 of the great tunes of the recently dead Vincent Youmans with pace and skill.

"More Than You Know," "Tea for Two," "I Know That You Know," "Through the Years," "Sometimes I'm Happy," "Without a Song," "Time on My Hands," "Orchards in the Moonlight."

"A collection well chosen and well played."
—DOUBLEDAY REVIEW OF RECORDED MUSIC (Sept.)

WALTER GROSS

CURRENTLY APPEARING AT THE CAPITOL THEATRE WITH TOMMY DORSEY AS SOLOIST PLAYING "RHAPSODY IN BLUE"

MUSICAL DIRECTOR FOR MUSICRAFT RECORDS
N-6 Jerome Kern Album
N-8 Vincent Youman's Album

Every Saturday — "Piano Playhouse" ABC Network — 11.30 A.M.

Management—WILLIAM MORRIS AGENCY

Songs Through The Years

by

CHARLES TOBIAS

1927 Me Too (Ho-Ho-Ha-Ha)
Just Another Day Wasted Away

1928 On a Dew Dew Dewy Day
Get Out and Get Under the Moon

1929 Down Among the Sugar Cane
Miss You

1930 When Your Hair Has Turned to Silver
Somewhere in Old Wyoming

1931 You'll Be Mine in Apple Blossom Time
Making the Best of Each Day

1932 Somebody Loves You
Sing a Little Low Down Tune

1933 In the Valley of the Moon
Two Tickets to Georgia

1934 Goodnight Little Girl of My Dreams
Throw Another Log on the Fire

1935 Tiny Little Finger Prints
Flowers for Madame
Let's Swing It

1936 The Broken Record
Wake Up and Sing

1937 Gee But You're Swell
I'll Bet You Tell That to All the Girls

1938 Little Lady Make Believe
Is That the Way to Treat a Sweetheart?

1939 Comes Love
Little Curly Hair in a High Chair

1940 Rose O'Day
Trade Winds

1941 Miss You
I Came Here to Talk for Joe

1942 Don't Sit Under the Apple Tree
We Did It Before and We Can Do It Again

1943 Wait for Me Mary
You're Irish and You're Beautiful
I Wish That I Could Hide Inside This Letter

1944 Just a Prayer Away
Time Waits for No One
Don't Sweetheart Me

1945 For the First Time
As Long as I Live
Tomorrow Is Forever

1946 No Can Do
Coax Me a Little Bit and now in 1947

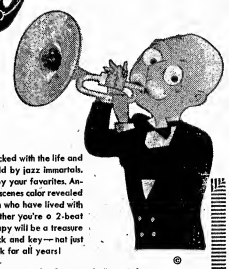
THE NATION'S NO. 1 SONG

THE OLD LAMPLIGHTER

Jazz Event of the Year!

Esquire's 1947 Jazz Book



● Here are pages packed with the life and beat of jazz itself as told by jazz immortals. Personal reminiscences by your favorites. Anecdotes and behind-the-scenes color revealed for the first time by men who have lived with jazz all their lives. Whether you're a 2-beat or a 4-beat fan, your copy will be a treasure worth keeping under lock and key—not just a year book, but a book for all years!

A book about jazz written by the men who know it best:

Benny Goodman	Nat "King" Cole
Louis Armstrong	The Dorseys
Count Basie	Jack Bland
Leonard Bernstein	Max Kaminsky
Frank Sinatra	Arnold Gingrich
Gene Krupa	Rex Stewart
Jimmy Durante	Art Hodes
Johnny Mercer	Johnny O'Connor
Jimmy Lunceford	Bob Sylvester
Jess Stacy	Paul Dudley
Dave Tough	Gilbert McKean

★ ★ ★

Extra features: A complete original song written especially for the 1947 Esquire Jazzbook; music by Joe Bushkin, lyrics by Johnnie De Vries. (This is being recorded by Benny Goodman and B. G. tokes the vocal himself.)

Announcement of 1947 Esquire Jazz Awards.

$1.00 On sale at your Newsstand, Bookstore, Department Store and Music Store . . . beginning January 10.

(If your dealer is sold out clip this coupon and order from Esquire direct)

ESQUIRE, Inc. P. O. BOX 1719 CHICAGO 11, ILLINOIS

Please send me ---------- copies of the 1947 Esquire Jazzbook at $1 each. I enclose $---------- in full payment. (No stamps, please.) For Canadian and Foreign orders, send 25c per book additional.

NAME----------

ADDRESS----------

CITY----------ZONE------STATE------ V

SEASON'S GREETINGS

MEYER DAVIS

●

Meyer Davis' Music Orchestras

●

MEYER DAVIS THEATRICAL ATTRACTIONS

●

Offices:
NEW YORK
119 West 57th Street

●

PHILADELPHIA
The Bellevue Stratford

●

WASHINGTON
719 13th Street, N. W.

CHICAGO'S WONDER BALLROOMS

ARAGON AND TRIANON

●

Where the Spotlight of Fame Always Shines on the Nation's Greatest Dance Bands.

●

Extend Best Wishes to

VARIETY

Greetings to Variety

On Its 41st Anniversary

Tech-Bass

Material Writers and Arrangers

150 W. 49th St.
New York 19, N.Y.
LA 4-9457

PHILIP J. LANG

ORCHESTRATOR

"Annie Get Your Gun"
"Billion Dollar Baby"

Educational Music • Radio • Pictures

3 Great Songs by CASE KUSBY Each—A Winner

NITE-CAP
I'M GLAD I TOOK THE OMNIBUS!
GUST OF WIND

"Three Tunes Are Listed In Tune-Dex"

DYNAMIC MUSIC CO.
1536 No. Western Ave
Hollywood 27, Calif.

CAB CALLOWAY

And His Orchestra

CURRENTLY

PANTHER ROOM

SHERMAN HOTEL

CHICAGO

Personal Management
WM. H. MITTLER
1619 Broadway
New York 19, N. Y.

Best Wishes for the New Year

Salabert, Inc.

The Original Publishers of

Many European Successes, Including

MY MAN	VALENTINE
VALENCIA	VIOLETERA
SYMPHONY	SONATA

THERE'S NO BREEZE

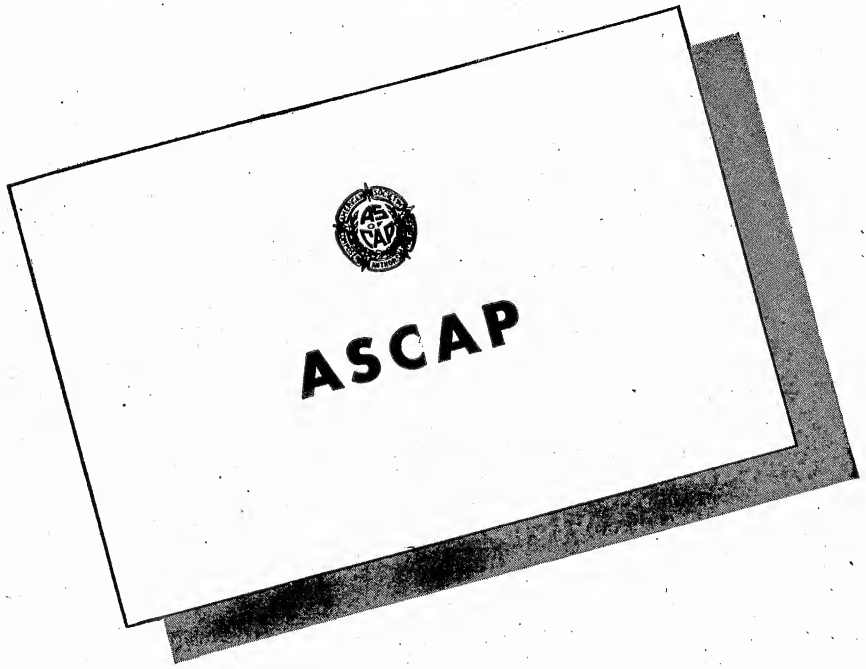
And Many Others

Acknowledges With Thanks the

Co-operation of Their American Friends

SALABERT, Inc.

1 East 57th Street, New York PL. 8-0957



"the finest music that money can buy"

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers numbers among its membership the top writers, composers and publishers in all fields of music. For more than thirty-two years the repertoire which the Society represents has grown. This catalog truly reflects a comprehensive musical history of America. Through affiliation with performing right societies throughout the world, ASCAP also provides music, both contemporary and traditional, of leading creators of other nations.

The wise advertiser recognizes this fact, and that is why the broadcaster wants an ASCAP license to perform this tremendous catalog!

The wise hotel men of the country, the leading American symphony orchestras, the motion picture theatre and tavern owners also recognize this!

ASCAP's repertoire is a necessity in all fields of entertainment. It is the finest music that money can buy!

American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers

30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York 20, N. Y.

YOU'RE THE ONLY
VARIETY
FOR US!
'Cause WE ARE BEGINNING
ANOTHER YEAR AT THE COCOANUT GROVE
AMBASSADOR HOTEL, LOS ANGELES
(OUR SIXTH)
'Cause WE ARE BEGINNING
ANOTHER YEAR ON THE JACK CARSON SHOW
(OUR FOURTH)
AND STILL RECORDING FOR VICTOR
★
FREDDY MARTIN
AND HIS ORCHESTRA

Sincere good wishes to
VARIETY
on its 41st Anniversary

COUNT
BASIE
and his orchestra
Personal Management
MILTON EBBINS
Exclusive Direction
WILLIAM MORRIS AGENCY, INC.

FOR ALL THE NICE THINGS THAT HAPPENED TO US

THANKS

EDDY HOWARD

AND HIS ORCHESTRA

MAJESTIC RECORDS—OF COURSE!

BMI Pin Up SHEET

Hit Tunes for January
(On Records)

ANOTHER NIGHT LIKE THIS (Marks)
Dick Haymes—Dec. 23731 • Desi Arnaz—Vic. 20-2052 • Hal Derwin—Cap. 336
Herb Kern-Lloyd Sloop—Tempo 984 • Hal Winters-Jose Morand—Apollo 1024
Don Alfredo—Pan-Amer 076 • Claude Thornhill—Col. *

BEST MAN, THE (Vanguard)
Les Brown—Col. 37066 • King Cole Trio—Cap. 304 • Beme Vincent—Dec. 23749
Sunny Skylar—Mercury 5084

COFFEE SONG, THE (Valiant)
Louis Prima—Maj. 7191 • King Sisters—Vic. 20-1943 • Frank Sinatra—Col. 37089
Andrews Sisters—Dec. 23740 • Dorothy Claire—Enterprise 227

EV'RYBODY LOVES MY BABY, MY BABY (Goode)
Tex Beneke—Vic. 20-1914 • Pied Pipers—Cap. 279 • Three Suns—Maj 7180
Gene Krupa—Col 37078

(I LOVE YOU) FOR SENTIMENTAL REASONS (Duchess)
Eddy Howard—Maj. 1071 • Charlie Spivak—Vic. 20-1981 • Ella Fitzgerald—Dec. 23670
Dinah Shore—Col. 37188 • King Cole Trio—Cap. 304 • Art Kassel—Vogue 781
Fran Warren—Cosmo 514 • Brown Dots—Manor 1041 • Skip Strahl—Emerald 106

HOLD ME, HOLD ME, HOLD ME (Stevens)
Vaughn Monroe—Vic. 20-2015 • Harry Cool—Sig. 15038 • Russ Morgan—Dec. 18922
Orrin Tucker—Musicraft 15096 • Jimmie Palmer—Arvid 7050

I GUESS I'LL GET THE PAPERS AND GO HOME (Campbell-Porgie)
Mills Brothers—Dec 23638 • Hal Derwin—Cap 283 • Les Brown—Col. 27066
Herbie Fields—Vic. 20-1962 • Hal McIntyre—Cosmo 507 • Ray Herbeck—Four Star 1132
Shep Fields—Vogue 764 • Tommy Ryan—Famous 7004

I'LL NEVER LOVE AGAIN (La Borrachita) (Peer)
Dinah Shore-Xavier Cugat—Col 37090 • Andy Russell—Cap. 20035 • Desi Arnaz—Vic. 20-2020
Tito Guizar—Mercury 5006

IT'S ALL OVER NOW (BMI)
Peggy Lee—Cap. 292 • Charlie Spivak—Vic. 20-1981 • Russ Morgan—Dec. 18922
Three Suns—Maj. 7205 • Orrin Tucker—Musicraft 15091 • Vera Massey—Diamond 2039
Frankie Carle—Col. 37146 • Connie Haines—Mercury 3034 • Harry Cool—Sig.*
Artie Wayne—Bel-Tone* • Herb Kern—Tempo* • Jack McLean—Coast 8002
Jimmy Palmer—Arvid 7050

MANAGUA, NICARAGUA (Encore)
Freddy Martin—Vic. 20-2026 • Guy Lombardo—Dec. 23782 • Kay Kyser—Col. 37214
Max Gordon Trio—Sonora 3032

MI VIDA (Marks)
Dick Haymes—Dec. 23731 • Desi Arnaz—Vic. 20-2052 • Jack McLean—Coast 8005
Herb Kern-Lloyd Sloop—Tempo 984 • Pat Friday—Enterprise 243
Don Alfredo—Pan-Amer. 076

RICKETY RICKSHAW MAN, THE (Peer)
Eddy Howard—Maj. 7192 • Two Ton Baker—Mercury 3047

ISN'T THIS BETTER THAN WALKIN' IN THE RAIN (Republic)
Ray Anthony—Sonora 3037 • Buddy Clark—Col.*

WHAT MORE CAN I ASK FOR? (London)
Guy Lombardo—Decca 23782 • Jack McLean—Coast 8003

*Soon to be released

BMI
BROADCAST MUSIC, INC.
580 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK 19, N. Y.
New York • Chicago • Hollywood

INFLATION

1947—Novelty—1947

Zeke Manners—RCA Victor Record No. 20-2013
Moore Sisters—Sonora Record No. H7033
and

TOO TIRED TO CARE

The Ballad to Beat the Blues

Elton Britt—RCA Victor Record No. 20-2027

BOB MILLER, INC.
1619 Broadway, New York

BMI Muscles In On ASCAP in Staging D.C. Press Club Affair

Washington.

This year Broadcast Music, Inc., moved in under the nose of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and arranged to produce the show for the National Press Club's annual dinner to President Truman Jan. 11. It marks the first time that BMI has entered the local good will circuit whereby big time organizations supply shows for the various midwinter affairs to the President.

ASCAP has generally worked with the Press Club and, it is understood, will take care of next year's show. Press Club officials figure they will be sitting pretty on their entertainment problem if they can have BMI and ASCAP supply the show on alternate years.

Thus far M. E. (Tommy) Tompkins of BMI has signed Ed Gardner and Dorothy Kirsten to headline the Press Club entertainment with Ben Grauer as emcee. Ben Beri, juggler, is also on the bill and two or three more acts remain to be closed as does a name band. Col. Ed Kirby is in charge of the entertainment for the Press Club.

In addition to BMI and ASCAP the networks are active in supplying talent for the shows. Formerly NBC and CBS alternated in providing the show for the annual White House Correspondents dinner. After the Radio Correspondents Assn. launched its own dinner to the President, a couple of years ago, the webs pulled out of the White House affairs. Now all four nets supply talent for the Radio Correspondents party, with one of the quartet handling arrangements.

Meanwhile, last year, the White House Correspondents, suddenly left high and dry by the withdrawal of the webs, turned to the William Morris Agency for succor. Agency produced a bang-up show which helped to make it one of the biggest dinners the White House Correspondents had ever put on.

J. DORSEY FINALLY SIGNS M-G DISKER

Jimmy Dorsey and M-G-M records finally got together last week and ironed out details of a contract that ties Dorsey's band to the Metro subsid, the newest recording company, for 18 months, with options. Deal was signed by Dorsey Thursday (2).

Dorsey will cut his first sides in New York either today (Wednesday) or tomorrow. Ziggy Elman's new band, incidentally, also made its first recordings for the same company last week in New York at Harry Smith's studio at Steinway Hall.

Norman Foley Leaves WB for Miller Music

After 15 years with Warner Bros.' music publishing firms, Norman Foley leaves that grouping within the next fortnight to take over as general professional manager of Miller Music, part of the Robbins combine. He moves in Feb. 1, meanwhile taking a brief vacation in Florida. He displaces Lon Mooney, whose future is at the moment not revealed.

Foley, professional manager of the WB Witmark catalog since 1939, has never worked for any other outfit in the music business. With Miller he has a term contract.

Abe Olman to Coast

Hollywood.

Abe Olman arrives tomorrow (8) from New York for a five-day stay to discuss tunes from Metro productions about to be released. Robbins-Feist-Miller general manager will discuss what properties will be included in catalog of new Harry Warren Music Co. in which Metro subsid spent at least $50,000 setting up.

Reported seven Warren songs plus Warren score for "Ah Wilderness" will be surrendered to new outfit.

1947—HERE WE COME

CHOO CHOO CH'BOOGIE
LOUIS JORDAN (DECCA)
MOORE SISTERS (SONORA)

AY AY AY AY MY SERENADE
TITO GUIZAR (MERCURY)

LONG LEGG'D LIZZIE BROWN DOTS (MANOR)

BROTHER BILL
THE STARDUSTERS (SWAN)

ALONG THE PINEAPPLE TRAIL
JOHNNY (KAONOHI) PINEAPPLE (MERCURY)

RYTVOC, INC. MUSIC PUBLISHERS
1585 Broadway, New York 19

YOU CAN'T SEE THE SUN WHEN YOU'RE CRYIN'

By ALLAN ROBERTS and DORIS FISHER

Recorded by

VAUGHN MONROE - - - Victor
THE INK SPOTS - - - - Decca
THE CHARIOTEERS - - - Columbia
THE PIED PIPERS - - - - Capitol
THE RED CAPS - - - - - Mercury
GEORGE TOWNE - - - - Sonora
and others

THANKS

GEORGE SIMON, INC.
GEORGE GILBERT, Prof. Mgr.

1619 Broadway, New York 19 — 1520 No. Highland, Hollywood 28

TOP HITS OF YESTERDAY
GREAT POPULAR STANDARDS TODAY

THE FABULOUS SONG From the Charles R. Rogers Production "THE FABULOUS DORSEYS"

AT SUNDOWN

Words and Music by Walter Donaldson

The Newest, Fastest Growing Revival Hit!

SUGAR

Words by Sidney Mitchell and Edna Alexander
Music by Maceo Pinkord

For new artist copies and arrangements, write or phone PHIL KORNHEISER, Manager, Standard Exploitation Dept., The Big 3, 1619 Broadway, New York 19, Circle 6-2939

Plotteries - - Niteries - - Hucksters!
We invite attention to our current plugs

DANISH NOOK POLKA

Why Have Crocodiles Such Comic Profiles?
(Great Vienna Favorites)

Also representing:
* ASTORIA VERLAG (Emil W. Maass) Vienna
* EDIZIONI MUSICALI MARIO AROMANDO Milan

Proudly we present:
* IMPRESARIO RECORDS

First release:
GLENN CAROW
Renowned Concert Pianist
#9462 The Warbling Flute — #9458 A Ricksha Ride
Professional Copies Available

Address Inquiries to:
WASHINGTON MUSIC BAZAAR
210 Fifth Ave. (Suite 1102)
New York City 10, N. Y.
B.M.I. and A.S.C.A.P. Clearance

Top Tunes for Your Books
An All-Time Favorite

EXACTLY LIKE YOU

Music by . . .
JIMMY McHUGH
Shapiro-Bernstein

STANDOUT TUNES

The Ballad Hit for 1947

Let's Put Our Dreams Together

For January Release
Victor: CHARLIE SPIVAK
Columbia: ELLIOTT LAWRENCE
— with more to follow —

PAULL-PIONEER MUSIC CORP.
1657 Broadway New York 19, N. Y.

From Punches to Punchlines

By JOEY ADAMS

Ever since John L. Sullivan and James J. Corbett found that it was easier to go from belly punches to belly laughs, fighters have been taking to the theatre after their careers in the squared circle were over. Jack Dempsey, Benny Leonard, Mickey Walker, Abe Attel, Tony Galento, Bob Olin and Jack Johnson were some of the greats of the ring who decided to floor people with jokes instead of their fists. Now they go a few rounds of drinks at the bar instead of the ring.

Joey Adams

Canada Lee became very successful as a legitimate actor after hanging up his gloves. Carl Brisson had 72 ring battles and was light-heavyweight-champ of Europe before he decided he would rather take singing lessons than give boxing lessons.

The screen, radio, legitimate theatre, night clubs and vaudeville have been a lifesaver for many greats of the ring who left the ring broke after making a fortune in it. When a fighter is on top he gets more phony propositions than a chorine. Everybody wants a piece of them. A ring champ is a body of steel completely surrounded by relatives and hangers-on. They all take a few, the girls on the hip-parade take some, a few bad investments and they're through. When the champ's brain becomes pregnant and he realizes what's happened, it's too late. His ring career is finished and so is his money. Consequently, he takes to the stage.

The Old Swift and Armour

The funny part is, they usually become bigger hams than any of the actors they join.

Tony Canzoneri, for instance, never kept a scrap book of any of the 370 fights and 6 titles he held. His fame was spread on the front page of every newspaper in the world. Now he saves every line that's written about his stage career.

Max Baer and Maxie Rosenbloom are doing a clever act, but they are always fighting off-stage about who gets the best lines on-stage. If one of them uses a funny line in the act that goes particularly well, the other is bound to do it in the next show. Sometimes they get so mad at each other, they have to consult B. S. Pully for words to use against each other.

So many of the ring greats have taken to the screen. Freddie Steele, Jackie Fields and Johnny Indrisano are some who made good in Hollywood. Fidel La Barba, former fly-weight champ, is a successful writer on the Coast.

Even Joe Louis, who was always as mum as the proverbial oyster, has doctored his personality with doses of showmanship and with a bit of tutoring by his friends, Rochester, Bill Robinson, Duke Ellington, Canada Lee and Count Basie, and has become a pretty good entertainer. Now, besides his prowess in the ring, the Brown Bomber slays 'em with . . . wisecracks.

Of course, many fighters who weren't at all capable on-stage have done the next best thing and opened night clubs or bars. Tony Galento, Kid Kaplan, Peter Hernan, Abe Attel, Mickey Walker, Jack Sharkey, Bob Olin, Lew Tendler and Jack Dempsey are some of the ring immortals who went from dishing out lickings to dishing out drinks at the bar.

Canzy's Lesson

It was a fighter who gave me my biggest stage lesson, never to be nervous. Tony Canzoneri and I were to break our act in at the Steinway Theatre in Astoria. It's an 800-seat house. We were to get $50 for the four day billing. We wanted to get the reaction of the audience before we used our names.

Tony and I rehearsed for weeks but Tony had the habit of stretching out a gag. The gag he had the most trouble with was the one about the time he walked in the ring and took off his robe. "Men howled and cheered, kids screamed, women fainted," said Tony. "What happened?" I would ask. "Well, er, ah," hesitated the champ, "I forgot my tights." I tried to explain that he should never hesitate. "As soon as you hear 'what happened,' take one breath and say 'I forgot my tights.'" We rehearsed that one gag for two weeks—a breath and "I forgot my tights."

The day before we were to open at the theatre, we were sitting in Lindy's enjoying a lox and bagel when two tables away a couple of agents were having a heated discussion. "What happened?" asked one of the 10%ers. "I forgot my tights," screamed Canzoneri to the strangers.

The next morning I asked Tony to get to the theatre about two or three hours earlier, so that we could rehearse our act before we went on stage. One last going-over. I was there bright and early, but the champ didn't arrive until five minutes before the first act.

"Aren't you nervous?" I screamed. "We go on in a few seconds, and you stroll in nonchalantly. I'm so nervous, I could scream at you, nothing seems to bother you."

"Nervous?" asked Tony quickly. "I fought a guy called Barney Ross for the lightweight championship of the world. 20,000 people came to see us. Barney could knock your head off with a right or a left. Friends bet millions on me to win. I was getting $45,000 and I slept for four hours before the fight. Here I'm getting $1.25 per show, there are 12 people in the audience and nobody can hurt me. What do you want me to be nervous about?"

RIVIERA NITERY FOLDS UNTIL NEXT SPRING

The Riviera, Ft. Lee, N. J., which recently filed a petition in bankruptcy, shuttered for the season after New Year's eve. Spot is slated to reopen May 1 with a name show.

Riviera, operated by Bill Miller, after filing the bankruptcy petition, effected a settlement with the creditors allowing him to pay off 10% of his indebtedness each month. Spot was bought early this year by Miller from its former operator Ben Marden for a sum reported to be $750,000. Petition listed liabilities of $183,982 as against $27,500 in assets.

BERLE AVERS WEINGER HAS NO CAUSE FOR SUIT

Murray Weinger, operator of the Copacabana, Fla., filed suit against Milton Berle in the N. Y. federal court Thursday (2) asking $250,000 claiming breach of contract. Weinger filed shortly after the William Morris agency, Berle's handlers, notified him that the comic would be unable to keep his date at the Florida bistro, which was slated to start between Feb. 1 and 10. Berle's contract was for four weeks and options at a $12,500 weekly guarantee plus a percentage of the gross over $50,000.

However, William Morris agency claims that there is no basis for a suit inasmuch as the original contract has a four-week cancellation clause providing that Berle can step out in the event that a radio, film, or legit deal came along. Berle has been signed by the Milton Blow agency for an air show starting March as replacement for the current Rudy Vallee slicer.

Weinger claims that inasmuch as the show is to start in March, Berle should play some part of his date. It's countered that the cafe date would interfere with the preparation of his radio show.

Morris office spokesman stated that Weinger was fully aware that there was the possibility that he would use Berle to the airshow. As a result WM dispatched Sam Bramson, cafe department head to confer with Weinger in Florida. Bramson submitted several names including the Ritz Bros. and Eleanor Powell as possible replacements. Weinger tentatively bought the Ritzes. The Ritz Bros. are not WM clients. Morris office said that the entire procedure took place on an amicable basis.

There is, however, the possibility that the suit may not reach court. Morris office has already conferred with the American Guild of Variety Artists on the matter, which ruled that the cancellation clause was valid and there is no basis for the suit. It may forbid Weinger from proceeding further.

Pat Harrington, Hyers Reuniting as Team

Pat Harrington and Frankie Hyers, who as a team made history at the old Club 18 for their ability to heckle the patronage, are reuniting after a separation of several years.

Hyers is currently working at the Greenwich Village Inn, N. Y., in show with Nils T. Granlund.

GEORGIE PRICE
Direction MCA

Nitery Biz Falling Off To Just Normally Good

But Memories of Those Wartime 'Every Night Is New Year's Eve' Linger

By ABEL GREEN

Since Pearl Harbor, with the free-spending, wartime-enriched public ganging up on the niteries, just as they queue up at the Music Hall, it looked as if the saloonkeeper's Gehenna had come to pass. As a matter of fact it did. Those four war years were certainly Happy Days in Dixie for everybody, and chiefly the waiters. There's no telling how many apartment houses some of the waitering crew now own. Nor how many bookies they made rich in the manner to which they were not accustomed.

There are fashions in everything, with slogans to match. At long last you now hear people—who can afford it—say, "We almost wish for a depression so that things come back to normal." Because even now, despite the fuzz being off the peach, the inflationary spiral has sent dining-dancing-entertaining-out costs so high that two evils loom. One is that the joints must suffer, perforce, because there just isn't that kind of money around any more. The other is that those who have the nocturnal habit (by choice or for business reasons) find it's just too tough to take.

"Was a time when a fin ($5) not only bought anybody a deluxe Parisstyle lunch but also was good for a dinner, but try and get out under a sawbuck ($10) now," as one Broadwayite puts it. That's the sum-and-substance of it.

Only Limited by Capacity

When Uncle Sam was taking part of the rap and war-enriched and/or blacketeer dollars were on the loose, because you could charge it off to the Government, the bistros were handicapped only by capacities. Few discriminated. Even if they tried, their staffs virtually coerced them into compromise on standards. As with the servant problem, the slogan about "the kind to our waiters' customers we can always get" worked both ways. The waitering crews seemed to sense they had their bosses in a bit of a spot.

Actually and literally this was true in Florida where, with aforeknowledge of an 8-12 weeks' season, the boys were frankly on the take. Any of the bosses who wanted to take care of personal pals at ringside had to make sure they pourboired their headwaiter and captains like any other moujik, or else.

Actually the nitery field parallels the rest of show business. The nickelodeon is something out of the mothballs—you now pay $1.50 for a film. The nickel mag is a dime. The $1.25 table d'hote is at least $5. And so it has been through the years.

Evolution of Nite Life

The lobster palaces of reputed Diamond Jim Brady days—and VARIETY's odds will show you what sort of a $3 de luxe dinner they used to whip up for you at Mouquin's, Stanley's, Reisenweber's and Rector's—gave way to the cabarets. The cabarets were of the calibre of Maxim's (Percy Silkes') and Healy's Golden Glades and the elaborate floorshows that Gus Edwards used to put on at the Shelburne, Atlantic City, or the Hotel Martinique, N. Y.—with Prohibition came the speakeasies. The speaks evolved an intimate type of sotto voce entertainment on the one hand—Tommy Lyrman, et al.—on the raucous, blatant entertainment of the Clayton, Jackson & Durante, Texas Guinan, NTG school.

Came repeal and the night club was evolved. The mistakes cashed in on a buildup during Volsteadism by conning the public with hidden charges. There was "no couvert" but heluva high check reasons. It cornered sundry hidden charges, inflated prices for drinks, food, favors, and the like.

But all of it went out the window circa 1942-46. The same peasants who spurned Gimbel's and Macy's and bombarded Saks-5th Ave., and the war-enriched Saks-5th Ave. regulars who suddenly discovered Bonwit Teller, Goodman, Lord & Taylor and Hattie Carnegie, were paralleled in the popular entertainments. They suddenly discovered money and didn't know what to do with it. Every Thursday-through-Sunday was like New Year's eve on Broadway. War workers from Bridgeport and Newburgh came by taxi to legit windows and legit scalpers, paying fabulous prices for theatre tickets for the privilege of sitting down front in their tuxedoes. It was a war world and a mad whirl.

But, certainly, it all added up to Happy Days in Dixie. Turkeys did Pittsburgh prize business. If you opened your mail there was a line waiting to get in.

Saloonatics Rampant

And the saloonacy mounted. If you didn't "see" the maitre d' at the tape you didn't get in, or they gave you a ringside with the pro in the John. The waiter-captains could buy out their bosses in any one of those years if the boss got fresh, but it was too soft a touch. There was no question but that the waiters got more out of their jobs than did the management.

This profligacy lingers. You almost stake as much in a joint as is the size of your check. And it's something which, even when things rationalize themselves, must redound to the benefit of the bistros.

For, as has been traced above, what did come about through the segue from the lobster palaces to the cabarets, to the speaks, to the nite clubs, is that the level of the public spending habits has been raised. And that's all that is necessary.

No longer is the cafe habit a luxury proposition. With the base of the potential market so widely enlarged, it is inevitable that the cafe business continues as a big business.

When regulations and legislation started to gang up on the bistro bonifaces they wisely illustrated that their dollar contribution eclipses many another business. Money for food, liquor, entertainment; expenditures for taxes of all types put the nitery biz into important brackets.

But the spiral must come down. Every key city will continue, of course, to have its key spots, be they the entertainment rooms attached to the leading hotels, the smart niteries, or the somewhat out-of-the-way spots which have attractions of one nature or another, be it gambling or anything else.

The spiral will effect talent. The

(Continued on page 244)

Loving Honey Davis Very Much, Or Those Capone Days in Dixie

Nate Gross, Vet Chicago Newsman, Briefs His Beautiful Southern Belle on When Prohibition Was in Flower

By NATE GROSS
(Chicago's Town Tattler)

Chicago.

I love Honey Davis very much; that's why I want her to think I'm a big man. Honey is my tall and beautiful girl friend from Virginia—Reedville, to be exact. She comes a' callin every once in a while and I show her the Windy City. She loves to see the tall buildings, the many parks and the wide boulevards. But most of all she likes to hear stories about the people who live in Chicago and she wants to meet them. A real folksy girl, Honey Davis.

"Chicago," she says, "isn't much different than Reedville. It's just got more people."

Honey is a mighty bright girl at that. Maybe she's got something there, because my Chicago is "Main Street." I like to think of my big city as a little city, where I know the mayor, the corner cop, the fellow who owns the bank, the haberdasher, the manager of the movie theatre, and the celebrity who comes to town. This is my Chicago and I want Honey to love Chicago because I love Honey.

Yep, Honey is a real folksy girl, as I've said before, and she heard me say something about Al Capone, so she wanted to meet him. I told her she was at least 15 years too late for that, because Al is living in Florida these days, where he is more or less ill.

"That's a shame," says my little sweetheart of the south. "I sure would liked to have met him."

That's when I go into my timestep—when I can't deliver for Honey, and I must do something to make her think I'm a guy of substance. Yep, she's got to think I'm a big man, you know.

So I tell her about the old days—when she was a little girl and a thing called Prohibition used to blight this land.

I tell her about actors who have come to my town, and the little role I played in their lives. Honey just loves to hear about actors. And you should see her smile, and see her eyes get round and shiny when I tell her what a big man I am.

George's Price

Maybe Georgie Price made me think of it when I introduced him to Honey. Years ago he was appearing at the Palace theatre. Some of the local "Behelit and Bulldoze" boys came a' callin', but these weren't friendly folk like you'd find in Reedville. No, these gentlemen were slightly on the swarthy side, and they were putting the 'doze on Georgie to kick in a few lousy dollars for the benefit of a pal—their pal—who was in jail. After all, what's money?

Georgie is a little guy, and he's got a lot of guts. He chased both of them into the alley outside, but they were waiting there the next night when he closed, and really didn't have time to talk to them because he was in a hurry to catch a train.

Georgie got stuck up. They took his week's pay from him —a couple of Gs or something—and there's a good story that goes with this because Georgie chased them all the way down the alley. He wanted them to give him a buck for taxi fare so he could make the train. The "doze" boys got scared and outran Georgie. Their footwork was wonderful that night.

Well, things get around and pretty soon actors are afraid to come to Chicago. Somebody is shaking them down. If they don't contribute to the "Benefit and Bulldoze," then they get a Mickey, or get chased out of town, or get beaten up. Georgie was let off easy. He only got stuck up.

This is a good spot to pause and take a breath, but my Virginia girl friend wants me to go on. Personally I prefer continued stories. It assures you an audience next week. But my honeyed Honey has different ides. Anyhow, my story sounds pretty convincing even though she must, by this time, think I'm the village historian. So I go on.

Johns' Banjo Goes Kerplunk

One day I go over to the Oriental theatre where a big guy —he's over 6 feet—is the leader of the band. He was one of the crop of Paul Ash successors who came to that theatre and never made it. The man's name was Brooke Johns, and if I remember rightly he played the banjo and had done a short stretch in the Ziegfeld Follies.

The boys had been in to see him. All they wanted was a G or two. Nothing at all! After all, didn't he want to be a big hit in Chicago?

"Whoops," says Brooke. "I heard about this and I never wanted to come to Chicago. I'm going to get out of here. AND PLEASE DON'T print any of this in the paper."

Well, that was his business. The story got into the paper anyway, and soon Brooke was on his way somewhere. I never heard of him again and it still wasn't any of my business, until my "kid brother" got picked on. Well, he isn't exactly my kid brother, but it's the same thing, when someone tries to harm him. His name is Phil Harris and he's married to another friend of mine named Alice Faye, which makes him a pretty big man. (That makes two of us. By now Honey thinks I'm a pretty big man, too. Those magic Harris-Faye names, you know.)

Well, Phil is playing the College Inn with pretty Leah Raye those days, and I still can't figure out what used to bring me down there so often—Phil's very curly hair, or Leah's very pretty smile. Anyhow this night, Teddy Tod—my old sparring partner— and I are minding our own business, that is hoping Leah would smile our way at least once, when Phil comes to the table kind of pale and shaking. The "doze boys" had been in. Phil was walking across the foyer when they grabbed him. He thought they were songpluggers, which doesn't exactly speak very well of the songpluggers of that day.

"I'm very busy right now," says Phil, and he was, because he was on his way to memorize 14 more verses of "That's What I Like About the South."

"We're pretty busy, too," they said, grabbing a handful of hair or something and turning Philsie around. "Now we've got a pal in the penitentiary and we're taking up a little collection. You're down for so much—SEE."

Charlie to the Rescue

Well, Phil always could talk himself out of anything, and if he had been sure who they did or did not connect with, he'd of taken care of them himself. But he had heard of this sort of thing in Chicago and didn't like it. So I told him not to worry, but to come with me after he was through working. It was during the early hours of the morning we entered the famed Midnight Frolics Cafe on 22d street—long since burned to the ground. My friend Charlie was there. For 20 years, whenever I've been in trouble or needed some sage advice, I've gone to my friend Charlie.

Charlie and the boys liked Phil. They wondered who was using the 'doze racket on him, because the ringleader of the mob that used to do it, Joe Fiore, had been killed in an automobile accident just a short time before. So Charlie called in Cherry Nose, and Sam and Ralph and Mike and a few other fellows and told them to spread the gospel. The gospel was that Phil Harris was related to the "Big Fellow" (which he wasn't anymore than he's my kid brother) and the guys who tried to take him had better leave town. The big fellow, of course, was Al Capone, who must of owned Charlie's orders, because pretty soon every handbook, cigar store, poolroom, restaurant and hotel lobby in the Loop gets the word:

"The big fellow is plenty mad at those guys who pushed Phil Harris around."

Every night when Phil got on the bandstand in the College Inn he was covered by one of the boys from the south side. Even Charlie came in and took his turn as a guard. Then one night he told Phil that everything was alright—that they'd found the 'doze boys, and they had copped a plea.

They certainly copped a plea, alright. They were seen with bandaged heads and tattered clothing leaving town fast one day, and they never came back. Charlie set himself up as the protector of actors in Chicago and if you ask any of them from Harris to Sinatra they'll say: "God bless him." That was the end of that sort of stuff in Chicago.

Well, Honey thinks I'm a pretty big man after that long story. But somehow I think I missed in telling it, somewhere along the line. The guy she wants to mee now is my friend Charlie, the handsome grey-haired silver fox, who'll only smile and tell her she'd better marry me.

She's certainly wonderful, my girl Honey Davis, but if Charlie tells her to marry me, she'd better do it, or she'll find out who really is the big man in my town.

'Virginia' Judge Kelly Rules

Back in the old days of vaudeville there was a moderately successful dance act. He was a little fellow about five foot three, and she was his wife. One day he came home proudly wearing a derby hat.

"Where did you get that terrible hat?"

"It's a derby, dear. You know, like Walter C. Kelly wears?"

"You're too short to wear a derby. It makes you look about three feet high!"

"But Walter C. Kelly always wears a derby."

"You look terrible!"

"Walter C. Kelly said I look good in it."

"Yeah—and where does Walter C. Kelly get off telling you what to wear?"

"Dear—Walter C. Kelly is next to closing."

—George Burns.

Standard Vaudeville Names In Return to 4-a-Day Theatres

By JOE COHEN

The standard vaudeville name, who since the war worked theatres only when a cafe date wasn't available, is now returning to the four-a-day houses. The vaude bookers can now get as many standard acts as he needs for any bill — and at fairly reasonable prices. That wasn't possible during the lush war years.

Not that prices have dropped to any considerable degree, but acts aren't pressing for stratospheric takes, and once in a while a booker can get a price decrease when offering an act a string of dates.

The factor mainly responsible for the trek back to the flesh houses is the decline in nitery trade. During the boom years, when the bonifaces had only to open his doors to entice biz, performers were able to demand, and get, as high as $3,500 even though they weren't in the name category. Today, many in that class are having difficulty getting their former emolumes in cafes. Even if some could, it's doubtful that many would want to take important engagements in niteries. A cafe during a decline is one of the greatest indicators of the extent of an act's b.o. draw. Playing to empty tables won't help a performer's salary.

Consequently, they're seeking vaude engagements while the heat's on. In a vaudery they can blame the picture, weather and other items —which won't apply in nitery.

Names Bolster Vaude

As far as names are concerned, the vauder is in the strongest position in years. The decrease in film production because of the jurisdictional strike has caused many filmsters to take to the deluxers. Not only are they getting the benefits of a vaude tour by permitting the public to get a gander at them, but they're able to add considerably to their take. On a tour there is considerable expense which comes off their income taxes, such as writers, travel, living expenses, new clothes. Again the herculean salaries being paid top stars make it possible for the stars to come out ahead. Many toppers, such as Danny Kaye and Dick Haymes, were able to get $20,000 against 50% of the gross. No star has lost money on that kind of deal. Each had to pay off supporting people, though Kaye's payoff was practically negligible.

Others taking to the road on varied types of deals include Kathryn Grayson, Johnnie Johnston, John Carroll, Olga San Juan, Joan Leslie, Mickey Rooney and others. Betty Hutton was slated to do a personal at the Golden Gate theatre, San Francisco, but it had to be called off because of new picture commitments.

Bookers are hopeful that 1947 will see even more film personalities doing personals. Talk of a decrease in income taxes will make it feasible for many to make a round of the deluxers. Consequently, between the return of the standard names plus the better outlook of personal appearances from film headliners, the vaude booker finds himself in a rosy situation.

A house like Loew's State, N. Y., has bought itself a bundle of standard names sufficient to last until March. The pitband houses tied down to a handshow policy because of the stage architecture are now able to buy cheaper bands and go in heavily for personalities, inasmuch as the accent is off the orchestras.

With return of standard turns, quality of vaude bills has been steadily improving at no price increase to bookers. The talent buyers feel that this condition will last for some time even if cafe business makes a strong comeback. Enough new acts have come up in recent years to insure a steady supply for vauderies.

Enlist AGVA's Aid In Benefits for Miami Hosp

Miami Beach.

The American Guild of Variety Artists has been asked to cooperate in the founding of the proposed Mt. Sinai hospital here, which will have a ward available for AGVA members. Campaign will open with a dinner at Lou Walters' Latin Quarter, Palm Island, Jan. 13 plus a series of cocktail parties at various clubs and restaurants following. A benefit performance is also planned during the campaign.

Prospectus calls for 50% of the proposed hospital's capacity to be devoted to charity and semi-charity patients.

Committee working on the venture has wired Matt Shelvey, AGVA national administrator, for his approval of Guild members' participation in the project.

Nitery Biz

Continued from page 243

acts and their agents are the first to concede it. It's better to work at $400 than lay off at $850. When Joe Penner held out for $1,500 a week in vaudeville, years ago, everybody in show business knew he could have been smarter to have kept working 40 weeks a year at $750 (which he could have gotten regularly) than the occasional $1,500, which only happened when some act cancelled at the Palace. (When this event actually happened, and the zany Frisco stuttered, "You s-s-s-ee, th-th-they had to c-c-come to m-me," it was a good intra-trade laugh, but the laugh was mostly on Joe.)

Back to Basic Values

Certainly as things stand now the element of basic values assert themselves stronger than ever. If you're a Sinatra, Joe E. Lewis, Tucker, Hildegarde, Berle, Thomas and the like you'll continue to get that top coin, perhaps even more so on percentage, but the rest are a bit the peach and things are normalizing.

A waiter who cracks about a 10% tip that "maybe you need this more than I do" not only will get a punch in the nose from a fellow customer, but fired—and deservedly. And without any of those other hazards. When white-on-white shirts, cabbies who don't grouse if you want them to drive to Brooklyn, steaks at under $3, managements which revive those oldie alibis "well, it's always slow on Mondays . . . the rain hurt us last night . . . those college kids are fickle"—when some of these things come back you'll know we're back to normal. We're on the way.

The optimistic note, of course, is that having exposed so many thousands of people to the luxury items as in the war years, and with their appetites whetted by a free-spending buck of a lush period, it does create a reservoir for future spending.

Peter Lind Hayes Top New Nitery Star of the Year

Peter Lind Hayes is the newest cafe personality, although basically of vaudeville timber, having grown up with his mother. For years he was associated with the nitery and vaudeville activities of his mother, vet performer Grace Hayes. He's already set to follow in the footsteps of Danny Kaye and Danny Thomas, who became stellar film and radio comedians following their nitery training.

The 1947 upcomers look to be Sid Caesar, just opened at New York's Copacabana, and Vic Damone, new crooner at La Martinique, N. Y. These two spots have been particularly fruitful of new names. Jan Murray and Harvey Stone came to attention at the latter, and Hayes at the Copa, which is otherwise the capital of Joe E. Lewis' N. Y. activities.

The boxoffice names in the saloon circuits continue to be Hildegarde, Sophie Tucker, Jean Sablon, Tony Martin, Frank Sinatra, Charles Trenet, Edgar Bergen, Jane Froman, Jackie Miles, Georgie Price, Victor Borge, The Hartmans, Russell Swann, Dwight Fiske, the DeMarcos among others. Sinatra and Bergen took flyers into the niteries to fulfill old commitments.

A personality highlight of the year occurred when Phil Silvers carried on at the Copa, sans Billy Ragland, with Frank Sinatra as the foil on the preem night. Ragland was to have played the date with Silvers. He died a few days before. Sinatra carrying on for Ragland made for one of those memorable poignant evenings.

The movie-ol Jimmy Savo is another 1946 outstander. He's making a signal comeback despite amputation of his leg.

Berle's Boff

The Copa as the No. 1 spot for comedians was challenged signally by the extraordinary click of Milton Berle at the Carnival, grossing $3,-000,000 for Nicky Blair's spot and dragging down $400,000 for his share in a marathon 44-week engagement which called for $7,500 weekly guarantee and overages above $42,000. With the spot hitting $50,000 weekly and better, Berle's share was frequently over 10G a week. Olsen & Johnson, making their nitery debut, are incumbent at $10,000 weekly guarantee.

On the subject of the Copa, 59 showgirls have gone from Monte Proser's spot into pictures, including Martha Stewart (Mrs. Joe E. Lewis), who alternated away from a 20th-Fox contract into the ingenue lead of the just-closed "Park Avenue," Broadway musical; Lucille Brenda, Adele Jergens, Jane New, June Allyson, among others.

The Embassy Club, N. Y., incidentally has Charles Trenet, French chanteur, returning after making good impact. Trenet, with a song-writing and recording rep in his native France, is the nearest rival to Sablon in the Gallic sweepstakes, although Chevalier, Lucienne Boyer and Edith Piof are due over and the Swiss-French Rene Paul and the Parisian Daisy Daix are recent added starters.

Another personality highlight of '46 was Joe Louis emulating Jack Dempsey and other pugilistic greats by going into the cafe business, with a big spot in Harlem that draws a mixed crowd.

Jack O'Boyle Quits MCA; Anderson Added to Staff

Retrenchment policy continues at Music Corp. of America. Jack O'Boyle of the MCA concert division resigned last week. No successor named.

This is the second resignation in MCA during the last two weeks. Lyle Thayer, co-head with Eames Bishop of the MCA Beverly Hills office left two weeks ago.

MCA, however, added one agent to the small band department. Roy Anderson, a recent law-school graduate, was hired to assist George Walker. This is his first showbiz assignment.

Carnival, Zanzibar, N.Y., Primping for New Shows

Two large N. Y. niteries shuttered temporarily after New Year's eve for refurbishing. The Carnival closes for a week to get the spot in trim for the Olsen and Johnson show bowing Jan. 9, while the Zanzibar closed after Thursday (2) for an elaborate overhauling, during which time it will undergo a change of decor to suit its new tag, Vanity Fair.

Latter spot will reopen around Jan. 28 with a show including Gertrude Niesen, Jan Murray and Hal Loreg, with Donn Arden doing the production. Meanwhile, the Negro shows policy in effect at the Zanzibar will move to site formerly occupied by the Ole South. Spot will be labeled the New Zanzibar. Franklyn Hughes is doing the decor in both spots.

Nitery History Repeats Itself

By SOPHIE TUCKER

Chicago.

After World War I, every cafe and night club cried the blues, then to top it off Prohibition popped in and that killed it all, and the speakeasies flourished. Bosses didn't realize the parade was all over when the war ended.

Here we are in 1946-47—World War II is over—and the same thing is happening again, only it's a new set of bosses. Those of the first war have forgotten the slump of that time, and the new bosses don't know how to take it now.

In the first war slump there weren't the high priced salaries paid to performers. The new element of bonifaces, in playing the competition game, themselves skyrocketed prices so high—now they don't know how to handle the situation. They boosted salaries so high in clubs and made so much money too, that when the shoe pinches, the performers will suffer. First, many spots will have to close. Second, salaries will have to come down.

From my point of view of conditions today, top names, and only those who are a draw in clubs, will still be able to command top salaries during this trying period. For how long I can't say, but we all top-salaried troupers will have to cut salaries to keep clubs open.

There's no question that the continuous amount of strikes throughout the country is having the same effect Prohibition did in post-World War I as regards the clubs.

Never in World War I was there so much money made and spent as in War II. Never have I seen such a mixed crowd of people in night clubs. But the reaction as of now in the niteries is simple. Customers henceforth will only go to the spots where they get the best for their money. My recent Chez Paree (Chicago) engagement is the best proof I can offer. Chicago has some very fine night clubs—the Rio Cabana, Latin Quarter, Colissimo's, and many others. All have fine shows, fine entertainers, but the best buy is at the Chez Paree. First, always the best food in town. A top name invariably has great performers surrounding him or her. The same goes for New York, at the Copa, Latin Quarter, Carnival. Outside of those four spots in N. Y. and Chicago everybody is crying the blues. Business is off 35 to 45%.

The big spenders of black market days are over. The free spenders are all drawing in their reins, waiting, hoping for big business to come back again. It's going to be the "survival of the fittest," with clubs and cafes as in life.

The few newcomers during the war will have to spend money and buy fresh material to prove their value today, as a draw, and will have to learn to make friends wherever they play. Performers must learn anew in night clubs that you just can't do your act and run out to see a picture or play gin. You've got to cultivate the customer, so he'll come back and see you the next time you play the town. There's a certain personal intimacy a customer feels for the performer that you only find in a night club. And that must be cultivated.

Return of Full Autonomy to AGVA Cues Busy Agenda For Union In '47

By MATT SHELVEY

(National Director of American Guild of Variety Artists)

The first National convention of the American Guild of Variety Artists, set for after the turn of the year in Chicago is, of course, the big event with which AGVA will start the coming year. But it is not the only one. Right after the convention we will undertake a fourfold program of advancement in the conditions of the variety profession, including a drive for a general 20% increase in the minimums of night club choruses and some classes of principals, establishment of the six-day-week for choruses in traveling shows, correction of the unpleasant dressing-room situation in the majority of niteries and some theatres, and the franchising of club date bookers and line producers. That is not all we contemplate for the year 1947, but it is enough, I believe, to provide a pretty good picture of where AGVA is going as the year comes to a close.

The forthcoming Chicago convention represents, for AGVA, the boundary between struggle and achievement, between youth and maturity. We began life on the basis of a grant of power from the Four A's and remained under its control. As this is written, the Four A's is returning our autonomy because we have grown big enough, stable enough and successful enough to take our place as an independent member of the system of show business unions, able to run our own affairs and contribute to the entertainment industry and profession like other affiliates of the Associated Actors and Artistes of America.

With the return of our autonomy comes the obligation to establish AGVA in the usual manner, with a constitution, by-laws and elected officers. The promulgation of all three will be the main business of the convention.

Chicago was chosen as the convention city because only by the staging of the meeting there would it be possible to obtain a democratic attendance. Chicago is the city where more AGVA members from different parts of the United States and different degrees of professional standing can be found at any one time than encountered in any other city in the country. Thus, an AGVA meeting in Chicago is bound to find at first hand a large and representative cross-section of the membership. Moreover, any other AGVA members anywhere in the country may come to the convention. All members in good standing who will be present at the convention will be given convention credentials and will have the right to vote on convention matters on the basis of one vote per member on each matter. I believe that in a union with a membership of which the majority is migratory, it is impossible to hold a convention on any other basis than the above, i.e., personal participation by members who happen to be in or come to the convention city. Although the proposed constitution stipulates there must be at least 250 in attendance at the convention, the probability is that many more will be present.

AGVA's 45-Man Directorate

The adoption of the constitution, now being prepared, will be the first order of convention business. The next one will be election of a 45-man National Board of Directors, to serve without compensation, and the election of a nominating committee to name a convention slate to run for the National offices: President, three Vice-Presidents, Recording Secretary and Treasurer, all non-salaried positions. The constitution provides for the naming of other nominees by petition of the membership-at-large, if the members so decide. The voting will be by ballot, at the convention or by mail referendum among the membership-at-large, if it is so decided at the convention.

The position I now hold, by appointment of the Four A's in 1943, will be eliminated. It will be replaced by a National Directorship, the incumbent of which is to be appointed by the Board of Directors. Between conventions, the National Director, working out of the National office, will be the day-to-day operating head of the union, subject to the Board of Directors. The Board must meet at least semi-annually, but may convene at special meetings as necessity requires. The Board may also call special conventions, as may the members by petition.

The third piece of major convention business will be the formulation of a set of by-laws by the National Board of Directors and its adoption by those in attendance. The by-laws, as in all unions, will supplement the constitution.

One of the results of the convention will be the final elimination of the local as an institution in AGVA and its replacement by the branch. When I assumed my present duties in 1943, AGVA still had numerous locals. Because this is a union of migratory members and because one of the major failings of AGVA up to that time was the sectionalism and the narrow viewpoint existing in locals, we began to model ourselves after the setup of the Actors' Equity Association, where offices in given cities are branches of the National office, not locals. We have successfully proved that branches of the National office operate on a National basis, with a National viewpoint, and under National regulations. Hence the branch system will be established completely at the convention and the last remaining locals (Chicago, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh) changed to the new role.

Drive to Up Minimum Scales

Following the convention, AGVA will launch its program for the start of 1947 indicated above. First and foremost, will come a drive to raise basic minimum wages for chorus and show girls, except those working in Class A DeLuxe niteries (scale: $125 for principals, $75 for chorus). AGVA also will make the same demands for principals in Class B spots (scale: $75 for principals, $45 for chorus) and Class C places (scale: $60 for principals, $38.50 for chorus). Though regarded as principals, the leaders of chorus groups will come in under wage drive where it applies. We are considering, at present, whether we will broaden the 20% demand to include principals in Class A clubs (scale: $85 for principals, $50 for chorus).

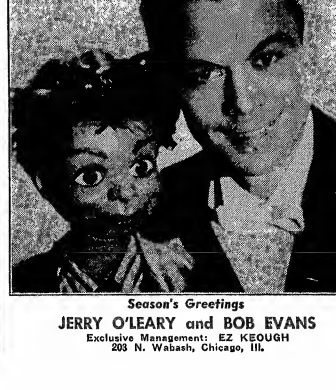
The scales shown above are the lowest minimums for each class of establishment. It should be noted, however, that in 50% of the Class A spots the chorus girls get a contractual minimum of $65, and in half the Class B places $50.

Our wage program also contemplates improvements in the conditions of choruses in traveling shows, who now receive $50 for a seven-day week. We propose to drive for $60 for a six-day week in all traveling shows not under contract at present. There are five contract-carrying traveling shows about which we can do nothing, of course, until the present contracts expire. The scale for principals in such shows will remain at $100 minimum and up.

While our wage program will be motivated by the present rise in the cost of living, as it is with other unions in the country, I want to make one thing clear: we will not press our demand for a 20% increase in those cases where investigation shows that application of this demand will result in closings.

Next, we will go after the detestable dressing-room situation prevailing in 60% of the night clubs and 10% of the theatres (these mostly the indie houses). We recognize that the limited space of night clubs makes good facilities impossible in many instances, but we regard it as nothing more than gross negligence and indifference toward the welfare of their employees when night club owners permit filthy latrines, dirty or useless washing facilities, rooms where male and female members of the cast both have to change in dressing rooms in one part of the house, and lavatories somewhere else, and similar conditions. Improvements can be made immediately in fully half of the clubs and theatres by doing nothing more than simple cleaning, painting and repairing jobs. In other cases more severe measures may be necessary. We do not intend to be unreasonable, but we will insist on at least a minimum of comfort and

(Continued on page 246)



Season's Greetings
JERRY O'LEARY and BOB EVANS
Exclusive Management: EZ KEOUGH
203 N. Wabash, Chicago, Ill.

Musicians' Union Pulls Band at Mardi Gras, N.Y., On Tardy Payoff Rap

Musicians were pulled out of the Mardi Gras restaurant, N. Y., Wednesday (1) by Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians. Union claiming tardy payments to its members demanded that Harry Finklestein, spot's operator, pay salaries in advance. As a result, club is running as a straight eatery.

Mardi Gras is reported to have been bought by Ben Harriman who claims he has given Finklestein notice to vacate early this month and will occupy the spot himself. He hasn't decided the policy or new name of the spot.

Meanwhile, it's reported that Harriman, who also operates the Aquarium and Metropole, will drop the Aquarium, as lease has been taken over by a cafeteria concern. Harriman denied this, declaring that he still has Gene Krupa and Louis Prima slated to play this spot, and intends to remain open indifinitely.

Lou Holtz signed for two weeks at the Town Casino, Buffalo, starting Jan. 30.

London Nitteries Yen Shows To Augment Bands and Booze

By HARRY REGENSBERG

London.

London is spending $200,000 per week on its night life, which is not hay in any country's money.

This is especially important considering that London no longer has the number of visitors it had during the wartime, when there were so many Americans stationed here.

London's night life can be divided into three classes. They are (1) the hotels and restaurants (2) the night clubs, and (3) the Bottle Party Clubs.

The first is headed by the Savoy, still looked upon as the best spot in town, where the socialites mingle with film and show celebs. The Dorchester is next, with Grosvenor House, Berkeley hotel, Hatchett's, Bagatelle, Mirabelle, Quaglino's, Hungaria, Potomac and Cafe Anglais in that order.

The night clubs are Ciro's club and Les Ambassadeurs, with the former still the name spot.

Bottle clubs are headed by the "400," with the Orchid Room a good second. Next come the Embassy, the Astor, Cocoa-Nut Grove, operated by a former American performer Diana Ward, the Milroy, the Cabaret Club, where the food and drink is of the finest, with best floor shows in town, and still the hangout of nobility who like plenty of liquor, the Windmere, the Florida, the Nut House, reopened recently by Al Burnett, and before the war a famous hangout of Americans, and Murray's.

All these spots rely on drink and dancing for most of the fun. Only ones providing some entertainment are, besides the aforementioned Cabaret Club, Quaglino's, the Orchid (very occasionally), Berkeley, the Nut House and Murray's.

Most important event in London night life is the opening of the Nightingale, a new and very exclusive nitery, in Berkeley Square, sometime in January, by Eustace Hoey, one of the foremost night club operators, whose knowledge of London night life is practically unlimited. Spot will hold 275 with invitation holders to be judiciously scrutinized. Hoey expects to have two bands playing his latest spot with regular nightly cabaret.

Name Bands

Restaurants, as well as clubs, have their regular bands, most important being Bert Ambrose at Ciro's, Carroll Gibbons at the Savoy, Lew Stone at the Embassy, Harry Roy at the Astor, Edmundo Ros at the Bagatelle, Harry Parry at the Potomac, and Chapple D'Amato, who was with Jack Hylton in the days when he was stick-wielding, at Hatchette's.

But as good everywhere as customers are getting tired of continuous drinking and dancing, and are complaining of the lack of floor shows.

In the case of Bottle Parties, the Government will not grant permits for the importation of foreign talent. Difficulty of hotels and clubs is they are not allowed to use talent brought over for vaudeville. Which means that the usual "doubling" is not permitted, with result that it would make it very expensive for these to import acts for themselves alone.

Future prospects of London night life is that it's becoming a dull affair until controlled prices of meals and extension hours are waived.

This must eventually affect the big tourist invasion which the Government is fully expecting and trying to boost. Unless restrictions are removed, expectations are unlikely to be fulfilled. Occasional extension nights, such as Christmas, Boxing Night and Near Year's Eve, are not sufficient to induce managements to offer extra entertainment.

Hoey states that he has intimated to the Government that unless better night facilities are granted next year, such as the permitting of importation of acts from America and the Continent under pre-war conditions, and the consuming of liquor after 11 p.m., American visitors will pass up London next year, staying as long as is absolutely necessary for their business and rush off to the Continent where all amenities, such as food, drink and elaborate floor shows are awaiting them.

Which means that the much sought-after American dollars will be spent on the Continent, not in London as some Government spokesmen seem to expect.

CONVENTIONS CONTINUE TO HYPO BIZ IN A.C.

Atlantic City.

More than 150 meetings or industrial exhibits have been scheduled for Atlantic City's off-season period of 1947, with 33 of them slated to draw from 1,000 to 25,000 delegates each. Meets will hypo amusement and hotel activity.

Largest meeting here so far will be the Imperial Shrine convention May 25-29, which will bring 25,000 to the city. Second largest is the American Medical Assn. June 9-13, with 15,000 delegates in attendance.

The 1947 season gets under way officially Monday (6) when the Housewares show opens for six days in the City auditorium with 7,000 on hand. Other big meetings scheduled for January are the National Food Brokers Assn. (12th); the National Canners Assn. for six days opening the 19th, and the American Economic Assn., Jan. 23-26.

L.A. Bistro Ops Weep at Eve Biz

Hollywood.

Los Angeles area bistro owners all are crying blues after "back-to-normal" New Year's, which was good but not as hefty as the war boom business. Most spots had capacity but liquor buying ebbed due to stiff warnings by both sheriff and police chief who had extra patrols looking for drunk drivers.

Mostly business men and pre-Rose Bowl collegers were out with spending not as free as in recent years. Crowds by and large were better dressed and better behaved, however, with less frantic hilarity observed.

Understood practically every nitery in town is on block, at nifty prices, but there are no takers. Bonifaces would unload for good sum but are not shuttering as yet. Report circulated that many niteries would blackout after New Year's but so far all staying open, despite usual post holiday skid.

Nagle Ankles WM Agcy

Harold Nagle of the William Morris agency cocktail department resigned last week. This is the second recent resignation in the Morris music sector. Alvin Geller left the agency several weeks ago.

Nagle, a former bandleader, has been with the Morris office for about a year. His plans are indefinite.

LUCILLE AND EDDIE ROBERTS
The Magical Mentalists

The Roberts, currently appearing in the Statler chain, teed off January 6th with the Terrace Room in Cleveland, O. They concluded a two-month engagement January 1st in the Cotillion Room of the Hotel Pierre, New York, and are scheduled to return for another extended engagement in April.

Both of these bookings were arranged by HARRY KILBY of GENERAL ARTISTS CORP. and HARRY GREEN, Personal Representative.

Return of Full Autonomy to AGVA

Continued from page 242

decency, such as separate facilities for male and female performers.

The 'Mixing' Question Again

Some time ago, AGVA changed the earlier rule forbidding "mixing" between performers and customers. It was found in practice that a voluntary basis was better, that is, the performer could mix if he was his or her own free choice. But AGVA has never relaxed its edict against compulsory mixing and in spite of this it is a fact that many Class A and Class B clubs, and fully 80% of the Class C places, still force their female performers to mix socially with patrons. The Class C roadhouses, lying outside cities and towns, are the most persistent and vicious violators of this rule. Unfortunately, there have been too many times when members failed to report violations until it was too late to apply remedies. In 1947, however, we will increase our staffs and they will be charged with policing larger areas and obtaining greater observance of the no-compulsory mixing rule. AGVA is ready to put an end to this undignified, unnecessary practice once and for all. I ask our members to give us their help in this by notifying the nearest office at once if they are required to mix.

In the coming year we intend to bring both the line producers and the club date bookers into our "Rule B" and franchise system. "Rule B" is the set of regulations under which agents and bookers operate. We will put both of the new groups under variations of "Rule B" and will require them to be franchised. The line producers, moreover, will be required to post cash bonds with us. We have given them protection for several years, without obligation to themselves, by obtaining large enough cash bonds from night club and theatre operators to cover the salaries of chorines hired, originally, by line-producers. Now these men and offices will have to put up their own bonds in addition to cover the interim period between hiring of chorines and presentation of the product.

The club date field is one we let alone during the years when we were establishing ourselves in other divisions of the variety industry. Now, we believe, the time has come to bring stable conditions into this related and lucrative field. A new "Rule B" covering the special conditions peculiar to the club date business will be drawn up, and agents and offices who are in that business exclusively will be obliged to live up to it. We will provide for such matters as proper rehearsal time, observance of bookings made, time of going on and off at a club date show, etc.

Such is our planned program for 1947. There will be other events and circumstances which will demand further activities by our union, and I trust that we shall be able to improve our record of success. But, in closing, I should like to look backwards over the road we have traveled and single out a few of the accomplishments of AGVA which have brought us to the point where we are now grown up enough to run ourselves, to have a constitution and by-laws, a set of officers, membership participation, stable finances with no unpaid obligations, conventions, and all the other attributes of a mature union. Here are some of the things AGVA has done in the last few years:

Lucky 13—Looking Backwards

1. Led the successful fight against the ruinous 30% night club tax, helped induce the Government to cut it to 20%.

2. Eliminated the free "celebrity night" appearances and established a system of cash bonds in advance to guarantee payment for such appearances.

3. Set up a cash security bond system for performers in niteries, to insure payment of wages where closings or other emergencies occur.

4. Stabilized working conditions through basic minimum agreements providing protection to members on the job in regard to hours, rehearsals, wages, commissions, number of shows, rights and privileges of all concerned.

5. Set up a Death Benefit Fund to provide minimum burial costs of members.

6. Negotiated a contract with the major vaudilm chains, now in its final stages of discussion, to curtail the maximum number of shows required of performers without additional payment.

7. Brought about the six-day week for chorus lines in all night clubs and simultaneously raised their minimum wage standards.

8. Put a quick and final stop to the so-called "matinee" nitery show when this new wrinkle appeared.

9. Established, once and for all, the principle of play or pay as far as variety performers are concerned.

10. Worked out a standard contract form establishing the rights and duties of agents, owners and performers.

11. Proved that claims of performers, owners and agents could and would be collected.

12. Set up a franchise system requiring agents and bookers to agree, in writing, to live up to their obligations.

13. Established a Welfare Fund, available to all professionals in the field, whether or not they are members of AGVA.

That is the main story of AGVA as 1946 ended. We hope to extend and better it in the new year.

Calvert Injured In Plane Crash

Plane crashes last week accounted for two injuries in the vaude and nitery field, John Calvert, magician, broke a leg when his DC3 crashed into a house in Nashville, Tenn., while Mrs. Lillian McVann, operator of McVann's, Buffalo, is expected to survive the American Airlines crash in Michigan City, Ind., last week.

Calvert was on his way from Richmond to Nashville where he was slated to play a concert, when he crashed because of poor visibility. Calvert has been making all his jumps in the plane "Mystic Lady" which he owns and pilots.

Paul Draper, Adler, Keep Kiddies Happy In Juve Concert Series

Paul Draper and Larry Adler, whose regular visits at the New York City Centre for the past few years have almost become part of the town's holiday tradition, have discovered the monetary wonderland of children's concerts this year.

In addition to their regular adult fare for their evening audiences, they're giving a series of kiddie matinees with a $1.80 top which have been running an average gross of nearly $2,000.

Among what they're tapping the field which was hitherto reserved for outfits like the Clare Tree Major players which present juvenile legit plays, and the N. Y. Philharmonic orch which gives a series of children's concerts annually.

Although this is the first year they've tried this type venture, it looks like it will become an annual institution for the harmonica player and tapster. The audience is there—they've proved their pull with the juves and adults accompanying them and offer excellent entertainment in the process.

Naturally, they abandon renditions of Bach, Brahms, Debussy et al. There are some precocious mopets able to grasp that type offering, but the majority are just out of the nursery school stage come entertainment, consequently, the heavyest item in Adler's repertoire is Enesco's Roumanian Rhapsody and a duo of Russe war tunes, "Meadowland" and "Tachanka." With unpatronizing verbal music notes, the kids find them entirely palatable. Draper displays his superior terp studies doing a number in which he explains the basic tap steps, and a series of taps to tunes which the kids request.

Between them, they get the kids in an interested mood with an amiable line of chatter. They call tropets up on stage, Draper attempts to waltz with them while Adler tries his hand at harmonicising with them. It's fetchingly done.

They provide a full-sized show to insure the juve's money's worth. Richard DuBois has a knowing way with the kids in the line of magic, while Gil Maison's dog and monkey act is right there for the kids.

Jose.

Cafes Yearn Tax Cut Before July

Cafe owners are hopeful that Congress will pass legislation ending emergency wartime controls prior to the date set by Pres. Truman in his proclamation of last week. According to the presidential ukase, the emergency taxes levied during the war will pass out in July when the current 20% cafe impost will drop to the pre-war 5%.

According to the bonifaces, this is only a minor favor to the falling nitery biz. Cafe trade is currently at its lowest ebb since 1940 and if they are to survive, they'll need tax relief prior to July 1.

They point out by ending wartime controls six months hence, the proclamation constitutes an invitation to the public to keep off buying various products until the tax bite is lower. As a result, they can still look forward to difficulties from the trades upon which cafe patronage draws great numbers. Among those in that category are the fur, clothing industries and many luxury lines.

Katherine Dunham Unit Set for Vauders at 4G, %

Katherine Dunham is readying a vaude tour at $4,000 plus percentage. Sepia dancer, who has previously confined appearances to legit and concert dates, will carry a company of 10 terpers.

She's pacted for the Earle, Philadelphia, Jan. 24, and follows into the Adams, Newark, Feb. 6. Other dates are being lined up by Paul Small.

Brandwynne's Cap Date

Nat Brandwynne has been set for the Capitol theatre, N. Y., on show topped by Johnnie Johnston and Kathryn Grayson. Layout is slated to start around Feb. 20. Perry Franks and Janyce complete the slate.

Sid Piermont, Cap booker, went out to Chicago last week to gander the Johnston-Grayson combo, currently at the Chicago theatre.

"The Most Amazing Piano Virtuoso of the Present Day."

– Washington Times Herald

LIBERACE

(LIBER-AH-CHEE)

AT THE WORLD'S MOST PRICELESS PIANO*

"If comparisons are to be drawn, LIBERACE has the virtuosity of Horowitz, the wit of Templeton, the showmanship of Brisson, and the appeal of Sinatra."

EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT
M. C. A. ARTISTS LTD

F. CLARENCE GOODWIN
WEST COAST REPRESENTATIVE
2274 HOLLYRIDGE DRIVE
HOLLYWOOD 28, CALIF.

The Concert Grand Bluthner Stradivarius of Pianos – was created in Leipzig, Germany, prior to World War II, when the Bluthner factory was destroyed. It is believed to be the only piano of this type in America and is valued at $25,000.*

HAPPY FELTON

Comedy Star of
POT OF GOLD
For TUMS, ABC
and
GUESS WHO?
For Sheffield-Farms, WOR

Direction: MILES INGALLS
Joe Flaum, Associate

SARA ANN Mc CABE

Musical Comedy Singing Star

Direction: MILES INGALLS
Joe Flaum, Associate

THREE CRADDOCKS

America's Newest Comedy Importation
Comedy Pantomimists

Currently
LATIN QUARTER
PALM ISLAND, MIAMI

Direction: MILES INGALLS
Joe Flaum, Associate

GLORIA LeROY

High Cs... High Kicks...
Highly Eccentric

Currently
LATIN QUARTER
PALM ISLAND, FLORIDA

Direction: MILES INGALLS
Joe Flaum, Associate

JEANNE JERRY
FRANCIS and GREY

The Snake Dancers

Currently at LOU WALTERS'
LATIN QUARTER
NEW YORK CITY

25TH WEEK

Direction: MILES INGALLS
Joe Flaum, Associate

FOUR MOROCCANS

JUST COMPLETED SIX MONTHS AT Carnival, New York

Direction: MILES INGALLS
Joe Flaum, Associate

MAZZONE and ABBOTT

World Famous Apache Dancers

Currently
LATIN QUARTER
PALM ISLAND, MIAMI, FLORIDA

Direction: MILES INGALLS
Joe Flaum, Associate

THE CHADWICKS

Exquisite Dancers

Direction: MILES INGALLS
Joe Flaum, Associate

THE ORIGINAL LATIN BOMBSHELL

DIOSA COSTELLO

OPENED DECEMBER 18 for 6 WEEKS

5 O'CLOCK CLUB

MIAMI BEACH, Florida

•

OPENING

LYRIC THEATRE, Mexico City

(4 WEEK ENGAGEMENT)

ALSO

EL PATIO CLUB, Mexico City

(4 WEEK ENGAGEMENT)

BROADWAY'S NEWEST RHUMBA PERSONALITY

PUPI CAMPO

AND HIS RHUMBA BAND

•

Just Completed 7 Months at LA CONGA, N. Y.

•

OPENED DECEMBER 18, for the Season

5 O'CLOCK CLUB

MIAMI BEACH, Florida

•

SIGNED FOR RETURN ENGAGEMENT AT
LA CONGA, New York—to Open March 19, '47

•

RECORDING EXCLUSIVELY FOR SECO

"ESCUCHA MI SON" "PESCANDO"

•

PERSONAL MANAGEMENT—General Amusement Corp.

HIPPODROME
SEASON'S
GREETINGS
I. M. RAPPAPORT
BALTIMORE

GREETINGS
VARIETY

DWIGHT FISKE

JUST CLOSED
5TH ANNUAL ENGAGEMENT
VERSAILLES, NEW YORK

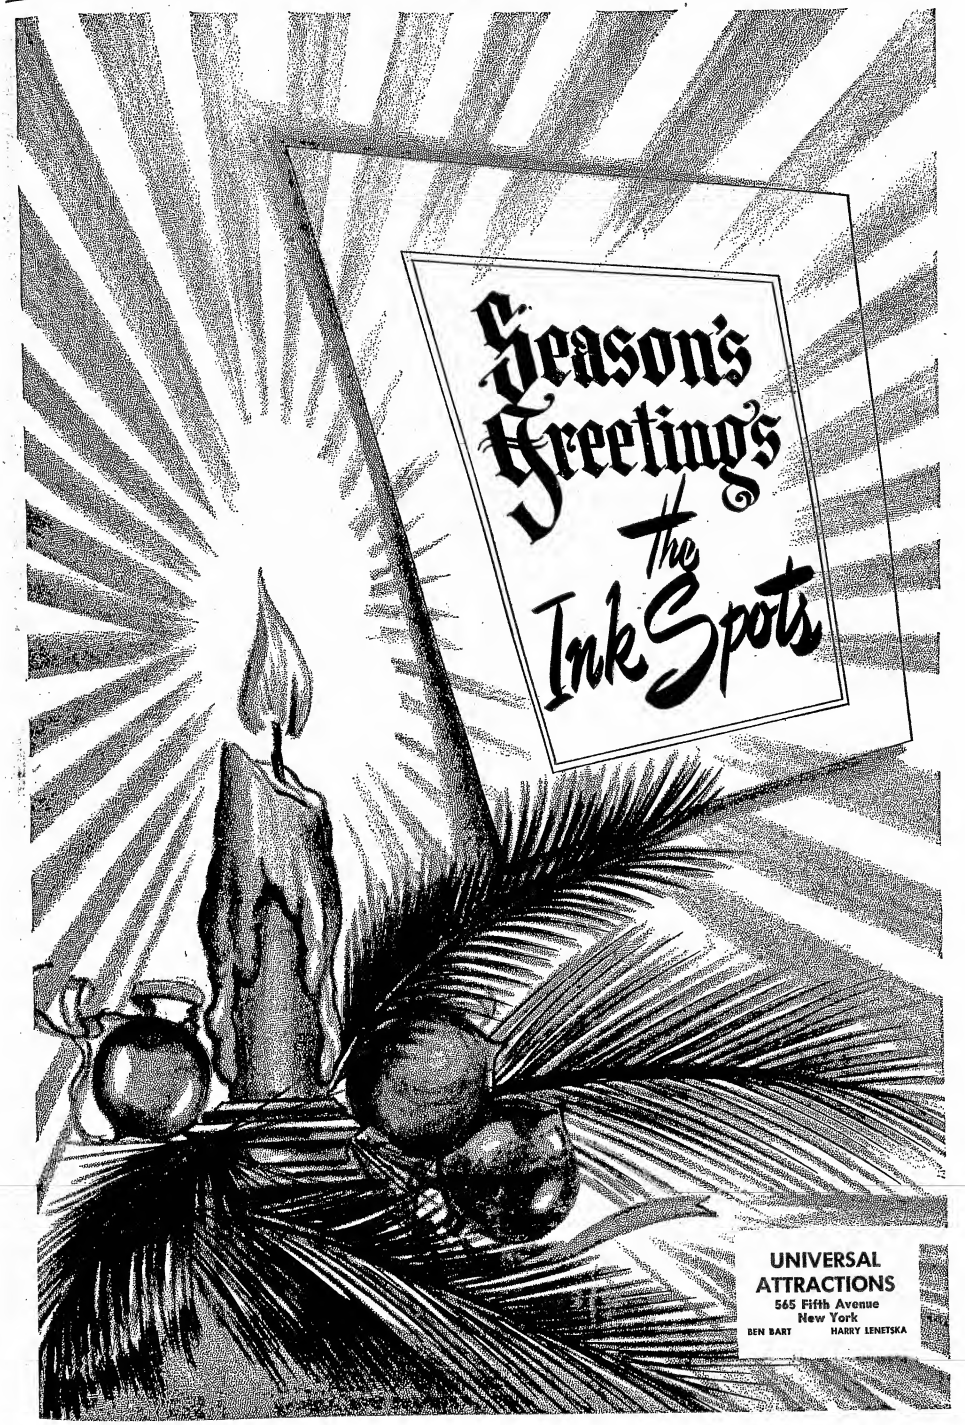
Exclusive Management
MUSIC CORPORATION OF AMERICA

ARTISTS CREATE
MONKEYS IMITATE
THE BEST IMITATOR OF

CARDINI

Wishes You
The Season's Greetings
And
A Happy New Year

RICHARD V. PITCHFORD
87-30 166th Street
Jamaica 3, New York
REpublic 9-2086



Season's Greetings
The Ink Spots
UNIVERSAL ATTRACTIONS
565 Fifth Avenue
New York
BEN BART
HARRY LENETSKA

Nilsson Twins

Season's Greetings

BETTY REILLY

RADIO NIGHT CLUB and THEATRE
SENSATION

JUST CONCLUDED
CAPITOL THEATRE, New York
MOUNDS CLUB, Cleveland
EL RANCHO, Las Vegas
EARLE THEATRE, Phila.

CURRENTLY APPEARING
CLOVER CLUB, Miami
Followed by COPACABANA, Chicago
FEBRUARY 25TH

DE LUXE RECORDING ARTIST

FOR AVAILABLE DATES CONTACT HARRY KILBY
GENERAL ARTISTS CORPORATION

THE UNPREDICTABLE

JAYNE MANNERS

CURRENTLY APPEARING
THE
JAYNE MANNERS
ROOM
MIAMI BEACH, FLA.

From One Broadway Institution to Another

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

Variety's the spice of life,
And may its life be long,
We hope a hundred years from now
You'll still be going strong

Albert Lehman
President

HOTEL ASTOR
TIMES SQUARE · NEW YORK
"AT THE CROSSROADS OF THE WORLD"

HOLIDAY GREETINGS

3 SWIFTS

Direction—WILLIAM MORRIS AGENCY

ONE OF AMERICA'S GREAT ENTERTAINING BANDS

AL TRACE

and His SILLY SYMPHONISTS

HAPPY 1947 BY PROF. MARCO

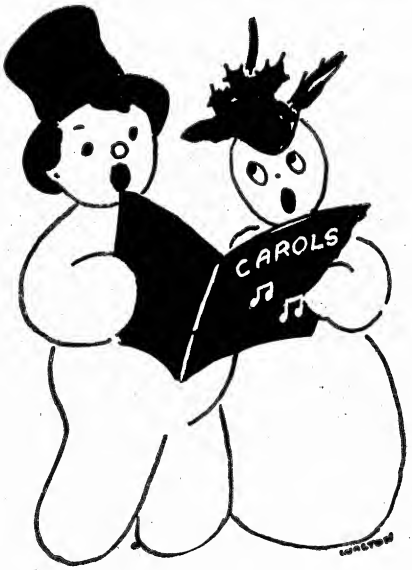
MALINY

World's most outstanding and unusual COMEDY SHADOWGRAPH ACT protected and copyrighted No. 51720.

"If ever an actor STOLE A SHOW it was Prof. MALINY. He STOPPED the show with his shadowgraph. His shadowgraph is so entertaining that you hear people TALKING ABOUT IT LONG AFTER HE'S OFF. Etc." —Miami Herald.

Northern Representative—LAWRENCE GOLDEN, 745 Fifth Ave., New York.
Southern Representative—SID WHITE, 817 Washington Ave., Miami Beach, Fla.
Winter residence—Milady's Water Front Villa, 8250 Byron Ave., Miami Beach, Fla.

BOOKED IN FLORIDA UNTIL APRIL 1st



GREETINGS

Ted and Adah Lewis

Farewell to Lou Walters'

LATIN QUARTER

In New York

Hello to Ralph Berger's

LATIN QUARTER

In Chicago

Direction—M. C. A.

YOUTHFUL DANCE ACT APPEARING IN NIGHT CLUBS, VAUDEVILLE

BILLY JANICE

PIERSON and ELLIOTT

Routined by RAY DODGE, HENRY La LANGE and TOM NIP

Ballet Arrangement — HELEN BARRIE

Management — BILLY JACKSON, Palace Building

COMEDY PATTER

For All Branches of Theatricals

FUN-MASTER GAG FILES

Nos. 1 thru 20 @ $1.00 each
(Nos. 21 thru 25 Ready Soon)

"BOOK OF BLACK-OUTS"

3 Vols. @ $20.00 Per Vol., or $50.00 for 3 Vols.

"BOOK OF PARODIES"

10 Sock Parodies for $10.00

"HOW TO MASTER THE CEREMONIES"

(How to Be an Emcee)
$3.00 Per Copy

No C.O.D.'s on any material! If on route, also send permanent address.

PAULA SMITH
200 W. 54th St., New York 19, N.Y.

. . . and so on thru the year . . . 1946—1947

LARRY STORCH

"Rembrandt of Impressions"

CIRO'S, Hollywood (8 weeks).....Jan.-Feb., 1946
COPACABANA, New York (5 weeks).....March
EARL, Philadelphia (1 week).....April
R.K.O. Boston (1 week).....May STATLER HOTEL, Cleveland (2 weeks).....May
PARAMOUNT, New York (3 weeks).....June
DOWN TOWN, Detroit (1 week).....June
PALMER HOUSE, Chicago (9 weeks).....July-August
STATLER, Detroit (4 weeks).....September
STATLER, Boston (5½ weeks).....October
STATLER, Buffalo (3 weeks).....December
NOW CHICAGO THEATRE, Chicago (3 weeks), opened December 25th

OPENING CLUB CAIRO, WASHINGTON, Jan. 24th, 1947

Management—WILLIAM MORRIS AGENCY

SEASON'S GREETINGS

FRANCES FAYE

"QUEEN OF THE SUPPER CLUBS"

Currently

COPACABANA, MIAMI BEACH
FLORIDA

Exclusive Management
MUSIC CORP. OF AMERICA

HELENE and HOWARD
'Comedy Dance Antics'
HELD OVER 3RD WEEK
GOLDEN GATE THEATRE
San Francisco
DIR.: MATTY ROSEN

Parodies! Special Songs! Bits!
★ Demo from our library, one of the largest, most comprehensive in Showbiz!
★ 1947 Catalog FREE!
★ Exclusive material our specialty!
J. & H. KLEINMAN
25-31-K 30th Road, L. I. City 2, N. Y.
Telephone: Astoria 8-6065

Estates—Want Addresses of:
DAVIS, FRANK: born 1885, circus man.
DEVLIN, HELEN: stage actress (maiden name).
DE BEAUFORTS or DE FOORS: equestrian family.
W. C. COX
200 S. La Salle, Chicago 4

LEONARD GREEN AGENCY, Inc.
139 E. 57th St., N. Y. C. PL. 9-7470

Greetings to Our Many Friends
Throughout the World

BENNY FIELDS

and

BLOSSOM SEELEY

Exclusive Management
WM. MORRIS AGENCY

To VARIETY

CONGRATULATIONS

SOLL ZEIN MIT GLICK

With His EDUCATED DRUMSTICKS

Hey, Pop! Me, Too

HAL HUNTER

Season's Greetings to All Our Friends
Direction: MARK J. LEDDY

Holiday Greetings

PHIL BRITO

Here
There
and Everywhere

it's MAXINE SULLIVAN

America's Foremost Stylist

in PERSONAL APPEARANCES

Currently

VILLAGE VANGUARD

NEW YORK

on RECORDS

THE MAXINE SULLIVAN ALBUM

for INTERNATIONAL RECORDS

now TELEVISION

direction MUSIC CORPORATION of AMERICA

CAPPELLA AND PATRICIA

EMBASSY, N. Y.: "IF PALM POUNDING AND TABLES FULL OF THE CHI-CHI SET WHO ROLL UP BIG TABS MEAN ANYTHING, THEN THE ADDITION OF CAPPELLA AND PATRICIA, DANCE TEAM, SHOULD MEAN A HYPO IN BUSINESS."
BILL SMITH, Billboard

"THEIR BALLROOMOLOGY IS CUT OF THE TOP DRAWER . . . . THEY BROUGHT DOWN THE HOUSE . . . ."
LARY, Variety

"HAD TO ENCORE AGAIN AND AGAIN . . . . ALL THEIR DANCES ARE DARING."
EARL WILSON, N. Y. Post

"PATRICIA IS BY FAR THE BEST-DRESSED DANCER WE'VE SEEN THIS SEASON . . . ."
GEORGES BOURKE, Herald

"CAPPELLA AND PATRICIA ARE DANCING AWAY AT BILL MILLER'S EMBASSY CLUB . . . . PRESENTING HIGHLY INDIVIDUAL ROUTINES IN EVERY TEMPO . . . . THEY EVEN HAVE A 'HAPPY BIRTHDAY TO YOU' NUMBER THAT FOR SHEER JAUNTINESS IS UNSURPASSED . . . . ALWAYS APPEARING AS A VISION OF MOBILE BEAUTY . . . ."
VIRGINIA FORBES, N. Y. Sun

CURTAIN CALLS: "TO CAPPELA AND PATRICIA AT THE EMBASSY."
WALTER WINCHELL

Just Closed a 10-Week Engagement at the EMBASSY CLUB, N. Y.

Thanks To

BILL MILLER BILL FICKS

STEVE EVANS

Offering

HAPPY TIMES & JOLLY MOMENTS

HELD OVER

GOLDEN GATE, SAN FRANCISCO

DIR.: MATTY ROSEN

ROSS W. CHRISTENA AGENCY

Representing

Name bands, name acts, tops in singles cocktail units and outstanding territory bands.

626 Peoples Bank Bldg.
Indianapolis, Ind.

Phones: FR. 5201 - HU. 3520

THE BEST CHEERS OF OUR LIVES...

1940
1941
1942
1943
1944
1945 1946 and heads up for 1947

Monte Proser's

COPACABANA

10 E. 60TH • PL 8-1060

Since 1940 they've opened "Copacabanas" all over the lot... from Slow-Night, Ohio to Button-Up, Dakota! But leave us face it Kids. there's still only ONE "Copa."

MILT BRITTON

And America's Craziest Orchestra

BEST WISHES TO VARIETY

203 N. WABASH BUILDING
CHICAGO

HAL COWAN
MANAGER

Gale

artists representatives
48 west 48th street
new york 19, n. y.
lo. 3-0350

CONGRATULATIONS

VARIETY

BERT WHEELER

MIRIAM LaVELLE

NEWEST DANCING STAR

JUST CONCLUDED

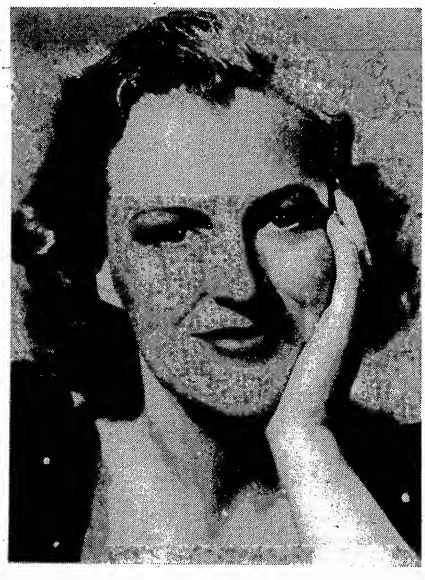
NICKY BLAIR'S
CARNIVAL
NEW YORK

WARNER'S
STRAND
NEW YORK

CURRENTLY

COLONIAL INN
HOLLYWOOD
FLORIDA
INDEFINITELY

Management: WILLIAM MORRIS AGENCY



Season's Greetings from

GRACIE FIELDS

Exclusive Management
WILLIAM MORRIS AGENCY, INC.

The Singing Idol of All the Americas

TITO GUIZAR

FAVORITE OF CONCERT AUDIENCES EVERYWHERE

STAR OF
REPUBLIC PICTURES

STAR OF
MERCURY RECORDS

EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT

MUSIC CORPORATION OF AMERICA

LONDON • NEW YORK • CHICAGO • BEVERLY HILLS • CLEVELAND • DALLAS • SAN FRANCISCO • DETROIT

Congratulations

VARIETY

On Your 41st Anniversary

WILLIE HOWARD

holiday greetings to all our friends

david p. o'malley

associates

doris hurtig

john j. mullaney

mort m. infield

thomas b. martin

david p. o'malley, jr.

203 n. wabash

chicago 1

fra. 5070

BRUNO Hollywood

Photographers

STAGE - SCREEN - RADIO ARTISTS

NEW YORK STUDIO

154 West 57th Street

DELIGHTFULLY AIR-CONDITIONED

PHONE CIRCLE 7-3505

BOSTON STUDIO - LENOX HOTEL

Phone for Appointment: Kenmore 5-300

NEW YORK BOSTON

George Guest

THE MODERN MASTER OF THE MARIMBA

Opened Jan. 5
GAYETY, MONTREAL
Opening Jan. 13-26
KING EDWARD HOTEL
Toronto

Season's Greetings

JOE E. LEWIS

Galloping Merrily with AUSTIN MACK Up at the STEINWAY

• 4th return engagement Roxy, New York. • Played to capacity houses on recent South American tour and booked to return in mid 1947. • Starting on a concert tour of the United States commencing January 6. Finishing at Carnegie Hall, New York. • Appearing in MGM, Warner Bros. and Universal pictures as dancing stars. • Appeared at Waldorf-Astoria, Persian Room, Palmer House, Mark Hopkins Hotel and many others too numerous to mention.

• Exclusive management Marcel Ventura, Waldorf-Astoria, New York college inn

Presents
the greatest name-band parade in the world

cab calloway claude thornhill victor lombardo raymond scott

hotel sherman

1450 rooms
1450 baths
rates from $2.75
randolph, clark, lake and la salle
chicago

Tooters' Rush To Gold Coast Ends

Hollywood.

With scarcely a score of out-of town musicians requesting transfers into Local 47 here during December, it is believed the great wave of windjammers flooding in here definitely has waned. Influx started at war's end and for a long while hundreds migrated monthly.

Probably word has seeped out that there are only about 4,500 steady jobs here, although Local 47 now has 13,600 members. During the entire past year fewer than 140 musicians requested cards switched to locals elsewhere.

At times some members of Local 47 have gritted their teeth as they grew more and more cognizant of arrival and acceptance here of out-of-town card-carriers, but with American Federation of Musicians having a by-law which states a request for transfer must be given any member of Federation in good standing, Local here can do nothing to alleviate the situation.

L. A. TERPALACES DROP REMOTES, HYPO SPOTS

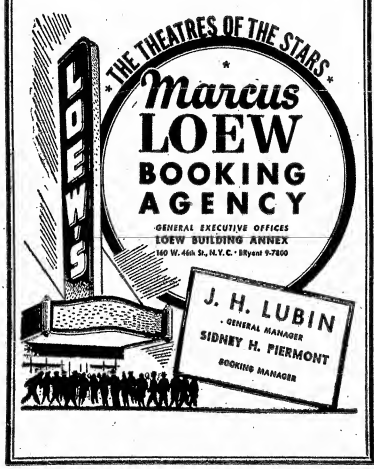
Hollywood.

Sharp change has set in here regarding ballrooms' evaluation of remote radio wires. Scant six months ago the spots fought over air slottings, but a combination of blitzed b.o. and quiet reflection has changed opinions. Meadowbrook's contract for six remotes weekly over Mutual has expired and terpalace will not renew, preferring to allocate the $200 weekly formerly spent in wire costs to spot plugs over local stations.

Avodon has sliced in half its web remotes, and what it has saved has been earmarked for local disk jockey jogs. Biltmore Bowl has been cancelling off NBC of late and when web drops a Bowl remote, hotel does no beefing.

Conversely, it is probable that both Palladium and Cocoanut Grove zealously will hold onto their remotes, since both spots believe the the country pays off when tourists trip to town, not to mention the desires of names which play the spot. Rival hoofing halls, however, have grown more and more conscious of purely local listeners, if they are interested in radio at all at present with biz so blowzy.

Ballrooms have been furiously beetling their brows because bandleaders habitually use same sets for their remote broadcasts night after night; or else, the complaint reads, a batoneer who has an interest in a music pub firm, primarily wants to plug company's wares. There also has been vigorous griping because Don Lee net has forbidden customer applause, whistling or shouting as remote fades on and off ether. Incidentally, the Western Ballroom Operators' Assn. is now busy drawing up a "model" contract, which it hopes to interest booking agencies in adopting as standard on Coast, will insert a clause prohibiting leaders from using same sets time upon time on remotes.



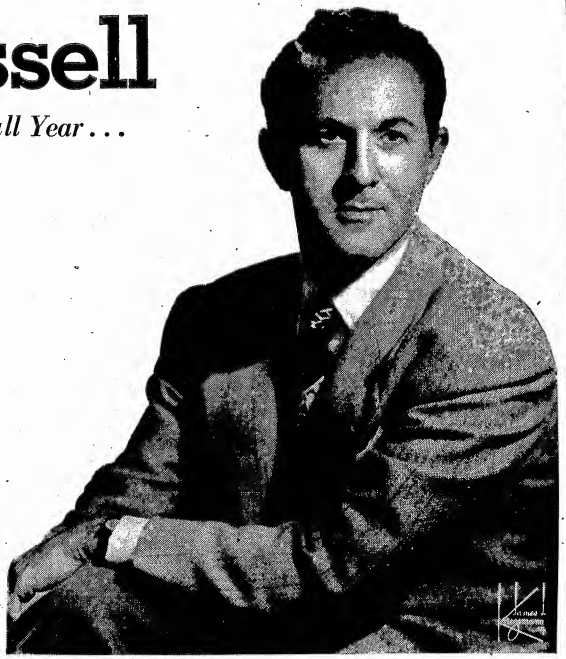
GREETINGS.
PAUL MARR
AND ASSOCIATES
BEE SARCHE-EDWARD BAETZEL.
203 N. WABASH
CHICAGO

Holiday Greetings
THE MACK TRIPLETS
Eileen — La Verne — Charlotte
JUST CONCLUDED
WEEK LOEW'S STATE, N. Y.
NOW AT CLUB BILMONICO
WASHINGTON, D. C.
Personal Management
PHIL FARRELL

JERRY BERGEN
NOW APPEARING
LATIN QUARTER
BOSTON
Direction
MILES INGALLS
JOE FLAUM, Associate

bob russell

An Appreciation Of A Full Year . . .



"Passing Show of 1946"

Belmont-Plaza Hotel, N. Y.
(Held Over 20 Weeks)

Statler Hotel, Cleveland

Clover Club, Miami

Peacock Club, Jacksonville

El Morocco, Montreal

"Miss America" Pageant
(Director, Producer and M.C. for 7th Straight Year)

"Mrs. America" Contest
(Producer, Director, M.C.)

. . . And Many Thanks to Johnny Greenhut (MCA), Harry Kilby and Val Irving (General Artists), Dick Henry (Wm. Morris)

CURRENTY RE-ENGAGED
BELMONT-PLAZA HOTEL, NEW YORK

GREETINGS
TO ALL MY FRIENDS

ELLY ARDELTY

58 WEEKS AT
NICKY BLAIR'S CARNIVAL
NEW YORK

Thanks to
HANS LEDERER and WM. MORRIS AGENCY

WHAT D'YA
KNOW . . .
From JOE!
HERE'S AN AD

STILL BOOKING
'THE BEST' IN
THE BEST PLACES

JOE HILLER
AGENCY
Century Bldg. - Pittsburgh, Pa.

Office:
National Theatrical Exchange

Have many ideas for Films, Radio, Books, Plays, Musical Comedy, Revue, Publishing, Sports, Recording, Invention, Advertising and Television.

IRVING CHANSKY
558 Main St. Stamford, Conn.

Season's Greetings

COOKIE BOWERS

BEN SHANIN
My Man

OLYMPIA THEATRE
February 5
MIAMI, FLA.

Of All 57, You're Still Our Favorite

VARIETY

LEON & EDDIE'S

"THE TOAST OF TWO CITIES"

NEW YORK CITY
33 W. 52nd St.

PALM BEACH, FLA.*
211 Royal Poncianna Way

(For the Ultimate in Food, Dance Music and Atmosphere, visit the new Palm Beach Leon & Eddie's.)*

Night Club Reviews

Copacabana, N. Y.

Monte Proser presentation of Winter edition of the Copa Revue with Sid Caesar, Mary Raye & Naldi, Gayle Robbins, Bill Shirley, Sansteen & Dachau, Line (8), Fernando Alverez Samba Orch, Michael Durso Orch; staged by Douglas Coudy; costumes by Billy Livingston; music and lyrics by Bob Hilliard & Sammy Mysels; $3.50 min.

The Copa's winter edition is one of the most talent-laden layouts in the saloon sector, presenting new and refreshing faces along with recognized show values. It's a display which should keep Monte Proser's dungeon in the upper brackets for its duration.

The layout could also be construed as a lesson to other bonifaces. While most operators are bemoaning the attraction shortage, Proser lined up the bulk of his show during his Coast visits. True, Proser is also in the film business, but between takes and retakes he managed to find enough time to make deals with Sid Caesar, Bill Shirley and Gayle Robbins both of whom will probably emerge as important names after their Copa stand.

Career of Caesar will probably parallel that of Peter Lind Hayes, who also broke into the upper brackets after his Copa run. Caesar has genuine comedic talents that depends on characterization rather than gags. It's the type of material that will probably distinguish him from other funnymen because of the fact that this kind of antics isn't easily lifted. Saloon society can get something different out of Caesar's turn. He opens with film bit that he did in Columbia's edition of "Tars and Spars," does a routine of a Frenchmen dating a dame, impression of a slot machine gone wrong and contrasts the English and Russian styles of acting. It's boffola.

Bill Shirley and Gayle Robbins (New Acts) give considerable lift to the production and hold up a neat spot on their own. Shirley displays one of the strongest legit voices to be heard in a cafe. Now that he's so strong a click, it would improve his value if he were dismissed from the assignment of chanting the production number after he wows the crowd. Miss Gayle suffered because of the fact that she followed Raye and Naldi, but was soon able to get the mob on her side. Starting with more appropriate numbers would aid her considerably, but she's strong here, nonetheless.

Apparently Proser was slightly apprehensive of the strength of his newcomers. For insurance he added Ray and Naldi, one of the top ballroom teams extant. Their ethereal slow terp to "Moonlight Sonata," a flamenco number; "Beguine," short versions of "Violetera," "Minute Waltz" and a paso doble virtually stop the show. They provide added values to the display.

Production terps are by Sansteen and Dachau, a winsome team whose routines are limited by the production demands. They show ballet training and have a flair for interpretation, and could work themselves into a solo spot here, but for time limitations.

Costuming and routining of an eight-girl line is colorful and sprightly. Doug Coudy's routines are up to par of previous Copa editions and Billy Livingston's garb designs are topnotch. Score by Bob Hilliard and Sammy Mysels is also excellent. Their "One Brazilian in a Million" as knocked off by Fernando Alverez suggests that it could take the place of the "Coffee Song" (which also had its genesis at the Copa) on the Hit Parade. Michael Durso's band and the samba crew of Alverez amply fill the musical assignments.

Jose.

Clover Club, Miami

Miami.

Jack Marshall, Betty Reilly, Copsey & Ayres, Norman Lawrence, Marilyn Hale, Line (6), Ken Delaney and Tony Lopez Orchs; min. $2-$3.

It might have been opening night jitters, or perhaps following the unimaginative production numbers Boots McKenna handed the group, but debut of this lineup was marred by a recurring flatness which didn't befit the obvious talents of the featured acts.

Jack Marshall, making his reentry into local nitery competish, still has that flair for character impreshes which always marked his work. Guy seemed nervous, though, and for no reason, for the crowd was with him all the way. Tops his original and well-blended stint with his standard Butchy McGurk, the lovable jerk. With a few shows under his belt he should be hitting on all laugh cylinders. He's a refreshing comic who wisely eschews gags to concentrate on the takeoffs.

Betty Reilly, the Mexico-Irish thrush, too, seemed a bit off at first. Got rolling in good fashion though, with her mixture of Irish, Latin and Yiddish songs for solid returns.

Standout are Copsey and Ayres with their Balinese boogie. Costuming enhances the overall effect, with the routining showing careful and imaginative staging, along with the nifty music-background utilized. Had to beg off.

Norman Lawrence emcees nicely and in own spot sings his musicomedy standards for hearty returns. Marilyn Hale hoofs with the line, the group showing nothing. Perhaps it was the uninspired McKenna staging. None of their stuff came off.

Ken Delaney and Tony Lopez split the showcutting chores, with both doing a good job.

Lary.

Satire Room, Boston

(HOTEL FENSGATE)

Boston.

Frances Wayne, Ed Harrington Quartet; $3 min.

Former Woody Herman warbler, Frances Wayne making first boite solo here, returning to native city for the job. Stands up plenty well on own, doing a smart job of entertaining with a nice assortment of pop tunes.

Gal, figured Esquire's best for '46 on basis of the "Cabin in the Sky" tune "Happiness Is a Thing Named Joe," brings an intimate, personal flavor to her warbling, being seductive without giving out with the sloe eyes, and warm without wringing out the mike. Doesn't do any patter, either. Just sings, doing anywhere from four to 10 songs depending on response.

Did "Just One of Those Things," "You Go To My Head," "Gal in Calico" and "The Man I Love" when caught. Biz was offish, but customers like it fine. She was accompanied by Ed Harrington Quartet, a combo consisting of piano, bass, and vibraharp. (The fourth, a warbler named Doris Altier who has a nice style herself, and does a little drumming on a snare).

A nice show, well suited to the small lounge type bistro, and properly intime.

Elie.

Esquire, Mont'l

Montreal.

Bob Sheppard, Olsen & Joy, Doris Abbott, Line (10), Armand Meerte Orch (12); $1 min.

Esquire comes up with a pleasant enough layout featuring return of Olsen & Joy, dancers, and Bob Sheppard in the comedy slot.

Olsen & Joy, always a fave locally, do much the same stuff they've done before but it's still socko. Only flaw in the stint is that it could be lengthened somewhat. Sailor routine is again their ace-in-the-hole and garners hefty palming.

Bob Sheppard's comediantics click nicely, but delivery could be slowed somewhat for better results. Guy emcees the layout in okay fashion and in his own stint shows up with some new material. Routine of the guy looking for a job is good for solid yocks.

Doris Abbott makes nice impression with a nifty pair of soprano pipes with coloratura effects. "Feel a Song Coming On" is her so-so opener but she builds nicely to some trick vocalizing in the higher tones. "All of a Sudden" registers and is followed by clever arrangement of "Mocking Bird." Gal's selling is basically good but a little unsure. Beatrice Kay takeoff could well be eliminated.

Line is the best in town, easy on the eyes and nicely routined. Meerte's band cuts the show okay. Biz n.s.g.

Laza.

House Reviews

State, N. Y.

Paul Small's "Show Time of 1947" with Slate Bros. (3) with Fay Carroll, Ladd Lyon, Lucienne & Ashour, Betty Jane Smith, Dorothy Byton Line (12); "Return of Monte Cristo" (Col), reviewed in VARIETY, Nov. 27, '46.

Paul Small, who some years ago produced a series of two-a-day vauders for legit houses, is tapping the four-a-day field with a fast-moving and colorfully produced unit, "Show Time," which for its $7,500 retailing price should make a good splash in the deluxers.

Unit while shy in name values, isn't failing in its entertainment strength. The acts offer sufficient variety, production numbers are ample and stage-filling, and there's plenty scenery and care in production to suit vaude demands.

For New York consumption, there's only one failing. The Slate Bros. between appearances at this house and the Capitol, are too familiar to the State's regular trade. Their penny-arcade bit and some of their other routines have been seen here too frequently and results are not as forte as they should be. However, their asides and kidding with Fay Carroll, still hit the crowds and at times during their split-up turn, they get sock response.

Their new bits go big. Takeoff on the Lucienne and Ashour apache number is a chuckle-provoking item. L&A mayhem terps give audience satisfaction while Betty Jane Smith rounds out the dance department with a series of well-executed taps distinguished by fast spins and good routines.

Novelty is by Ladd Lyon whose acro work with two audience plants is up to his usual par.

Production numbers by Dorothy Byton are pretty diversified. The dozen femmes open with an acro tumbling number that must have been inspired by Sam Abdullah, a fan number, stilt routine and the inevitable Latin terp chore. Costuming is okay.

The unit could have used another skit or two inasmuch as the familiar movie stand-in bit with the Slate Bros. showed up extremely well.

Jose.

RKO, Boston

Boston.

Prof. Lamberti, Sibyl Bowan, Boy Foy, Tommy Dix, Dorio Windsor dancers; Larry Flint House Orch; "Nocturne" (RKO).

Back to a straight vaude this week but anything with Prof. Lamberti and Sibyl Bowan stacks up to a sock layout, and this one clicks.

Lamberti, improving on each visit, pulls usual assortment of drolleries with his trick xylophoneries, walk-acrosses and so forth, wowing from start to finish. Material doesn't change too much, but it doesn't have to. More or less ditto for Miss Bowman, back with an impresh of Hildegarde that panics the customers, while the old nurse routine and other oldies also score. Audience goes big for her monologs and gives her a begoff as usual.

Dorio Windsor dancers, two boys and a gal, do a trick dance routine with phony arms ending up in a strip with East Indian costumes that is bright and finish with good adagio stuff. Boy Foy, juggling on a unicycle, likewise fast and plenty skillful, and Tommy Dix, diminutive but with a big baritone, does "Buckle Down Winsocki," "Begin the Beguine," "Tain't Necessarily So" and "Old Man River" for a good reception. He's backed up nicely by Larry Flint's house band.

Biz pretty good.

Elie.

New Acts

BILL SHIRLEY
Songs
9 Mins.
Copacabana, N. Y.

Bill Shirley, who's been around Hollywood waiting for film assignments until Monte Proser convinced him he should attempt a slice of cafe income, is one of the most impressive vocal newcomers to hit New York in some time. He has a studied, cultural voice which in its present development is ripe for legit shows. Delivery is strong and he has the looks and personality to put him in the top income brackets. Proser is sufficiently impressed with the lad to have become his personal manager.

Shirley, aside from lending strength to the Copa's production numbers, makes a strong dent on audience receptivity with renditions of "All the Things You Are," "Rose By Any Other Name" and "Granadas."

Jose.

GAYLE ROBBINS
Songs
8 Mins.
Copacabana, N. Y.

Gayle Robbins, who started as a band vocalist, has progressed to the point where she can hold a spot of her own in a cafe, and seems ripe for vaude or films. She's a blonde stunner, with a chassis that takes to gowns nicely, and she imparts a warm and sultry quality to.

There's still some things she has to get, such as more savvy in the selection of her material. In her present status, she should stick to proven hits or standards. But it takes her little time to get started and once she goes into ballads she imparts melodic pash in her numbers. Winds up with a migratory mike stint to "Coax Me a Little Bit" which gives her ample opportunity to impress her figure on the ringsiders.

Jose.

JOHNNY MACK
DANCE
8 Mins.
Strand, N. Y.

Johnny Mack's excellent tap routines form the only outside accompaniment at this house to a crack hour of entertainment by Vaughn Monroe's orchestra. Working up near the opening, Mack clicks big with a pair of cleverly worked out routines that give him wide opportunity to demonstrate a terp ability far above average.

In the first bit, a fast tap, Mack uses a gimmick that adds considerable lustre. He works with a walking stick that seems to float in midair while following through his gyrations. It has an unusual effect on an audience. Since Mack himself seems to be oblivious of it, patrons seem to think they're seeing things.

A tall, dark, nice-looking hoofer in dinner jacket, Mack makes a fine appearance. Combined with his work it all adds up to an act that'll fit anywhere.

Wood.

Variety Bills

WEEK OF JANUARY 8

Numerals in connection with bills below indicate opening day of show, whether full or split week.
Letters in parenthesis indicate circuit. (I) Independent; (L) Loew; (P) Paramount; (R) RKO; (W) Warner

NEW YORK CITY
Capitol (L) 8
Tommy Dorsey Orc
Jack Carter
Virginia Austin
Music Hall (I) 1
Nonchalants
Shyrettos
Rockettes
Corps de Ballet
Sym Orc
Paramount (P) 10
Tony Pastor Bd
Andrews Sis
Les Paul 3
Mack & Desmond
Martin Bros
Roxy (I) 8.
Roberto & Alicia
Wences
Bob Hannon
Emma Otero
Tommy Trent
State (L) 9
Jimmy Palmer Orc
Roy Smeck
Jean Carroll
Olsen & Joy
Ben Dova
Strand (W) 9
Vaughn Monroe O
Johnny Mack
BRONX
Windsor (I) 11-12
Marty Barrett
Dudley's Midgets
Elsa Greenwell
Wally Kibbler
Al & J'n Johnston
B'KLYN
Flatbush (I) 11-12
Tip, Tap & Toe
Faye & Andre
Lee Noble
Burton & Janet
1 to fill
QUEENS
Jamaica (I) 9-11
Bud Sweeney
Robert Field
Sherman Bros & T
The Delmartins
The Jacksons
Johnny Johnston
Fontaines
Pat Hill
Jan Murray
HARTFORD
State (I) 10-12
E Lawrence Orc
Mille Bros
Tim Herbert
HOLYOKE
Valley Arena (I) 12
Raym'd Scott Orc
Bud Sweeney
4 to fill
INDIANAPOLIS
Circle (I) 8
Freddie Slack Orc
Ella Mae Morse
F Bartholomew
Barr & Estes
MIAMI
Olympia (P) 8
The Therons
Stan Kramer
Harry Martin Co
Phil Brito
Walter Dare Wahl
NEWARK
Adams (I) 9
S Chile Robinson S
Cy Reeves
Gil Maison
4 Whirlwinds
Monica Lewis
NEW BEDFORD
Baliss Sq (I) 9-11
Anthony & Rogers
The Kayoe
Germaine
Sally Marcella
T Alvarado Co
PATERSON
Majestic (I) 9-12
Cole Sis
Ginny Lowery
Sid Stone Co
Randy Crane
3 Edwards Bros
(13-15)
Dobas Duo
Frances Martin
Clem Billings
Joe Martin
Margaret Phelan
Carmen Sol
Catalino Orc
Carlos Varela Orc
Belmont-Plaza
Blair & Dean
Frakson
Bob Russell
Eddie Stone Orc
Nino Bd
Hotel Commodore.
Johnny Long Orc
Hotel Dixie
Don Bester Orc
Kay Hammond
Lou Soiler
Dean & Ray
Hotel New Yorker
Sammy Kaye Orc
Marion Spelman
June Arnold
Bissell & Farley
Alice Farrar
Bob Turk
Hotel Pennsylvania
Charlie Spivak Orc
Hotel Pierre
L & E Roberts
Chas Reader Orc
Hotel Plaza
Hildegarde
Hal Kanner Orc
Monte Orc
Hotel Roosevelt
Guy Lombardo Orc
Hotel Taft
Enoch Light Orc
Waldorf-Astoria
Myrus
Deering & Lang
John Molinari
Emil Coleman Orc
Mischa Borr Orc
Rogers Corner
Bananas' Orc
Al Morgan
Mattie Sondi
Steve Richards
Toni Palmer
Henry LaMarr
Ruban Bleu
Marais & Miranda
Muriel Gaines
Gloria King
Cedric Wallace 3
Leonard Elliott
4 Notes
Versailles
Jean Sablon
Emil Petti Orc
Panchito Orc
Village Barn
Zeb Carver
Garlands
Alicia Wallace
Bert Stone
Patsy Lane
Jimmy Nola
Tex Fletcher
Village Vanguard
Maxine Sullivan
Josephine Premice
Pete Seeger
Don Frye
Eddie Gibbs
Wivel
Bob Lee
Gertrude Hild
Jean Ainslie
Francisco
Bruce Norman
Vivian Nickolson
D'Rivero & Belm'te
Zimmerman's
Gene Kardos
Janczi Makula
Zsiga Bela
Paul Arnold
Sinclair & Alda
Helen Wenzel
Olga Orlova

CHICAGO

Blackhawk
Russ Carlyle Orc
Geneve Dorn
Woo Woo Stevens
Chez Paree
Tony Martin
Pearl Bailey
Jack Cole
June Edwards
Gay Claridge Orc
Adorables (12)
Lucio Garcia Orc
Colosimo's
Rynn Bros
The Gascas
E't'la Julo Pn'cho
Keith Models
Marie Shaw
Sol Feola Orc
Copacabana
Frank Parker
Frank Libuse
Chuy Reyes Orc
Arne Barnett Orc
Cerney Twins
Wells & Fayes
Jimmie Burrell
Marianne
Hotel Bismarck
Joseph Sudy Orc
Gantu
Gaywoods
Lenore
Annette Olsen
Montero & Yvonne
Eddie Fens Orc
Hotel Blackstone
Hartmans
Ramos Orch
Hotel Congress
Harding & Moss
Milt Herth Trio
Margie Fields
Kiki Ochart Orc
Hotel Continental
Za Bach's Orc
Marianne Fedele
Sheldon Reed
H Edgewater Be'ch
Stephen Kisley Orc
Morgan D'cers
Sensationalists
Sharkey
Song Stylists
Loulee Gleen
Jan Stewart
Preston Lambert
Hotel Sherman
Glen Gray Orc
Carl Marx
Phil Gordon
College Inn Models
Hotel Stevens
Clyde McCoy Orc
Dennis Kelly
Billie Dennett
Wesley Lundgreen
Boulevar-Dears
Latin Quarter
Maurice Rocco
Latin Lovelies
Geno Baylos
The Wiles (3)
Paul Carleton
Buddy Shaw Orc
Palmer House
Evelyn Knight
Freddie Nagel Orc
Rolly Rolls
Blackburn (2)
Abbott D'ncers (12)
Rio Cabana
Jerry Lester
Berry Bros.
Terry Lawlor
Don Bradfield
The Lovelies (10)
Cee Davidson Orc
Vine Gardens
Jessie Rosella
Bill Meagher
Tamara & Thomas
Jill Fontaine
Francisco
Joe Kish Orc
Mel Cole Orc

THE LES GHEZZI'S
NOW AT OLYMPIA THEATRE
MIAMI
Per Mgt: EDDIE SMITH
1501 Broadway, New York

BALTIMORE
Hippodrome (I) 7
Jack Leonard
Raye & Nardo
Muriah Sis
State (I) 9-11
Steve & B Stevens
Janet Lee
Gary Allen
Dobas Duo
BOSTON
Keith's (R) 9
Duke Ellington Orc
Fred Douglas
Peck & Peck
Howell & Bowser
BOUND BROOK
Brook (I) 11-12
Martell Bros
Palmer Sis
Grace Dall
2 to fill
CAMDEN
Towers (I) 10-12
Holloway Sis
Jules & Tita
Andy Arcari
Harry Holly Co
3 Jansleys
CHICAGO
Chicago (P) 10
Burl Ives
Lorraine Rognan
Pat McCaffrie
Whaling & Yvette.
Larry Storch
CINCINNATI
Albee (R) 9
Kathryn Grayson
1 to fill
PAWTUCKET
Capitol (I) 12
George Froems
Al & Con Fanton
Anthony & Rogers
Sally Marcella
Tommy Alvarado
PHILA
Carman (I) 9
Montana Kid
B York & B Pearce
Ducat & Kayo
Arno Bennett
Earle (W) 10
King Cole Trio
Luis Russell Orc
Dusty Fletcher
Edwards Sis
SAN FRANCISCO
Golden Gate (R) 7
Titans
Helene & Howard
Herb Shriner
Merry Mace
SPRINGFIELD
Court Sq (I) 9-12
Coco Steve & Eddy
Roslyn Page
Pritchard & Lord
Ginn & Perroni
The Ciro's
Chris Cross
WASHINGTON
Capitol (L) 9
Stan Kenton Orc
Steve Evans
Meribeth Old

Cabaret Bills

NEW YORK CITY

Aquarium
Gene Krupa
Blue Angel
John Buckmaster
Alys Robi
Vicente Gomez
Joan Nickol
Stuart Ross
Ellis Larkin 3
Golden Gate 4
Cafe Society (Downtown)
Jimmie Rogers
Susan Reed
Cliff Jackson
J C Heard Orc
Cafe Society (Uptown)
Django Reinhardt
Imogene Coca
Roberta Lee
Pete Johnson
Dave Martin 3
Edmund Hall
China Doll
George Wong Tr
Frances Chun
Tai Sings
Ming Ling
Jose Curbello Orc
Copacabana
Sid Caesar
Bill Shirley
Raye & Naldi
Gayle Robbins
Sonsteen & Dachau
Michael Durso Orc
Fernando Alverez O
Diamond Horseshoe
Sirl
Herman Hyde
Turner Twins
Rosebuds
Jackie Gleason
Billy Banks
Hal Hunter
Tables Davis
Renald & Rudy
Jack Mathore
Noble Sissle Orc
Syd Strange Orc
El Chico
Rosita Rios
Miguel & Albaicin
Chelo Villareal
Iceland
Ice Revue
P Whiteman Jr Or
Kelly's Stable
Roy Sedley
Fatso Marco
Dorothy Manners
Hal Hixon
George Maran
La Conga
Irma Henriquez
Machito Orc
Pupi Campo Orc
La Martinique
Vic Damone
Phil Foster
Jane Dulo
Ernie Stuart Orc
Latin Quarter
Henny Youngman
George Tapps
Dick Buckley
Arnaut Bros
Myrtil & Picaud
Chic Gladke
4 Esquires
Wanger Line
Leon & Eddie's
Eddie Davis
Burke Twins
Franklin 2
Leblanca & Garcia
Sherry Britton
Art Waner Orc
Monte Carlo
Dick Gasparre O
Roberto
Siboney
Old Romanian
Jackie Phillips
Sadie Banks
Nina Dover
Alice King
Bobby Harrell
Joe La Porte Orc
Rogers Corner
Kernels of Corn
Hal Aloma
Gay Blades
Don Baker
Don De Vod Orc
Sieto Trio
Embassy
Chu Chu Martinez
Capella & Patricia
Ralph Font Orc
Arthur Ravel Orc
400 Club
Tex Beneke Orc
G'wich Village Inn
N T G Revue
Frankie Hyers
Chavez Orc
Ned Harvey Orc
Havana-Madrid
Paco Reyes
Gloria Lebran

ATLANTIC CITY WALK STILL NABS TOP B.O.

Atlantic City.

The amusement business has and always will play a second fiddle here to the surf and sand and Atlantic City's famous boardwalk. Old amusement men know this. Those new in show business try to compete with Mother Nature, and lose their shirts.

Only when Old Sol has set into the bay landward has show business, with one or two exceptions, much of a chance. The beach is then deserted, and only the Boardwalk remains to draw the bulk of the visitors. But even in the off season the walk and beach are competition, for the weather here is mild throughout the year and the long rows of beach chairs on the sand exposed to the sun and protected from the wind prove a mecca for lovers of sunshine.

With such competition, for more than three quarters of a century show business has done its best to collect the greatest take possible from the visitor and resident, whose numbers have increased yearly. In contrast, the larger the crowds have grown, the smaller the per capita spending. Today the crowds as a whole seem to spend less than at any time in the resort's history.

A glimpse of the ups and downs of amusement attractions here is interesting. In the early days the hotels offered their own amusements. These usually consisted of dancing in their private ballrooms, often the cleared dining room, with vaudeville acts, etc. Guests gradually got away from the hotel entertainment, to find their own outside. And so gradually the amusement business grew. Like any other business its attractions blossomed, and then declined for other attractions which drew the crowds.

About Revivals

Bert Lahr in 'Burlesque' an Argument for Not Neglecting Big Talents

By ARTHUR HOPKINS

These are the days of reconversion and revivals. Both are the putting to new use of old materials. Sometimes the old materials are better than anything new that is available. It is not hard to think of a few old plays that have more vitality than much of the new material that is being offered. Plays are not dead until they can no longer be made to live. It is sometimes more difficult to bring a new manuscript to life than it is to set an old one ticking, so the test of a play's possibilities has less to do with age than vigor. Plays born with weak gland systems will totter long before their better equipped elders.

There is a tendency to deplore the use of theatres to the neglect of new playwrights. What about the neglect of valuable acting talents that are offered no present opportunity.

Bert Lahr is a case in point. One of the last of a great school of comedians, is it for the good of the theatre to have him wasted while there are parts in the library that would bring to life to the delight of many who are still more interested in the actor than his vehicle?

"If new playwrights are making no use of Lahr, is he to burn to radio or pictures, or sit at home working out cross-word puzzles?

Happily for Lahr and theatregoers there are old parts that he can make live again. In playing "Burlesque" Lahr's talents are not only again to be enjoyed, but in creating the part of Skid he reveals talents that at once make him available for new plays for which he would not previously have been considered. Some future new play may well be saved by the fact that Lahr's potentialities were first revealed in an old play.

There was a long search for an actor for the play "Harvey." One look at Lahr in "Burlesque" reveals that there need have been no problem at all if Lahr's gifts had been fully known.

I can think of no better reason for revivals than the chance they give to expand the actor's universe.

This theatre is the actor's medium as well as the playwright's, and anything it does to fortify either is to the benefit of both.

Barrymore and Sheldon

John Barrymore found himself in an old play, "Justice." Up to that time he had not thought of himself as a serious actor, or the theatre as a serious place.

There was one man who knew Jack better than he knew himself, and that was Edward Seldon. But for Sheldon and a revival, John Barrymore would never have discovered the great gifts that were his and the richest period of the theatre in our time would not have come into being.

Had Barrymore remained in the theatre his talents would have brought into rich being new plays. One of the early plays on our schedule was the then unknown "Lilion."

Playwrights are constantly troubled with the thought of writing parts for whom there are no actors. They, above all others, should encourage any theatre activity that reveals new talents, whether they be shown by newcomers or long established actors.

The news of the "Burlesque" revival is Bert Lahr. It is fitting that on Christmas Night a star of new magnitude should shine over the theatre.

Ziegfeld To Stay Dark Until 'Brigadoon' Arrival

Next attraction at the Ziegfeld, N.Y., which went dark Saturday (4) when "Show Boat" completed a year's run, will be "Brigadoon," a musical comedy to be presented by Cheryl Crawford. Book and lyrics are by Alan Jay Lerner, with music by Frederick Loewe, show being due to open on Broadway about the third week in February.

House will remain dark until the new tuner arrives. Miss Crawford is associated with Eva Le Gallienne and Margaret Webster in directing the America Repertory Theatre at the International, but they are not managerial participants in "Brigadoon."

I Remember Bobby

By HOWARD LINDSAY

In the program biographies of actors, there is beginning to creep in a recurrent note. "He started his areer playing in 'Life With Father'." Miss Stickney and I have many fond memories of the boys who played our children at the Empire theatre, while we were pretending to be their Father and Mother. But the one who lives in my memory most sharply is Bobby.

Bobby came to us just after he reached seven years of age, which is the minimum limit for children to begin acting in the theatre in New York State. At his first rehearsal, Bobby was asked: "Don't you think this is going to be fun?" He answered: "No, I would rather be playing in the park." It wasn't long before Bobby discovered that he would rather be playing at the Empire theatre than in Central Park.

I tried to establish cordial relations with Bobby. I would greet him each night and would ask how he was. His answers were monosyllabic. After several weeks, I discovered that Bobby did not want cordial relations with me. He didn't want any relations at all. I discovered that if I pretended that offstage Bobby didn't exist, Bobby would similarly agree that I didn't exist. There was no coolness between us. We didn't snub each other. Bobby was never ill-tempered or bad-mannered. He wanted to be ignored by me and he wanted the privilege of ignoring me. On that basis we got along famously. We continued to be invisible to each other for over two years.

The first year he was with us, Bobby really enjoyed playing "Harlan," who is the youngest of the three boys. Then he became old enough so that he could also play "Whitney," the next older boy. The way we worked things in "Life With Father" was this: We had a very young boy play "Harlan." A much older boy played "Whitney," and a third boy who could play either "Harlan" or "Whitney." This boy would play "Harlan" one week and "Whitney" the following week and act as understudy the third week. This meant that each of the three

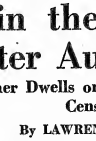
(Continued on page 289)

Freedom in the Theatre Creates Greater Author Vitality

Theatre Guild's Langner Dwells on Craft Unions Dictatorships, Critics, Censorship

By LAWRENCE LANGNER

Not long ago I wrote an article for The New York Times urging that the theatre be kept free for every kind of play, so that we might continue to foster the kind of excitement in the theatre which produces important plays and important productions, in contrast to the stereotyped and inhibited productions in countries such as Russia, where the playwright is the servant of the State, and attempts to harness his artistry to politics, as was recently set forth in an article by Simonov, the noted Russian journalist-playwright. I received an embittered letter from an indignant reader stating that the trouble with the American theatre was that we were in need of violence, and it would do us all good to have a dictator for five years who would tell us the kind of plays to put on. This letter has led me again to evaluate what we have in our theatre without violence and without a dictator, and has resulted in certain conclusions.



Lawrence Langner

On the subject of censorship, for instance, most of the people of the stage have sufficient respect for it to see that the theatre isn't used for the expression of obscenity and lewdness. What constitutes this is a matter of opinion. When a person sets himself up as a censor-dictator, the decent people of the theatre must necessarily attack him because, much as they may object to the play itself, still more must they object to a dictatorship of the theatre. Thus a producer often finds himself in the position of defending the production of a play which he himself would under no circumstances produce. The laws of this state definitely require amendment at this time to insure that the manager and author may have their day in court, and have the question of whether their play outrages public decency decided by a jury instead of by a political appointee, such as the license commissioner, who, no matter how liberal he may be in his views, is subject to all kinds of pressures and criticisms.

But censorship is only one form of dictatorship to which our theatre can be subject. For instance, there is the dictatorship of the stagehands' union, which does not give the younger generation an opportunity to begin in the theatre in the same way that the Theatre Guild and its predecessor, the Washington Square Players, broke into the theatre.

When the Washington Square Players started to work at the Bandbox theatre, thanks to the wisdom of the guiding heads of the stagehands union, they did not then require the use of a crew of union men. Thus, the Washington Square Players were enabled to start charging 50c admission, and after they got on their feet, they moved to the Comedy theatre in the Broadway district, where they were able to pay full union rates, and did so. The group was reorganized as the Theatre Guild, and since that time has employed more members of the stagehands and musicians unions than any other theatrical organization in America. If the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees had insisted on full stagehand crews at the Bandbox theatre, the Theatre Guild could never have been started.

I am inclined to believe that the same great wisdom which led the crafts unions to permit little experimental theatres, like the Bandbox theatre and the Provincetown theatre, to flourish, and allowed the young people to come into the theatre, still exists in the unions, but that they have not given full weight to the importance of allowing such experimentation in relation to getting future jobs for union men. It seems to me that all the new young theatrical ventures in New York of an experimental nature, such as the proposed GI Veterans Theatre movement, which is asking for a house in Brooklyn, should be given special consideration by the unions instead of a dictatorial "no."

None of the remarks which have been made here apply to Actors Equity Assn., which has always been most tolerant in assisting these movements, as, for example, the Equity Library Theatre movement, and in keeping with the spirit of the times, I have every reason to believe that the other unions will follow suit.

The Critics—Again

A third form of dictatorship to which the theatre can be subject, but from which we may be thankful that we do not suffer, is that of the dramatic critics. In some countries the power of the critics was once so great that they could entirely dictate the policies of the theatres. Fortunately for the vitality of the American theatre, our dramatic critics are broad-minded and tolerant, and do not seek to force the theatre into any one channel, as, for example, into the channel of ideological propaganda. The fact that our critics give value to every kind of theatrical production, whether it be comedy, musical comedy, satire, drama, plays with a message, or plays without a message, means that all the turbulent currents of our life can find their expression in the theatre, come into competition with one another, and by a process of evolution, those that do not have vitality are weeded out, and those that have are given living stature. That our freedom in the theatre has contributed to the vitality of our authors is certainly demonstrated by a comparison of what has happened in the United States and Russia in the past 25 years. Russia produced some of the great literary writers of the early part of this century. Tolstoi, Chekhov, Andreyev and Gorki are names to conjure with, and certainly names as great as any which existed contemporaneously in the world. Since the advent of the Soviet dictatorship, with its ideological artists, they have produced nothing better than journalist writers of the type of Simonov and Afinogenov (undoubtedly the best of the lot), while during the same period we have produced a galaxy of playwrights led by Eugene O'Neill, and including S. N. Behrman, Robert Sherwood, Maxwell Anderson, Philip Barry, Clifford Odets, Sidney Howard, Sidney Kingsley, Elmer Rice, George Kelly, and a host of others who stand head and shoulders above the mentally-shackled playwrights of the Soviet Union.

ALFRED LUNT and LYNN FONTANNE

"O MISTRESS MINE," EMPIRE, NEW YORK

'New Orleans' Sunk In Hub, Musical Doing Foldo To Sad Tune of $300,000

Almost seasonally fortunes are dumped into musical shows that never reach Broadway and 1946-47 is no exception. Added to the costly Broadway bonnets last week was "In Gay New Orleans" which expired after one week in Boston on New Year's eve (31), a musical said to have represented more than $300,000. It was written, produced and directed by Forbes Randolph, a virtual unknown in show business.

Most of the backing came from the owners of the Eli Watson cotton mills in N. Carolina. During the latter days of rehearsal there were almost daily appeals to the backers, and fresh coin up to $25,000 was promptly telegraphed to Randolph. He is said to have advised the angels that "New Orleans" would close so that they could earmark their investments as losses, deductable in their income tax returns.

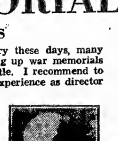
Maria Gamborelli the operatic lead in the show is said to have been among the investors and the offices of her husband Edward Fenton were used by Randolph. Most costly items in the production were the costumes, designed by Mary Grant, and the scenery—about the only features in "New Orleans" that were lauded. Bill for the duds was around $100,000.

Understood that Randolph plans to put the show on again after the book is rewritten. He was identified with a colored musical some years ago and planned a similar show last year but it did not materialize. The southerners reputed to have been the heaviest investors were identified as Harley F. Shuford, Nancy C. Shuford and E. L. Woodward who with others from Carolina were estimated to have put in $194,000.

MUNICIPAL CULTURAL CENTERS URGED AS MEMORIALS TO NATION'S WAR DEAD

By PAUL MOSS

In numerous cities across the country these days, many local committees are thinking of putting up war memorials to the hometown boys who died in battle. I recommend to these committees, on the basis of my experience as director of the New York City Center of Music and Drama, that the most fitting tribute to the hopes and sacrifices of those boys can be made in the form of similar artistic and cultural centers. Statues have a place, but city centers would be a constant, living reminder to those who attend of the promise made to those boys to keep this country a haven of liberty—and laughter.



Paul Moss

The N. Y. Center is a municipally-owned building, operated by a board of directors selected from public-spirited men and women who represent a cross-section of the business, professional, labor and educational life of our city. My association with this venture dated back to a day in 1944, when I received a characteristic note from then Mayor F. H. LaGuardia while I was serving as N. Y. license commissioner, in which he requested me to become assistant to the president of the City Center of Music and Drama, a post held by the Mayor. So I was in the most fascinating experience to help bring to the people of N. Y. the finest entertainment in opera, drama, ballet, symphony concerts, and operetta at 75c to $2, plus tax, for the seating capacity of 2,700. All seats are sold by mail or at the boxoffice. No tickets are handled by brokers.

Although Mayor William F. O'Dwyer has succeeded Fiorello H. LaGuardia as president of the City Center, the latter still remains a member of the board while I remain in my original post as assistant to the president.

The City Center is not a competitor to any of the theatres or concert halls of the city, and we are sure that many people see their first stage presentations here because of the low prices. This gives them an interest in artistic entertainment that helps stimulate general theatregoing.

No Municipal Subsidy

The City of N. Y. does not subsidize the City Center, nor does it appropriate any funds for its operation. This is in the hands of its board of directors, who are anxious to assist in maintaining this theatre, which I believe is unique within the U. S. The success of the City Center is proving without a doubt that a low-price, high-quality, non-commercial theatre is a vital part of community life.

Among its proud achievements is the establishment of its own symphony orchestra under the direction of Leonard Bernstein, the 28-year old virtuoso, who dares to strike new paths in music. He has welded together an orchestra of young veterans and girls, together with other musicians, which has met with glowing response from enthusiastic audiences and critics alike. In addition, our own splendid opera company, under the able direction of Laszlo Halasz, has achieved the proud distinction of having critics say: "It can stand on its own feet as an artistic enterprise, whatever the price of admission. In fact, the City Center Opera Company has come of age." All applicants are auditioned and many new artists have been discovered in this way, including a young Negro girl, Camilla Williams, who created a sensation since her appearance in "Madame Butterfly" early this year.

Soon we hope to present our own dramatic company under an able director and also under my supervision. This company will offer revivals, and possibly new plays, which will round out the purposes of the City Center, and wherever possible give singers, musicians, directors, scenic designers and actors an opportunity to demonstrate their abilities. This will complete our plan of creating a people's theatre for all artists, and will give to high school and college students an opportunity to witness programs of extraordinary interest and variety at reductions from the already low prices charged at the Center. Some day we hope to be able to exhibit other great motion pictures, like "Henry V," for limited runs, to further supplement our varied entertainment.

Would Be Inspired

If public-spirited citizens and public officials of other cities would visit the City Center they would see thousands of people witnessing a succession of fine programs, and they would be inspired to organize similar city centers in their own localities. Perhaps in time a dream of mine will come to fruition—that of a circuit of city centers which could produce plays, operettas, opera and ballet, with 52 weeks of playing time guaranteed. This would be insurance against loss, since at a top price of $2, these productions would surely be successful. On the basis of this low-price policy, we, at the City Center, have created a steady following, with a mailing list of 40,000 that's still growing. With many such centers throughout the country, I can foresee the discovery of new artists, new composers, new actors, new plays and producers, all to the ultimate success of the nation's theatres and concert halls.

Another phase is to interchange orchestras sponsored by each city center, enabling musicians in large symphony orchestras to be given yearly contracts. I even predict that a production or an orchestra may be called by other countries of the world with whom we could make reciprocal agreements for their outstanding dramatic and musical productions. This is one way toward that peaceful universe we all hope will be ours for all time.

It may be interesting to note that a survey of the National Musical Council of state and municipal support of musical activities reveals a growing tendency in the direction of local government sponsorship. The following states have authorized expenditures for bands and symphonic concerts: North Carolina, Utah, Vermont, California, Indiana, Kansas, Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Dakota, Wisconsin, Wyoming.

Although N. Y. does not make financial appropriations for music, it rents the former Mecca Temple to the City Center for a minimum amount and has repaired and re-conditioned the building. St. Louis operates on the same basis with respect to the St. Louis Symphony Society. Reports received this year from a whole series of other cities indicate the widespread interest in local sponsorship of symphonic orchestras.

A Great Unknown

My father, William B. Bankhead, the late Speaker of the House, was returning from Washington to his small home town of Jasper, Alabama, for the first time since his elevation to the Speakership. In the good old American tradition there was a great homecoming celebration awaiting the favorite son. In the midst of all the fanfare, Daddy overheard an old farmer from "up in the hills" who had come to town to bring his produce, say to another, "What's Goin' on down here? Why are the bands playin' and the flags wavin'; taint the Fourth of July." His friend replied, "Why ain't you heard, Will Bankhead's home." Whereupon the first old farmer scratched his head and with a puzzled expression said, "Well where the hell's Willie been?"

—Tallulah Bankhead.

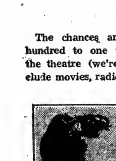
N. Y. Public Library's Theatre Collection a Treasure Trove

By GEORGE FREEDLEY

(Curator of the Collection)

The chances are better than a hundred to one that if you're in the theatre (we're catholic and include movies, radio, television, night clubs, circus, and even magic) you'll make a call sometime in the white marble building that lies behind those haughty lions at Fifth Avenue and 42nd Street, a good b-b shot from Times Square. Since



George Freedley

1931, when I was called from a stage-managing job with the Theatre Guild to organize the vast accumulation of reference material which was long stored in the commodious basements of the New York Public Library, I've been hard at work serving the theatre's great, good, great, and also-rans who crowd the glass-enclosed reading room on the third floor. There a young actress aspiring to a job with the American Repertory Theatre may be studying audition material right next to Peggy Webster who is poring over playbills, critiques, or promptbooks in readying another of her famous Shakespearean revivals.

Newspapers, magazines, and book publishers draw constantly on the Theatre Collection for identification or illustrations (uncopyrighted pictures may be photo-reproduced as no material may leave the building) from the almost a million pictures (if you include the movie and radio stills) housed there. Actors have developed the habit of dropping in before meeting an assignment to do "homework" on their next subject. Lovely ladies of the theatre have been known to get coy about their pasts . . . "Oh, but I was a mere child then! I couldn't have been in that show. You saw a playbill? Well, I guess I must have then. Of course, I always looked older than my real age, then." Some night an outraged star who tries to conceal the inexorable passage of time may be arrested for arson.

Some actors know that agents, managers, and summer theatre impresarios check our clipping files so they can walk from 42nd to 43rd Street and still not finish the alphabet). These wise ones bring in copies of notices, column-mentions, interviews, publicity material, programs, and pictures to supplement the Library's facilities in this direction. Then when Mr. Manager or Mrs. Casting Director checks up on the Adonis or Phoebe Venus their folders are nice and full. Perhaps Katherine Cornell, the Lunts, Eva LeGallienne, Joseph Schildkraut, Ruth Gordon, Helen Hayes, Ethel Barrymore and Laurence have no ulterior motives in their donations, but it's nice to know that the stars recognize the value of having as full record of their activities as possible available for future students and historians of the American stage.

I remember well the afternoon 10 years ago that the then little Mary MacArthur came in with the nurse. She wanted to look at the scrapbooks devoted to her mother, Helen Hayes, before visiting a matinee of "Victoria Regina." (Query: doesn't Miss Hayes keep scrapbooks? Or was it merely that ours are located in so imposing an institution?)

Dramatists Donate

In 1932 the Council of the Dramatists' Guild passed a resolution urging all of its members to present promptbooks or typescripts of each of their produced plays to the Library. These were to supplement the 2,500 promptbooks of great stage presentations of the past left to the Astor-Lenox-Tilden Foundation. In 1905 by that great Shakespearean actor, George Becks. It was his brother who catalogued the great theatrical collections of Harry Houdini now owned (and supplemented by additional purchases) by Messmore Kendall, proprietor of the Capitol Theatre and author of the recently published "Never Let Weather Interfere."

Some authors are extremely diligent in collecting their scripts for our collection. Notable are Bella and Samuel Spewack, who once contributed "Clear All Wires," as a play, as a film, and finally as a musical, "Leave It to Me." In contrast, is the anonymous woman who had written the book for a disastrously unsuccessful musical. In reply to my letter requesting a script she answered, "No one shall ever read the 'scrit' (sic) I perpetrated. Rather than have that happen, I'd burn the book. In fact I have."

Beefeaters Barefoot

Naturally enough you'd expect designers to use the library, and certainly you'd not be wrong. Lee Simonson who gave us a fine collection of mounted photographs, not only of his own work, comes in whenever he has a problem which his own fine library can't solve. Robert Edmond Jones spent months, off and on, preparing the decor for the production (director and designer) of Walter Huston's "Othello," which he based first at Central City, Colo., and later in New York. When the Theatre Guild asked him to design the Paul Robeson-Margaret Webster - Jose Ferrer - Uta Hagen revival, Jones went right back for another piece of intensive research. Not content to rest on his previous laurels, he came up with a new series of sketches designed to move quickly, smoothly, and to be light enough to tour easily, which they definitely did by the way.

This year, Miles White, who sprang to fame with "Oklahoma" has been delving into the history of the circus, clowns and their forebears in commendia dell'arte (the great Italian comedy of the 16th and 17th century), in designing the new circus for Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey, and Madison Square Garden has something to look forward to.

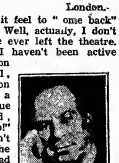
One of the most important sections of the reference Theatre Collection is that which is devoted to several thousand designs for costumes and scenery as well as theatrical caricatures by such artists as Robert Edmond Jones, Donald Oenslager, James Reynolds, Albertina Wheelan, Erta are represented. Ladislas Czetta (with "La Gaiete Parisienne" and "The Masked Ball"), David Ffolkes (with "King Henry VIII," "What Every Woman Knows," and the touring GI "Hamlet") and Lucinda Ballard (with "Show Boat," "Annie Get Your Gun," "I Remember Mama," and Helen Hayes' beautiful blue gown from this summer's "Alice Sit-By-the-Fire") have all been recent contributors, to our collection with the sketches named.

Back to the Strand

By CHARLES B. COCHRAN

London.

How does it feel to "come back" with a bit? Well, actually, I don't feel that I've ever left the theatre. It is true, I haven't been active in production since 1941, when I put on at the Savoy a slender revue entitled, "Lights Up!" which didn't come up to the standard I had previously established in this form of entertainment. The press was generous and I offer no alibis; I just couldn't get what I wanted. I am afraid I found it difficult to adapt myself to wartime conditions.



Charles B. Cochran

All my life I have been told, and read, that war is inevitable and is the only means of cleansing and bringing progress to the world. In my own sphere, the world of entertainment, the recent war has seen enormous activity and many new workers have come into it. Efforts have been made to match the circumstances, but nothing creative has been evoked. Have we learned all we might from these circumstances, and, when the handicaps are removed, can the lessons be taken advantage of?

However it may be with the world of science, in the art of the theatre it seems to me that the years may as readily have been wasted as any benefit gained from the valuable experience of our struggles. Managers and players alike displayed great courage and enterprise, but scarcely enough imagination. I am inclined to think that at the present stage we have lost more than we have gained, but there exist potentialities greater than ever before in the history of the theatre. (Shall I alarm those with the best interests of the drama at heart if I extend the word theatre to show business?)

I speak of England only because, except for the time I arrived in New York in 1891, I have not left Britain and all that I know of show business in other countries is from hearsay.

Twice in their lives have men of my generation seen this world plunged into war, and their own lives and careers violently diverted with the same brutal intolerance and by the same brutal enemy.

But the London of August, 1914, and the London which met Hitler's savage challenge were very different scenes. Not in 1939 were the streets thronged with wildly cheering crowds, making their way to Buckingham Palace and the Houses of Parliament as they did on that night of Aug. 4, '14. In place of the old excitement, an excitement bred by a plunge into the unknown, there was everywhere a grim acceptance and a fierce determination to see this foul thing through. There was not, for many of us, any pretense of the old "business as usual!" Bitter experience had taught us the falsity of that once popular slogan; we knew that we were face to face at once with a new world, and that the old world, slowly and precariously put together anew after the Armistice, had crumbled for good and all.

I did not desire to pick my job, although I felt that I might have been of service in the organization of entertainment for the troops. I believe admirable entertainments were devised and well distributed.

Two of the entertainments I organized for good causes gave me great pleasure, as well as a lot of hard work. At the large Royal Albert Hall, in aid of Toc H I put on "70 Years of Song," described in the London Times as "an entertainment, a cavalcade, a jamboree, an orgy of musical reminiscence—the precise word is lost in the array of performers from the operatic and musical comedy and music hall stages." The Hall was packed by an audience which included the ambassadors and representatives of all the governments of the United Nations. This show was honored by a reference to it in one of Lord Haw Haw's radio talks. The promoter, Haw Haw told his listeners, "calls himself Charles B. Cochran but is, despite his Scotch-Irish name, a notorious Hungarian Jew!"

My other wartime production which gave me a great kick was my Grand Circus, with lions, tigers 'n' everything, on the famous Hampstead Heath in aid of the Yugoslav Relief Fund.

As a producer of plays for over

(Continued on page 286)

Those Newcomer Producers

Soliloquy on Zolotow Moves Impresario Into Deep Commiseration

By BROCK PEMBERTON

Between the dawn and 8:30 comes a pause in the day's occupation I fondly call the children's hour. Then I lie snugly in my old wine-colored robe, propped up with the morning papers around me. Below, tugs are tootling on the East River, gulls are swooping the surface for bits of cake left over from the party the night before in Billy Rose's mansion hard by in Beekman Place or maybe from Katharine Cornell's. A steady whirr arises from south-bound cars, whisking their occupants along the East River Drive to work. They, poor slaves, knocked off at 5 the afternoon before and must punch the clock at 9, while lucky I, who quit at midnight, am not due at my office till 9:30.

One of the first columns I turn to for sheer joy is Mr. Sam Zolotow's in the N. Y. Times. Sam is a great reporter. I know because I used to be a poor one myself. For 10 years, B. C. (Before CIO) I was a newspaperman. I knew quite a few words but I hated to assemble the ideas and facts to put under them. Not so, Sam, who is never happier than when sitting across the desk giving you the third degree. Sam has beautiful blue eyes. I have pretty blue eyes too but they seem to get me nowhere. If memory serves they used to get me into trouble but as a reporter they lacked the power of freezing their adversaries. But Sam's blue eyes pierce one's soul and pin one to one's chair. The exact gross of the night before, the progress of picture negotiations, all of one's deepest secrets fly in words across the desk, like filings to the magnet of those innocent blue eyes.

Sam is also ubiquitous. I never start a confidential conversation without looking around the room for him and at closed managerial meetings, the first business of the sergeant-at-arms is to look behind all doors and under all tables and desks. If no one is discovered the doors and windows are locked and the meeting proceeds.

Delight in Figures

I feel certain Sam takes more delight in figures than VARIETY or Dun & Bradstreet. What one project lost, the profit of another, who owns how much of what, seems to enchant him as much as the odds on the first at Hialeah. I have a suspicion that losses interest him more than gains, though this may be unfair. Once I made the mistake of holding out on him the names and amounts of participants in a production we will designate as Operation Zero. After that the play was never mentioned in the Times and it failed. That taught me.

Lately a new type of information has crept into the column. It is not Sam's fault if it startles more than it delights me. Sam's not to reason why but to print all the news that's fit, and this is news. I refer to the listings of new producing firms. The paragraphs, sometimes filling a column with space out for asterisks, read something like this: "A new producing firm whose members are I. V. Hope, Lotta Faith and Fuller Charity have opened a suite of offices in Radio City. They have three plays scheduled for production, two of them musicals, the musicals budgeted at $250,000 each. Mr. Hope is a Hollywood director, Miss Faith is a cafe society photographer, Mr. Charity is interested in professional football."

When I got fired something over a quarter of a century ago and announced, to cover my shame, that I quit to become a producer myself, play producing was virtually a closed shop. Silent movies had lost their punch, it was easy to satisfy the public, and nepotism ruled. Why encourage greenhorns to enter such a racket? Consequently when some months later I made good my threat and by great good luck produced a success I found no welcome on the managerial mat. I was looked upon as an intruder.

I hold no such feeling for beginners. I feel sorry for them because they are entering a business so complicated today that much of the fun has gone out of it. I do resent mildly, for I find too much resentment is bad for mounting blood-pressure, the lack of aptitude, preparation and background too many of these novices bring to their self-appointed tasks. This reaction springs not from a personal basis but from my love of the theatre and the belief that amateurs do it harm.

Run down the list of producers who have been at it a number of years and you will find that the great majority of them majored in some branch of the theatre before trying to put on plays. These were actors: George Abbott, Katharine Cornell, Howard Lindsay, Alfred de Liagre, Eddie Dowling, Vinton Freedley, John Golden, Guthrie McClintic and Gilbert Miller. Mr. Abbott and Mr. Lindsay were also dramatists as were all of the members of the Playwrights' Company. Oscar Hammerstein and Russell Crouse were librettists. Arthur Hopkins wrote and produced vaudeville sketches and Max Gordon booked them, while Richard Rodgers composed scores and Mr. Golden songs. Lawrence Langner and Theresa Helburn, Theatre Guild directors, were among the founders of the Washington Square Players from which the Guild sprang, while Armina Marshall Langner, also of the Guild, was an actress. All three eventually wrote plays. Jed Harris was a press representative, Herman Shumlin was his general manager and Kermit Bloomgarten his. Stanley Gilkey filled the same berth for Mr. McClintic and Brock Pemberton was Pooh Bah for Arthur Hopkins following six years as dramatic reporter and critic. Richard Aldrich was a manager for MacGowan & Reed and Gilbert Miller, after he gave up acting, learned about producing from his illustrious father, Henry Miller. Oscar Serlin was a talent scout. The Shuberts, Lee and J. J., followed the proverbial pattern of starting as boys in theatres they were eventually to own. Jack Wildberg was a theatrical lawyer and learned about producing in summer stock in association with Cheryl Crawford of the American Repertory triumvirate. The other two of that distaff trio, Eve LeGallienne and Margaret Webster, acted and directed.

The moral of the record would seem to be that experience in some branch of the theatre, while not a prerequisite for success, is a big help to the individual and a good thing for the theatre. Curiously, inexperienced tyros seem more able to assemble vast sums for worthless projects than some of the old hands can for some worthy undertakings. It is not only the loss of this capital that is bad, but the reputation for ineptness its expenditure brings the theatre.

Sweetness and Light Twixt Crix And Playwrights Doesn't Help U.S. Theatre, Argues One Drama Critic

By RICHARD WATTS, JR.

The three bravest or, at least, most foolhardy men in this vicinity, if you want to know it, are Brooks Atkinson, John Mason Brown and the writer. There we were, with the most splendid and touching epitaphs written for us, extolling our greatness of soul, largeness of vision and intellect, unparalleled keenness of perception, and Solomon-like sense of justice. There were giants in our day, and we were among the mightiest of them all. Yet, instead of remaining comfortably in Valhalla with Aristotle, Dryden and Percy Hammond and reading our press clippings, we gave it all up voluntarily to come back to earth and be drama critics again.

This great and beautiful estimate of our worth, which we cherished so dearly and have now given up so blithely, was, I have to confess, never bestowed upon us without reservations. No doubt because our admirers knew our essential modesty and didn't want to embarrass us with too much adulation, they would always prefix their enthusiasm with such a phrase as "Compared to So-and-So - - -" or, more likely, "Compared to those so-and-so's - - -." The old axiom that the only good drama critic was a dead drama critic had been broadened to include critics who had gone off to various wartime pursuits, and we found ourselves in the position of the artists in the Arnold Bennett play who pretended to be dead and read with relish the juicy obituaries that were written about him.

Of course, we remembered the days of Hammond, Broun and Wollcott, when they were being blamed for the collapse of the theatre and contrasted unfavorably with such giants as William Winter. Even more vividly we recalled how Hammond, Broun and Wollcott became giants when we, then of pygmy stature, succeeded them, and how playwrights, producers and actors, who were accustomed to shrink before the whip lash of these tyrants of the theatre, began boasting even of the bad notices they had received from them. I believe that Humphrey Bogart still carries about with him the clipping of a Woollcott review that spoke bitingly about the microscopic quality of his talent and treasures it far more than the praise written about him by living reviewers.

It was very pleasant to learn that in our lifetime we had been transformed from pygmies into giants and to be told that we had been marvels of perception, wit, grace and understanding, even though the cynical might have suspected that the enthusiasm arose less out of admiration for us than from the chance it offered to smite the current crop of reviewers. Our admirers may have been telling us that it wasn't we were so good as that, incompetent as we were, we at least looked pretty fair compared to the veritable monsters of incompetence now holding forth in our pulpits, but it was praise, and it was pretty bold to risk plunging back into reviewing again. It gave our quondam fans too tempting an opportunity to take it all back.

Atkinson the Hero

Obviously that was what was bound to happen and, of course, it is happening already. I think it is safe to say that, as dearly beloved as Brown and I suddenly became, we still remained mere groundlings compared to Atkinson as he was lifted up to the heavens by his adoring worshipers. Maybe you think it was Chungking and Moscow that Brooks went off to during his absence from criticism. But it was really Olympus to which he had been carried by legions of doting admirers. Now he has come back, not only a nobler soul but a more kindly critic than before, and yet I note in one of the Hollywood columns that Nunnally Johnson, usually among the most generous and forgiving of men, told one girl journalist that he was "wishing a Merry Christmas to every one in the world except Brooks Atkinson."

Nevertheless it is fun to be back and, although it is pleasant to be a dead and respected drama critic, it is even better to be alive and a despised member of the craft of Nathan and Aristotle. In fact, I confess that I am almost always on the side of the playwright who is attacking a critic, and that is not out of any characteristic nobility of soul. Quite on the contrary, it is out of sheer selfishness. The only unpleasant thing in the otherwise agreeable business of pontificating about the drama is that you occasionally feel like a bully when you pick on helpless and unprotected plays. But when there is an embattled author about to defend it and fight back you don't feel nearly so bad about it, and the job becomes more desirable than ever.

Nevertheless, I am not sure that I approve of the new radio idea of having critics and playwrights go on the air and talk over the merits of a play that has just opened. I haven't heard any of the programs, but my great fear is, not that they will make the antagonists too bitter at each other, but that there is the danger of their being too polite. I am told on all sides that the recent discussion between Moss Hart and John Chapman over "Christopher Blake" was the best of the series because Mr. Hart got after Mr. Chapman with what used to be known as "hammer-and-tongs."

That is fine, but look what happened to Chapman. From various accounts he kept his temper, was very tolerant and understanding and came out of the debate in a manner that had even some playwrights feeling he had been the winner. Ordinarily he is a man who knows and relishes the pleasure of a good rage. Indeed, he is easily the Critics Circle Angry Man, and it is a role which becomes him. Yet the radio program made him gentle and long suffering, and the next playwright, learning from him, is likely to be as gentle as Eddie Dowling is said to have been when he defended "The Iceman Cometh" against the equally affable Howard Barnes, and the whole relationship will be threatened. In general, I am all for an era of good-feeling, but when one sets in in the theatre it is likely to imperil some of the stages' vitality.

Shubert Files Charges With Equity on Actor Decamping 'Come On Up'

Charges which may result in serious consequences for Harry Gibson, an actor who abruptly walked out on "Come On Up," which has been touring with Mae West starred this season, were filed with Equity by J. J. Shubert last week. Gibson walked out while the show was in Canada saying that he couldn't stand cold weather and because of neuralgia would have to return to the Coast where the show was produced.

Actor had a run of the play contract calling for $300 weekly, with provision for $200 additional when the show reached Broadway. Gibson, who failed to secure a doctor's certificate indicating his alleged ailment, refused to appear for the Saturday matinee and night performances of the engagement in question and was said to have secured a plane reservation for Hollywood on that date. He had received his week's pay the night before.

Gibson feared that "Up" would not be shown on Broadway which was his objective, since he is a western night club entertainer and aimed for a shot at the New York cafes. If charges are sustained, and he is suspended by Equity, it's possible that he will not be permitted to make professional appearances because of the agreement between the several talent unions. If a member is banned by one, he is automatically barred by the others during the period of suspension.

Wildberg To Shutter Chi Civic Till Hit Rolls In

Chicago.

Unique situation in face of tight house set up in town is that the Civic Theatre will have no legit show after film "Henry V" leaves Jan. 5. John Wildberg, lessee of the spot, is looking for a hit and is keeping the house dark until he can find one.

"Henry" opens at the Pabst Theatre, Milwaukee, Jan. 6 for two weeks plus options under Theatre Guild sponsorship and then goes to St. Louis. Picture had a five month run at $2.40 top here.

Bercovici's Pasa Bow

Pasadena.

Konrad Bercovici's new legit play, "Penelope," is slated for an opening at the Pasadena Community Playhouse late in February.

Irving Jacobs hopes to produce the piece on Broadway next fall, with Arthur Lubin directing.

GREETINGS
KATHARINE CORNELL and GUTHRIE McCLINTIC

Back to the Tents

Playwright's Travail in Getting a Legit House Pars His Creative Pains—45 B'way Houses Lost in Past 20 Years

By PHILIP DUNNING

Cast } Playwright.
} Producer.
Scene: A theatrical producer's office.

Producer: Come in. Glad to see you. Let me take your hat and coat.
Playwright: Oh, thank you.

Producer: Sit over here in this armchair.

Playwright: That's very kind—

Phil Dunning

Producer: Well I finally got around to reading your script. Sorry I took so long.

Playwright: Oh that's quite all right. I know you're busy. What was your reaction?

Producer: I liked every minute of it. It's really a fine play. I'd like to produce it.

Playwright: It's wonderful to hear you say that.

Producer: It deserves a first-class production with a fine cast.

Playwright: That sounds good to me. When did you plan to—

Producer: I remember the time, not so many years ago, when I ran across a script I liked as much as I like yours, I'd tie it up quickly—pick up the phone, book just the right New York theatre for it and have it in rehearsal in a week or two.

Playwright: That would be wonderful—

Producer: But today it's altogether different. You know how scarce theatres are these days.

Playwright: Yes, I know—

Producer: And backers are getting scarce too. It takes around $50,000 to ring up the curtain on a show today.

Playwright: Fifty? You mean for a musical?

Producer: No. A musical would cost three or four times that much.

Playwright: Fifty thousand seems an awful lot. Why my play only calls for a single setting.

Producer: I know. But that's what it takes to do a one-setter now.

Playwright: Oh that includes the cash bonds required by various associations involved but it isn't money spent—

Producer: Cash bonds mean money tied up. Why I remember when I could budget a play for less than the bonds alone take today.

Playwright: Then you blame the Unions for—

Producer: No, I'm not blaming them. Who said I was blaming them? I guess they're entitled to protection the same as everybody else. All I'm saying is that 50 grand is a big gamble on a one-to-five shot.

Playwright: One-to-five? How do you mean?

Producer: That's what it is. Figured on the arbitrary basis of 100 performances for a hit, 80% of the total number of new plays presented in New York are failures.

Playwright: Are you referring to last season?

Producer: Last season and the season before that—and for the past 20 seasons.

Playwright: 80% were failures?

Producer: Right. That surprise you?

Playwright: Well—yes—I—

Producer: One success out of every five tries, at 50 thousand a try, kind of slows a fellow up.

Playwright: But don't you think—

Producer: It slowed up the theatre owners too. Made them more cautious.

Playwright: But aren't they demanding guarantees? Then how can they lose money?

Producer: I'll tell you. A friend of mine owns one of the finest theatres on the street. The last 10 attractions he booked in were all flops. Between the flops his house had to be dark from one to three weeks at a time. He can't break even unless he's lucky enough to book a hit show every once in a while. Does that prove anything to you?

Playwright: It proves that your friend hasn't very good judgment in selecting plays—

Producer: Well let's hope his judgment has improved because he picked your play to be a hit. I had him read it with the idea of booking it and he promised to give me a definite answer this afternoon. Do you mind waiting?

Playwright: Not at all. It's all very interesting.

Producer: Say, ever read this rag?

Playwright: Not as regularly as I used to. The legitimate news seems to be crowded out lately by movie and radio news.

Producer: Yes, I know. I've been saving these old Anniversary Numbers for years. They have some pretty interesting statistics. Let's turn to this 1927 number—flash back 20 years and see what was going on around here then...Better let me read it—the pages are dried out and brittle and I wouldn't want you to tear them. Listen to this—"The total number of new dramatic productions in New York City during the season 1926-1927 were 218, and 84% of them were failures. The number of theatres used was 76, 114 plays closed within four weeks of their openings."

Playwright: But don't you think—

Producer: Look at this list of theatres that were available to legitimate attractions then. Apollo, Central, Republic, Wallack's, Klaw, Daly's, the Selwyn, the Lyric, Mayfair, Waldorf, the old Garrick—God, it's enough to bring tears to your eyes when you think of those days.

Playwright: I understand how you feel.

Producer: Here's some more theatres we lost since 1927—the Times Square theatre, the Liberty, Gaiety, Eltinge, Globe, the Old Broadway, the Frolic, the Princess, Maxine Elliot, Hampden, Greenwich Village, Charles Hopkins, Cherry Lane, Provincetown, Sam H. Harris and the George M. Cohan. Say, I wonder what Sam and Georgie would say if they had a look at crummy old 42nd street today—and here are some that used to play musicals—all torn down now—the Century, the Knickerbocker, the Casino and the Earl Carroll.

Playwright: That's 31 theatres gone.

Some More Since 1927

Producer: I never bothered to count them. It makes my ulcers kick up just to think how easy it was to book a theatre in those days. And the cost of producing a show was peanuts compared with today. Do you know, we used to do a three or four set show, take it on the road for a few weeks break-in and ring up on Broadway for around six or seven thousand dollars.

Playwright: Think of that—!

Producer: And here's some more that have blacked out on us in the past 10 years since 1937—the Longacre, Guild, Ambassador, the Golden on 58th St., the 44th Street, the Little, the Masque, Vanderbilt, 49th St., Ritz, the Bayes, Belmont, Comedy, Winter Garden, the New Amsterdam. It makes me ill to think of that beautiful theatre being used for 15c grind house. Playwright: That's 14 more, plus the above and 31—that's 45 theatres gone. And nothing has been built to replace them.

Producer: Now tell me, do you honestly think that if the owners of those 45 legitimate theatres made money playing regular attractions, they'd dump them into the laps of the broadcasting companies and grind movie syndicates?

Playwright: No, of course not. But I still don't see—

Producer: The way it adds up to me is that the higher the cost of production, the fewer the plays produced and the fewer theatres available to play them in. Do you realize that last season there were only 46 new dramatic productions produced on Broadway with only 35 legit theatres available?

Playwright: That's quite a drop.

Producer: An alarming drop. What's the remedy, I wonder?

Playwright: Wouldn't cocktail bars connected with theatres help defray expenses as it does in England?

Producer: The managers have been working all along the line on that scheme for years. But they've been stymied—Excuse me, my watch must be stopped—

Playwright: I have five after four.

Producer: Thanks. I apparently forgot to wind mine.

Playwright: This has been a very interesting afternoon and I've enjoyed talking with you. But now we'd better get back to the subject of my play. You say you liked it.

Producer: I do and I'd like to produce it.

Playwright: I'd like to have you. Providing you can do it this season. I feel it would be in excellent hands. You've always shown good taste in the plays you've done.

Producer: Thanks. I think we could get along together. You're a fine writer. I'm surprised that Hollywood hasn't grabbed you off before now. If I can book a theatre I'll pay your advance, sign the production contract and get busy casting my backers right away.

Playwright: Oh, speaking of Hollywood, I wasn't going to mention it but I've had an offer from a film company for the play and they want my services. I've been stalling them until I heard from you.

Producer: Well, I'll tell you. Excuse me a minute while I answer this phone—Oh hello pal—yes, I've been sitting here all afternoon waiting for you to call. I've got the author of that play you liked right here with me. What? No—no you didn't. How much? Geez, what a price. No I can't say I blame you but it shoots hell out of my plans. Well—that's that. Oh sure—sure. Bye now.

Playwright: Are you all right? Can I get you a glass of water?

Producer: No thanks. I'll be all right. I just had a bit of a jolt. Another legit theatre has been wiped off the map. My friend unloaded his headache to a Television company.

SEASON'S GREETINGS

JEAN PARKER

Co-starring in "BURLESQUE"
Currently at the Belasco Theatre, New York
(Earlier This Season in the Title Role of "Loco")

Chi Had Big B.O. '46; Shortage of Theatres Still Plagues Town

Chicago.

Chicago had a big legit b.o. year in 1946. Grosses for the year hit over $6,500,000, with practically every theatre in town booked constantly.

Situation in town is critical regarding theatre space, with only seven theatres being available at present for legit bookings.

While Chicago saw only three new legit openers, "St. Lazare's Pharmacy," "Windy City," and "Sweethearts," a new high of 44 stage attractions were presented, with seven plays holding forth as 1947 rolled around. Average run of plays this year was twice as long as usual, which resulted in a booking jam, with Chi being passed up for smaller towns with available theatre space.

Chi Burglars Trip Up Ballet Russe Terpers

Chicago.

Chicago police are searching for thieves who broke into hotel rooms of Rosella Hightower and Roman Jasinsky, stars of Original Ballet Russe, currently, playing at Civic Opera House here.

Miss Hightower was principal loser, having lost a quantity of jewelry. Jasinsky lost a small amount of cash. Room of Mme. Natalie Tupine, mother of Oleg Tupine, another ballet principal, was also burglarized by hoodlums.

Shows in Rehearsal

"Brigadoon"—Cheryl Crawford.
"The First Hundred Years"—William Cahn.
"Washington Square"—Oscar Serlin.
"Apartment B" ("It Takes Two")—George Abbott and Richard Aldrich.
"John Loves Mary"—Rodgers and Hammerstein.
"All My Sons"—Clurman, Kazan and Fried.

Playing It Safe For Barrymore

By LAURENCE SCHWAB

(Producer-Author and EX-Actor)

Flash! Not too bright a one after upwards of 30 years, but still—Flash!—I was once an actor.

My thespian career ended with such a rude jolt that up to now I have preferred to forget it. But time, at last, turns shame to amusement, and what good is a guy who can't see a joke? Even if it is on himself.

I was second string quarterback on Boston Latin School, and when we played our traditional rival, a high school in New Hampshire, I was lucky enough to make a touchdown for old B. L. S. in the last few minutes of play. We won 6-0.

That summer a visionary young man put together a stock company to tour the resorts. He gave it the inspirational title of the Harvard Players, and I asked what connection his carroty troupe had with the dignified university he would point to me. I had passed all but two exams for freshman entry and was going in that fall—on conditions.

We acted a repertoire of popular plays, setting up shop in hotel ballrooms, school houses, Elks' halls, and even firehouses. I am afraid we had more fun than our meager audiences. They were only laymen, while we were traveling hand in hand with Art. I, though, was conscious of the shortcomings of our company; you see, there was a star in our midst who so far had only appeared as "Another Reporter," "A Neighbor," or "The Man With a Package."

Finally the unweaned star demanded a leading part from our impressario. He put me off, promising airily to increase my lines in the following week and make them two. I threatened to leave in high dudgeon (I knew my Shakespeare) but the threat did not prostrate the oaf. So I wrote twice, pointing out that I would be taking the name of the troupe with me. Without a Harvard man on tap he would no longer be able to take the name of the university in vain.

Two weeks later I was making up to play the leading part in "The County Boy"; the same fat part in which Douglas Fairbanks had just delighted Broadway.

"We're sold out. There's a gang of kids asking if you're in the play for sure. And goggling at your picture outside. Why should you be a draw in this town? Were you born with something?"

I grinned nervously. We were in the auditorium of the same high school my touchdown had licked the preceding fall. "I kill 'em," I boasted, knowing my boss could not see how pale I was under the country boy makeup.

"Make it slow death. Let me get my hands on the cash receipts first." He went out front.

In such manner is Art treated by Business.

After the first act everybody backstage told me I was swell, and anyway, not to worry, I'd get better as I went along. I spoke sharply to my knees and went on for the second act.

In that fateful stanza The Country Boy, living in a shabby theatrical boarding house, a failure and deserted by his true love, is about to turn on the gas above his hallroom bed. He attaches the rubber tube from a lamp to the gas jet, brings it slowly up to his mouth and sinks on the bed to expire from the escaping fumes. After a few palpitating moments The Old Newspaperman Who Has Been Through It All Himself rushes in and saves him... That's the way the Big Scene was written.

Thespic Perspiration

I was doing fine in that second act. I came all the way through to the climax with hardly a snicker from the audience. And those were from the balcony, where the football team was perched.

Then, "There is nothing left in life for me. I shall end it all." I declaimed the lines wildly—and looked for the tube to attach to the gas jet. It was not on the lamp. I paced the stage, muttering over and over, "I am going to end it all." Approaching the wings I let out in what was meant to be a stage whisper, "Where's that tube?"

The fellow who played the Old Newsman (and doubled as property boy) was standing there, waiting to stride on and rescue me from gaseous death. He shrugged. "Get me a gun or something. I gotta kill myself," I hissed.

Pacing to center stage again I could feel the whole audience on the slippery edge of a titter. One last glance at the wings. The Old Journalist and half the acting company were frozen there. I sank down on the bed. "I must end it all," I repeated for the eleventh time. Then, improvising glibly, "What shall I do? What shall I do?"

"Play football, Schwab!" a disgusted voice boomed from the balcony.

Howls, screams, Homeric laughter, burst from the audience. I sat on that counterpane and wept. At long last somebody had the sense to ring down the curtain.

And that's the real reason John Barrymore had a clear path to Fame.

WINTER STOCK SERIES SET FOR A. C. HOTEL

Atlantic City.

A subscription series of eight plays by the George Spelvin Players will be offered by the Leeds and Lippincott Co., operators of Haddon Hall, on the mid-city beachfront, Jan. 16 through March 8. The plays will be staged in the "Theatre in the Sky" atop the hotel. "Old Acquaintance," by John Van Druten, will be the first offering.

Company is directed by Helen Morley with Allen Potter production manager. Others include Ann Arden, Pat Worthington, Walter Meserole, Gerry J. McCormack, Wade Dent, Arthur Cahn, Betty Egan, Ruth Phillips and Mark Wood.

ICC Nixes S. Pacific R.R. Plan to Jack Show Rates

Under a ruling by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Southern Pacific is not permitted to raise the ticket regulations for traveling shows. Line planned to require the purchase of 150 tickets if a baggage car was to be supplied. ICC stipulated that the railroad could apply for a rehearing but not prior to next Aug. 1.

It was feared that if SPRR raised the ticket requirement no large road shows would be able to travel to the Coast and back. Fewer rule calls for 100 tickets, and a baggage car is provided without additional cost for the production.

Report that other western lines would also raise the party ticket requirement above the present limit of 100 was stated to have been incorrect. It had been figured that if SPRR's rule went through on Jan. 1, plus a rate increase, it would jump the cost of transportation to the Coast as much a 230%.

Only large show on road that would have been affected is "Carmen Jones," whose agent, Ned Alvord, had protested the line's proposed ticket increase. League of New York Theatres also complained to ICC. However, "Carmen" is due to close its tour next week, show now playing Texas dates.

MOOD INDIGO

By JOHN BYRAM

(Eastern Play Editor, Paramount Pictures)

Sid Skolsky, in VARIETY, was voicing—as many others have done of late—his lament over the decline of Broadway. Having been away from it all those years when he was hanging around that Hollywood drugstore he had an objective attitude even though he finally did return with his excellent Broadway-show business saga, "The Jolson Story." My approach is more subjective than Skolsky's. For 24 years my daily working hours—and a good many of my nocturnal ones, too—have been spent mainly within a segment of New York bounded on the north by 47th street (the old Palace); on the east by 6th avenue (the now obliterated Hippodrome), and on the south and west by the Paramount Building and the N. Y. Times Annex in 43d street. Familiarity may make it easy to overlook or gloss over some things, but in my circumstances even a blind man could not fail to notice the deterioration of what minor and curiously regional poets and philosophers have rhapsodically referred to as the Great White Way, the Grandest Canyon, Mazda Lane, the Main Stem, and by other soubriquets, both apt and labored.

When I first came to Broadway it was, to be sure, not one of Les Grands boulevards. It was not a beautiful vista of architecturally perfect theatres conveniently interspersed with fine restaurants and cafes and populated exclusively by Men of Distinction and elegant feminine companions who looked as if they might have stepped bodily from the advertisements of Bergdol-Goodman and the higher priced perfume firms. But Broadway—by which I mean the contiguous area including 42d street—in those days had the best. It had 60 to 65 legitimate theatres, the few top film cathedrals, the premier vaudeville theatre and even a burlesque house which represented that exuberant profession at its apex. Of shoddy, second-run stuff, it certainly had its share, but nothing like at present when the best, the tawdry essatz and the unbelonging catchpenny gadgets are all scrambled together.

Because of the depression, the rise of the talking picture, and the radio, and because of other factors, economic and sociological, Broadway has surrendered to cheapness, as we all know. Milling about on its littered, gum-spotted pavements today are some of the crummiest-looking individuals to be seen anywhere in the United States. I mean the people who are drawn to its free radio programs, its grind movies, and its shooting galleries. Those who earn their living on Broadway—and at the top they are the most talented in the theatre and, as representatives of their profession, in the world today—do their jobs on the street but they spend their spare time elsewhere, often as far away as possible from its pinchbeck purlieus. From de luxe night clubs to the offices of solvent theatrical managers and the larger film companies the drift, for years, has been away from the Broadway district.

Park Avenue to Surf Avenue

The answer? I don't know, but I'm afraid that, despite the optimists, things don't look too bright for a genuine rehabilitation or housecleaning of Times Square. No matter how many grandiose building projects are announced or actively underway, no matter how many new spectacular signs rosily tint the night sky, the pristine glory and individuality of Broadway may be departing forever.

In some respects the area is a microcosm of many lesser American cities whose peripheral business districts have declined and become shabby as a result of the community's growth and the increasing mechanization of the times. Perhaps when construction starts again the legitimate theatre, which gave Broadway its greatest name and reputation, eventually will be able to move its 58 customers away from the hotdog stands, shooting galleries, dancehalls and soap opera houses. But whether there will be much building of new and improved theatres in another section, or even shows to put in them, sometimes seems problematical. Every year more and more theatres, where living actors can be seen and on occasion appreciated, will be torn down or drawn off the market. Before long Broadway will represent, even to a greater degree than it does now, the triumph of the mechanical age and the decline of the personnel.

While it is not quite fair to say that the choice was ever between Park avenue and Surf avenue, many factors over the years have forced what is still the world's greatest entertainment center to veer definitely toward Coney Island in atmosphere and appearance. Every year the amusement district becomes a Coney Island with greater and gaudier gadgets instead of what Broadway should be if it is to survive uniquely—a street whereon actively participating personalities provide its character, its glamour, and individuality and where the gimcracks and the things that Broadway has in common with other cities and hamlets over the country are relegated to a properly subordinate position.

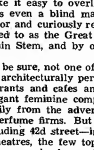
Broadway Running Ahead Of Last Season In Quantity; Revivals a Large Factor

Grand Opera Is Also Show Business

By EDWARD JOHNSON

(General Manager of the Metropolitan Opera)

Grand opera, like politics and religion, has long been a controversial subject. Is it a living art? Should it be sung in English? Is it "highbrow"? On the first two questions, there may be some pro and con discussion. But on the latter—any such descriptive phrases as "highbrow" or "snobbish" are merely tiresome, bromidic epithets hurled by fireside critics who live in the cliched past of the "golden eras."



Edward Johnson

Originally, of course, such descriptions were justifiable because the opera, from its very beginning early in the 17th century, was the "property" of the wealthy and cultural European aristocracy. Even when this art came to America in the 18th century, it was taken over by the financial and social elite of the day. But, both in Europe and the United States, only the wealthy could afford to support opera. Now, the very fact that opera in Europe is financed by the government and opera in America is supported by the general public is proof enough that it is a living art that attracts thousands of opera-goers and millions of listeners, all of which was made possible by the monetary contributions of these early patrons.

Today, grand opera is in show business. We receive our support from the public and a few "backers." The trade "bible," VARIETY, reviews the opera as well as the latest Broadway play. We too are concerned with b.o. receipts, Crossleys, and "hitting the stix." We have the same unions as any other theatre, except more of them.

Differences

But the characteristics that account for the differences between the production of a Broadway play and a grand opera represent both our strength and the source of our problems. The Metropolitan is the only theatre where the shows given have been playing regularly in some parts of the world for more than 50 or 100 or 150 years. The presentation of these classical masterpieces of the past is a phenomenon comparable only to the occasional sorties into Shakespearean literature made by repertory companies and a few independent producers. Even the great genius, Shakespeare, must take second place to such masters as Verdi, Wagner, Mozart, in the total number of performances.

The Metropolitan is the only theatre where a devoted public is willing to subscribe and pay in advance without knowing which shows will be performed. Unlike the Broadway musical which has a tryout before reaching New York and then is played night after night, and has a chorus of say, 10 to 15, and an orchestra of perhaps 30, and charges $6.60, the Metropolitan must present a different opera each night with a chorus of 78 and an orchestra of 94 at a $7.50 top, for only part of the year. Further, it must have complete double casts in readiness for every performance and the sets required for each production seldom number less than three. As a result, the economic situation in opera is constantly a serious and harassing problem."

Deficits in opera, however, do not mean failure. On the contrary, they frequently indicate more than the usual success. For the Metropolitan is not in business to make money. It is a non-profit institution that is keeping alive the great masterpieces of the past and encouraging new works and new audiences for the future. And from the attendance records of the past five years and the increased demand for the Metropolitan to visit cities all over the country, the Metropolitan Opera represents a healthy and vital part of show business that is here to stay.

Productively Broadway is running ahead of last season, both in new plays and revivals, while there have been an equal number of musicals, though that type of attraction has been distinctly the weakest of the three classifications.

From June, 1945, to the end of December, 35 new shows entered the list, plus four revivals, while in the same period this season, first nighters sat in on 47 premieres, of which 13 were, or are, revivals.

It's possible that one or both of the Christmas week musical entrants will get across, but up until Xmas only one clicked, "Icetime," a skating revue and technically not a legiter. It's estimated that eight musicals produced represent a total investment of nearly $2,000,000, if not more, and that includes one fast flop out of town, another on the way in and four have already come to Broadway and are off the boards. Latter were "If the Shoe Fits," "Park Avenue," "Gypsy Lady" and "Yours Is My Heart." The out-of-town baby, said to have cost more than $300,000, is "In Gay New Orleans."

Up to New Year's of 1946 there were eight revivals, four of which consisted of the Old Vic bills early in the summer. This season, starting around Labor Day, the baker's dozen of revivals have been an integral factor, and six are still on the boards, including four being played by the American Repertory Theatre. Five failed and one turned out fairly well. None of the revivals was musical, whereas last season "Show Boat," which played to big money although it didn't recapture its investment; "The Red Mill," a money-maker still on

(Continued on page 289)

'Heartless' Chi Critic Smacks Back at Hecht For 'Windy' Job on 'Flag'

Chicago.

Opening of "A Flag Is Born" gave birth to latest bout of mud-playwright feud after Ben Hecht wired his p.a. an answer to Chicago Times' critic Robert Pollak's review in which latter asserted that the play "failed to wring my heart." Pollak's retaliation, which appeared in large paid ads, expressed the author's surprise that Pollak had a heart. Thus began the ink splattering, with Pollak coming back with a feature in the Sunday Times (5).

"Last Monday, on long distance orders from Ben Hecht in Hollywood," wrote Pollak, the "press-agent for 'A Flag Is Born' took extra space in all the papers to advertise the play at the Studebaker as 'Dramatic Dynamite.' After picking juicy laudatory tidbits from five reviews, an ancient and honored custom among pressagents, he quoted Pollak of the Times as follows: 'Ben Hecht does not wring my heart.' In the same boxed portion of the ad, Hecht answered: 'Sorry, old boy, but are you sure you have one?'

"Ben, old boy, you had me worried for a minute. On Tuesday morning I called up a friend of mine, a doctor, who had an old set of autographed X-ray pictures. He reported that all was normal on the cardiac side and that if I'd lost the thing since that time somebody would certainly have noticed it.

"It can be wrung, too, that heart, twisted and turned over even by plays that have some kind of axe to grind. Plays like Irwin Shaw's 'Bury the Dead,' 'The Good Soldier Schweik' or Lillian Heilman's 'Watch On the Rhine,' that tell me why I ought to hate fascism.

"Plays like Ibsen's 'Ghosts,' Hauptmann's 'The Weavers,' G. B. Shaw's 'Heartbreak House' or Galsworthy's 'Justice.' These all want to sell me something and they do it very well. But in a 'A Flag Is Born' you don't do it well at all, old boy.

"In the grand days of 'The Front Page' and 'Twentieth Century' you had a lot of stuff on the ball as far as the theatre was concerned. In those still more remote days when you wrote 'A Thousand and One Afternoons in Chicago' or bludgeoned the sacred cows in the Chicago Literary Times you were an Ameri-

(Continued on page 270)

Mexico City to See 11-Week Season Of Legit With U.S. Stars

Mexico City.

Eleven weeks of stock stage presentation featuring such U. S. stars as Gertrude Lawrence and Boris Karloff are due to begin here Feb. 3 at the Teatro Iris, according to Melvin Parks, N. Y. producer. He and his associates, Sam Pearce and Martin S. Holman of Hollywood, have contracted for the Iris, which after a long stage career was facelifted and went filmer 12 years ago.

Parks hopes to open with Miss Lawrence in "Pygmalion." Presentations will be the first of the kind ever seen here. Contingent upon clearance from pix obligations, said Parks, Karloff has agreed to play during the season in "On Borrowed Time." Dickers are on with Edward Everett Horton for "Springtime for Henry," and Hedda Hopper and Margo for unchosen vehicles, the producer said.

Iris is currently exhibiting French pix, distributed by Filmex.

Va. State Theatre In No. Carolina Tour

Raleigh, N. C.

The Virginia State Theatre—the Barter Theatre of Abingdon—will Barter Theatre of Abingdon—is moving into North Carolina and will stay there for two weeks, giving some of the best known works on its repertoire at Durham, Raleigh, Chapel Hill, and several other points.

SEASON'S GREETINGS
CORNELIA OTIS SKINNER

THE GABBING CIRCUIT STILL TALKS PLENTY BIG IN MOOLA

By RAY JOSEPHS

The literati crowd with a touch of thesp blood, a hankering for footlights, a longing for one-night stands—or perhaps just something to get off the chest—has found a new way to satisfy the urge and pick up a nice piece of folding change. The answer is lecturing the spiel circuit, revitalized by warhypoed interest in world affairs. It has shown only the slightest letdown with peace.

Fact that the globe is still far from settled has kept the correspondents with right-from-the-feedbag lowdown, and sundry other experts with opinions on what's necessary, going full blast during the current September-to-May season and indicates that next season will show no appreciable slump. There has been a tendency on the part of some town halls, community round tables, public affairs forums, and other groups which give the lecture bureaus their $5,000,000 a year gross, to seek less controversial fare or put on a few purely entertainment evenings in the course of dishing up culture.

But in the main the boys who have the dope and who know how to put it across to hometown audiences are still rustling in the cash. Hottest item of the current semester has been the H. R. Knickerbocker-Walter Duranty debate on "Can Russia Be Part of One World." Gabfest, booked by W. Colston Leigh for an average of $750 a throw, was announced slowly and picked up so quickly that it Hancocked 53 dates at the start of the season.

Russ interest draw was shown further by Leigh's cooking up two additional debates. John Goette and James R. Young, the long-time Far Eastern news service correspondents, are switching from the What About Japan theme to "Are We Losing Asia to Russia." Another pair of foreign affairs boys, William Mandel and Hallett Abend, latter long-time N. Y. Timesman in the Asiatic beh, are slugging each other for a fee on "Is Russia a Force for Peace?"

Soviet experts—for, against or undecided—are offered by almost every other bureau in the biz at fees from $150 up. Reuben Markham, ejected from Roumania by Moscow for his Christian Science Monitor dispatches, is being handled by Margaret E. Richardson; Leland Stowe, Pulitzer Prizeman, just back from four months in Europe, is concentrating on the Sovvys for Harold R. Peat as are Harrison Forman ("Report from Red China") Henry J. Taylor and Ely Culbertson, who uses the title "Must We Fight Russia?"

Aside from the top Russian interest, biggest shift in attention has been the emphasis on national affairs, which has given many of the Washington correspondents an opportunity to do think-piece stuff from the platform at fees averaging $250 to $500. Jonathan Daniels, formerly with the White House New Deal crowd, has caught on well for Leigh. Dorothy Thompson (Peat), while not the draw she was, is still turning down any but the top-fee, big-turnout dates, and former Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins has been going strong on the collegiate circuit which, while it rates as a prestige item, is not in the big-change market so far as top name orbits are concerned.

It's the radio boys with a regular mike spot out of the capital who are able to command highest prices. Robert St. John, Cecil Brown and Richard Harkness are among the top airers on the Leigh list; Lyman Bryson, who directs CBS educational activities, explains them and the democratic setup in general for Pest, NCAC has a long list including Major George Fielding Eliot, Edgar Ansel Mowrer and H. R. Baukhage, and the N. Y. Herald Trib. Washington chief, Bert Andrews; CBS' Paul Schubert and Reader's Digest's Stanley Hill are with Clark H. Getts.

Lowell Thomas and Drew Pearson, both top draws on the platform, have pretty well cut appearances to a minimum, being held down by radio and other commitments. So have other recent sensational grossers like Brig. General Carlos P. Romulo, aide to General MacArthur, who is now serving with the Philippine delegation to the United Nations.

Bureaus have found the entertainment side of the biz concentrating on mentalists. Dunninger, now under management of Daniel S. Tuthill, works in a great many towns on a percentage basis. Polgar (L. F. Sherman) has an added stunt, offering booking groups a chance to hide his check anywhere in town, then promising that he can't find the paper through mind reading, there's no fee. Tarbell (Lee Keedick) is handling only concert show bookings in major cities.

Number of travel names now available is growing daily. Almost killed off during the war because of inability to get around, a flock of newcomers has been offering illustrated talks with new approaches. In most towns, places, not speakers, rate tops, with managers selling World Cruise in an Armchair, or similar come-on, for a group of 10 to 20 talks at grosses which often double top the film house in town. Burton Holmes is still tops in the division, but newcomers include Robert Fliers, who concentrates on Mexico, Cuba and the Caribbean, Clifford Wirth (Leigh and NCAC) on Peru and Chile, Nichol Smith (Leigh) on Dutch Guiana, and Lawrence Fairhall on Australia and New Zealand. This writer, former VARIETY mugg in Buenos Aires, is now lecturing on Latin America for Leigh.

Pic Remake of 'Abie's Irish Rose' Recalls Anne Nichols' Fabulous Profits from Comedy Smash

By JACK PULASKI

Remake of "Abie's Irish Rose" in film form recalls its fabulous success as a stage play from 1922 to 1927 on Broadway and through the hinterland. It also recalls that Anne Nichols, its author, became the outstanding femme producer of that era. No woman ever made as much money in show business as Miss Nichols, and she retired for a time with millions. Then Wall Street Laid An Egg. That crimped her bankroll for more than $5,000,000. Still, she never went broke.

Rarely seen around Broadway, except when she came to her offices atop the Fulton theatre, where she was the gentle boss but made the decisions that meant mounting profits with "Abie" out of town, few in show business seem aware of the fact that Miss Nichols was no lucky tyro. She started writing plays at the age of 16. And she was an actress for a short period, being in one of the Four Marx Bros.' vaudeville productions.

Born in a small Georgia town, the creator of "Abie" never gave a suggestion of her Cracker origin, having been brought up in Philadelphia. "Abie," of course, was her bellringer but she was a prolific and successful author long before that laugh show emerged and established run records not only on Broadway but elsewhere. "Abie," for instance, turned Erie, Pa., from a tank town to a two-week stand; it stayed there for six weeks, in fact, and then repeated.

The Nichols Shows

The Nichols-written shows include "Linger Longer, Letty" (score by Al Goodman), which was the top stage appearance for Charlotte Greenwood. Royalties on that musical alone were as high as $6,000 per week. She wrote the farce, "Just Married," with Adelaide Matthews, which starred Lynne Overman, the play running more than a year on Broadway, just as long in Chicago and two years in London (latter stay would have been longer but Overman's yen to return to New York clipped the run).

From her pen, too, came "A Little Bit Old Fashioned," which starred May Robson, and it had a long Chicago run, but Augustus Pitou, who produced it, just didn't have the nerve to bring the show to Broadway, specializing then in out-of-town attractions. There too, were plays for Fiske O'Hara, which Pitou trouped through the sticks season after season. The manager incidentally could have gotten rich with "Abie" but tarried too long when offered a piece. Miss Nichols also brought Mme. Simon, the French star, to Broadway. Also the Comedie Francaise. Those ventures were hardly profitable but among the winners was "Seven Miles to Arden."

That Stock Market

Miss Nichols traded in the stock market but never on margin. How she came a-cropper in the Wall Street collapse of 1929 has been hinted at but never actually revealed. She was in semi-retirement in California at the time, and months previous to the panic had ordered that all securities be disposed of. A representative in New York had a power of attorney to act for her but instead of following instructions, he hypothecated her certificates and bought more stock. The securities she owned were principally those of National City Bank, quoted prior to the crash at more than $2,500 per share. It was a crushing blow but remained out of show business until emerging to put "Abie" on radio.

That wasn't the only time that the author took it on the chin financially because of ill-advised ventures by others. Films called "The Cohens and Kellys" were produced by Universal when Carl Laemmle Sr., was then running that studio. Suit on the grounds of plagiarism was prosecuted, but she lost. Studio had offered her $750,000 to settle the case but her attorney insisted on going to trial, a process that cost $150,000.

Few women in show business have been both author, director and manager, as was Miss Nichols with her "Abie." That explains the nonsuch profits made with the play, since she collected operating profits as well as royalties. She was one of the few managers who fought the booking moguls, Klaw & Erlanger, and the Shuberts. "Abie" played independent theatres on Broadway (Fulton and Republic) and on the road until its final seasons. Theatres were rented in any number of stands, and local showwomen were apprehensive because the houses weren't in proper condition, but the multitudes came to see the show. By renting the theatre, the attraction's profits soared further because the house net went to the show and there was no fee to the booking offices.

Oliver Morosco originally produced "Abie" in Los Angeles with the backing of Miss Nichols, who didn't get any royalties from that showing. Morosco also had a spectacular career in New York, only to go into a eclipse, but his losses were not attributed to show business nor the stock market.

Miss Nichols, whose home is in Hollywood on a hill back of the Strip, is said to be financially secure though not the millionairess she was when "Abie" was a smash success.

Equity to Take Sharp Steps On D. C. Situation

At Equity's quarterly meeting held at the Hotel Astor Friday (3) a report upon the proposals to the council made early in the fall was read to the membership. Progress has been made upon several of the proposals designed for the welfare of legit actors, including clarification of rules whereby junior members may be eligible to senior membership. Committees are in charge of other movements and indications are that they have been industrious in working out the accompanying problems.

The rule requiring junlors to be members for two years before they may become eligible to become seniors remains as is but it now includes the chorus. If members of Chorus Equity join the parent Equity they are automatically credited with the length of time with CE. Junior Equityites who went into the armed services from shows will be credited with three or twelve those attractions played after they went into uniform.

Equity has moved in an effort to clear up the theatre patronage situation in Washington where Negroes are denied admittance to legit shows. Union will confer with the managers at the League of New York Theatres next month meeting, same going for a huddle with the Assn. of Theatrical Agents and Managers board.

A request for a similar session with the Dramatists Guild was not acted upon by the latter as yet but a group of some 33 playwrights started the agitation against segregation in the capital. Equity plans to participate in a campaign in Washington to correct the alleged abuse but would do so in connection with other theatre groups, not singly.

Equity had planned to join with the League to work for a reduction in the 20% federal admission tax. But that is no longer necessary because the levy on tickets will be reduced to 10% as of July 1, as announced by President Truman last week when a reduction in excise and luxury levies was also made public.

Legit Notes

Arthur Schwartz trained back to the Coast. Has indie film production plans.

Jerry Wald to Boston next Monday for the Norman Krasna "John and Mary" play opening in which the WB producer will filmize.

Dudley Nichols arrived from the Coast Monday (6) for a six-day stay in Gotham.

N. Y. Times did a little feature on the retirement of Vincent Sardi, the 44th St. restaurateur who has served nearly all of showbusiness' notables since its founding, in 1920. Vincent, Jr., takes over.

Longhair Music Boomed 100% During War Years

By ARTHUR JUDSON

(President of Columbia Concerts)

The war brought about an extraordinary music boom in this country. Audiences increased over 100%; the amount of money spent on so-called "good music" doubled. A new public grew up, drawn from many sources. Factory and defense workers making big money heard concert and opera performances for the first time; men in uniform, introduced to so-called longhair music by USO Camp-Shows, found they liked it; radio listeners discovered the three B's as entertaining — or almost — as boogie-woogie; ordinary folk whose businesses were doing well began to buy concert tickets along with theatre and movie tickets.

This is the question the concert manager must now face: can we hold this new public when money will no longer be so plentiful? Can we persuade people who bought out of their surplus to buy out of their budget? Can we make ticket-buying part of the regular expenditure of the average man? Can we convince boom-time patrons that music is no luxury, but part of the good life?

Well, I think we can. At any rate, we are trying.

There are many encouraging factors to begin with, there is the example of the last depression when no important local concert manager and no major symphonic organization went out of business. That was almost 20 years ago. Since then our music has taken such a firm hold in the life of the average American community, that it is going to take a powerful deal to dislodge or eliminate it.

The United States is now the music centre of the entire world. The war years crystallized and solidified America's privileged position and the postwar world is looking to this country for support and guidance in solving its musical problems.

Columbia Concerts, as the largest managerial organization, sees its problem as twofold, first to the artists themselves, then to the public at large.

The healthy and fair distribution of work is one of the problems now being worked out. American artists, for the first time, are being given the chance to appear before audiences all over the world, and, in turn artists from abroad again have the opportunity to develop and expand their careers in the United States. We believe that sympathetic management and interchange of artists make for good-will, good business and good music.

The call for good music throughout the entire world is extraordinary. The figures are so impressive, the territory involved so widespread, that there is excellent reason to believe that the "boom" was not merely the result of general prosperity but represented in great measure a permanent expansion of public interest in good music.

The development of the Latin-American market, the new interest of Australians in American artists since the influx of American soldiers and ideas during the war, the reopening of Great Britain and most of the European continent to musical commerce, has created a demand so great that the supply of artists is hardly equal to it. Our artists now have all-year round tours. "Seasons" in the old sense have vanished. Artists follow the "season" from country to country, from continent to continent. Concert booking covers the entire world.

Not only has concert-buying increased but every field of music has expanded. The record business has never been better. In radio more and more commercial sponsors are using longhair music to get long-term results. And Hollywood has awakened to the fact that good music is also top entertainment.

Records, radio, movies — and especially the broadcasts of great symphonic orchestras — all have broken their shackles towards building up a permanent concert going American public.

Concert management by now is built on the solid ground of public demand. Good music has become an essential part of the national cultural diet. It seems unlikely that there will be musical "rationing."

'Heartless' Critic

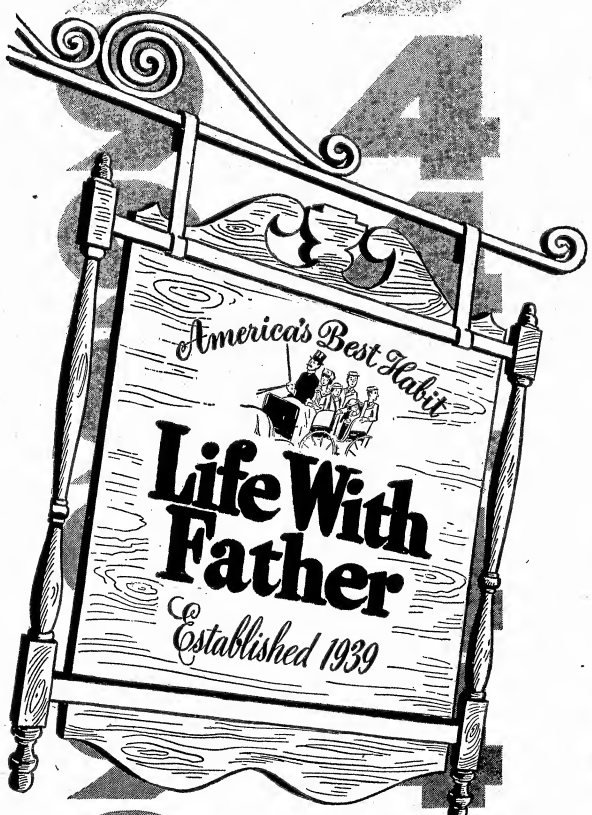
Continued from page 269

can white hope in the field of letters.

"But lotus-land has got you, old boy, and that swimming pool full of money. Your return to Broadway via 'To Quito and Back' and such other dramas was met with deserved Broadway cheers from the critical gentry. You are the fellow who wrote that insufferable drool for Cary Grant and Ingrid Bergman to speak in the movie 'Notorious.' You are also responsible for 'A Flag Is Born' which, I repeat, is windy, bombastic and rhetorical even to many who still believe in its thesis.

"And, last but not least, you singled me out as a 'heartless Joe,' there were three other critics in town who failed to succumb to your dramaturgy in spite of the fact that your press-agent did a neat job of surgery on the various reviews.

"Quoting out of context is a game that anybody can play. At least three other local scribes suffered only moderate cardiac twinges at 'Flag.' Your devotion to a tremendous cause does you high credit but in this instance you have done a pretty bad job of selling it."



America's Best Habit
Life With Father
Established 1939

CITY PLAYHOUSES, INC., New York

LOUIS A. LOTITO, Pres.

★

BIJOU THEATRE
"LIFE WITH FATHER"

★ ★

CORONET THEATRE
"LOVELY ME"

★ ★

FULTON THEATRE
"ANOTHER PART OF THE FOREST"

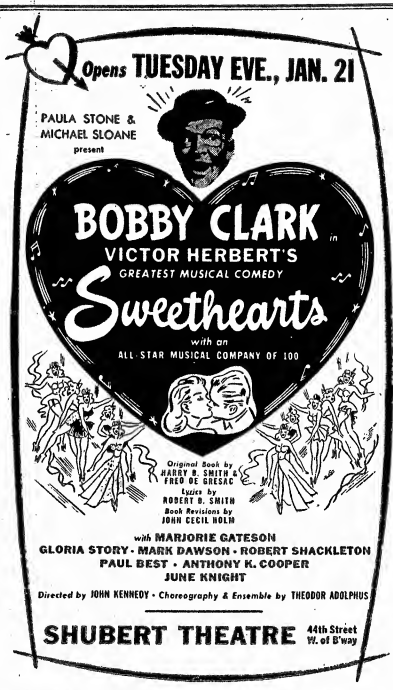
★ ★

MOROSCO THEATRE
"THE VOICE OF THE TURTLE"

★ ★

46TH STREET THEATRE
"FINIAN'S RAINBOW"

★



GREETINGS
FROM

PERRY WATKINS

and

JOHN R. SHEPPERD, JR.

Producers of

"BEGGAR'S HOLIDAY"

BROADWAY THEATRE, NEW YORK

THEATRE GUILD

Productions

SEASON 1946-1947

The Iceman Cometh

The Fatal Weakness

Oklahoma!

Carousel

National Company of "Oklahoma!"

A Moon for the Misbegotten

Jane

Allegro

THE THEATRE GUILD and JOHN C. WILSON present

O Mistress Mine

The Theatre Guild on the Air

"The Original and Finest"
SHIPSTADS and JOHNSON
"ICE FOLLIES OF 1947"

2,800,000 ATTENDED "ICE FOLLIES" PERFORMANCES LAST YEAR

1946-1947 ITINERARY

COAST TO COAST

Los Angeles, California	Sept. 19-Oct. 28
Chicago, Illinois	Nov. 1-Nov. 17
New York, N. Y.	Nov. 19-Dec. 1
New Haven, Connecticut	Dec. 2-Dec. 8
Hershey, Pennsylvania	Dec. 10-Dec. 21
Christmas Vacation	Dec. 22-Dec. 24
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania	Dec. 25-Jan. 18
Cleveland, Ohio	Jan. 20-Jan. 27
Buffalo, New York	Jan. 29-Feb. 2
Toronto, Canada	Feb. 3-Feb. 7
Montreal, Canada	Feb. 9-Feb. 16
Boston, Massachusetts	Feb. 18-March 2
Providence, R. I.	March 3-March 9
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania	March 11-March 17
Vacation	March 18-April 14
Minneapolis, Minnesota	April 15-May 5
Seattle, Washington	May 8-May 25
Portland, Oregon	May 27-June 8
San Francisco, Calif.	June 11-Sept. 14

THE GREATEST OF THE ICE SHOWS

Season's Greetings

MOLLY PICON

GREETINGS

RICHARD BARSTOW

CHOREOGRAPHER

— FOR —

★

Nicky Blair's "CARNIVAL" New York

★

8TH YEAR —

MERRIEL ABBOTT — "EMPIRE ROOM REVIEWS"

EMPIRE ROOM, PALMER HOUSE, CHICAGO

★

2nd UNIT — HOTEL STATLER CHAIN

Pulitzer Prize Play!

(NOW IN 3RD YEAR)

BROCK PEMBERTON presents

Frank Fay
in
"Harvey"

A New Comedy by MARY CHASE
with
JOSEPHINE HULL
Directed by ANTOINETTE PERRY
Settings by JOHN ROOT

48TH ST. THEATRE
East of Broadway
NEW YORK

BROCK PEMBERTON
presents

Joe E. Brown
in
"Harvey"

a new comedy by MARY CHASE
with MARION LORNE
directed by
ANTOINETTE PERRY
Settings by JOHN ROOT

(NOW IN 6TH MONTH)

HARRIS THEATRE

CHICAGO

(NOW IN PREPARATION)

LONDON

COMPANY

2 PERFECT ENTERTAINMENT TREATS

MAX GORDON productions

"Must be seen . . . a charming, warming and chuckling comedy."
—Morehouse, Sun.

FREDRIC MARCH • FLORENCE ELDRIDGE

in the new smash hit

YEARS AGO

by RUTH GORDON

Staged by Garson Kanin

•

MANSFIELD THEATRE

"An uproarious delight . . . a solid comedy."
—Barnes, Herald Tribune.

•

BORN YESTERDAY

The Hilarious Comedy Smash

by

GARSON KANIN

•

LYCEUM THEATRE
New York

NATIONAL COMPANY
NOW ON TOUR

Season's Greetings

Arthur F. Driscoll

Edward C. Raftery

Paul D. O'Brien

T. Newman Lawler

GILBERT MILLER

SONJA HENIE and ARTHUR M. WIRTZ

Present the World's Greatest Ice Skating Spectacle

SONJA HENIE'S

"HOLLYWOOD ICE REVUE OF 1947"

Now on Tour

Appearing at Madison Square Garden Beginning January 29

★ ★ ★ ★

"ICETIME"

CENTER THEATRE
Radio City
NEW YORK

Production by SONART PRODUCTIONS

Executive Director, ARTHUR M. WIRTZ

Production Director, WILLIAM H. BURKE

Staged by CATHERINE LITTLEFIELD

Compliments of the Season

MARCUS HEIMAN

234 West 44th Street, New York

The Sensation of the Season!

HOMER CURRAN, in association with
RUSSELL LEWIS and HOWARD YOUNG, presents

CORNELIA OTIS SKINNER

in "Lady Windermere's Fan"

by OSCAR WILDE

with PENELOPE WARD • DAVID MANNERS
JOHN BUCKMASTER • REX EVANS • REX O'MALLEY
Stanley Bell • Evan Thomas and ESTELLE WINWOOD

Scenery, Costumes and Lighting by CECIL BEATON Directed by JACK MINSTER

CORT Theatre 48th ST. E. of B'way • BR 9-0046 • Mats. Wed. & Sat.

GEARY Theatre, San Francisco . . . Enroute to N.Y.

RUSSELL LEWIS and HOWARD YOUNG
present

DOROTHY GISH and KENT SMITH

in

THE STORY OF MARY SURRATT

A New Play by JOHN PATRICK

Directed by THE AUTHOR • Settings by SAM LEVE

We sincerely hope that when you have been going as long as we that you are hale and hearty, too

DAZIANS, Inc.

THEATRICAL FABRICS SINCE 1842

Commencing Our 105th Year

142 WEST 44TH STREET, NEW YORK
CHICAGO BOSTON LOS ANGELES

NOW ON TOUR

MARJORIE & SHERMAN EWING
present

Best of Spirits

A New Comedy by MARTYN COLEMAN
with
Dorothy STICKNEY Roland CULVER

Directed by Jerome Coray • Setting by Raymond Sovey

OPENING IN NEW YORK IN FEBRUARY

BURGESS MEREDITH

RICHARD RODGERS & OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN 2nd
present

"A DELIGHTFUL COMEDY"—Atkinson, Times
HELEN HAYES
in
"Happy Birthday"
A New Comedy by ANITA LOOS
Directed by JOSHUA LOGAN
BROADHURST THEA., 44 St. W. of B'way
Eves. 8:40 • Matinees Wed. & Sat., 2:40

"A SMASH HIT"—Life Magazine
ETHEL MERMAN
In The Musical Smash
"ANNIE GET YOUR GUN"
Music & Lyrics by IRVING BERLIN
Book by HERBERT & DOROTHY FIELDS with RAY MIDDLETON
Directed by JOSHUA LOGAN
IMPERIAL THEA., 45 St. West of B'way
Eves. 8:30 • Matinees Wed. & Sat., 2:30

The Playwrights' Company
Maxwell Anderson • Elmer Rice • Robert E. Sherwood • Kurt Weill • John F. Wharton • Directors
Present

INGRID BERGMAN
IN
MAXWELL ANDERSON'S New Play
Joan of Lorraine
WITH
SAM WANAMAKER and ROMNEY BRENT
Directed by MARGO JONES
Settings, Lighting and Costumes by LEE SIMONSON
ALVIN THEATRE NEW YORK

—ON TOUR—
JUNE HAVOC
in ELMER RICE'S Comedy Success
"DREAM GIRL"
Settings by JO MIELZINER

The Nation's Top Musical Revue!
MELVYN DOUGLAS and HERMAN LEVIN
present
"Broadway's Biggest Revue Hit!"—LIFE MAGAZINE
CALL ME MISTER
Music and Lyrics by HAROLD ROME
Sketches by ARNOLD AUERBACH
Production Directed by ROBERT H. GORDON
Dances by JOHN WRAY
"One of the Funniest Shows of ALL Time."
—COLLIER'S MAGAZINE

"The Best New Musical Show."
—GEORGE JEAN NATHAN
"A Tip-Topical Musical Sparkler."—WALTER WINCHELL

▸IN NEW YORK—NATIONAL THEATRE with JANE KEAN

▸IN BOSTON—SHUBERT THEATRE with BETTY KEAN

LELAND HAYWARD
presents
The HOWARD LINDSAY and RUSSEL CROUSE
1946 PULITZER PRIZE COMEDY

"STATE OF THE UNION"

HUDSON THEATRE — NEW YORK CITY
STARRING
RALPH BELLAMY *EDITH ATWATER
MYRON McCORMICK • MINOR WATSON • MARGALO GILLMORE
*KAY FRANCIS returns to the company Monday, Jan. 13
•
NATIONAL COMPANY
STARRING
NEIL HAMILTON • ERIN O'BRIEN-MOORE • JAMES RENNIE
•
INTERNATIONAL COMPANY
STARRING
CONRAD NAGEL • IRENE HERVEY • HENRY O'NEILL

ANOTHER CANDLE ON VARIETY'S BIRTHDAY
CAKE—CONGRATULATIONS!

BROOKS
Costume Co.

1150 Avenue of the Americas
New York City

Entertainment for All America . . .
'SKATING VANITIES'
Roller Skating
Extravaganza
with company of 140
'HOLIDAY ON ICE'
With its own portable refrigeration equipment . . . taking the thrills and magnificence of ice spectacles into towns that never before have been privileged to enjoy this great, new cycle of entertainment!
'ICE-VOGUES'
The "Baby" of the family designed for smaller towns!

New York Headquarters
GENERAL MOTORS BLDG.
1775 Broadway, Room 608
NEW YORK 19, N. Y.
Tel. Circle 7-1348-49

Best Wishes for a Happy 1947

ELISABETH BERGNER
AND
PAUL CZINNER

LOS ANGELES
Biltmore Theatre
Playing All Broadway's Important Attractions
PETER P. ERMATINGER, Manager

CLAIRE and CARL COWL
Authors' Representatives
516 Fifth Ave., New York 18, N. Y.
PLAYS BOOKS

SAMUEL FRENCH
SINCE 1830
Play, Brokers and
Authors' Representatives
25 West 45th Street, New York
811 West 7th Street, Los Angeles

THEATRICAL FABRICS
for COSTUMES, DRAPERIES, STAGE CURTAINS
Maharam supplies every Fabric need for leading Broadway productions and Hollywood studios.
"The House of Service"
MAHARAM
FABRIC CORPORATION
130 West 46th St., New York
CHICAGO 6 E. Lake St.
LOS ANGELES 1115 So. L.A. St.
ST. LOUIS 927 Century Bldg.

A Pipsqueak Pollyanna Pipes Up

Reprinted from the New Republic, Dec. 23, 1946

Pitching Horseshoes . . .

Mr. Henry A. Wallace
Editor-in-Chief, "The New Republic"
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Wallace:

I was flattered the other afternoon when one of your editors phoned and asked me to write an article for the year-end issue of your magazine. He suggested a piece which might have been titled, "Broadway Swan Song," a description of the last gold-plated New Year's Eve before we all faw down and go boom.

I told him I couldn't write it because I didn't believe it. I told him I thought the next decade would see a string of New Year's parties which would make this one look like a Campfire Girl social. I told him I couldn't go along with themisfortune-tellers andnet-work Nostradamuses who say we're all going to Hell in a hanging basket. You see, I don't think the bellyache is as bad as the bellyachers make it out to be.

Before you write me off as a pipsqueak Pollyanna, may I tell you why I have no faith in these gloomy Gabriels. I know some of them. In almost all cases they're sour grape boys who are no longer "in." During the first ten years of Roosevelt, these self-declared economists had access to the throne, and performed the financial abracadabra which has made Swiss cheese out of the buck. I remember when these pipe-smoking masterminds had no time for a sound man like Bernard Baruch. They didn't want to hear that 1 and 1 was 2 when they had just announced it was 7.

Now that they're "out," these minor prophets are trying to pick up some major profits by talking up disaster for women's clubs, radio forums, and what are vaguely called "discussion groups." I thought they were full of prunes in '36. I feel the same way about them in '46.

Right now you're probably saying, "Where does this jack-in-the-box showman get off making economic big talk? Why doesn't he tend to his baubles and bobbles and leave stratosphere thinking to brains like Leon Henderson?"

Well, I'd rather not. Sounding off on the state of the Union is an old custom around barber shops, grocery store stoves and dinner tables. I may be putting myself out on a limb, talking about tomorrow, but if my barber can do it, why can't I?

I'll bet a shiny apple there won't be any crippling strikes in 1947. I think our labor leaders have learned it doesn't pay to stage a prolonged strike for raises that are out the window before they're in the envelope. They're asking for more money. I think business is going to be smart enough to give them a good part of what they want.

I think both sides know the important thing is to get back to work. A year's uninterrupted turning of the same wheels that ground Hitler to bits will produce a flood of goods such as the world has never seen. And when there are goods to buy, the workman's buck will again rate like a buck instead of a lead quarter. When his missus hands over a dollar for a bottle of milk and a pound of butter, she'll get some change for a change. I'm predicting that a year from now there will be a shortage of shortages.

As for the Big Bomb and the Gremlin in the Kremlin, I'm not saying we're out of the woods yet, but at least we've stopped choosing up sides for another brawl. The boys know the next one is for keeps. I'm betting on peace for the simple reason everyone wants to stay alive.

The prophets of doom will say this is all too easy. They'll continue shouting, "Take to the hills—the dam is busted!"

Well, let's take a look at the professional Wet Blanket and his record over the years.

During the panic of 1837, the Detroit Free Press wailed, "All is darkness and despair. As a nation we are at the bottom of the hill."

During the panic of 1857, the Philadelphia Gazette moaned, "Nothing in this country is safe, solvent or reliable."

In 1873, the New York World sobbed, "Collapse is a grim reality. The days of the Republic are numbered."

In 1893, the New Orleans Picayune epitaphed: "On every hand there is depression, wreck and ruin. We can't go much farther."

In 1907, the Wall Street Journal solemnly announced, "The old ship of state is sinking." The Journal of Commerce said, "Even Morgan is using the subway."

They said it again in '29 and again in '37. And all the time they were counting Mr. Whiskers out, he was tossing railroad lines around this country like spaghetti. He produced autos faster than other nations produced shoes, and shoes faster than they produced matches. He gave the average man a refrigerator, and more stuff to put in it than the average man has had in the history of plane Earth.

Now, when the panic isn't even on, we're again hearing from the Unhappiness Boys and the inside dope from their usually unreliable sources. I'm afraid I'm not frightened.

Like every great fighter, Uncle Sam takes an occasional left to the jaw. But he has learned to roll with the punches, and only a sucker would bet against him. Today he's heavyweight champ of the world, and I'm betting he keeps the title.

And that's why, Mr. Wallace, I can't write a swan song piece for your magazine.

Happy New Year.

Billy Rose

(Copyright, 1946, Billy Rose)

AND

THE SAME HAPPY NEW YEAR

TO SHOW BUSINESS

Billy Rose

JOHN C. WILSON Productions

10 ROCKEFELLER PLAZA, NEW YORK CITY • CI 7-5282

CLIFTON WEBB

in NOEL COWARD'S Light Comedy

Present Laughter

with EVELYN VARDEN • DOUIS DALTON • MARTA LINDEN

Setting by DONALD OENSLAGER • Costumes by CASTILLO

Staged by MR. WILSON

PLYMOUTH Thea., W. 45 ST.

Mats. Wed. & Sat.

MAIL ORDERS FILLED PROMPTLY

(In association with NAT GOLDSTONE)

BLOOMER GIRL

Music by HAROLD ARLEN Lyrics by E. Y. HARBURG

with

NANETTE FABRAY • DICK SHARP • PEGGY CAMPBELL

HUBERT DILWORTH • OLIVE REEVES-SMITH

MABEL TAGLIAFERRO • MATT BRIGGS

Book by SIG HERZIG and FRED SAIDY

Based on the play by LILITH and DAN JAMES

Dances by AGNES De MILLE

Settings and lighting by EAMES AYERS Costumes by MILES WHITE Book directed by WILLIAM SCHORR

Orchestration by RUSSELL BENNETT Musical director JERRY ARLEN

Production Staged by E. Y. HARBURG

NEW YORK CITY CENTER

6 Weeks, Beginning Monday, January 6, 1947

TALLULAH BANKHEAD in

The Eagle has Two Heads

by JEAN COCTEAU

with HELMUT DANTINE

CLARENCE DERWENT • COLIN KEITH-JOHNSTON

ELEANOR WILSON

Settings by Donald Oenslager Costumes by Alma Bernstein

Staged by Mr. WILSON

(TOURING)

THE THEATRE GUILD and JOHN C. WILSON

present

ALFRED LYNN

LUNT·FONTANNE

in

"O Mistress Mine"

EMPIRE THEATRE, 40th St. & B'way

JOHN GIELGUD SEASON

"THE IMPORTANCE OF BEING EARNEST"

"LOVE FOR LOVE"

(COMING)

JOHN WILDBERG Presents

HARRY WAGSTAFF GRIBBLE'S Production

ANNA LUCASTA

By PHILIP YORDAN

EASTERN COMPANY

Now Playing

LOCUST ST. THEATRE

PHILADELPHIA

WESTERN COMPANY

Now on Tour

OPENING GEARY THEATRE

SAN FRANCISCO, JAN. 21

CIVIC THEATRE, Chicago, Ill.

JOHN WILDBERG and JOSEPH CURTIS, Lessees

After Successive Runs of

12 WEEKS—GLASS MENAGERIE

44 WEEKS—ANNA LUCASTA

25 WEEKS—HENRY V

Is Now Open for Immediate Bookings

Apply to UNITED BOOKING OFFICE, 234 West 44th St., N. Y. C.

Or NICK HOLDE, Edison Hotel, N. Y. C.

THE THEATRE IS AVAILABLE FOR CONCERTS, BROADCASTS, LECTURES, ETC., ON OPEN AFTERNOONS OR EVENINGS

ARTHUR HOPKINS

Presents

Louis Calhern

In

EMMETT LAVERY'S

"The Magnificent Yankee"

With

SYLVIA FIELDS

ON TOUR

MICHAEL TODD PRODUCTIONS

So-long New York for a While — MGM Is My New Boss

BETTY GARRETT

And, thanks to my many friends, and especially to the following, for making everything possible: MELVYN DOUGLAS and HERMAN LEVIN, producers of

"CALL ME MISTER"

HAROLD ROME, composer; ARNOLD AUERBACH, sketch writer; BOB GORDON, director, and THE ENTIRE CAST.

★

DECCA and RCA-VICTOR recording companies.

★

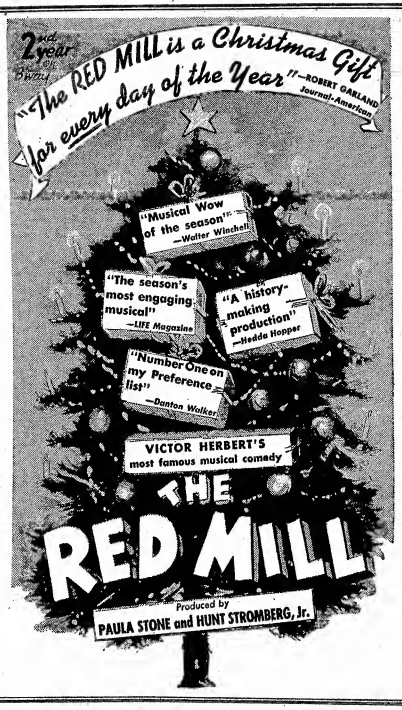
BOB FRAMM, my vocal coach; and in loving memory, MME. LAZZARI, my first vocal teacher.

★

LOU MANDEL, my attorney-advisor, and ARTHUR PINE, my press representative.

★

THE WILLIAM MORRIS AGENCY.



THEATRICAL INVESTMENTS

THE HERD THEATRICAL CORPORATION

157 EAST 71ST STREET, NEW YORK 21, N. Y.
RHinelander 4-1753

Represented by "ANOTHER PART OF THE FOREST," "BEST OF SPIRITS," "EAGLE RAMPANT," "FINIAN'S RAINBOW," "JOAN OF LORRAINE," "STREET SCENE," "THE CHOCOLATE SOLDIER"

SEASON'S GREETINGS FROM

OLSEN AND JOHNSON

WHO OPEN AT

NICKY BLAIR'S

CARNIVAL

on January 9th, 1947, in

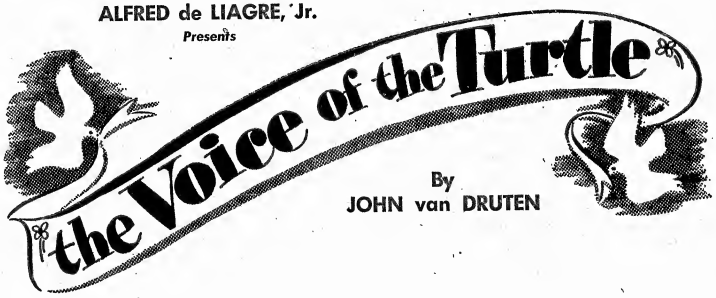
NEW YORK

Management

WM. MORRIS AGENCY

Holiday Greetings!

ALFRED de LIAGRE, Jr.
Presents



By
JOHN van DRUTEN

NEW YORK
MOROSCO THEATRE

ON TOUR
TORONTO
ROYAL ALEXANDRA

ON TOUR
INDIANAPOLIS
ENGLISH THEATRE

The New Musical Smash Hit!

LEE SABINSON and WILLIAM R. KATZELL
present

A New Musical
Book by E. Y. HARBURG and FRED SAIDY
Music by BURTON LANE • Lyrics by E. Y. HARBURG
with
ELLA LOGAN
ALBERT SHARPE • DONALD RICHARDS • DAVID WAYNE
ANITA ALVAREZ • LYN MURRAY SINGERS
Directed by BRETAIGNE WINDUST
Scenery & Lighting by JO MIELZINER • Choreography by MICHAEL KIDD Costumes by ELEANOR GOLDSMITH • Orchestrations by ROBERT RUSSELL BENNETT Vocal Arrangements by LYN MURRAY

46th STREET THEATRE
WEST OF BROADWAY

SEASON'S GREETINGS

VINTON FREEDLEY
30 Rockefeller Plaza
NEW YORK 20, N. Y.

Back to the Strand

Continued from page 266

50 years, on and off, I have never lost my enthusiasm as a playgoer. My interest in the theatre has remained as keen as it ever was. Every time I enter a theatre I anticipate hopefully a renewal of the old thrills of youth. Sometimes I get them. Sometimes I don't. During the war years I tried to see everything, but when the war was over I commenced to be restive. I had to get a show going, and so I commissioned my favorite librettist, A. P. Herbert (now Sir Alan) to collaborate once more with Vivian Ellis, who served all the war years in the Navy. "Big Ben" was the result. Opening in Manchester, it was a sellout there for two-and-a-half weeks. Unable to get into a London theatre, I took it two weeks at a time to Liverpool, Edinburgh, Glasgow and Newcastle. On tour I had warnings of a condition which was to lay me low. I pulled through to the dress rehearsal at the Adelphi, London, on the night before production, but I was not to attend the premiere, which stopped the traffic in the Strand. Of my 125 shows in London this was the second opening I was forbidden to attend. The first was "League of Notions" with the Dolly Sisters at the New Oxford theatre. It was hard lines, but many "happy returns" from the boxoffice helped me to make a quick recovery.

While in the London Clinic I asked my friends, Herbert and Ellis, to write me another. In very quick time the libretto was delivered to me and the composer was quickly on the job. Originally called "70 Summers," the title has been changed to "Bless the Bride." The story is a romantic fantasy laid in 1870. The outfit looks good to me. It is timed for spring or summer of 1947. I have other plans, but I don't intend to be a wholesaler.

Summer Theatre Wanted
WITHIN TWO HOURS OF
NEW YORK CITY
Box 124, Variety, 154 W. 46th St.
New York 19

RAY BOLGER

STANLEY GILKEY
and BARBARA PAYNE
Present

In
"Three To Make Ready"
Staged by JOHN MURRAY ANDERSON
OPENING BLACKSTONE THEATRE, CHICAGO in FEBRUARY

JAMES JOVAN Presents
WHY MR. LAWRENCE!
With a Broadway Cast—Now on the Road
SOON TO BE PRESENTED IN KEY CITIES WITH A HOLLYWOOD SCREEN PERSONALITY
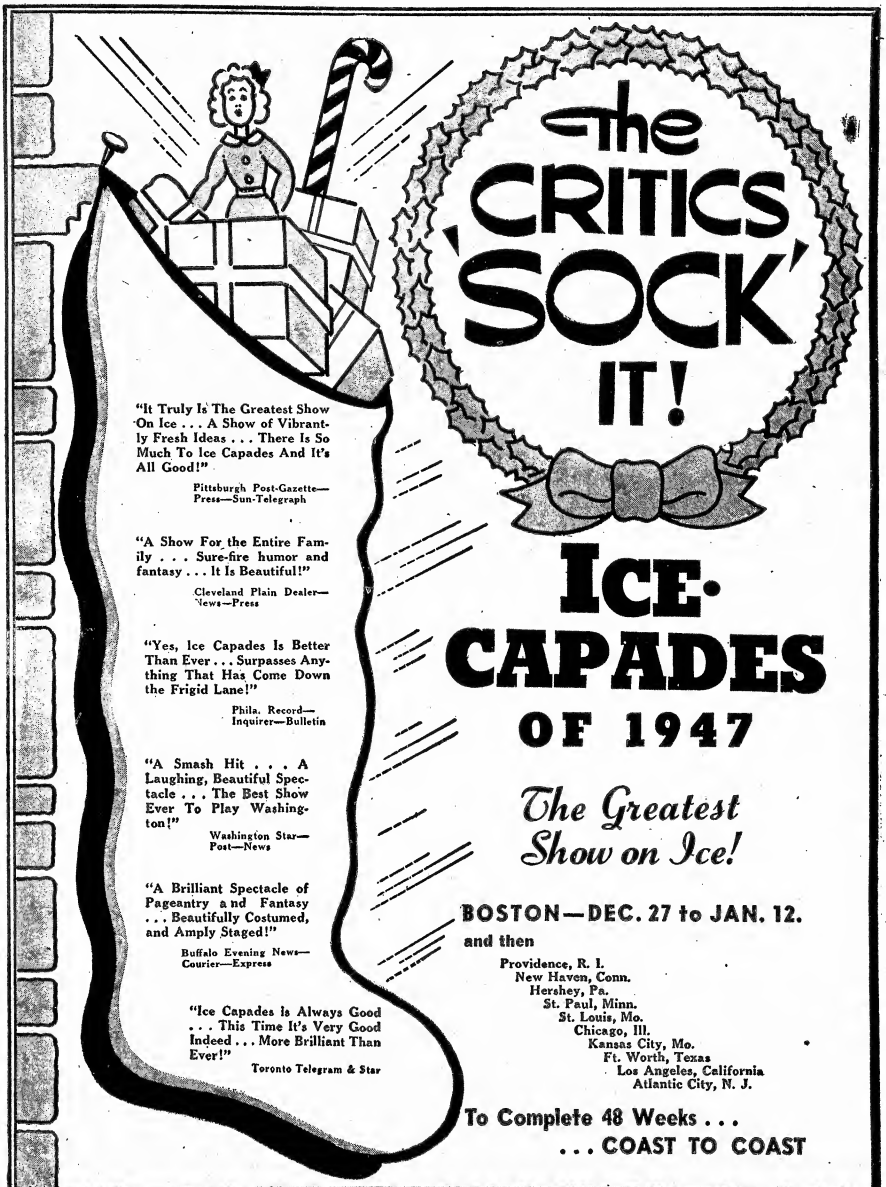
"UNBOWED"
"TAILOR MAID"
COMING "BACHELOR AT 40"
"BUYERS MARKET"
"PRICE OF VICTORY"
ADVANCE PRODUCTIONS, INC.
59 W. MONROE ST. CHICAGO 3, ILL.



the CRITICS 'SOCK' IT!
"It Truly Is The Greatest Show On Ice . . . A Show of Vibrantly Fresh Ideas . . . There Is So Much To Ice Capades And It's All Good!"
Pittsburgh Post-Gazette—Press—Sun-Telegraph
"A Show For the Entire Family . . . Sure-fire humor and fantasy . . . It Is Beautiful!"
Cleveland Plain Dealer—News—Press
"Yes, Ice Capades Is Better Than Ever . . . Surpasses Anything That Has Come Down the Frigid Lane!"
Phila. Record—Inquirer—Bulletin
"A Smash Hit . . . A Laughing, Beautiful Spectacle . . . The Best Show Ever To Play Washington!"
Washington Star—Post—News
"A Brilliant Spectacle of Pageantry and Fantasy . . . Beautifully Costumed, and Amply Staged!"
Buffalo Evening News—Courier—Express
"Ice Capades Is Always Good . . . This Time It's Very Good Indeed . . . More Brilliant Than Ever!"
Toronto Telegram & Star
ICE-CAPADES OF 1947
The Greatest Show on Ice!
BOSTON—DEC. 27 to JAN. 12.
and then
Providence, R. I.
New Haven, Conn.
Hershey, Pa.
St. Paul, Minn.
St. Louis, Mo.
Chicago, Ill.
Kansas City, Mo.
Ft. Worth, Texas
Los Angeles, California
Atlantic City, N. J.
To Complete 48 Weeks . . .
. . . COAST TO COAST

"Bert Lahr puts BURLESQUE over with a bang! . . . The play is loaded with laughs. . . . The audience came out laughing and applauding!"
—O'CONNOR, Journal-American.

"The happiest thing that happened on Broadway this winter . . . A rare piece of Americana . . . A pleasant treat which, along with the uproarious laughter, will bring tears to many an eye. The burlesque show is electric. It rocks the house with gales of laughter . . . Lahr's performance is absolutely delightful."
—MORTIMER, Daily Mirror.

"Shines with good humar . . . builds to an altogether uproarious finish . . . The Belasco's own burlesque show comes complete with hot music, a dead-pan chorus, a strip-tease, and Lahr himself as a comedy cop . . . The result is a climax of genuine hilarity . . . Lahr never fails to deliver the goods."
—GUERNSEY
Herald Tribune.

"Triple A Indarsement: The superb performance of Bert Lahr as 'Skid' in the magnificent revival of 'Burlesque' —and a deep bow to a fine portrayal of the faithful Bonny by Jean Parker . . . Burlesque has leaped high into the Hit Parade—complete sell-out nightly . . . I had a wonderful time."
—SOBOL,
Journal-American.

"BURLESQUE is still an engaging and often a pretty hilarious play. Bert Lahr is undoubtedly a very funny man. Jean Parker is an extremely handsome girl . . . a great pleasure to observe."
—WOLCOTT GIBBS,
The New Yorker.

JEAN DALRYMPLE presents

Bert Lahr with Jean Parker in

The Famous Comedy

BURLESQUE

by GEORGE MANKER WATTERS and ARTHUR HOPKINS · BOBBY BARRY · KAY BUCKLEY with JERRI BLANCHARD · Dances by BILLY HOLBROOK · Costumes by GRACE HOUSTON

Settings by ROBERT ROMYE PADDOCK · Production Stage Manager, GUS SCHIRMER, JR.

Production Assistant, SYLVIA FRIEDLANDER

Staged by MR. HOPKINS

BELASCO
44th St., East of B'way
BRyant 9-5067
Evenings 8:40
Mats.: Thurs. and Sat., 2:40

MICHAEL MYERBERG

PRESENTS

"LUTE SONG"

ON TOUR

"YEARS AGO"

NOW PLAYING

MANSFIELD THEATRE

NEW YORK

MICHAEL MYERBERG, Management

GREETINGS
FROM WILLIAM CAHN
PRESENTING
"TOPLITZKY OF NOTRE DAME"
CENTURY THEATRE, N. Y.
AND
"THE FIRST HUNDRED YEARS"
Opening on Broadway — Week of Feb. 7

Season's Greetings

from

San Carlo

Opera Company

36th Year

GREETINGS FROM

DWIGHT DEERE WIMAN & CO.

Dwight Deere Wiman, Forrest C. Haring, J. H. Del Bondio, Lina Abarbanell

Plays Out of Town

The Story of Mary Surratt

San Francisco, Dec. 30.

Russell Lewis and Howard Young production of drama in three acts (six scenes) by John Patrick. Stars Dorothy Gish and Kent Smith; features Elizabeth Risdon, Shawn Menken, Richard Sanders, Harlan Briggs, Bellamy Smith, Bernard Thomas. Directed by Patrick Ludlow. Staged by Lewis Leverett. Opened at Curran, San Francisco, Dec. 30, '46; $3.60 top.

Anna Surratt	Elizabeth Risdon
Mary Surratt	Dorothy Gish
Louis Weichmann	Bernard Thomas
George Atzerodt	Michael Pax
David Herold	Richard Meeker
John Surratt	Kent Smith
John Wilkes Booth	James Monks
Louis Payne	Don Shelton
General Hoffman	Richard Bunday
Col. Burnett	Douglas McEachin
Maj. Gen. Hunter	Hugh Sanders
Maj. Gen. Wallace	Robert Neff
Maj. Gen. Augur	Thomas Glynn
Brig. Gen. Foster	Dallas Bagg
Brig. Gen. Ruffin	Walker Rogers
Brig. Gen. Harris	Frank McFarland
Col. Tompkins	Lucien Morgan
Col. Clendenin	Arthur Stenning
Capt. William Smith	Orban Denton
Special Provost Marshal	Tom Daly
Maj. Henry Rathbone	Brandon Harper
Lieut. Henry Von Steinacker	Jill Hitch
Father Wiget	Harlan Briggs
Gen. Lloyd Beidler	Bellamy Smith
Beverly Johnson	Kent Smith
W. E. Doster	Hugh Sanders
Dr. Samuel Mudd	Tom J. McGivern
Edward Spangler	Lyndon Brook
Michael O'Laughlin	Bill Reynolds
Samuel Arnold	Larry Johns

While the "Story of Mary Surratt" reaches several high-points of dramatic intensity in its three acts (six scenes), especially in its expertently portrayed military courtroom scenes, the play as a whole lags behind the characterizations by Dorothy Gish and Kent Smith.

This is probably inevitable in an historical drama the chief personalities of which are the offstage Lincolns, and a John Wilkes Booth, who appears in just the first act, rather than the pathetic wisp of an unfortunate woman who is caught up in the vise, victim of the hysteria of the times, and dragged to doom on the gallows. Inevitably, too, the leading lady, even in the person of Dorothy Gish, stirs the audience to pity much as Joan d'Arc and Mary of Scots do, and the audiences time out of mind, except that in "Mary Surratt" the figure is of lesser stature. The playwright, too, of lesser stature than the classic successes which have dramatized Joan and Mary of Scots, though it is still good showmanship.

The portrayal of Mary Surratt by Dorothy Gish is sympathetic and trenchant with emphasis on a welcome underplaying of the character. Miss Gish painstakingly avoids the many opportunities for cheap histrionics and leaves a hollow ebbing of a suffering mortal, completely overwhelmed by the tide of events.

Kent Smith does an excellent job as the childhood sweetheart returned to declared her life. First rate stagecraft is also displayed by Elizabeth Ross, as Anna Surratt, young daughter of Mary. The entire supporting cast is completely equal to its job, and the direction by the author, aside from a few momentary understandable opening night rough spots, is effective. So are authentic sets by Richard Leve and lighting by Girvan Higgins. Ted.

Best of Spirits

Hartford.

Marjorie and Sherman Kirby production of comedy in three acts seen staged by Marion Coleman. Features Dorothy Sicklen, Bernard Culver. Staged by Jerome Cowan. Settings, Raymond Sovey; costumes, Emeline Roche. Opened at Bushnell Memorial, Hartford, Jan. 3, '47; $3 top.

Mr. Laidi	Hubh Cutman
Rose Thacker	Thomas Glynn
Kitty Thacker	Dorothy Sicklen
Aunt Vera	Libbi Curtiss Reid
Granny	Daisy Belmore
Mrs. Harris	Bernard Culver
Captain Wattle	Roland Culver
Dwight Rubad	Thomas Coley

"Best of Spirits" needs extremely skilled play doctoring if it is to survive. Scheduled for a Broadway opening Feb. 3, exactly one month from its preem, the play should benefit with a new body and face. Low pulse of a near corpse is kept beating by injection of good acting and clever dialog.

Show opens with a dead first act. Second stanza shows some signs of life in closing but it has become fully activated. But much rewriting remains to be done.

Play deals with a romantic lady healer of antiques, Mrs. Thacker (Dorothy Stickney). A widow, she has become so worried about the future of her beautiful and intellectual daughter that she has taken to drink. From her many bottles emerges the alcoholic ghost-spirit Wattle (Roland Culver). Like the mystic servant of Aladdin's lamp, Culver aids in carrying out the plot. Here he helps in arranging a match for the daughter.

In the meantime, the widow and Genii fall in love, with the widow losing out on her new love after sacrificing the Genii so that her daughter's marriage might be terminated. However, he reappears as a psychiatrist who has been hired to commit the widow to an insane asylum for a cure. The love vaccine takes again.

An infusion of new comic situations would help considerably, several of those used falling flat. A few good comic stanzas revolve about the poetic situations and the result of the Genii's machinations.

Excellent performances are turned in by a more than competent acting cast. Culver, well known British film and stage actor, here makes his

(Continued on page 290)

Chi Legit in High Gear; 'Norway' 50G, 'Flag' 23G, 'Apple' 20G, 'Pygmalion' 24G

Chicago.

Legit situation couldn't be much better than it was last week, with some shows doing capacity even the day before New Year's Eve, at which time everything in town went SRO. Top price for Eve was that of "Song of Norway," ducats going at $7.20. "Apple" and "Flag" saw no price boost, with all others going to $6 per for the good ones.

Biz prior to holiday was unusually good, and price boosts along with that factor made for great week.

Estimates for Last Week

"Apple of His Eye" Erlanger (2nd week) (1,246; $4.60). Fine $20,000 with up in holiday price.

"A Flag Is Born," Studebaker (2nd week) (1,246; $4.20). Stayed at $4.20 but brought $23,000.

"Harvey," Harris (22nd week) (1,000; $4.20). Just like opening week again with $25,000.

"Pygmalion," Selwyn (5th week) (1,000; $4.20). Up with the others with $24,000.

"Song of Norway," Shubert (5th week) (1,100; $4.60). Honest, good yet is sweeping $50,000, which included a $10,000 capacity New Year's Eve.

"State of the Union," Blackstone (35th week) (1,358; $4.20). Took a sudden scoot to $25,000 for bangup week.

I Remember Bobby

Continued from page 265

younger boys played only two weeks out of every three.

Bobby was very pleased with himself when he reached the age when he could alternate between these two parts. It wasn't long, however, before we noticed that the weeks when Bobby was playing "Whitney," the older boy, he played the part with great gusto, but the weeks when he played "Harlan," the younger boy, he was playing it with a sense of shame. He no longer enjoyed appearing in public wearing clothes rebelling over using his oatmeal. So we had to call a rehearsal for Bobby. The day of the rehearsal, some one of the company would call him to the theatre for his cues—that the rehearsal had been called especially for him. "What!" cried Bobby. "Called especially for me? Don't they know I'm the one that doesn't like to rehearse?"

Bobby grew up so fast that he finally had to be supplanted. It was a bad moment for Bobby. I had to explain to him very carefully that it wasn't because he wasn't wanted. After his last performance, he came into my dressing-room to bid goodbye to me. Now that this association was over, he felt that he could recognize my existence and I think that he was rather grateful to me for providing that he didn't exist during his time in the company. He was sorry to go, and I was sorry to see him go.

Recently Russel Crouse and I appeared on an radio program, "We the People." When I turned up at the Maxine Elliott theatre five o'clock on a Sunday afternoon for the rehearsal, I ran into Bobby waiting at the stage door. He is now a young man of 14 and we had a fine man-to-man talk. He seemed very glad to see me. He is growing up to become an actor. I asked him if he were on the program with me and he said no, he had just come around there to get autographs. I never felt so flattered. I was reaching for my fountain pen when he added: "I'm just waiting here for Larry Parks." So we said goodbye to each other. At least I was no longer invisible.

Current Road Shows

(Period Covering Jan. 6-18).

"A Dangerous Woman" — Erie, Schen'tdy (17-18).

"A Flag Is Born"—Studebaker, Chi. (6-18).

"A Young Man's Fancy"—Copley, Bost. (6-18).

"Anna Lucasta"—Locust, Philly (6-18).

"Anna Lucasta"—Aud., Okla. City (6); Mem. Hall, Joplin (7); Cons. Hall, Tulsa (8); Arcadia, Wichita (10-11); Aud., Denver (13-14); Aud., Pueblo (15); Aud., Boulder (16); Phillips, Cheyenne (17); Aud., Laramie (18).

"Apple of His Eye"—Erlanger, Chi. (6-18).

Ballet Theatre—Aud., St. Louis (18-20).

"Best of Spirits"—Plymouth, Bost. (6-18).

"Blackouts of 1946"—El Capitan, Hollywood (6-18).

Blackstone — Town Hall, Toledo (6-8); Park, Youngstown (9-11); Colonial, Akron (12-14); Shea's, Erie (15-16); Shea's, Bradford (17); Shea's, Jamestown (18).

"Brighten the Time" — Opera House, Bost. (6-18).

"Born Yesterday" — Wilbur, Bost. (6-11); Nixon, Pitt. (13-18).

"Call Me Mister"—Shubert, Bost. (6-18).

"Come On Up"—Aud., Des Moines (7); Omaha, Omaha (8); Music Hall, K. C. (9-11); Aud., L. Rock (13); Aud., Texarkana (14); Aud., Shreveport (15); Majestic, Ft. Worth (16); Melba, Dallas (17); Con. Hall, Tulsa (18).

"Constance Talla"—Playhouse, Wil. (9-11); McCarter, Princeton (17-18).

"Dear Friend" — Opera House, Newark (6-11); Walnut, Philly (13-18).

"Dear Ruth"—Drake, Oil City (6); Shea's, Bradford (7); Virginia, Wheeling (8); Aud., Charleston (10); Aud., Danville (11); Carolina, Greenville (12); State, W. Columbia (14); Aud., Asheville (15); Carolina, Charlotte (16); Carolina, Durham (17); State, Raleigh (18).

"Dream Girl"—Walnut, Philly (6-11); Ford's, Balto. (13-18).

"Eagle Rampant"—Forrest, Philly (6-18).

"Gentle Ghost" — Geary, Frisco (6-11).

"Hamlet"—Curran, Frisco (6-18).

"Harvey"—Harris, Chi. (6-18).

"John Loves Mary" — Shubert, N. Haven (16-18).

"Little A"—Ford's, Balto. (6-11).

"Lute Song"—Biltmore, L. A. (6-18).

"Magnificent Yankee"—Cass. Det. (6-18).

"Oklahoma!"—Nixon, Pitt. (6-11); Hartman, Col. (13-18).

"Pygmalion"—Selwyn, Chi. (6-11).

"Rope" — Shubert-Lafayette, Det. (6-18).

"Spirit of the Archer"—Shubert, N. Haven (9-11); Colonial, Bost. (13-18).

"Song of Norway"—Shubert, Chi. (6-18).

"Springtime for Henry"—American, St. Louis (6-11); Cox, Cincy (13-18).

"State of the Union"—Aud., Stockton (6); Aud., Sacramento (7-8); Aud., San Jose (9); Aud., Oakland (10-11); Aud., Fresno (13); Aud., Pasadena (14-15); Aud., Long Beach (16); Lobero, S. Barbara (17-18).

"State of the Union"—Blackstone, Chi. (6-11); Detroit, Det. (13-18).

"Story of Mary Surratt" — Geary, Frisco (13-18).

"Student Prince"—Hanna, Cleve. (6-11); Blackstone, Chi. (13-18).

"Sweethearts"—Shubert, Philly (6-18).

"The Glass Menagerie"—Temple, Saginaw (6); Palace, Flint (7); Michigan, Detroit (8-18); Michigan, Saginaw (9); Keith's, Gr. Rapids (10-11); Hanna, Cleve. (13-18).

"The Late Christopher" — Hippodrome, Mayicetta (6); Weller, Zanesville (7); Victory, Dayton (8); Aud., Lexington (9-10); Aud., Louisville (11); Coliseum, Evansville (13); Aud., Memphis (15); Aud., Nashville (16); Erlanger, Atlanta (17-18).

"Up in Central Park"—Nat'l, Wash. (6-18).

"Voice of the Turtle"—Aud., Montgomery (6); Temple, Birmingham (7-8); Aud., Nashville (10); Coliseum, Evansville (11); Aud., Lexington (13); Aud., Louisville (14-15); English, Indpls. (16-18).

"Voice of the Turtle"—Royal Alex, Toronto (6-18).

L.A. Legit Is Lush, With 'Hamlet' 30½G, 'State' 18G

Los Angeles.

Tremendous upsurge in boxoffice take registered here over New Year's week when all houses went deep into black with extra performances. "Hamlet" at Philharmonic Auditorium snagged $30,500 for one week run of Maurice Evans production, Murray's "Blackouts of 1946-47" climbed to tremendous $24,800 in 237th week at El Capitan.

Biltmore finished second stretch of "State of the Union" with $18,000, giving total of $29,500 for fortnight. "Lute Song" bowed-in this week with $22,000 advance for two-week stay, thanks to Guild subscriptions. "She Did It in Dixie" took in mighty $12,300 at Belasco, surprising management pleasantly. El Patio climbed with fifth frame "Macbeth" to $3,000 for final week and $16,600 on run.

B'way Biz Spotty; Some Surprises; 'Icetime' 58G, in 12; 'Holiday' 40G; 'Joan' 37G Tops Dramas; 3 Bow In Broadway fared better than expected on New Year's Eve despite the high prices for that performance but some attractions didn't share in the cleanup. Business on the holiday was not so good but that was generally discounted with unforeseen inclement weather an attendance deterrant. General result was that while some shows went up on the week, most attractions approximated the grosses counted on Christmas week.

Jammed Christmas week openings panned out to be as indicated with "Begar's Holiday," "Burlesque" and "Topliztky of Notre Dame" the best draws. Wonderful Journey" was withdrawn and the same went for "Love Goes To Press," only premiere last week. Newcomers which figure some benefit from the holidays are still of doubtful rating and may join "Made In Heaven" in exiting Saturday (11). There are new shows this week: "Finian's Rainbow," "Street Scene" (both musical) and "The Big Two."

Estimates for Last Week

Keys: C (Comedy), D (Drama), CD (Comedy-Drama), R (Revue), M (Musical), O (Operetta).

"Annie Get Your Gun," Imperial (34th week) (M-1,427; $6.60). With the Eve performance at $9.90 taking $9,900 it is toward $47,000 for front ranking musical.

"Another Part of the Forest," Fulton (2nd week) (D-968; $4.80). New Year's Eve balanced any easing on the holiday; same for other shows around $21,000 again.

"Beggar's Holiday," Broadway (2d week) (M-1,900; $4.80). First full week indicates new musical's goodly chance when the holiday eve helped to approximately $40,000.

"Born Yesterday," Lyceum (49th week) (C-995; $4.80). With the end up for the Eve performance, long-playing click went up to nearly $22,-500.

"Call Me Mister," National (38th week) (R-1,104; $6). Capacity revue with $9,900 gross by virtue of the holiday scale with the count around $35,000.

"Carousel," Majestic (90th week) (M-1,667; $6). Still up in the big money with takings about the same as Christmas Week; $40,000.

"Chalk Dust," Blanke-Music Box (5th week) (D-979; $4.80). Slipped to around $18,000 as expected when Journey notice was finished.

"Finian's Rainbow," 46th Street (M-1,319; $6). Presented by Lee Sabinson and William R. Katzell; book by E. Y. Harburg and Fred Saidy; music by Burton Lane; lyrics by Harburg; opens Friday (10).

"Happy Birthday," Broadhurst (10th week) (C-1,160; $4.80). Has been virtually sold out since opening and takings last were estimated over $30,000.

"Harvey," 48th St. (114th week) (C-920; $4.20). Holiday scale and capacity through last week accounted for gross approximately of $20,000 again.

"Icetime," Center (29th week) (R-2,994; $2.40). Biggest figure of all, what with $4.20 on the Eve and 12 performances, the gross figuring around $56,000.

"Joan of Lorraine," Alvin (7th week) (M-1,331; $4.80). Top on the holiday eve as high as for musicals and the gross went over the $37,000 mark; biggest figure for straight shows.

"Life With Father," Bijou (370th week) (C-813; $3.60). Used a moderate scale for the holiday performance with takings round $10,000; 9,000th performance Sunday (5).

"Love Goes to Press," Biltmore. Opened Wednesday last week; adverse notices; yanked Saturday (5); house dark.

"Lovely Me," Coronet (2d week) (C-1,095; $4.80). Moved here Sunday (5) from Adelphi, one of three shows that opened the same night; Adelphi estimated: "Mr. My Sons" booked here late in month.

"Made in Heaven," Miller (C-940; $4.20). Final and 12th week; did well with $5,000 gross around $10,000 at late and goes to Chicago. "Little A" next show, due next week.

"O Mistress Mine," Empire (41st week) (CD-1,082; $4.80). Should be good for many weeks; moved had eased a bit then had to approximate capacity; over $24,000 estimated.

"Oklahoma!" St. James (202nd week) (M-1,309; $4.80). Well up in the going as this has been except for couple of pre-holiday weeks; around $30,000.

"Present Laughter," Plymouth (10th week) (C-1,063; $4.80). Did very well and while not selling out was virtually capacity; $18,000.

"State of the Union," Hudson (60th week) (CD-1,057; $4.80). Holiday eve gross to around $27,000.

"Street Scene," Adelphi (M-1,436; $6). Presented by Dwight Deere Wiman in association with the Playwrights Co.; book by Elmer Rice; score by Kurt Weill; lyrics by Langston Hughes; opened Thursday (9).

"Topliztky of Notre Dame," Century (2nd week) (M-1,712; $4.80) Despite mostly doubtful press drew strong holiday business; around $30,000 estimated.

"The Big Two," Booth (C-712; $4.80). Presented by Elliott Nugent and Robert Montgomery; written by L. Bush-Fekete and Mary Helen Fay; well regarded out of town: opens Wednesday (8).

"The Fatal Weakness," Royale (7th week) (CD-1,025; $4.80). Did quite well during early week with matinee parties the factor; dipped to around $15,000.

"The Iceman Cometh," Beck (13th week) (D-1,213; $5.40). Eased off somewhat and although the eve performance was tilted, takings approximated $21,000.

"The Voice of the Turtle," Morosco (148th week) (C-939; $4.60). Picked up somewhat by virtue of the eve performance with gross around $12,000.

"Temper the Wind," Playhouse (2nd week) (D-865; $4.80). Extra space ads express management confidence in show's chances; first full week around $8,500.

"The Two Mrs. Carrolls," Mansfield (5th week) (C-1,001; $4.80). Although not capacity, has been registering excellent grosses and last week's takings approximated $22,000.

Wonderful Journey. Was taken off last Wednesday (1) at the Coronet after playing one week and one night.

REVIVALS

"Bloomer Girl," City Center (M-2,885; $3.60). Return date of six weeks started Monday (6).

"Burlesque," Belasco (2nd week) (C-979; $4.80). First full week was estimated around $23,000 which is old holiday eve; very promising and stay expected.

"Elsie VIII," "What Every Woman Knows," "John Gabriel Borkman," and "Androcles and the Lion," International (9th week) (1,373; $4.20). American Repertory Theatre doing fairly well with four rotating bills; expenses run around $19,000 last week.

"Lady Windermere's Fan," 48th week) (C-1,064; $4.20). One of the surprise successful of the season's revivals; last week more than $21,-000 indicated.

"The Red Mill," Shubert (62nd week) (M-1,382; $4.80). Gave an extra matinee at 46th Street last week and went to $25,600; best figure for long time; moved here Monday (6).

Broadway Ahead

Continued from page 269

the list, and "Desert Song," which carried briefly.

Quality of the plays for 1946-47 has not been on a much higher plane than the musicals. Observers on the inside side wondered where to look if there would be a real dramatic or comedy click comparable to 1945-46, and it's now indicated that the season's successes so far this season do not measure up to the standouts of last season, which attractions are still commanding virtual capacity. It is clear that the holdover standouts have a much better chance for continued popularity than most of this season's productions. Same appears to be true in London.

10 Others Due

In addition to this week's three premieres there are approximately 10 other new shows due this month, and during the late winter or early spring more clickers are possible than those to date. The established hits are prospering more because of the scarcity of good stock companies. For instance, if there actually were bets that "Oklahoma!" would enter the fifth year on Broadway, those who took the bet certain to collect. It's a cinch that the new song and dance shows haven't got what it takes, and that goes for most of the dramas.

It is certain that the interest in show business hasn't dimmed; in fact, it seems to be growing seasonally. Last summer it was feared that backers from outside show business would be hard to get, but indications are there are as many as before Predictions are that there will be a long, prosperous era, and that is good news for show business.

OBITUARIES

CHARLES WAKEFIELD CADMAN

Charles Wakefield Cadman, 65, widely known as a composer died Dec. 30 in Los Angeles following a heart attack. He was actively engaged in a composition when stricken by his final illness.

A songwriter for 45 years, Cadman's best known tunes, each of which has sold more than 1,000,000 copies, were "At Dawning" and "Land of the Sky Blue Water." Among his works in light opera were "Shanewis," premiered by the Metropolitan company in 1918, "Garden of Mystery" and "The Witch of Salem."

Known as an authority on the history of the American Indian, Cadman waxed numerous aboriginal chants of the Omaha tribe and incorporated some of them into his compositions. He was one of the original members of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

JAMES EASTMAN

James Eastman, 34, employed in Vanguard Films' exploitation department for the past year, committed suicide Jan. 2 by taking an overdose of sleeping tablets at his New York hotel. Several hours earlier he had phoned Mrs. Ward Morehouse, wife of the N. Y. Sun drama critic and columnist, and said that he was despondent. Suspecting that he planned to take his life, she notified the management who at first found him sleeping comfortably but upon investigating later when he failed to answer his phone, discovered his body on the floor.

Eastman, who had worked on promotion for "Duel in the Sun" while with Vanguard, visited the Morehouses at their home the previous evening but apparently was in good spirits then. Prior to joining Vanguard he had served in the Army for five years and while overseas was an aide to Maj. Gen. Terry Allen. Before his discharge he was a Captain handling public relations in New York.

IN LOVING MEMORY
of
HARRY VON TILZER
July 8, 1872—Jan. 10, 1946
His Brothers
WILL—JULES
HAROLD—ALBERT

FLORENZ TAMARA FOWLER

Florenz Tamara Fowler, of the dance team Fowler and Tamara, died in Providence, R. I., Dec. 31. She was stricken as she visited her physician.

Mrs. Fowler started as a child dancer and teamed with Addison Fowler in 1922. They played top vaudeville houses including the Palace, N. Y., and while abroad did command performances for the royal families of Spain, Denmark, Portugal and a Maharajah in India. Also did command performances for Edward, then the Prince of Wales, and Princess Helena Victoria. She married Fowler in 1930 and retired from stage work in 1942. Lately they managed the Arthur Murray dance school in Providence.

They appeared in several shows including the Folies Bergere, Paris, and Cochran's Revue in London. During the middle '30s they were considered one of the top ballroom teams in vaude.

WILLIAM (BILLY) SMYTHE
January 5, 1946
We Miss You
GLADYS, WILLIAM, JR., ROBERT and PHILIP

FRITS TARTAUD

Frits Tartaud, 69, for many years one of Holland's top actors, died in Rotterdam, Dec. 31.

Tartaud made his stage debut at 18, in "The Two Orphans." During his career he was noted for delineation of Ibsen roles. His last stage appearanace was in 1928 in "Hedda Gabler," the title role of which was played by his actress-wife, Alida Klein-Tartaud.

In Memory of My Beloved Husband
DICK RYAN
MARY RYAN

BENJAMIN M. GOLDER

Benjamin M. Golder, 54, former congressman and well-known as an atorney in film circles, died Dec. 30 in Philadelphia.

Golder represented the Perleman interests in Philly in the famous "double feature" case here several years ago. He was also a son-in-law of the late Jules Mastbaum, Philly theatre magnate and philanthropist.

Survivors include his widow, the former Margery (Peggy) L. Mastbaum.

NAT WHITESTONE

Nat Whitestone, 72, former bit player who frequently assisted Billy B. Van and the Beaumont sisters in vaudeville sketches, died Dec. 21 of a heart attack in New York. He was also associated with Collins & Hart. Survived by widow.

GUS WICKE

Gus Wicke, 61, for 12 years member of the quartet at Bill Hardey's Gay Nineties, New York nitery, died Jan. 3 in Belleville, N. J.

Wicke, who had once been with the Shanley trio, is survived by two sisters.

August Lehman, 62, mill superintendent at Warners for 25 years, died Dec. 26 in Hollywood.

MARRIAGES

Bernice Stark to Howard (Buddy) Robbins, Dec. 29, N. Y. He's the son of music publisher Jack Robbins and head of American Artists Bureau.

Isolde Illian to Frank Mandel, Las Vegas, Dec. 25. Bride is an actress; groom a legit producer.

Arlene Jost to James Eddy, Las Vegas, Nov. 30. Both are film publicists.

Betty Ecoff to Myron A. Nunes, Los Angeles, Jan. 1. Bride is daughter of Jack Ecoff, general sales manager of Mills Music; groom's an assistant film director and son of producer Morris Nunes.

Lorraine Neitzel to Bob Baired, Chicago, Dec. 26. Groom is assistant supervisor of engineering at station WGN, Chi.

Helen Claire to William Snow, Chicago, Dec. 28. Bride is soprano with Chicago Civic Opera; groom is exec with Balaban & Katz circuit.

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Dale, daughter, Chicago, Dec. 24. Father is news editor and chief announcer at WIND, Chi.

Mr. and Mrs. Bob Tunison, daughter, Chicago, Dec. 17. Father is publicity man at WIND, Chi.

Mr. and Mrs. Bernie Green, son, New York, Dec. 26. Father is a press agent.

Mr. and Mrs. Myron Healy, daughter, Santa Monica, Cal., Dec. 25. Father is a screen actor.

Plays Out-of-Town

Continued from page 289

first American appearance with a superior job, as does Miss Stickney. Linda Carlon Reid as the domineering aunt, Daisy Belmore as the henpecked grandmother, Janet Tyler as the daughter in need of romance, Ralph Cullinan as the caretaker, Thomas Coley as the romantic musician, and Lucille Benson as the astute business woman, all help in rounding out a capable acting job.

Direction of Jerome Coray aids in keeping play from being mired. Raymond Sovey setting of antique shop is okay. Eck.

A Young Man's Fancy

Wilmington.

Henry Adrian production of comedy in three acts by Harry Thurschwell and Alfred Golden. Staged by Robert E. Perry. Scenery, lighting by Ralph Alswang. At Playhouse, Wilmington, Jan. 3, '47; $2.40 top.

Sylvia Wilson	Ann Sorg
Harold Greenley	David Durston
Dr. Spee	George Eden
Helen Greenley	Sheila Bromley
Davie	Paul White
Grilly	Donald Hastings
Jokey Stephen	Roy Sterling
Faith	Joan Shepard
Dickie Crandall	Ronnie Jacobi
Oliver Crandall	Albert Bergh
Mrs. Mary Crandall	Lee Carney
Miss Weatherhead	Myrtle Ferguson
Buddy	Bart Roe
Dorothy Bennel	Joan Lawrence
Bessie	Noanne Yuenger
Camp Trilby Boy	Mickey Carroll

Life in a summer youth camp is one continuous round of horseplay and romantic complications, according to "A Young Man's Fancy." The horseplay and teen-age cavortings are good for chuckles and occasional full-scale laughter but after a merry start play runs into difficulties with plot complications towards end. It still needs considerable fixing before braving Broadway.

Play has a Hollywood-type plot with a rich, precocious youth finding himself a misfit in a progressive camp operated by an ex-GI and sister. His four bunk-mates start giving him the business and he's ready to return home when a girl counsellor in love with the GI encourages him to fight back.

